It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Evidence—Confession, Admissibility of—Inducement or Threat.

One of a firm who employed the prisoner, having called him up into the private counting-house of the firm, in the presence of another of the firm and two officers of police, said, "I think it is right that I should tell you that, besides being in the presence of my brother and myself, you are in the presence of two officers of the police; and I should advise you that to any question that may be put to you you will answer truthfully, so that if you have committed a fault you may not add to it by stating what is untrue;" and having shewn a letter to him, which he denied to have written, added, "Take care; we know more than you think we know." The prisoner thereupon made a confession:—Held, that these words did not import an inducement or threat; and that evidence of the confession was admissible.

The following CASE was reserved by the Recorder of London:

At a session of the Central Criminal Court, held on the 8th of July, 1867, and following days, Frank Jarvis, Richard Bulkley and Wilford Bulkley were tried before me on an indictment for feloniously stealing 138 yards of silk and other property of William Leaf and others, the masters of Jarvis. There was a second count in the indictment for feloniously receiving the same goods. William Laidler Leaf was examined, and said, "The prisoner Jarvis was in my employ. On the 13th of May we called him up when the officers were there into our private counting-house. I said to him, 'Jarvis, I think it is right that I should tell you that, besides being in the presence of my brother and myself, you are in the presence of two officers of the police; and I should advise you that to any question that may be put to you you will answer truthfully, so that if you have committed a fault you may not add to it by stating what is untrue.' I produced a letter to him, which he said he had not written, and I then said, 'Take care, Jarvis; we know more than you think we know.' I do not believe I said to him, 'You had better tell the truth.'" Counsel for the prisoner Jarvis objected to any statement of his made after the above was said being received in evidence, and referred to The Queen v. Williams (1), The Queen v. Warringham (2), The Queen v.

Garner (3), The Queen v. Sheperd (4) and The Queen v. Muller (5). Counsel for the prosecution referred to The Queen v. Baldry (6), The Queen v. Sleeman (7) and The Queen v. Parker (8). I decided that the statement was admissible.

The jury found Jarvis guilty, adding, that they so found upon his own confession, but they thought that confession prompted by the inquiries put to him. They acquitted the other two. At the request of counsel for Jarvis, I reserved for the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved the question, whether I ought to have admitted the statements of the prisoner in evidence against him. If I ought not to have done so, the conviction should be reversed. The prisoner is in custody awaiting judgment.

Coleridge (Straight with him); for the prisoner.—The confession of the prisoner was wrongly admitted in evidence against him. Any confession to be admissible must be made freely and voluntarily. And, further, the prosecution must take upon itself the onus of shewing that it was free and voluntary, and cannot throw the burden on the prisoner to shew that it was not so. The test is, was there any inducement or threat of a temporal nature as distinguished from that of a religious or spiritual kind? It is the effect produced on the mind of the recipient that is to be regarded, and not the intention of the person holding it out. If the words therefore are fairly capable of conveying to the mind of the hearer the idea of an inducement or threat, the confession induced by them is inadmissible; and it is submitted such was the effect of the words here. In The Queen v. Baldry (6) the authorities are exhausted. We must look at the surrounding circumstances under which the confession is made. In this case the prisoner is a servant-lad; the prosecutor is his employer, a man of position. The place is his master's private counting-house. He is questioned in the presence of more than one of his masters; he is ostentatiously informed that two police officers are also present; he is then advised to do in effect what he had better do, viz., to answer truthfully, which is really another form of saying he had better tell the truth, which latter expression would make the confession inadmissible upon the authority of The Queen v. Garner (8). Then there is the incident of the letter and its denial, followed by the words "Take care." If these circumstances had any influence, either of hope or fear, on the prisoner's mind at the time, the law cannot measure the extent of that influence. In The Queen v. Baldry (6) a simple caution was used, which could not be construed reasonably by the prisoner into an inducement or threat; but Pollock, C.B. in that case says; p. 442, "But where the admonition to speak the truth has been coupled with any expression importing that it would be better for him to do so, it has been held that the confession was not receivable," and cites The Queen v. Garner (3). Again, if the words were ambiguous, and such as might have been considered by the prisoner as an inducement or threat, the evidence ought not to have been given—The Queen v. Williams (9); The Queen v. Sheperd (4). It is for the prosecution to satisfy the Court that the confession was free and voluntary; and if the Recorder has left it in doubt on the case whether that were so done, it is submitted that the conviction should be quashed—The Queen v. Warringham (3). In The Queen v. Parker (8) the facts were so different that that case has no bearing. Then, here the jury have found that the confession was prompted by the inquiries made.

Giffard (Grain with him), in support of the conviction, were not called upon.

KELLY, C.B.—I have always felt that we ought to approach with caution the rule of law that no man is bound to criminate himself, so I watch with care any infringement of that rule of law; but we must, on the other hand, for the sake of public justice, take care that our consideration for prisoners should not interfere with the rules of evidence and decisions. The question is, do the words before us in substance and fairly considered import a threat of evil, or hold out a hope of benefit to the accused in case he should state the truth? I think that the first words used, viz., "I think it is right that I should tell you," &c. operate rather as a warning than a threat or promise, and were rather calculated to put the prisoner on his guard. Then the prosecutor adds, "You are in the presence of two officers of the police," &c., and "I should advise you that to any question that may be put to you you will answer truthfully," &c. In the first place, this appears to me to be advice given by a master to a servant, and when he adds, "So that if you have committed a fault you may not add to it by stating what is untrue," he appears to me to be giving further advice on moral grounds. It is neither a threat that evil shall befall him, nor is it an inducement or holding out of advantage. These words, without straining them, amount only to this: we put certain questions to you, and I advise you to answer truly that you may not add a fault to an offence committed; if any has been. Then the last words appear to me to be only a caution beyond the words already used. He refers back to reasons already given. As to the words "You had better," referred to in the argument, there are many cases in which those words have occurred, and they seem to have acquired a sort of technical meaning, that they held out an inducement or threat within the rule that excludes confessions under such circumstances. It is sufficient to say, that those words have not been used on this occasion; and that the words used appear to me to import advice given on moral grounds, and not to infringe upon the rule of law prohibiting a threat or inducement in these cases.

WILLES, J.—I agree; but if it had appeared that the prisoner could have supposed the words meant "you had better," I think the case would have been different.

The other JUDGES concurred:

Conviction affirmed.

Nov. 16, 23. } THE QUEEN v. ELWORTHY.*

Perjury—Secondary Evidence of Written Document without Notice to Produce—Indictment not Notice.

Upon an indictment for perjury in falsely swearing on a former trial that there was no draft of a statutory declaration, the materiality of the existence of such draft turned upon its contents and the fact of certain alterations having been made in it. Parol evidence was admitted, not only of the fact of the existence of the draft, but of its contents and of alterations made in it which were not in the declaration itself, without any notice to produce the draft having been given to the prisoner:—Held, that such parol evidence of the draft and its contents was inadmissible, and that the nature of the indictment was not such as of itself to operate as a notice to produce, and the conviction upon such indictment was quashed.

The following CASE was reserved by Willes, J.—

Elworthy was tried for perjury before me at the Old Bailey. The perjury was alleged to have been committed at the trial of Thomas Cannon, for making a false statutory declaration. The assignment of perjury relied upon at the trial was in a statement made by Elworthy that there was no draft of that statutory declaration. It appeared that Elworthy was one of a firm of attorneys who were employed to lend money for a client. They were applied to by Cannon for a loan, which they agreed, on behalf of their client, to make, upon the security of some property belonging to Mrs. Cannon, and also of a newspaper in which Mr. Cannon was interested. Elworthy's firm required of Cannon as a condition of the loan a statutory declaration, which he made, and which stated amongst other things that he was the registered proprietor of the newspaper unincumbered. This declaration he made and signed, and it being untrue he was indicted for making a false declaration.

Upon the trial of that indictment, Elworthy was called as a witness against Cannon, and upon his cross-examination, with a view to excuse or palliate the falsehood of the statutory declaration, it was sought on behalf of Cannon to prove that there was a draft of the statutory declaration; that Cannon had seen it and corrected it, and that the statutory declaration which he in fact made had been improperly drawn, not shewing the corrections so made in the draft, and had been incautiously adopted by Cannon upon Elworthy assuring him it was all right. Upon that cross-examination Elworthy denied that there had been a draft of the statutory declaration, and he explained a passage in his depositions in which a draft was referred to as a mistake for a draft of the assignment by way of security for the loan, in which there were corrections.

At the trial of Elworthy before me, it was alleged for the prosecution that his statement at the trial of Cannon, that there was not such a draft of the statutory declaration was false, and that in making such statement he had committed perjury. No notice to produce had been given, nor was there any subpoena duces tecum to the prisoner's partner to produce the alleged draft, and the prisoner's counsel objected that secondary evidence could not be given thereof. I allowed the case to proceed and secondary evidence to be given, subject to the opinion of this Court as to the propriety of that course.

The prosecution thereupon gave the evidence of Mr. and Mrs. Cannon, that there was a draft, and that it had originally been in the form of the statutory declaration, and had been altered in the alleged particulars by Cannon to the knowledge of Elworthy. The materiality of the existence of a draft turned upon its form and the fact of its having been so altered. The prisoner was convicted, and as I doubt the propriety of receiving secondary evidence under the above circumstances, I request the opinion of the Court upon that point, whether the conviction was right.

The prisoner was admitted to bail.

Carter, for the prisoner, was not called upon.

Bealey, in support of the conviction.—The oral evidence was admissible, inasmuch as it was the fact only of the existence of the draft that was in question; and as to the statement in the case that the materiality of the draft turned upon its form, it is submitted that the question of its form was only important to identify the instrument, and parol evidence is admissible to identify a written document—Taylor on Evidence, 4th edit. pp. 379, 397.

[WILLES, J. read his notes of the evidence given by Cannon on the trial, in which he described the alterations made in the draft; and his Lordship added, that from the beginning to the end the question in the case must be taken to have been, whether there was a draft in existence such as contained those alterations.]

It is useless to give a person notice to produce a document the existence of which he has denied. Next, where the matter of the action or indictment is of such a nature as to give the defendant notice that he will be called upon to produce the document, it is unnecessary to give him notice—1 Taylor on Evidence, 4th edit. par. 422, p. 432, Aickle's case (1), Layer's case (2), Le Merchand's case (3) and How v. Hall (4), and it is submitted that is the case here.

[WILLES, J.—The indictment rang the changes. It must be taken to have contained enough to shew that the contents of the draft were material. KELLY, C.B.—Where the nature of the action or indictment is such that the defendant must know that he is charged with the possession of the instrument, and is called upon to produce it, notice is not necessary, and such is the case in the action of trover or an indictment for stealing; but where the matter is collateral, is it not necessary to give notice? BRAMWELL, B.—This indictment does not necessarily give notice to the defendant that he was charged with the possession of the document, and called upon to produce it.]

In Colling v. Treweek (5) the copy of an attorney's bill not signed by the attorney, the original of which, duly signed, had been delivered to the defendant, was held to be rightly admitted in evidence on the trial of an undefended action, brought on the bill after the expiration of a month after delivery without notice to produce, the original having been given to the defendant.

The case was argued on Nov. 16; and on Nov. 23 the following judgments were given:

KELLY, C.B.—This was an indictment for perjury. The perjury assigned was a statement made by the prisoner that there was no draft of a statutory declaration which was referred to on the trial of one Cannon. The point reserved for this Court is, whether a conviction founded, to a certain extent, upon secondary evidence of the form of, and alterations in that draft received without notice to the prisoner to produce the original draft, was right. We are of opinion that notice to produce the original was necessary to entitle the prosecution to give such secondary evidence.

There had been an indictment for making a false statutory declaration, and the now prisoner, who was a witness on the trial of that indictment, swore that there was no draft of that statutory declaration. It afterwards became material to ascertain the contents of the draft. It became material, because it was alleged that there was a draft, and that its contents were such and such, and that the other party required a change in the language, and that that change had been incorporated in the draft. The exact contents of the draft, therefore, became essential to the prosecution on the present indictment, because upon its contents depended the materiality or immateriality of the evidence on the former trial. The prosecution then gave evidence of the existence of the draft, that it came into the prisoner's hands and had not passed from him. Parol evidence of its contents was thereupon admitted, and the question raised is, whether, in order to give parol evidence of the contents of that document, notice to produce it ought to have been given. There is no doubt that, according to the general rule of evidence, such notice must have been given; but it is contended that this case falls within those cases which have established an exception to the rule, and made the secondary evidence here admissible without notice to produce the original. For example, it is said that in trover for a deed or other written document, parol evidence might be given of the contents of the document without notice to the defendant to produce it; but the defendant there has notice by the nature of the action itself and the description of the document in the declaration, without further notice that he is called upon to produce the document. He can therefore do so if he thinks fit. We do not, however, think that that case is applicable here. In The Queen v. Aickles (1) the prosecution was for larceny of a bill of exchange, and it was held to be unnecessary to give the prisoner notice to produce the bill before giving evidence of its contents. The reason is said to be given in an obiter dictum of Heath, J.—“If the bill had been in the custody of the prisoner, there would have been no necessity to prove that it was not in existence; but parol testimony might undoubtedly in such case have been given of its contents.” But Eyre, B. appears to give the chief reason in Le Merchant's case (8), in a note to Aickles's case (1), who says the copies of the letter were admitted, “not on the idea of the defendant's having after notice refused to produce the originals, but because they were the best evidence which the nature of the case would admit of, or that was in the power of the party producing them to give” (6). In such a case the prisoner has notice that he will be called upon to produce the document by the form of the indictment. That case, therefore, is also inapplicable to the one before us. Here there was nothing on the face of the indictment, which I have looked at, to shew that the draft had come into his possession; therefore there was nothing to shew that it was alleged to be still in his possession, and to tell him that he was called upon to produce it.

Four things must be made out: first, that the prisoner stated there was no draft; secondly, that such statement was false; thirdly, that he knew that statement to be false; fourthly, that the statement was material. What is there in those allegations to import that the draft ever came into his possession? He may have alluded to another document from the one described in evidence. There was nothing on the indictment or the evidence to shew that, in order to sustain this prosecution, the prisoner was called upon to admit secondary evidence of this document being given against him. If sufficient notice had been given to him, he might have produced it. Speaking for myself, I think that the admissibility of secondary evidence, without the production of the best evidence or the document itself, ought not to be extended.

(6) It is to be observed in Aickles's case that the prisoner had not possession of the bills which he was charged with stealing, but they were traced to the possession of one Smith, who was served with a subpoena duces tecum, but he did not appear, nor was the bill produced.

WILLES, J. concurred.

BRAMWELL, B.—If the question had been merely as to the existence of the draft, I should have been inclined to think the evidence admissible; but the prosecution gave in evidence the contents to shew that the prisoner's denial of its existence was wilful; therefore the contents and the alterations therein became material. I think that parol testimony cannot be given of any existing written document without laying a proper foundation for it. No exception to that rule is here applicable. The indictment did not give notice to the prisoner that he would be required to produce the original draft. The prosecutor might have contented himself with giving evidence of its existence, but he chose to go further.

BYLES, J. and LUSH, J. concurred.

Conviction quashed.

Perjury — Bastardy Summons — Information — Evidence of Proceedings before Justices.

Upon an indictment for perjury committed at the hearing of an information in bastardy, which indictment alleged the application for a summons, the issuing thereof, and the hearing upon it, proof of the information, of the appearance of the defendant, of the hearing, of evidence being given on both sides, and of no objection being made of the want of a summons, is sufficient to shew jurisdiction in the Justices who heard the information, without proof of the summons which issued upon that information;

* Coram Kelly, C.B., Willes, J., Bramwell, B., Byles, J. and Lush, J.

The following case was reserved by Cockburn, C.J.—

This was a case tried before me at the last assizes for the county of Leicester, on an indictment for perjury alleged to have been committed by the defendant on the hearing of an information before two Justices on an application by one Louisa Harrison, the mother of an illegitimate child, against one Tom Mee, for an order of affiliation. The indictment alleged that an information was exhibited before two Justices by Louisa Harrison against Mee, charging him with being the father of her illegitimate child, and that application was made by her to the said Justices for a summons against Mee to answer the said complaint; that a summons was accordingly issued by the said Justices, and that in obedience to the said summons Mee appeared at a petty session to answer the charge. The indictment went on to state the proceedings on the hearing of the summons, and alleged in due form that perjury had been committed by the prisoner Smith.

On the trial before me, evidence was given that an information was duly made by the applicant Louisa Harrison against the defendant Mee; and the information itself was put in and read. It was proved that Mee appeared before the Justices, and that upon the hearing of the information the evidence, which was the subject-matter of the present indictment, was given by Smith, who was called as a witness by Mee. But the summons was not produced on the trial of Smith, nor was secondary evidence given of its contents, nor was it proved that such summons had been served on Mee. It appeared that it was the practice to give duplicate summonses to the police constable whose duty it was to serve the summons. The police constable who served the summons in question not being present at the trial, no evidence of the service of any summons could be given. In all other respects the proceedings before the Justices on the hearing of the information were duly proved, and appeared to have been regular and correct.

On the close of the case for the prosecution, it was objected on the part of the prisoner that the want of proof of a summons; as required by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101; having been served on the defendant in the information, was fatal to the present prosecution, inasmuch as the summons formed the basis of the Magistrate's jurisdiction.

I declined to stop the case in that stage, and witnesses having been called for the defence, and the case having gone to the jury on the merits, the prisoner was found guilty.

The question which I have reserved, and on which I desire the decision of the Court, is whether, the information having been duly served; as well as the proceedings upon it, at the hearing at the petty sessions, the absence of proof of the summons with which the defendant in the information ought, under the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, to have been served, in order to give the Justices jurisdiction to hear the information in bastardy, was fatal to the prosecution on this indictment for perjury.

Materiality, for the prisoner.—A summons was necessary to give the Magistrate jurisdiction—7 & 8 Vict. c. 101. ss. 2, 3; and therefore the summons ought to have been produced or notice given to the defendant in the bastardy proceedings to produce it, and in default secondary evidence of it given—The Queen v. Newall (1). The defendant appears in answer to the summons; and the summons, therefore, is the basis and best evidence of the charge which is heard and of the issue then before the Justices, so as to show what statements are and what are not material—The Queen v. Whybrow (2), The Queen v. Hurrell (3).

No counsel appeared for the prosecution:
Cur. adv. vult.

The case was argued Nov. 23; and on Nov. 27 the judgment of the Court was delivered by—

KELLY, C.B.—This conviction must be affirmed. This was an indictment for perjury alleged to have been committed on the trial of an information laid under the Bastardy Act. The objection and the only objection before us was, that there was no evidence of the summons or of the service of the summons which issued upon that information. We are of opinion that that objection cannot be sustained. Though there was no summons produced at the trial of Smith for perjury, nor was it proved that Mee had ever been served with such summons, there was the information, which described the complaint made; evidence was given on both sides, and all the proceedings were regular at the time of the appearance of the defendant before the Justices. The only question, therefore, is, was it necessary to produce the summons? The object of the summons is to bring the party into court. The defendant did appear and did not object to the want of a summons, and there was no necessity at the hearing of the information, or at all events on the trial for perjury, to refer to the summons, and there being an information, and the proceedings under that information being perfectly regular, therefore the production of evidence of the summons was not necessary.

THE QUEEN v. TYSON.*

Perjury—Materiality—Evidence.

Upon an indictment for robbery committed on the 13th of April, between eight and ten o'clock at night, a witness for the prisoner swore, not only that the prisoner was at home at that time, but in answer to the Judge said, that the prisoner had lived in the same house for the two years previous, and that during the whole of that time he had not been absent from the same house for more than three nights together. The last two statements were proved to be false, as the prisoner, for a whole year of the period spoken to, had been in prison:—Held, that the evidence so last given was material to the inquiry, and the proper subject of assignments of perjury, inasmuch as those latter statements tended to render more probable the previous statement made, that the prisoner was at home on the night of the 13th of April.

At a session of the Central Criminal Court, held on the 10th of June, 1867, and following days, Thomas Tyson was tried before me on an indictment for perjury. It was alleged in the indictment and appeared in evidence, that at the May session of the Central Criminal Court, one Owen Sullivan was tried for a robbery, and that upon that trial Tyson was called as a witness on behalf of Sullivan. The indictment went on to allege that upon the trial of Sullivan it was material to ascertain whether Sullivan was or was not at a house No. 20, in Mint Street, in the borough of Southwark, on the evening of the 13th of April, 1867, between the hours of eight o'clock and ten o'clock; and whether Sullivan had lived at same house for two years then last past, or from March, 1865, to March, 1866, and that Tyson falsely swore as such witness—First, that on the 13th of April, 1867, Sullivan came to 20, Mint Street, at half-past eight in the evening, and did not go out again that evening; secondly, that Sullivan had lived in the said house for two years then last past; and, thirdly, that during the whole of that time Sullivan had never been absent from the same house for more than three nights together. Perjury was assigned upon each of the above allegations, and the prisoner was convicted on the last two. The second and third allegations were distinctly contradicted by the oaths of two warders of the Wandsworth House of Correction, who proved that Sullivan was under their charge in that House of Correction from March, 1865, to March, 1866. The prisoner was undefended, and a question was raised whether the averments of the defendant were material on the trial of Sullivan. Counsel for the prosecution contended that they affected Tyson's credit as a witness on Sullivan's trial. I reserved the question for the consideration of the Court, whether the two last allegations of Tyson, upon which perjury was assigned, were sufficiently material on the trial of Sullivan to support the indictment for perjury in respect of them. The defendant is in prison awaiting judgment.

Nov. 16.—The Court remitted the above case, that it might be more clearly stated in what manner the question came to be put which produced the answers, and how the circumstances arose which made the answers material.

Nov. 23.—This case was now brought up amended, by annexing copy of Mr. Common Serjeant's notes of the trial of Sullivan, which were as follows:

"William Pearce, of 12, Windsor Terrace, saith—On 13th of April, at 8:45 p.m., I was in the Dover Road going to the train. I was passing Leicester House; felt a man seize me and pull me round, and I looked up and saw the man's face, and two others laid hold of me and pinioned my arms, rifled my pockets, took away my watch, a sovereign and 27s. silver, and then they all ran away, and I fell down. I caught the man's eyes, and am sure he is the man. I got up, ran after them to the corner of Kent Street, and lost sight of them. On the following Tuesday I saw prisoner and five others, and I at once picked him out. He said, I was not there, it was Bandy and some other; I said I know there were two others.

"Cross-examined—I am positive I could not swallow anything for a fortnight, my throat was so pinched. I looked up at the man's face; I never saw him before; I did not see the faces of the others.

"William Eldred, P.C. 160 M., saith—I took prisoner at Red Lion, Suffolk Street, and took him to the station. Prosecutor picked prisoner out from six others at once.

"Cross-examined—I told him I had a man in custody.

"Mr. Cooper addressed the jury for prisoner, and called

"Thomas Tyson, who saith—I am under-deputy at 20, Mint Street, Borough, a lodging-house; remember prisoner being taken up. On the Saturday before prisoner came in between eight and nine, and did not go out again. He came in about 8:30; he lay down on a form till 9:45, and then went to bed. He has lodged at the house nearly two years.

"Cross-examined—I know it was 8:30, because the prisoner is such a man for larking. The deputy was there at the time: he is not here.

"Re-examined—He makes the kitchen merry. Another man followed him. The deputy sent the prisoner away from the fire.

"By me—I went to the house in May,

1865. Prisoner lodged there from the time I went, and never was absent more than a night or two, or three at most, at a time. I went out of the kitchen into the room where the clock is to see the time. I do not know why.

"Richard Kemp smith—I am a warder at the House of Correction at Wandsworth. Prisoner was in Wandsworth Prison from March, 1865, to March, 1866.

"Certificate of conviction of Sullivan for robbery produced, dated March, 1865, sentenced twelve calendar months and hard labour, at the House of Correction at Wandsworth.

"Guilty—seven years penal servitude.

"I ordered the witness, Thomas Tyson, to be taken into custody on a charge of perjury."

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Metcalf, in support of the conviction.—

It is admitted that the evidence on which the prisoner was convicted of perjury did not directly bear on the question of the guilt or innocence of Sullivan on the charge of robbery, but it was material as a test of the truth of Tyson's evidence.

[WILLIAMS, J.—It is in answer to a question from the Judge.]

In 1 Hawk. P.C. c. 27. s. 8. p. 434. it is said: "If it appear plainly that the scope of the question were to sift him as to his knowledge of the substance, by examining him strictly concerning the circumstances, and he give a particular and distinct account of the circumstances which afterwards appear to be false, surely he cannot but be guilty of perjury, inasmuch as nothing can be more apt to incline a jury to give credit to the substantial part of a man's evidence than his appearing to have an exact and particular knowledge of all the circumstances relating to it."

[BRAMWELL, B.—Suppose A. is indicted for robbing B. at D. C. says, I was at X. and A. was there; does it not become material to shew that C. was at Y?]

Yes.

[LUSH, J.—The substantial part appears to me to be whether the prisoner was at that house at the time and on the night in question. Then did not the statement to the Judge, that the prisoner was not in the habit of being out, and had not been out of the house more than two or three times for two years, incline the jury more readily to give credit to the substantial part of the man's evidence, namely, that Sullivan was at the house on the night and at the time of the robbery. BRAMWELL, B.—It was not material, in the first instance; but the witness makes it so by making it authenticate the part of his evidence which was before material. This brings it within the case mentioned by Hawkins as to the sheep-marks (1). LUSH, J.—It thus becomes material to the issue.]

It is submitted that the scope of the questions put by the Judge on Sullivan's trial to the prisoner in this case was to sift him as to his knowledge of the substantial part of his evidence, and his answers were therefore material, and perjury assigned upon them was rightly assigned, and this conviction should therefore be sustained.

KELLY, C.B.—The question is whether upon this indictment for perjury the two statements upon the assignments of which the prisoner has been convicted were material. We are all agreed that they were material, upon the ground that they tended to render more probable the truth of the other allegation upon which the prisoner has not been convicted, viz., that he saw Sullivan at this lodging-house on the night of the 13th of April, between the hours of eight and ten o'clock. It tends to render that statement more probable that Sullivan lodged there for two years and that he was never out of the house for more than a night or two at a time during that period. That makes the other statement that he was not out on the night in question more probable. It was therefore material to the question of the probability or improbability of the witness speaking the truth in saying that the prisoner was at his house on the night of the 13th of April. We are all of opinion that the conviction should be affirmed.

BRAMWELL, B.—The question is whether the answers were material, for if material on any ground it is sufficient. If the witness had said that he was at such a house at a quarter past ten o'clock on such a night, his evidence would have been less trustworthy if he could give no reasons for saying so. Then he is asked what enables you to tell us that? and he answers, I was deputy at the lodging-house and I was there at that time, I know him well, and his habits are such that I am enabled to speak to the cardinal matter with more certainty; therefore the matter must be material.

BYLES, J. concurred.

LUSH, J.—I was embarrassed at first by counsel saying that the matter was material as going to the credit of the witness. That is not the ground, however, on which it is material. It was material as being a substantial part of the evidence against Sullivan. It was calculated to induce the jury to give more credit to the witness when he stated that for two years Sullivan had not been in the habit of being out at that time.

Conviction affirmed.

Parent and Child—Neglect to provide Food—Indictment—Averment of Want of Means.

An indictment for neglecting to provide sufficient food and sustenance for a child of tender years, whereby the child became ill and enfeebled, averred that it was the duty of the prisoner to provide for, give and administer to the said child wholesome and sufficient meat, drink and clothing for the sustenance, &c. of the said child, and that he unlawfully, and contrary to his said duty in that behalf, did omit, neglect and refuse to provide for, &c., the child:—Held, by the majority of the Court, that the indictment sufficiently alleged the breach of duty, and that the prisoner had the ability to provide but omitted to exercise it.

The Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for Surrey reserved the following

CASE.

At the General Quarter Session of the Peace, holden at Guildford, in and for the county of Surrey, on Tuesday, the 2nd of July, 1867, Henry Blucher Ryland was tried and convicted upon the following count of an indictment: "The jurors for our Lady the Queen, upon their oath present, that before the time of committing the offence hereinafter in this count mentioned, Henry Blucher Ryland was the father of a certain male child of tender age, to wit, of the age of seven years, called and known by the name of Frederick George Ryland, and that Hannah Ryland, before the time of the committing the offence and during all the time hereinafter in this count mentioned, was the wife of the said Henry Blucher Ryland, and as such wife living with the said Henry Blucher Ryland, and during all that time the said child was living under the care and control of the said Henry Blucher Ryland and the said Hannah Ryland, and during all that time it was the duty of the said Henry Blucher Ryland and the said Hannah Ryland to provide for, give and administer to the said child wholesome and sufficient meat, drink, food and clothing for the sustenance, support, nourishment and healthful preservation of the said child, the said child by reason of his tender age being then wholly incapable of providing for himself. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said Henry Blucher Ryland and the said Hannah Ryland, on the 5th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1867, and on divers other days and times between that day and the day of the taking of this inquisition, and whilst the said child was of such tender age as aforesaid, and wholly incapable of providing for himself as aforesaid, unlawfully and contrary to the said duty of the said Henry Blucher Ryland and the said Hannah Ryland in that behalf, did omit, neglect and refuse to provide for, give and administer to the said child clothing, meat, drink and food in any sufficient quantity for the sustenance, support, nourishment and healthful preservation of the said child, by means whereof the said male child became and was weak and ill, and greatly disordered and debilitated in his body, to the great damage of the said child, and against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity."

After the jury were sworn and the defendant given in charge to them, his counsel objected that the indictment was bad, as it did not allege that the defendant had the means of providing his child with wholesome and sufficient meat, drink, food and clothing for the sustenance, support, nourishment and healthful preservation of the said child. It was replied that such allegation was unnecessary in the indictment, and that it was sufficient to prove such ability at the trial; but that even if such allegation were necessary, the objection was too late, as, being for a formal defect apparent on the face of the indictment, it ought to have been taken by demurrer before the jury were sworn, as provided for by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 24. The Court overruled the objection, and, proof having been given of the ability of the said Henry Blucher Ryland to provide the necessary food and clothing for his child, left the case to the jury, who found the said Henry Blucher Ryland guilty; but the Court reserved the two points above mentioned for the determination of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved, viz., first, whether an allegation of the ability of the said Henry Blucher Ryland to provide the necessary food and clothing for his child was requisite in the indictment; and, secondly, whether the objection to the indictment was not too late.

The Court respited judgment upon the defendant, and admitted him to bail till the decision of the Court for the Consideration of Crown Cases Reserved should be known.

J. Thompson, for the prisoner. — The defect is not a formal one within 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100.

[BRAMWELL, B.—It has been decided that this Court can take cognizance of defects apparent on the face of the record when reserved at the trial.—See The Queen v. Webb (1)].

Then the indictment is bad for omitting the allegation that the prisoner had the means and ability to provide food and sustenance for his child. In The Queen v. Chandler (2) the indictment contained the allegation that the prisoner had the ability and means to maintain her child; but the evidence failed to satisfy that allegation, and the conviction was quashed. In The Queen v. Hogan (3) one objection taken to the indictment, which was held bad, was that there was no allegation that the parent had the means to support the child. In The Queen v. Vann (4) it was held, that the parent was not bound to incur a debt in order to provide burial for his child, and is only bound to incur such expense if he has the means, without contracting a loan and rendering himself liable to be proceeded against and lose his liberty and be deprived of the means of maintaining his family.

[KELLY, C.B. — The question here is, can it be implied or collected from the indictment that the parent here had the ability and neglected his duty therein? Is it necessary that there should be a direct allegation?]

The prisoner ought to have notice that ability to provide is alleged against him, and of the time when.

Lilley, in support of the conviction. — It is the duty of the parent to provide sustenance and food for his children, whether he has the means himself or not; if he has not present means, it is his duty to resort to the poor laws or to private charity—The Queen v. Mabbett (5), The Queen v. Friend (6) and The Queen v. Ridley (7).

[WILLES, J., referred to The Queen v. Pelham (8)].

Thompson, in reply.

KELLY, C.B. — The majority of the Court think that the indictment sufficiently alleges the breach of duty in this case, in the statement that the prisoner “unlawfully and contrary to his said duty in that behalf, did omit, neglect and refuse to provide food, &c.” The special matter of the ability to provide is included within the meaning of the word “neglect,” and it is, at all events, satisfactory to feel that upon this indictment the prisoner was duly convicted on the merits of the case, inasmuch as the jury have found that, in fact, the prisoner had the ability to maintain which he neglected to exercise.

1867. { THE JUSTICES OF LANCASHIRE,
Nov. 13. { appellants, THE OVERSEERS { OF THE POOR OF CHEETHAM, { respondents.

Poor-rate — Assize Courts — Judges' Lodgings — Public Purposes — Beneficial Occupation.

*By act of parliament, the Justices of the county of L. were empowered to provide courts, Judges' lodgings, offices, &c. necessary and convenient for carrying on the civil and criminal business usually transacted at Courts of Assize. They were further empowered to permit the use of the buildings for any lawful purpose for such consideration as they might think proper, but so as not to interfere with the use of such buildings and premises for the purposes primarily contemplated. They did allow the corporation of M. to use part of the buildings for the city Quarter Sessions, and for the city Court of Record, and they received 900*l.* a year in respect of such use. This sum of 900*l., together with all sums received for the use of the buildings, was insufficient to defray the average annual expenses of maintenance and management:—Held, that the Justices were rateable to the poor-rate in respect of the part so let off to the corporation.

This was an appeal, brought by the appellants, the Justices of the Peace for the County Palatine of Lancaster, against a rate in respect of their occupation of certain premises known as the Manchester Assize Courts, laid upon them by the respondents; and, by consent of the parties and by order of Blackburn, J., according to the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 11, the following CASE was stated for the opinion of this Court.—

By the 21 Vict. c. xxiv. (local and personal) ("The Manchester Assize Courts Act, 1858"),—after reciting that it had been recommended to Her Majesty that a separate civil and criminal assize should be granted to Manchester, for that city and the borough and hundred of Salford, in the County Palatine of Lancaster, and after reciting an act of the 38 Geo. 3. c. lviii. (local), whereby the business of the said county concerning the general county rate was and is transacted at the annual General Session of the Peace holden at Preston, and at the adjournments thereof, and at special Sessions holden at Preston according to the said act, but the General Quarter Sessions of the county are held, by adjournments from place to place, for the transaction of business arising within the several divisions of the county, and (amongst other places) are so held in the hundred of Salford for the transaction of business arising within the said hundred,—by section 2, the Justices of the Peace for the County Palatine of Lancaster assembled at any Quarter or General Sessions, holden originally or by adjournment within the hundred of Salford, were empowered to provide in or near Manchester, within the hundred, commodious courts, lodgings for Her Majesty's Judges, offices, lock-ups, and all other accommodations necessary or convenient for carrying on the civil and criminal business usually transacted at Courts of Assize.

By section 4, any lands or buildings acquired by the Justices under the act might be conveyed, assigned or demised to the Justices of the County Palatine of Lancaster, and their successors; and such Justices and their successors were thereby empowered to take and hold in the nature of a body corporate, in trust for the purposes of that act, the lands or buildings so conveyed, assigned or demised to them.

By section 5, all the expenses incurred in carrying into effect the purposes of the act, including any expenses incurred in making such temporary arrangements as were authorized by the said act, should be defrayed out of the special rate thereafter authorized to be laid, imposed, assessed and levied from time to time, as the case might require, upon and from the hundred of Salford.

By section 11, the Justices assembled as aforesaid were to have the sole and entire control, repair, management and use of all buildings and premises acquired for the purposes of that act; and it was to be lawful for them to use or permit the use of any such buildings and premises for any lawful purpose, at such times, in such manner, upon such conditions and for such consideration as the same Justices might think proper, but so as not to interfere with the use of such buildings and premises for the purposes primarily contemplated by that act.

Under the powers of the act, the appellants purchased a plot of land situate in the respondents' township. At the date of the purchase, several houses and other buildings stood thereon, and were rated and paid rates to the township. These were pulled down, and on the site were built the Manchester Assize Courts, comprehending the premises described in detail in the rate appealed against as follows :

Name of Occupier.	Name of Owner.	Description of Property Rated.	Name or situation of Property.	Gross Estimated Rental	Rateable Value.	Rate of 2s. in the Pound.
Justices of the Peace for the County Palatine of Lancaster.	Justices of the Peace for the County Palatine of Lancaster.	Assize Courts, Entrance Halls, Corridors, Central Hall, Sheriff's Court, Chancery Court, Arbitration Rooms, Libraries, Lavatories, Waiting Rooms, Refreshment Rooms, Retiring Rooms, Galleries, Offices, Cells, Judges' Lodgings, Governor's Rooms, Housekeeper's Rooms, Porter's Rooms, Out-buildings, Yard and Premises.	Great Ducie Street.	£. s. 6,042 10	£. s. 5,035 10	£. s. 503 11

There are, in addition, other rooms for the grand jury, witnesses, for the county officials, for the accommodation of the Judges, the Magistrates, and counsel attending the Assizes and Quarter Sessions, and also refreshment-rooms.

The Judges' lodgings adjoin the main buildings, but are under a separate roof, and are connected with the central hall and courts by a covered corridor. They comprise the necessary accommodation for the Judges and their suite at the Assizes. The Judges' dining-room is also occasionally used for luncheons by committees of county Magistrates, when they assemble in a room attached to the Assize Courts, for the transaction of county business.

The courts are all under one roof, and are used at the County Assizes for the hundred of Salford and the city of Manchester, and at the county sessions for the hundred; and, by special agreement with the city of Manchester, as hereinafter mentioned, for the city Court of Record.

For the purchase of one portion of the site of the Courts, the Justices have paid 4,070*l.*; the rest of the site was purchased by them in fee, subject to yearly chief rents, amounting together to the sum of 620*l.* 6*s.* 10*d.* a year. The erection of the building has cost 131,312*l.*

The money borrowed to the present time amounts to the sum of 68,500*l.*, and the interest paid thereon last year (1866), was 3,690*l.* 3*s.* 5*d.*

The recited act provides that the money borrowed shall be repaid within twenty years, the period limited by "The Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847." The expenses of maintenance and management for the year ending on the 31st of May, 1866, amounted to 1,823*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*, which sum it is estimated may be considered as the average of those expenses.

The sum raised by the special rate authorized to be raised by the above-recited act during the year ending the 31st of May, 1866, was 12,705*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, which was applied partly in paying the current expenses and the interest on loans.

The residue has been expended in completing, decorating and furnishing the Courts and Judges' house, and in providing the sinking fund for paying off the mortgage debt as required by the Commissioners Clauses Act, 1847. The rest of the cost of the buildings and furniture has been paid for out of the special rate authorized to be laid on the hundred of Salford by the said act.

There is a quantity of plate, linen, china, &c., kept in the building, which is the property of the Justices, and is used by the Judges, Magistrates and barristers at the Assizes and Sessions without charge. The Judges' lodgings are at all times occupied by and are under the care of one housekeeper, who with his wife resides on the premises, and has the charge of the whole building, courts and lodgings. The wife has also some duty of superintendence, and they have apartments allotted to them, but no accommodation beyond what is necessary to enable them to discharge the duties of their station. The keeper with his wife and family are the only persons occupying any part of the building as a permanent residence. The house has not been let, nor is such letting contemplated.

A charge is made for the use of the arbitration-rooms, varying according to the extent of the accommodation required; and for the year ending the 31st of December, 1856, such charge only reached the sum of 8*l.* 8*s.*

A purveyor has allowed to him by the Justices gratuitously the privilege of supplying the Bar, jurors, witnesses and persons attending the various Courts above mentioned with refreshments, undertaking, with the committee of Magistrates, to do so at reasonable prices; for this purpose he has the use of the refreshment-rooms, kitchens and accessories thereunto without any charge whatever. He is only permitted to occupy the said rooms and kitchens during the transaction of public business at the Assizes and Sessions.

By agreement between the appellants and the corporation of the city of Manchester, all the accommodation required for both the city Quarter Sessions and the city Court of Record is provided in the Assize Courts, the corporation paying to the Justices the sum of 600*l.* per annum for the same, and 300*l.* per annum to cover all incidental expenses, including cleansing, gas, fires, &c., the corporation of the said city providing the necessary police.

There are no other sources of income to the Justices from the use of the buildings, and all sums received in respect of their use are applied by the Justices in aid of the special rate.

The sum of 900*l.* paid by the corporation of the city of Manchester, as before mentioned, and the sums received from all other sources, as above mentioned, were applied in part payment of the sum of 1,823*l.* 17*s.* 11*d.*, above stated to have been the expenses of maintenance and management during the last year, and the balance of those expenses was defrayed out of the special rate authorized to be raised by the recited act.

No question is at present raised as to the amount of rating.

The questions for the decision of the Court were: First, are the appellants occupiers of the above premises within the statute of 43 Eliz. c. 2; secondly, whether of the whole or of any and what separate parts.

Mellish (C. H. Hopwood with him), for the respondents.—It may be that the rateable value is nil, but it is submitted that under the particular circumstances of this case the appellants are rateable. The 11th section of the act provides that it shall be lawful for them to use or permit the use of the buildings for such consideration as they may think proper; and it appears that, in the exercise of the power so given, they have agreed that the corporation of the city of Manchester should use the buildings for the city Quarter Sessions and the city Court of Record, paying the sums of 600*l.* and 300*l.* a year to the appellants. It is true that it appears from the case that the sums so received are not sufficient for the maintenance of the buildings; but still the appellants are rateable. The Queen v. St. Martin's, Leicester (1) is not contrary to the proposition now submitted, so far as the part let off to the corporation is concerned.

Manisty (Holker with him), for the appellants.—The appellants have no beneficial occupation of the buildings and premises within the meaning of 43 Eliz. c. 2. They make no profit out of them, and the only occupation is for public purposes, and may be considered to be the occupation of the Crown.

Mellish replied.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that this case falls within the principle laid down in Jones v. the Mersey Docks (2), and that the appellants are rateable. It is true that the purposes for which the buildings were erected may be said to be public purposes; but then we find that the appellants are empowered to permit the use of those buildings for lawful purposes, at such times, in such manner, upon such conditions, and for such consideration as they may think proper. They do let part of them to the corporation, and they receive 900*l.* a year in respect of such part. Whatever be the occupation, if a profit is made out of the premises occupied, there is a liability to be rated. I think, therefore, that the appellants are rateable in respect of such part as they let off at a rent.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Ale and Beer House—Licence to sell Beer "not to be consumed on the Premises"—Handing Beer to Customers through Window—4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 4.—3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 13.

An information was preferred against a licensed seller of beer by retail, not to be drunk on the premises, for selling beer on his premises contrary to the statutes 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 4. and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 13. It appeared that a constable tapped at a window of the defendant's premises, which were about three yards from the highway, and upon its being opened by the man in charge of the house, asked him for a pint of beer. The beer was handed in a mug to the constable, who drank part of it, standing as close to the window as he could, and the remainder while sitting on the window-sill. The window was open all the time and the attendant present:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence to justify the Magistrates in convicting the defendant.

under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 13 (1), was preferred, by Charles Schofield, Superintendent of Police, against John Deal, a licensed seller of beer by retail, not to be drunk on the premises where sold, for having, on the 10th of April, 1867, at Assington, in Suffolk, unlawfully sold beer, to wit, one pint of beer, to be consumed in or upon the house or premises where sold without being duly licensed so to do.

The facts deposed to were as follows: On the night of the 10th of April inst., about eight o'clock, police constable Barnard was on duty in Assington parish in plain clothes, and went to the co-operative stores kept by the defendant, who also sells beer on the same premises, "not to be

By section 4, If any person licensed to sell beer or cider not to be consumed on the premises shall, with intent to evade the provisions of this act, take or carry, or authorize or employ, or permit or suffer any person to take or carry any beer or cider out of or from the house or premises of such licensed person for the purpose of being sold on his account, or for his benefit or profit drunk or consumed in any other house, or in any tent, shed or other building of any kind whatever belonging to such licensed person, or hired, used or occupied by him, such beer or cider shall be deemed and taken to have been drunk and consumed upon the premises, and the person selling the same shall be subject to the like forfeitures and penalties as if such beer or cider had been actually drunk or consumed in any house or upon any premises licensed only for the sale thereof as aforesaid.

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, "An Act to amend the acts relating to the general sale of beer and cider by retail in England," s. 13, If any person not being duly licensed to sell beer or cider, shall retail any beer or cider, either to be consumed in or upon the house or premises, or off the premises where sold, or if any person shall sell any beer or cider to be consumed in or upon the house or premises where sold, without being duly licensed so to do, such person shall, in addition to any Excise penalty to which he may thereby become subject, forfeit 5*l.*, such penalty to be recovered in the same manner as any other penalties (not being Excise penalties) are by the said recited acts or this act to be recovered, levied and applied. Provided always that no information or other proceeding for the recovery of the said penalty shall be exhibited or commenced except by and in the name of a constable or other officer of the peace.

drunk on the premises." The police constable went to the window (which was shut) on the right hand side of the door and tapped at it. The man in charge of the house opened the window, and the police-constable asked him for a pint of beer, and for which the police-constable paid him 1½d. The storekeeper gave the beer in a pint mug into the policeman's hands, who stood as close to the window as he could and drank part of it, and afterwards, in the presence of the storekeeper, sat down on the window-sill and drank the remainder of the beer, the window remaining open all the time. While the policeman was drinking the beer another man came up and asked for a pint of beer, which was supplied by the storekeeper through the window, and the policeman saw the man pass something to the storekeeper as if in payment, and the man stood about a yard from the window and drank the beer.

There is no mark or boundary of any kind between the window and the road, the space between being about three yards; but on the other side of the door of the adjoining house, and which is occupied by another tenant, a space of about two yards wide in front of the window is inclosed from the road.

The storekeeper (a man in the employment of the appellant) told the policeman, in reply to something he had said, that the appellant was not at home, and that he, the storekeeper, was not aware that he had sold the beer to be consumed on the premises, that he considered he had not done so.

It was admitted that the mug in which the beer was supplied was the appellant's. Upon these facts the appellant's attorney contended that the beer was sold and the transaction completed, so far as the appellant was concerned, immediately the beer was paid for and handed to the policeman, who was upon the highway and not upon the appellant's premises at the time, and that he, the appellant, was not responsible for what was done with the beer afterwards, and referred to 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 4. as defining what is a sale upon the premises. The Justices being of opinion that the sale of beer in the mug of the housekeeper, at the place stated in the evidence, for immediate consumption, with the evident sanction of the servant, was an offence under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 13, and contrary to the spirit of 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 4, convicted the appellant and ordered him to pay a penalty of 2s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. costs. The appellant being dissatisfied with this decision, applied for a case to be stated, which was accordingly done. The question being whether the beer was sold under such circumstances as to constitute a sale on the premises, within the meaning of 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 4. and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 13.

Metcalfe, for the respondent.—The conviction was right. The beer was sold in such a manner that it would ordinarily be considered as sold to be consumed on the premises. If it be lawful for unlicensed persons to sell beer in this manner, the roads will be blocked up, and the nuisance greater than if the beer were drunk inside the house. In Cross v. Watts (2), where the defendant had a licence to sell beer off his premises, but no licence to sell it upon them, and his wife brought beer from the house in mugs or drinking cups to men sitting on a bench just outside the street door, it was held that the conviction was a proper one, and that the beer must be considered as drunk on the premises.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—There is nothing to shew that the appellant or his servant knew that the man to whom the beer was sold intended to drink it immediately.]

The Justices found that the beer was sold for immediate consumption.

Hance, for the appellant, was not heard.

Per Curiam (3).—It is impossible to say that the beer was sold under circumstances which would entitle the Magistrates to say that it was "consumed on the premises" within the meaning of the act.

Conviction quashed.

*Poor—Settlement by Payment of Taxes—Payment of Property-Tax—5 & 6 Vict.
c. 35. Schedule (A.)*

A pauper gains a settlement in the parish wherein he has been assessed to and paid property-tax, according to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, Schedule (A.)

By an order of Justices for the borough of Cambridge, three children of James Legge, who had deserted them, and whose place of abode was unknown, being inhabiting in and chargeable to the common fund of the union, were adjudged to be legally settled in the parish of St. George, Hanover Square, and ordered to be removed from the Cambridge Union.

Upon appeal to the Cambridge Quarter Sessions against this order, the following CASE was stated for the opinion of the Court, pursuant to 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 11:

James Legge (the father of the paupers) rented a tenement, consisting of a separate and distinct dwelling-house, being No. 11, Hanover Street, Pimlico, in the appellant parish for one year, namely, from Michaelmas, 1863, to Michaelmas, 1864, at the rent of 42*l.*, subject to the tenancy being determined at a quarter's notice. James Legge entered into the occupation of this tenement, and occupied it under the rental and resided there during the whole year. The rent of 42*l.* was duly paid by him. The rates for the relief of the poor of the appellant parish were and are made annually, viz., from Lady Day of one year to Lady Day of the following year. At Lady Day, 1864, the name of James Legge, the tenant, appears in the poor-rate book of the appellant parish, and he was duly assessed and rated therein in respect of his tenement, but no portion of the rate was paid by him. In the assessment for the year ending the 5th of April, 1865, made under the acts of parliament for the assessment of occupiers of property to the property and income tax, the name of James Legge, the tenant, appears; and upon the 3rd of June, 1864, he paid to William Blackbourne, the collector of taxes appointed to receive the same, the sum of 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, being four quarters' duty or income-tax for the year ending the 5th of April, 1864, which became due on the 20th of March, 1864, under schedule (A.), for and in respect of the tenement before mentioned, and which sum of 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.* was subsequently allowed and paid by the landlord of the premises to James Legge by deduction from the rent of 42*l.*

If the Court of Queen's Bench is of opinion upon the facts above stated that James Legge gained a legal settlement in the appellant parish under the statute 3 W. & M. c. 11. s. 6, by virtue or in consequence of the payment of the sum of 1*l.* 3*s.* 4*d.*, the order of the Justices is to be confirmed; if otherwise, to be quashed, and a judgment in conformity with the decision of the Court may be entered on motion by either party at the Sessions next or next but one after the decision.

Mayd (O'Malley with him), for the respondents.—The simple question is, whether a settlement is gained under 3 W. & M. c. 11. s. 6. (1), where the pauper has been assessed to and paid property-tax under 5 & 6 Vict.

(1) By the 3 W. & M. c. 11. s. 6, "If any person who shall come to inhabit in any town or parish, shall for himself and on his own account execute any public annual office or charge in the said town or parish during one whole year, or shall be charged with or pay his share towards the public taxes or levies of the said town or parish, then he shall be adjudged and deemed to have a legal settlement in the same, though no such notice in writing be delivered and published as is hereby before required."

By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, the duties to be levied under Schedule (A.) are, for all lands, tenements and hereditaments or heritages in Great Britain there shall be charged yearly, in respect of the property thereof for every 20*s.* of the annual value, the sum of 7*d.*

By No. IV.—"Rules and Regulations respecting the said Duties—First, all properties chargeable to the duties in Schedule (A.) shall be charged in the parish or place where the same are situate, and not elsewhere, except as hereinafter is excepted." Ninth, "The occupier of any lands, tenements, here-

c. 35, Schedule (A.). It is submitted that by such an assessment the pauper is charged with and pays his share towards the public taxes or levies of the parish. He is assessed to the property-tax, and payment of it demanded from him. The duties are charged in the parish where the property is situated.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—You say that persons paying this tax must be looked upon as prima facie both owners and occupier.]

It has repeatedly been held that all that is required to give a settlement under this ditaments or heritages, being tenant of the same, and paying the said duties, shall deduct so much thereof in respect of the rent payable to the landlord for the time being (all sums allowed by the Commissioners being first deducted) as a rate of 7d. for every 20s. thereof would by a just proportion amount unto, which deduction shall be made out of the first payment thereafter to be made on account of rent; and the receivers of Her Majesty, and all landlords, both mediate and immediate, their respective heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, according to their respective interests, and their respective receivers or agents, shall allow such deduction upon receipt of the residue of the rent.

By No. IX. —“Rules for charging the said Duties under Schedules (A.) and (B.)—First, the said duties, except where other provisions are made as aforesaid for estimating particular properties, shall be estimated according to the general rule contained in Schedule (A.), and shall be charged on and paid by the occupier for the time being, his executors, administrators and assigns.”

By section 37, officers for receipt of land-tax and assessed taxes, and the inspectors and surveyors of assessed taxes, are to act in the execution of this act, and to have the like powers as under the assessed taxes.

By section 78, “No contract, covenant or agreement between landlord and tenant, or any other persons, touching the payment of taxes and assessments to be charged on their respective premises, shall be deemed or construed to extend to the duties charged thereon under this act, nor to be binding contrary to the intent and meaning of this act; but all such duties shall be charged upon and paid by the respective occupiers subject to such deductions and repayments as are by this act authorized and allowed; and all such deductions and repay-section is that the parish should rate the pauper so as to shew that they are aware that he is in the parish, and that he should pay on such rating—The King v. Stapleton (2). In The King v. Bramley (3) it was held that a settlement might be gained by being charged to and paying land-tax, although the statute required that the tax should be repaid by the landlord, Lord Hardwicke saying, “The great difficulty has been, whether the legislature did not mean parochial taxes; but this has long since been gotten over, and the land-tax has been holden to be within the act from the notice of habitancy that arises by the parties being assessed and paying it.” This principle is also recognized in The King v. Christchurch (4) and The King v. Mitcham (5). The same arguments must apply to the property-tax.

D. D. Keane (F. T. Streeten with him), for the appellants.—The father of the paupers did not pay his share of the public taxes within the meaning of the act. With regard to the decisions as to payment of land-tax giving notice of habitancy, it would seem that this impost must have been collected by the parish officers, otherwise there would have been no notoriety.

[MELLOR, J.—In the case of land-tax the parish is not assessed.]

The property-tax is collected by a different machinery from that of the land-tax. By the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, s. 36. the appointment of assessors to collect this impost is vested in a body of independent Commissioners. Again, it cannot be said in the present case that the father of the paupers paid the tax. By section 73. of the last-mentioned act contracts between landlords and tenants affecting the statutory liability of the landlord are void, and the landlord must be looked upon as the party actually paying. If the wife of a pauper were to pay for him without his knowledge, he could not be said to pay.—He cited The King v. Axmouth (6) and The King v. Okehampton (7).

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that our judgment must be for the respondents, and that a settlement was gained within the meaning of the 3 W. & M. c. 11. s. 6. by the payment of property-tax. With regard to the question as to notice of habitancy, I see no material distinction between payment of property-tax and payment of land-tax. It may be that what the Courts have thought sufficient evidence that parishes have received notice of habitancy is in fact insufficient, but it has beyond any doubt been decided in The King v. Axmouth (6) that any one who is charged to and pays the land-tax in a parish gains a settlement there. And in The King v. Christchurch (4) the principle of the former decision is recognized and explained, Bayley, J. saying that the land-tax was held to be within the act from the notice of inhabitancy that arose from the party's having been assessed to and paid it. Whether these cases were well or ill decided, we should be going contrary to the principles upon which this Court has acted, if we disturbed the law on the subject of the settlement of the poor. The land-tax has not been collected by parochial officers, but by officers appointed by the Commissioners of Land-tax; and by section 37. of the Property-Tax Act, officers for the receipt of land-tax and assessed taxes, and inspectors and surveyors of assessed taxes, are to act in the execution of the act, which serves to strengthen the analogy between the two cases. For these reasons, I think that the settlement was proved.

HEALTH, respondents.

Local Board of Health—By-laws—Dwelling-house not to be erected without a Back Street or Roadway—Local Government Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 34.

A local board of health, purporting to act under the Local Government Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 34,—which enables local boards to make by-laws with respect to the level, width and construction of new streets, and provisions for the sewerage thereof, and with respect to the drainage of buildings, to water-closets, privies, ashpits and cesspools in connexion with buildings,—made a by-law as follows: "No dwelling-house shall be hereafter erected, without having at the rear or side thereof a good and sufficient back street or roadway, at least twelve feet wide, communicating with some adjoining public street or highway, in such situation as shall be approved by the local board, for the purpose of affording efficient means of access to the privy or ashpit belonging to such house; and every plan which shall be left at the office of the local board, in pursuance of the 64th by-law, shall shew the position, width and direction of such roadway as intended to be made, and its mode of communication with adjoining streets or highways: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the local board, at their discretion, in special cases, to modify the requirement hereinbefore contained, and to dispense with strict compliance with the terms of this by-law on such conditions as they may deem fit and reasonable":—Held, that the by-law was unreasonable, and could not be enforced by the board, as it imposed a general and unnecessary restriction upon the building of all houses, instead of being limited to the particular nuisances which it was the object of the statute to prevent.

CASE stated by Magistrates under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. The material part of the case was as follows:

The defendant was summoned before the Magistrates by the Garston Local Board of Health for an alleged breach of a by-law made by the board under the powers of the Public Health Act, 1848, and the Local Government Act, 1858.

The by-law referred to is No. 1. of the by-laws passed on December 5, 1865, and is in these words: "No dwelling-house shall be hereafter erected without having at the rear or side thereof a good and sufficient back street or roadway, at least twelve feet wide, communicating with some adjoining public street or highway, in such situation as shall be approved by the local board, for the purpose of affording efficient means of access to the privy or ashpit belonging to such house; and every plan which shall be left at the office of the local board, in pursuance of the 64th by-law, shall shew the position, width and direction of such roadway as intended to be made, and its mode of communication with adjoining streets or highways: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the local board, at their discretion, in special cases, to modify the requirement hereinbefore contained, and to dispense with strict compliance with the terms of this by-law on such conditions as they may deem fit and reasonable."

The defendant was summoned for having, after the working and passing of the by-law, erected a dwelling-house without leaving at the rear or side thereof a good and sufficient back street or roadway, at least twelve feet wide, communicating with some adjoining public street or highway, in a situation approved by the local board, for the purpose of affording efficient means of access to the privy or ashpit belonging to such house. The facts were not disputed. It was admitted on the part of the defendant, that he had erected the house as alleged, without any back street or roadway, except a passage four feet in width; and that the plan submitted by him previous to the erection of the house, and after the passing and confirmation of the by-law, had been disapproved on that account by the local board; but it was contended, on his behalf, that the by-law was invalid and illegal, by reason of its not having been made with respect to any of the matters mentioned in section 34. of the Local Government Act, 1858, but for another purpose not authorized by that act, or the Public Health Act, 1848; and also that the board had not, under these acts, the power to require any passage or back street to be made or left at the rear of any house or other building, or to require any alteration to be made in the width of any such passage or back street, if the owner of such house or other building proposed to make or leave such.

No streets or passages were actually formed on the land at the time of the making of the by-law (December 5, 1865), nor had the defendant at that time commenced to build.

The Magistrates convicted the defendant, and imposed upon him a penalty, with costs.

If the Court should be of opinion that the defendant was bound to comply with the requirement of the by-law, the conviction was to be affirmed; if otherwise, to be reversed.

J. A. Russell, for the respondents.—The material question is, whether the by-law set out in the case is a valid one. By the Local Government Act, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98. s. 34 (1), any local board has power to make by-laws with respect to waterclosets, privies, ashpits and cesspools in connexion with buildings; and the object of this by-law appears to be to afford ready access to houses for the purpose of emptying and cleansing these conveniences, and to prevent the refuse from being carried through the public streets.

(1) By the Local Government Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 34, "The 53rd and 72nd sections of the Public Health Act, 1848, shall be repealed; and in lieu thereof, be it enacted as follows: Every local board may make by-laws with respect to the following matters; (that is to say,) (1.) With respect to the level, width and construction of new streets, and the provisions for the sewerage thereof; (2.) With respect to the structure of walls of new buildings for securing stability and the prevention of fires; (3.) With respect to the sufficiency of the space about buildings to secure a free circulation of air, and with respect to the ventilation of buildings; (4.) With respect to the drainage of buildings, to waterclosets, privies, ashpits and cesspools in connexion with buildings, and to the closing of buildings or parts of buildings unfit for human habitation, and to prohibition of their use for such habitation."

[LUSH, J.—If a house is provided with waterclosets, it ought not to be subject to such a regulation.]

The by-law enables the board to dispense with strict compliance with the terms of it in special cases.

[LUSH, J.—If the enactment goes beyond the statutory powers, the proviso will not cure it. It is in its terms absolute.]

R. G. Williams, for the appellant, was not heard.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think that the by-law is bad, and that it goes beyond the powers of the act. If a field were laid out in building lots, not a house, according to this by-law, could be built unless a back street or roadway were provided; although it might be intended to be provided with a watercloset.

LUSH, J.—If the by-law had provided that no privy, &c. should be constructed without a back street or roadway, it might have been good; but it says that no house shall be erected without having such a back street or roadway.

Conviction quashed.

Nov. 20. } THE QUEEN v. DAMARELL.

Bastardy—Service of Summons—Last Place of Abode—Absence Abroad—7 & 8 Vict. c. 101—Certiorari.

On the 3rd of October E. F. applied for and obtained a summons against D, as the father of a bastard child of which she was then pregnant, and which was born on the 29th. On the 4th, the summons was left at a house in which D. had lived up to the 1st, upon which day he went away to go to America. He sailed on the 14th, and did not hear anything of the proceedings till about two months after he arrived in America. On the 6th of December E. F. appeared in support of the summons, and, after hearing the case, the Justices made an order adjudicating D. to be the father of the child, and ordering him to pay money for its maintenance. The order recited that it was proved that the summons had been duly served, the same having been left at the last place of abode. The defendant having returned to England, the order was brought up by certiorari for the purpose of being quashed:—Held, that this Court could not interfere, there being nothing to shew that the order was illegal, although the defendant had had no opportunity of objecting to its being made.

Rule calling upon Emma Fish, the prosecutrix, to shew cause why an order of Justices adjudging the defendant to be the putative father of the bastard child of the said Emma Fish, and ordering him to pay her certain sums of money, should not be quashed for the insufficiency thereof.

It appeared from the affidavits that, upon the 3rd of October, 1866, Emma Fish obtained from a Justice of the Peace a summons against the defendant to appear at a petty sessions to be holden at Stratton, in the county of Cornwall, on the 6th of December, to answer a complaint against him as being the father of a bastard child of which she was then pregnant. The summons was granted and was delivered into the hands of a constable for service upon the defendant, who took it on the 4th to a house at Tetcott where the defendant had been residing up to the 1st of the same month, upon which day he left the house intending to go to America. He obtained a ticket for his voyage at Plymouth on the 12th, and he sailed on the 14th. The constable, being informed that the defendant had left the house, gave the summons to the wife of the person who occupied the house, and left it with her. Upon the 6th of December Emma Fish attended at the petty sessions, and the Justices, after hearing the evidence offered in support of the application, made an order adjudging the defendant to be the putative father of the child, and ordering him to pay to her 5s. a week. The order contained, among other recitals, the following: "And whereas the said John Damarell having been duly served with the said summons, the same having been left at his last place of abode, six days at least before this day, as is now proved before us."

After the defendant had been in America some two months, he was informed that the order had been made, the child having been born on the 29th of October. He had no knowledge of the summons being applied for or issued before he was so informed of it. He swore that for twelve months and upwards before the 29th of October he had no carnal connexion with Emma Fish; but upon this point he was strongly contradicted by the affidavits of Emma Fish and others. He returned to England in March of the present year, and then obtained a certiorari to bring up the order for the purpose of having it quashed.

J. O. Griffiths shewed cause against the rule.—(He first objected that the rule did not specify any omission or mistake in the order as required by section 7. of the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, and called attention to the remarks of Mellor, J., in The Queen v. Purday (1); but the Court overruled the objection on the ground that the order did not appear to be objected to on the ground of any omission or mistake.) The question to be determined is, whether the Court has any power to interfere, even if it should be of opinion that the Justices might more properly have given a contrary decision. The order recites that it was proved to them that the defendant had been duly served with the summons by its being left at his last place of abode. Such service is sufficient under section 3. of the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, which enacts, "that after the death of such bastard child, on the appearance of the person so summoned, or on proof that the summons was duly served on such person, or left at his last place of abode six days at least before the petty sessions, the Justices . . . may adjudge," &c. It is clear upon these words that the Justices had power to enter upon the inquiry and to decide whether it was proved that the summons had been left at the last place of abode of the alleged father. They have decided it, and rightly; but even if they were wrong, this Court could not interfere.—(He was then stopped.)

Kingdon, in support of the rule.—This order has been made behind the back of the defendant, when he had no knowledge of there being any charge against him. Such a proceeding is against natural justice, and this Court will set the order aside. The Queen v. Davis (2) was a similar case in some respects, and there the rule for a certiorari was refused; but upon the ground that there was nothing in the affidavits to shew that the charge was unfounded. Here the defendant swears that he had no connexion with Emma Fish for more than a year before the child was born, so that the child could not be his unless he has sworn falsely. The real question is, whether the alleged father is in England, or in a position to appear and answer the summons. Here it was impossible that the defendant could appear, as he knew nothing about the proceeding, and was out of the country.—He also referred to Saunders on Affiliation, and to cases cited therein.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The Court is bound by the words of the 3rd section.—[His Lordship read them.]—The proof was sufficient that the summons had been left at the last place of abode of the defendant. Mr. Kingdon asks us to put a qualification upon those words, but I do not see how we can do so. It is very true that the order has been made behind the back of the defendant, when he was on his passage to America, or when he had arrived there, which is certainly more or less inconsistent with natural justice, he having no opportunity of being present at the hearing of the case before the Justices; but, on the other hand, when we remember that the woman is limited to a period of twelve months from the birth of the child within which she must make her application, so that if the father absent himself for that period her remedy against him under this statute would be gone, we cannot but see that it would be most inconvenient to hold that the order could not be made by the Justices. The legislature is in fault in not making provision for the case where the father is in such a position, that he should have an opportunity, on his return to England, of shewing that the case ought to be re-opened, or else in not providing that where it is necessary that the service should be effected by leaving the summons at the last place of abode of the alleged father, the time should be extended within which the mother should be at liberty to make the application. By either of such provisions, the present inconvenience might have been obviated; but the statute does not contain any such provision, and we can only decide the question upon the words of the statute. We have only to see whether the summons was shewn to have been left at the last place of abode of the defendant; and when we look at the facts, we find that that cannot be disputed, for the defendant had no place of abode subsequent to the one at Tetcott, which he left before going to America. The decision of the Justices is, therefore, within the very terms of the statute.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I have had considerable difficulty in reconciling with the principles of justice that a man may be convicted without having had any opportunity of shewing that the conviction ought not to have taken place. But we must look at the particular nature of the offence and the circumstances of the case, and then we find that the Justices have embarked upon the inquiry, and that, though the defendant swears that he had no connexion with the woman for twelve months, she swears the contrary. The case was one which the Justices had to consider, and the proof was before them. I think that the safest way is to abide by the words of the statute.

LUSH, J.—I do not think that we have any jurisdiction to set this order aside, unless we see that it was one which ought not to have been made. The statute does not contain any provision to meet the case of a man who is gone abroad, and is out of the way of being served with the summons. The Justices are, upon proof of the summons being left at the last place of abode, to proceed to adjudicate; they do adjudicate; and what jurisdiction have we to say that they are wrong in making the order? It would be a hardship upon the mother, if we were to quash the order; and I see nothing to shew that it has been illegally made.

Footpath, Driving upon—Conviction—General Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50), s. 72.

Under the 72nd section of the General Highway Act, "if any person shall wilfully ride upon any footpath or causeway by the side of any road made or set apart for the use or accommodation of foot passengers; or shall wilfully lead or drive any horse, ass, sheep, mule, swine or cattle, or carriage of any description, or any truck or sledge upon any such footpath or causeway," he shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s. over and above the damages occasioned thereby:—Held, that this enactment does not apply to the case of a footpath simpliciter, but only to such a footpath as is by the side of a road made, &c.

Rule calling upon the prosecutors to shew cause why the conviction should not be quashed.

It appeared that on the 27th of July in the present year the defendant was convicted by two Justices of the borough of Aldeburgh, for that he "unlawfully and wilfully did drive a certain carriage and two horses in, upon and along a certain public footpath there situate, called "the Craig Path," that is to say, between the Moot Hall and Collia's workshop, contrary to the statute, &c., and was adjudged to pay the sum of 2*l.* and certain costs.

It appeared from the affidavits, that the Craig Path was, till within the last ten or twelve years, rough shingle, and formed part of the beach fronting the German Ocean; that it was then improved by the inhabitants of Aldeburgh; that it was wide enough for carriages to pass along, and had been used for carriages by persons driving to and from the several houses on the west side, and for carts and horses to deliver coals and other articles thereat. The conviction was under the 72nd section of the General Highway Act, but the "Craig Path" was not a footpath or causeway by the side of any road made or set apart for the use or accommodation of foot passengers, nor is there any road whatever by the side of or near to the "Craig Path."

Keane and Metcalf shewed cause against the rule.—By the 72nd section a penalty is imposed "if any person shall wilfully ride upon any footpath or causeway by the side of any road made or set apart for the use or accommodation of foot passengers; or shall wilfully lead or drive any horse, ass, sheep, mule, swine or cattle, or carriage of any description, or any truck or sledge upon any such footpath or causeway." The words "such footpath" mean any footpath, although it be not by the side of a road, or a causeway by the side of any road, made or set apart for the use and accommodation of foot passengers. In the 5th section, the interpretation clause, the word "highways" is to be understood to mean amongst other things footways and also causeways. The "Craig Path" was clearly a footpath, and the conviction was right.

Hayes, Serj., in support of the rule, was not heard.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The 72nd section in question is very clear, and it follows from the construction which we put upon it that this rule must be made absolute.—[His Lordship read the part of the section above set out.]—The "Craig Path" is not a footpath by the side of any road, and therefore is not within this section. We must take it that it was a highway for foot passengers, and that the defendant drove his carriage and horses upon it: but we must also take it that it was not by the side of any road. It is said that the provision was intended to apply to the case of persons riding or driving along any footpath, but I think not, and it seems to me that if that had been intended, the language would have been, "upon any footpath, or upon any causeway by the side,"

&c. I cannot imagine that the legislature meant to make the act of riding upon any footpath whatever punishable under a penalty. There are many footpaths which are entirely upon grass, and it would be in many cases no injury to anybody if a person was to drive or ride along them. It would certainly be very inconvenient if a person was to be liable to this penalty if he merely rode upon such a path. The provision was intended to prevent persons from riding or driving upon, and thus injuring, footpaths and causeways by the side of roads upon which they might have ridden or driven, and endangering the safety of the foot passengers. Upon the terms of the act and upon principle I come to the conclusion that the penalty only attaches when the person rides or drives along a footpath or causeway which is by the side of a road.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems to me clear that the provision in this section was not intended to apply to footpaths simpliciter, but only to such as are by the sides of roads, and where persons wantonly ride or drive along them.

LUSH, J.—I was at first a good deal struck by the phraseology of the section, but when I consider the consequences of following out the construction which is contended for by the prosecution, I come to the conclusion that that cannot be the right construction, and that the footpath intended by the legislature was one which was by the side of a road. In the latter part of the clause which we have to construe mention is made of leading or driving any horse, sheep, &c. upon any such footpath or causeway. If this penalty could be imposed in the case of every footpath, it could be imposed upon every person who being the owner drove a sheep, &c. along a footpath. That cannot have been intended; and the only other construction is, that it applies only to cases where the footpath or causeway is by the side of a road.

Rule absolute.

Poor-Rate—Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings incorporated for constructing Public Works—Servants of the Crown—Consolidated Fund—Beneficial Occupation—Chelsea Bridge—Mandamus.

*The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods and Forests were, by act of parliament, incorporated for the purpose of making a bridge over the Thames, which had been recommended by the Commissioners for improving the metropolis, and the plans of which had been approved of by the Commissioners of the Treasury. Power was given to obtain an advance of money from the Consolidated Fund, such advance to be repaid out of the money collected by way of tolls which the corporation were authorized to take by means of toll-houses and collectors to be established on the bridge. These tolls were to be applied, first, in payment of all expenses of management and collection of the tolls; secondly, in maintaining the bridge; thirdly, in repayment of the money advanced; and the surplus, if any, was to form a fund for such metropolitan improvement as the legislature should determine. By a subsequent act, this provision as to the surplus was repealed, and it was provided that when a sum of 80,000*l.* and interest had been paid off, no toll should be demanded in respect of foot-passengers. The bridge was built and vested in the Commissioners, and the tolls taken exceeded the cost of maintaining the bridge. 13,500*l.* of the 80,000*l.* advanced had been repaid, and not more than 2,500*l.* towards the said sum of 13,500*l.* was received from the tolls and proceeds of the bridge. The Commissioners were assessed in a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish, in which part of the bridge and its approaches was situate:—Held, that they were not liable, their only occupation being as servants of the Crown, and the work, although a local and private object, being de facto done by servants of the Crown and with the funds of the Crown.*

NEW SERIES, 37.—MAG. CAS.

1. Whereas, by an act passed in the 9th and 10th years of our reign, entitled 'An act to enable the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods to construct an embankment and roadway on the North shore of the River Thames from Battersea Bridge to Vauxhall Bridge, and to build a Suspension Bridge over the said River, at or near Chelsea Hospital with suitable approaches thereto, including a Street from Lower Sloane Street to the northern extremity of the Bridge,' it is, amongst other things, recited that the Commissioners appointed by us to inquire into and consider the most effectual means of improving the Metropolis and of providing increased facilities of communication between the same, did by their report, made on the 23rd of July, 1845, recommend, amongst other things, the construction of a suspension bridge across the river Thames between Battersea and Vauxhall bridges, from a point near Chelsea Hospital, on the north side, to a point near the public house, called the Red House, on the south side, and also recited that the Commissioners of our Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings had caused surveys, plans and designs to be made of the said intended bridge and the approaches thereto, and that such surveys, plans and designs had been approved by the Commissioners of our Treasury.

2. And whereas, by the same act, by section 1, the Commissioners of our Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings for the time being are to be and are thereby constituted a corporation, by the name and style of "the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings," in order to enable them to execute and carry into effect the several powers and purposes of that act, and amongst such powers and purposes, the power and purpose of building the said bridge, and by that name for such purposes are to have perpetual succession and use a common seal, and sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, and take lands and hereditaments, to them and their successors for ever, for the purposes of such act.

3. And whereas, by the same act, by section 2, the Lord High Treasurer, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Treasurer, are empowered for the purposes of that act to authorize the Commissioners for issuing Exchequer Bills for Public Works, to advance and lend to the Commissioners for executing such act any sum or sums of money in Exchequer bills, not exceeding in the whole the sum of 120,000*l.*, the repayment of such advances to be secured by an assignment of, amongst other tolls and moneys, the tolls of the said bridge thereafter authorized to be taken, which tolls the Commissioners for executing such act are thereby empowered to assign accordingly.

4. And whereas, by the same act, by section 3, the Commissioners for executing the same were, upon certain terms and under certain conditions therein stated, empowered to construct and complete a bridge across the said river Thames at the place and from and to the respective points hereinbefore mentioned, with convenient approaches thereto, together with convenient piers, stairs, hard, and landing-places, in manner and according to the surveys, plans and designs aforesaid. And such bridge, when so erected, together with the approaches thereto, was to be kept in repair by the Commissioners for executing such act out of the tolls and other moneys coming to them under such act.

5. And whereas, by the same act, by section 9, the Commissioners for executing the same were empowered to appoint such and so many clerks and other officers and persons as they should deem necessary to employ in the execution of the same, and from time to time to remove them, or any of them, and to allow to such clerks and other officers such salaries and allowances as to the said Commissioners should seem meet and be approved of by the Lord High Treasurer, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Treasurer.

6. And whereas, by the same act, by section 64, the Commissioners for executing such act are empowered to erect a toll-gate or bar, or toll-gates or bars, on the said bridge, and from time to time to remove such gate or gates, bar or bars, and erect others in lieu thereof, and to erect and maintain from time to time such toll-houses or other conveniences near such toll-gate or gates, bar or bars, as they shall think fit, and to take and demand tolls at such gate or gates, bar or bars, by such person or persons as the said Commissioners should from time to time appoint before any foot-passenger, or any horse, mule, ass or other beast, or any coach, cart or other vehicle, should be permitted to pass or return over or on to the said bridge.

7. And whereas, by the same act, by section 112, all tolls received by virtue of such act are to be applied by the said Commissioners for executing the same in payment of all expenses of the management and collection of the said tolls, and in the next place in keeping and maintaining (amongst other structural works and improvements) the said bridge, and in the next place in payment of all advances, costs and other expenses made or paid for by the State out of the Consolidated Fund, or otherwise in and towards the works and improvements thereby authorized to be made, and the surplus, if any, to form a fund for such metropolitan improvements as the legislature should determine.

8. And whereas by another act, passed in the 9th and 10th years of our reign, entitled 'An act to empower the Commissioners for the Issue of Loans for Public Works and Fisheries to make loans in money to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods, in lieu of loans heretofore authorized to be made in Exchequer bills,' the Commissioners for the issue of loans for public works and fisheries for the time being are empowered to make loans to the Commissioners of our Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings for the time being; and also to the said Commissioners (who are incorporated by several acts for effecting improvements in the metropolis) and their successors, in money in lieu of Exchequer bills.

9. And whereas by another act, of the 14th and 15th years of our reign, entitled 'An act to make better provision for the management of the woods, forests and land revenues of the Crown, and for the direction of public works and buildings,' it is recited (amongst other things) that it is expedient that the direction of Her Majesty's works and public buildings should be separated from the management of the possessions and land revenues of the Crown; and by such act (by section 1.) the person who may at the commencement of such act be the first

Commissioner of our Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings is to be first Commissioner of our works and public buildings; and, further (by section 15), certain other persons are by virtue of their offices to be Commissioners of our works and public buildings conjointly with such first Commissioner, and with such person to be styled "The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings."

10. And whereas by the said last-mentioned act (by section 22.) the Commissioners or first Commissioner of our Works and Public Buildings for the time being are to perform and exercise all the duties and powers under the said first-mentioned act of the 9th and 10th years of our reign, which would have been performed and exercised by the Commissioners or first Commissioner for the time being of our woods, forests, land revenues, works and buildings if such act of the 14th and 15th years of our reign had not been passed, and such act is to apply to the Commissioners or first Commissioner of our Works and Public Buildings as if they had been originally named therein; and the said act of the 9th and 10th years of our reign, whereby the said Commissioners of Woods were constituted a corporation for (amongst other purposes of such act) the purpose of building the said bridge, is to be read and construed as if the Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings had been thereby incorporated by the name of "The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings," and the perpetual succession, use of common seal and other rights and privileges and powers whatsoever thereby given to or vested in the Commissioners of our Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings are to be deemed and construed to have been thereby given to and vested in the Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings.

11. And whereas by the said last-mentioned act of the 14th and 15th years of our reign, all the lands, tenements, hereditaments and property whatsoever, which, at the commencement of such act, were vested in the Commissioners of our Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings in a corporate capacity or otherwise, under or for the purposes of the said first-mentioned act of the 9th and 10th years of our reign, are to be vested in the Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings and their successors, in the like corporate capacity or otherwise as the case may require, alone or jointly, for the estate or interest and purposes, and subject to the rights and equities for and subject to which the same respectively were vested in the Commissioners of our Woods, Forests, Land Revenues, Works and Buildings.

12. And whereas, by an act passed in the 21st and 22nd years of our reign, entitled 'An act to amend the act of the 9th and 10th years of Her present Majesty, chapter 39,' and to abolish foot-passenger tolls on Chelsea Bridge after payment of the sum of 80,000*l.* and interest, it is (amongst other things) recited that the Commissioners for carrying the act of the 9th & 10th years of our reign into execution had borrowed upon certain securities from the Commissioners for the issue of loans for Public Works and Fisheries, &c., divers sums of money for the purpose of executing the works by that act authorized, which sums amounted in the whole to 80,000*l.*, which said amount, together with interest thereon, remained due and owing on the said securities on the 31st of March, 1858.

13. And whereas, by the same act (by section 1.) so much of the said act of the 9th and 10th years of our reign as directs that all the surplus (if any) of the moneys arising from tolls by that act authorized to be taken, rents for the same, or penalties, fines and forfeitures under that act, shall form a fund for such metropolitan improvements as the legislature shall determine and shall be applied accordingly, is repealed.

14. And whereas, by the same act (by section 2), when the said sum of 80,000*l.* and interest shall have been paid off no toll is to be demanded or taken for or in respect of foot-passengers passing over or on to the said bridge.

15. And whereas, under and by virtue of, and in accordance with the provision in that behalf of the several acts hereinbefore mentioned, or some or one of them, the said bridge had been constructed and completed with convenient approaches, piers, stairs, hardts and landing-places, in manner and according to the said surveys, plans and designs, and was on or about the 29th of March, 1858, opened to the public.

16. And whereas, toll gates or bars were then erected, and have ever since been and still are maintained on the said bridge.

17. And whereas, under and by virtue of the said acts, or some or one of them, tolls have ever since been and still are taken and demanded by persons in that behalf duly appointed for and in respect of pedestrian and other traffic over and on to the said bridge, and such tolls, at the time of the making the rate hereinafter mentioned, exceeded and always have exceeded the costs and expenses of keeping and maintaining the said bridge, and incidental thereto.

18. And whereas the said moneys received, taken and demanded under and by virtue of the said several acts, or some or one of them, at the time of making the said rate, exceeded and have always exceeded in the aggregate the costs and expenses of keeping and maintaining the works and improvements done and made under and in pursuance of the powers and provisions of the said several acts or some or one of them.

19. And whereas the said bridge and approaches, and other works connected therewith and appurtenant thereto, on the completion thereof, became vested in, and have ever since been in the possession and under the control and management of the Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings, in their said corporate capacity, under and by virtue and for the purposes of the said several acts, or some or one of them.

20. And whereas the said Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings, so being such corporation as aforesaid, and in their said corporate capacity, before and at the time of making the said rate, were and still are under and by virtue of the said several acts or some or one of them, and not otherwise, beneficial occupiers of the said bridge and works appurtenant thereto, and as such occupiers, under and by virtue of the said acts, liable to be rated to the relief of the poor and for other purposes of the parish of St. George, Hanover Square, in the county of Middlesex.

21. And whereas, by a local act, passed in the 7th year of the late King George the Fourth, intituled 'An act for the better paving, lighting, regulating and improving the parish of St. George, Hanover Square, within the liberty of the city of Westminster,' it is enacted (by section 58), that the vestry and overseers of the poor of the parish for the time being, or the major part of them, duly assembled, shall, in the month of March in every year, make a fair and equal formal rate upon all persons who do or shall occupy any lands, buildings or erections then built or thereafter to be built, and any lands or grounds whatsoever, or possess any rateable property within the said parish, for raising such sums of money as shall be necessary for defraying the expense of maintaining and employing the poor of the said parish, and all other expenses relating thereto.

22. And whereas, by the said local act (by section 71.) the said rates are to commence and take place on the 25th of March in every year, and be payable by equal quarterly payments, and be collected and received at the time after the expiration of thirty days from the commencement of the quarter; and in case any person shall refuse or neglect to pay the same for the space of seven days next after demand at his or her dwelling-house, or usual place of abode, the money which shall be so unpaid shall be levied and recovered by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such defaulter, upon complaint to any Justice of the Peace of the district by warrant under the hand and seal of such Justice, together with all costs and charges incident to and attending such complaint, distress and sale.

23. And whereas by the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the vestry of the said parish is incorporated by the name of "The Vestry of the Parish of St. George, Hanover Square, in the County of Middlesex."

24. And whereas part of the said bridge and the approaches and works belonging thereto, is situate within the parish of St. George, Hanover Square.

25. And whereas, under and by virtue of the said local act and the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, the said vestry of the parish of St. George, Hanover Square, in the county of Middlesex, on or about the 29th of March, 1866, made a rate in due form of law for the relief of the poor and other purposes of such parish, in and by which rate the said Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings were assessed, as occupiers of the said bridge, at the sum of 135*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.*, for and in respect of that part, and so much of the said bridge as is within the said parish.

26. And whereas, on or about the 20th of November, 1866, payment of the sum of 101*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, being the proportion of the said rate then due and unpaid, was duly demanded of the said Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings, and payment thereof was refused and the same remains wholly unpaid.

27. And whereas, on or about the 10th of January, 1867, complaint thereof was made before one of our Justices of the Peace in and for the county of Middlesex, and thereupon a summons was issued in our name, commanding the said Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings to be and appear on a day and time therein named at the Sessions House, in the Broad Sanctuary, Westminster, in the said county, before such two or more of our Justices of the Peace for the said county, as might then be there, to shew cause why they had not paid or refused or neglected to pay the said proportion of the said rate.

28. And whereas, at the time and place therein mentioned, the said summons was duly attended on behalf of the said vestry and the said Commissioners, and then came on to be heard, and was heard before you, the said Nicholas M'Cann and James Alfred Hallett, and upon and after such hearing you did refuse to make any order on such summons, and you did refuse to issue your warrant to levy by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the said Commissioners, the said sum so due in respect of the said rate, and the same still remains due and unpaid.

29. Whereupon the said vestry hath humbly besought us that a fit and speedy remedy may be applied in this matter, and we, being willing that due and speedy justice should be done therein, do command you, the said Nicholas M'Cann and James Alfred Hallett, so being such keepers of the peace and our Justices in and for the county of Middlesex, forthwith to issue your warrant to levy, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the Commissioners of our Works and Public Buildings, the sum of 101*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.*, being the amount due on the 25th of October, 1866, in respect of the said rate made upon them on the 29th of March, 1866, for the relief of the poor and other purposes of the parish of St. George, Hanover Square, in the said county of Middlesex, and how you shall have executed this our writ make known to us at Westminster on the 15th of April next, then returning to us this our said writ. And this you are not to omit.—Witness, Sir Alexander James Edmund Cockburn, Bart.

Return.—We, the keepers of the peace and Justices to whom this writ is directed, do most humbly certify and return to our Sovereign Lady the Queen, at the time and place in this writ mentioned, that on the hearing of the complaint and summons in this writ mentioned, it was proved on behalf of the Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings in this writ mentioned, and the fact was that they were appointed and constituted under, and that all their rights, powers, duties, liabilities, interest, exemptions and privileges, in reference to the bridge and works in this writ mentioned, were conferred and imposed upon them by the several acts of parliament in this writ mentioned, and not otherwise; and that save and except and in so far as the said Commissioners were or are (if at all) in possession or occupation of the said bridge and works under or by virtue of the said several acts, or by virtue of such acts, liable, if at all, to be rated in respect thereof, the said Commissioners never were in possession or occupation of the said bridge and works, or any of them, nor had they beneficial or other occupation of the said bridge or works, nor were they liable to be rated in respect thereof, as in and by the said writ is stated and suggested; and that towards the erection of the said bridge and execution of the other works in the said first-mentioned act of the 9th and 10th years of your Majesty mentioned, Parliament made free or net grants from the Consolidated Fund of the United Kingdom to the amount of 127,149*l.* 5*s.* 2*d.*, and authorized loans by the Commissioners for issuing Exchequer bills for public works, not exceeding 120,000*l.*, at interest not exceeding 4*l.* per cent. per annum, and that of the sum of 80,000*l.*

borrowed under the said authority as within and in the said act of the 22nd year of your Majesty mentioned, not more than the sum of 13,500*l.* had been repaid at the time of making the said rate, and that towards the repayment of the last-mentioned sum, not more than the sum of 2,500*l.* had been received from the tolls and proceeds of the said bridge, and thereupon it was submitted on behalf of the said Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, and it appeared to us, and we adjudged and determined that they, the said Commissioners, were not before or at the time of making the said rate liable to be rated as occupiers of the said bridge and works, for which cause and reason we ought not to issue our warrant pursuant to the exigency of this writ.

J. A. Hallett.

Demurrer to the return, and joinder in demurrer.

Keane (F. T. Streeten with him), in support of the demurrer.—The point which is to be submitted to the Court is, that the effect of the several statutes referred to in the writ is to make certain persons, who are servants of the Crown, a corporation for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the statutes in making the bridge, the approaches, &c.; to vest the bridge, &c. in them; to enable them to occupy it by servants; to take tolls; and that then, having done so, they become the beneficial occupiers of the bridge, &c., and are rateable as trustees within the principles laid down in The Mersey Docks case (1), and are not exempt from liability by reason of any of the decisions which have been given with respect to occupation by the Crown or by the servants of the Crown. The stat 9 & 10 Vict. c. 39. recites that the Commissioners for the Improvement of the Metropolis have recommended the construction of a bridge, and that surveys and plans had been made and approved of by the Commissioners of the Treasury. By the 2nd section, the last-mentioned Commissioners are empowered to advance a sum not exceeding 120,000*l.*, the repayment of which is to be secured in part by an assignment of the tolls to be taken. The 64th section gives power to erect toll-houses and to take tolls; and by section 112. the tolls received are to be applied in payment of all expenses of management and collection of the tolls, next in maintaining the bridge, next in payment of the money advanced, and the surplus, if any, to form a fund for such metropolitan improvements as the legislature shall determine. By the 11th section of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 42, the property is vested in the Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, and they are the body who are now rated. Next, the 12th paragraph of the writ refers to the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 66, which recites that 80,000*l.* had been advanced, and remained unpaid, with interest thereon; and provides by section 2, that when the said sum of 80,000*l.* and interest shall have been paid off, no toll is to be demanded or taken for and in respect of foot-passengers for passing over the bridge. By section 1, the provision in the former act as to the surplus being applied in metropolitan improvements is repealed. The material allegations in the writ are, that the bridge has been constructed, the toll-gates erected and maintained; that the tolls exceed the cost of maintaining the bridge and the works; that the bridge is vested in the Commissioners, and that they are liable, as beneficial occupiers under the several acts, to be rated. The last proposition is supported by the opinions expressed by Lord Chelmsford and by Lord Cranworth in The Mersey Docks case (1). The former said, "I am of opinion that, under the words of the 43 Eliz. c. 2, every occupier of a tenement yielding profit is within the rating clause of the statute, although the tenement be a public work for the general good of the realm, and the profit be directed to be applied exclusively to its maintenance;" and Lord Cranworth said, "To avoid all misconception, I wish to add that there are certain cases to which the observations I have made do not apply. The Crown not being named is not bound by the act. It follows, therefore, that lands or houses occupied by the Crown, or by servants of the Crown for the purposes of the Crown, are not liable to be rated; and I conceive that it is from a confusion between property occupied for public purposes and property occupied by servants of the Crown, that this mistake has arisen. This principle exempts from rates, not only royal palaces, but also the offices of the Secretaries of State, the Horse Guards, the Post Office, and many similar buildings. On the same ground, police courts, county courts, and even county buildings occupied as lodgings at the assizes for the Judges have been held exempt. These decisions, however, have all gone on the ground, more or less sound, that these might all be treated as buildings occupied by servants of the Crown, and for the Crown, extending in some instances the shield of the Crown to what might be fitly described as the public government of the country." The Commissioners of Works and Buildings are a corporation created to carry out what was intended to be a public improvement. Since their incorporation they have, so far as this question is concerned, no longer any body, or identity as servants of the Crown; neither do they occupy as servants of the Crown, or perform their duties as such.

(1) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 1.

[BLACKBURN, J.—They are empowered to make the bridge, and the money is to be advanced out of the public funds. The question is, do they not do it all as servants of the Crown? They are servants of the Crown and great Ministers of State.]

The King v. the Chelsea Waterworks Company (2) much resembles this case, and there the company were held to be rateable in respect of the reservoirs in St. James's Park, which they had been permitted to make use of under a royal warrant. In The Queen v. Shee (3) the members of the Royal Academy were held not to be rateable, on the ground that they might be considered to be the ministers or agents of the Crown; but the Commissioners in the present case are not so. Why were they incorporated, if they were still to be looked upon as Ministers of the Crown?

[BLACKBURN, J.—Suppose a field near Windsor Great Park was purchased as an addition to the Park. Although it had been rateable before, it would cease to be so; because it would be de facto in the occupation of the Crown. MELLOR, J.—In some respects De la Beche v. the Vestry of St. James (4) is very like this case.]

But the Crown has no power to interfere with these incorporated Commissioners, or to give any orders. They are entirely independent of the Crown, just the same as any other corporation.

[MELLOR, J.—The Commissioners of Woods and Forests are a varying body. They were created a corporation in order that they might be able to make the necessary contracts more easily. LUSH, J.—If the rates which you claim were paid, they would come out of the Consolidated Fund; you would intercept money which would otherwise find its way into that fund.]

No; the rates will be paid out of the tolls. Further, it must be borne in mind, that portions of land which have been hitherto rateable have been given up in order to make the bridge. Is the parish to lose the right of rating such land? Again, even supposing that the Commissioners are still servants of the Crown, although they have been incorporated, it is submitted that they are rateable in respect of their occupation, unless it can be shewn that their duties are regal duties, such as prima facie belong to the Crown. There is no pretence for saying so; the duties performed by them are for the improvement of the metropolis, not for any purpose connected with the government of the country.

The Attorney General (Sir J. B. Karslake) (M'Mahon with him), contra, was not heard.

BLACKBURN, J.—In this case the principle is, I think, very plain. Since the decision in The Mersey Docks case (1), the occupier of property from which profit is derived, after making the proper deductions, according to the Parochial Assessment Act, is rateable, as a general rule, without regard to the purpose for which the funds are ultimately appropriated; but there is the exception that the Crown, not being named in the statute of Elizabeth, is not within that statute, and that consequently, where the Crown is the occupier, there is no liability to be rated; and consequently, where the property is de facto occupied by the Crown, or the property is de facto occupied for the Crown, there is no liability. The Crown not being rateable, there can be no rate on the occupier; and the same principle has been extended to the case where the occupation is by a servant of the Crown who has taken a lease of property, as in the case of Lord Amherst

v. Lord Somers (5), where the property was taken by an individual officer for the use of it as stables for the troops, and consequently he was held to be a trustee for the Crown; and the same principle exists whether the person occupying be a servant or a trustee; it is all one thing, and therefore he is not rateable. That, so far from being overthrown in The Mersey Docks case (1), is affirmed. The opinion of the Judges, which I wrote and delivered, as far as this part of it is concerned, was partly altered when we were having a consultation upon the subject; that is, the language originally used was altered to meet the view of the other Judges more accurately. Their view was the same as my own, only different expressions were used; therefore what I am about to quote is not merely theoretically the language of the other Judges, but is the language that was used to meet their express views, and it goes to this, that after stating (6) that "where a lease of private property is taken in the name of a subject, but the occupation is by the Sovereign or her servants on her behalf, the occupation being that of her Majesty, no rate can be imposed," the judgment goes on to say, "So far the ground of exemption is perfectly intelligible; but it has been carried a good deal further, and applied to many cases in which it can scarcely be said that the Sovereign, or the servants of the Sovereign, are in occupation. A long series of cases have established that, where property is occupied for the purposes of the Government of the country, including under that head the police and the administration of justice, no one is rateable in respect of such occupation. And this applies not only to property occupied for such purposes by the servants of the great departments of State, such as the Post Office, the Horse Guards, or the Admiralty, in all which cases the occupiers might strictly be called the servants of the Crown, but also to property occupied for local police, to county buildings occupied for the Assizes, and for the Judges' lodgings; or occupied as a county court, or for a gaol. In these latter cases it is difficult to maintain that the occupants are, strictly speaking, servants of the Sovereign so as to make the occupation that of her Majesty; but the purposes are all public purposes of that kind which, by the constitution of this country, fall within the province of the Government, and are committed to the Sovereign, so that the occupiers, though not perhaps strictly servants of the Sovereign, must be considered in consimili casu. These decisions are uniform, and it was not disputed at the bar that the exemption applies so far; but there is a conflict between the decisions as to whether the exemption goes further." My original draft, which was not in these words, was altered to meet the views of the other Judges; consequently, that is a deliberate view adopted upon consideration, and it is perfectly right.

Then Mr. Keane argues upon that in this way: that where property is held for the purposes of Government, and purposes such as are, to use the old words, merely spectant regi,—such as public justice,—the occupation shall be treated the same as if it were the actual occupation of the servants of the Crown. His argument is, therefore, that if property ever can be exempted from rateability, it is because the purposes for which it is held are those which prima facie belong to the Crown. Now, I think, that is not borne out at all by either of the previous decisions, or by The Mersey Docks case (1). In the present case, in construing the act of parliament, what I think we must come to is this, that the legislature, having in view an embankment of the Thames or a bridge, which is not one of those government purposes that are spectant regi at all, instead of enacting that it shall be carried out by private enterprise, or by a private body that shall act for themselves, enact that it shall be carried out by the Government out of the Government funds. They create the Commissioners of Woods into a special corporation for doing it. They enact that it shall be paid for out of the Consolidated Fund by public money; they grant powers to raise money from its occupation, which would, no doubt, make the occupation beneficial in general; but it is solely and exclusively for the purpose of repaying the Government the advance, for keeping up the bridge and so on, and if there be any surplus, in the original act they have enacted that such surplus shall be applied to such metropolitan improvements as the legislature shall direct. That has been subsequently repealed, and, consequently, if there ever should come to be any surplus, it would be held by the Commissioners; certainly not for the benefit of the individual Commissioners; but, like everything else, it would be held by them in trust for the Consolidated Fund; so that this is a case in which a special corporation is created of the servants of the Crown, for the purpose of executing a private work, but executing it out of the general fund, which, by the general theory of law, has been granted to Her Majesty: this is called the Consolidated Fund; out of that the work is to be carried on, into that the surplus is to go; and, consequently, this is de facto an occupation by the servants of the Crown, the servants of the general government. The whole scheme of the enactment is, that the Commissioners of Woods and Forests are created a special corporation, who are to execute this work, private in its nature, but de facto for the Government, with the Government funds, and to receive the profits of the occupation for the Government funds, and in that case it is the occupation of the Crown, and is not any more rateable than the private estates of the Crown would be, such as the Home Park, at Windsor, or anything else. This is not new law, because this is what was decided in the case of De la Beche v. the Vestry of St. James (3); for there the premises that were occupied were not so occupied for government purposes; it was "The Museum of Practical Geology," but de facto they were occupied by the Government, and were permitted to be used for the purposes of the museum, and, consequently, were not rateable. Had it been a private occupation for the purpose of holding land for the Museum of Practical Geology, it would have been liable to be rated; but being occupied by the servants of the Crown, it was not.

(5) 2 Term Rep. 372.

(6) See 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. page 10.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. At the time The Mersey Docks case (1) was before the House of Lords, this matter underwent very considerable discussion; and when it is recollected that my Brother Byles dissented from the opinions of the other Judges, it will be seen that it became the more necessary to look carefully and accurately at the expression of the opinions of the Judges, in order that the matter might be made clear. I was one of the Judges who joined in the opinion delivered by my Brother Blackburn, and I may say it underwent considerable discussion among the Judges. I believe that, in accordance with the opinion expressed by Lord Cranworth in the House of Lords, they only intended to interfere with those cases where the occupation of the property was beneficial, and to hold that although the benefit ultimately was appropriated to the public in one sense, that is to say, to public purposes of various kinds—for charity and other objects, still the property was rateable, because it did not derive any exemption from rateability from the principle that governed the construction of the statute of Elizabeth. The statute of Elizabeth was not framed with a view to bring property of this kind within the meaning of its enactments. There is a long series of decisions upon the statute, and it appears to me that this follows clearly from the authority of various cases. Now, I think that my Brother Blackburn has put it quite as I desire to put it; the work has been really de facto done by the servants of the Crown, who are created a corporation for that purpose; although the object in one sense is a local and private object, yet it is done entirely with the funds of the Crown, by the servants of the Crown, and when the object is attained, any surplus is to go back to the Consolidated Fund for the benefit of the public; in fact, it is, therefore, a work executed by the servants of the Crown, and with the money of the Crown, and therefore, I think, is within the exemption.

LUSH, J.—It appears to me that, on the true construction of the statute, this bridge was a national undertaking. Every argument used by Mr. Keane would be equally applicable to make out the rateability of the Post Office, or any other national establishment in this country.

BLACKBURN, J. added—This is a mandamus to enforce the rate, and, in deciding for the defendants, the return being sufficient, we are not infringing the extremely wholesome rule that the Justices in a case of this sort are ministerial officers, and that you cannot in answer to an application to make them enforce the rate, set up an objection upon which the rate might have been quashed. In the present case the decision goes to this, that there was no jurisdiction to make the rate. It is like Milward v. Caffin (6).

{Keane.—This course was adopted in order to obtain the opinion of the Court.}

BLACKBURN, J.—It was quite right to resort to it, in order that the case might go to error, if necessary; but I merely wish to guard against being supposed to infringe upon the other decision.

The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104), ss. 257, 525.—Attempting to persuade a Seaman not to join his Ship—Limitation of Time for Prosecution.

The 257th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, makes it an offence to persuade or attempt to persuade a seaman to neglect to join his ship; and the 525th section, which limits the time for instituting proceedings, enacts, that "no conviction for any offence shall be made under this act in any summary proceeding instituted in the United Kingdom, unless such proceeding is commenced within six months after the commission of the offence; or if both or either of the parties to such proceeding happen during such time to be out of the United Kingdom, unless the same is commenced within two months after they both first happen to arrive, or to be at one time within the same:—Held, that if both parties, the seaman and the offender, remain in the United Kingdom, the proceeding against the offender must be commenced within six months after the commission of the offence; but that if one of them goes away within six months after the offence is committed, and afterwards returns, so that he and the other are in the United Kingdom at one time, a further period of two months is allowed within which the proceedings may be commenced.

Held, also, that the offence may have been committed although there was an informality in the engagement entered into by the seaman.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

On the 19th of November an information, under the 257th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, against the appellant, a licensed shipping agent at Cardiff, for that he, on the 4th of April last, at Cardiff, did unlawfully attempt to persuade Israel Olsen (a seaman, lawfully engaged to serve on board a certain British ship called the England's Rose), to neglect to join his ship, contrary to the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, section 257, was heard and determined by us, the undersigned, two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the borough of Cardiff; and we convicted the appellant and imposed the penalty of 10*l*.

On the 4th of April last Israel Olsen, the respondent, signed an agreement at the office of a ship-broker, at Cardiff; to serve as a seaman on board the British ship England's Rose as a substitute for one of her crew who had deserted. Shortly afterwards, about five o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, Olsen was asked by the appellant to join a ship called the Etta. He refused, stating that he had shipped in the England's Rose. The appellant repeated his request; but without success, and Olsen sailed the next morning, but at what exact time the evidence does not shew. He returned to England at the end of October last, having been continually absent since he sailed from Cardiff on the 5th of April.

The information before us was laid on the 14th of November last.

At the hearing, the appellant's attorney took the preliminary objection that the information was not laid in due time, inasmuch as Olsen, one of the parties, was at the time of the commission of the offence and for some time after not out of the United Kingdom, and ought, therefore, to have commenced his proceedings within six months from the 4th of April.

By the 525th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, it is enacted that no conviction for any offence shall be made under this act, in any summary proceeding instituted in the United Kingdom, unless such proceeding is commenced within six months after the commission of the offence, or if both or either of the parties to such proceeding happen during such time to be out of the United Kingdom, unless the same is commenced within two months after they both first happen to arrive, or to be, at one time, within the same.

Having heard the evidence, a copy of which is herunto appended, we considered that as Olsen could not have stayed in this country to institute his proceedings without, in some way more or less disadvantageous to him, putting an end to his contract to serve in the England's Rose, and considering that, except for a very short time (probably not so much as twenty-four hours), he was actually out of the United Kingdom for the whole period of six months, the case might be held to be within the last half of the clause; and, consequently, that the information being laid within the allowed period of two months was in time.

It was also contended that Olsen was not a seaman lawfully engaged to serve on the England's Rose within the meaning of sections 243. and 257.

According to the fourth paragraph of the 150th section, the engagement of Olsen as a substitute ought, if practicable, to have been made before the superintendent of mercantile marine or his deputy; and that being impracticable, the agreement should have been read over and explained to him, and signed in the presence of an attesting witness.

It was shewn to our satisfaction that it was not practicable to engage the man before the regular official, and it also appeared that the agreement was signed in the presence of an attesting witness; but there was no evidence to shew that the agreement had been read and explained, both Olsen and the attesting witness forgetting whether that had been done or not. We presumed that formality to have been observed, and held that the agreement was lawfully made.

The following evidence was taken: read Israel Olsen—“I was engaged as a seaman in the England's Rose British ship. Articles are those produced. I signed on the 4th of April last. On the same day I saw the defendants [one Brunede was charged with the respondent, but the case as against him was dismissed]. Austin said he wanted me to go on board a vessel called the Etta. I said I could not go because I was shipped in the England's Rose. Austin told me to take my clothes and go out to another vessel. Brunede was there. This conversation took place at five p.m. Brunede told me I had better take my clothes and go out to the roads. I said I had shipped in the England's Rose and had got an advance-note. It was after that they asked me to go on board the Etta. I went on board the England's Rose. My clothes went on board the Etta. My ship sailed the next day. We went to the Rio Grande, returning to England; we called at Dartmouth for orders and went to Antwerp, and returned to England a fortnight ago. I pulled the captain ashore at Dartmouth. We came to Dartmouth in October, at the end.”

Cross-examined by Austin's attorney—“It was between ten and eleven o'clock a.m. that I first saw Austin. I was with two Swedes. I saw them, Austin and Brunede, when they came out of the Windsor Hotel; it was not earlier than eleven a.m. The other two shipped in the Etta. We were all three asked if we wanted a ship. I said I was already shipped. The question was put to me in English and Swedish. Austin told me in English to ship in the Etta because she was a good ship. I shipped in the England's Rose at three o'clock.”

Cross-examined by Brunede's attorney—“I signed in some house near the cabstands. I'll swear I did not sign in the Cardiff Roads. I told Austin I wouldn't go such a long voyage as twelve months. The other two agreed to go too. The captain and owner of the vessel sent me here.”

Re-examined—“When I signed articles I got an advance-note. I first heard of the England's Rose at half-past twelve on the 4th. I saw Austin after I had signed those articles. I had a conversation about going on board the Etta after five o'clock with the captain of the Etta, Austin and Brunede.”

Edward Erle—“In April last I was clerk to Messrs. Rowland. The articles produced were signed at our office at the docks by this man Olsen. He was a substitute.”

John Clarke—“I am an able seaman in the England's Rose. On Wednesday, the 4th of April last, I saw Olsen, Austin and Brunede. I heard the conversation between the captain of the Etta, Austin and Olsen. It was about a quarter to six in the evening. The captain of the Etta asked Olsen to go in his ship. Olsen said he had shipped in the England's Rose. Then Austin said, Never mind the England's Rose, you go in this ship, the captain of the Etta is a good man. Olsen said that he could not go; he had his advance-note."

Cross-examined—"I am sure Austin was there. Olsen could talk as I could understand him."

For the defence.

William Clode—"I remember the 4th of April. I know the captain of the Etta. I remember Olsen. I saw Austin and him together. Some men wanted Olsen to go off in a boat. I said to Austin, Why don't you make him go? Austin said, I can't; he has shipped in another vessel."

Waddy, for the appellant, argued in support of the two objections stated in the case.

No counsel appeared for the respondent.

BLACKBURN, J.—I do not think that either of these objections can prevail. The offence which the appellant is charged with having committed is the attempting to persuade the respondent to neglect to join his ship. That is made an offence by the 257th section, and the question turns upon the construction to be put upon the 525th section, as to whether the proceeding could be commenced within two months after the respondent arrived at Cardiff, where the appellant was. The 525th section speaks of "both or either of the parties to such proceeding." Now, literally, the party in whose name the information is laid is a party, and it would seem that in respect of such an offence anybody might lay the information; but it would lead to gross absurdity if we were to put that construction upon the word "parties." I think it means the person committing the offence, and the person aggrieved, against whom the offence is committed. A great many offences of this kind are committed, and it may almost be said that the normal mode of committing such offences is the attempting to persuade seamen who are about to leave England to neglect to join the ships on board of which they are engaged to serve; and I cannot think that the legislature intended to provide such a limitation as would make the offender non-punishable if the seaman did join his ship and did sail with her, and did not return to the United Kingdom for six months. If both the offender and the seaman remain here, the proceeding must be commenced within six months; but if one goes away, there is a further period of two months after he comes back, and both are in the United Kingdom at one time. As to the other point, there is really nothing in it. The respondent was engaged to serve in the ship, and the offence committed by the appellant is the attempting to persuade him to neglect to join.

MELLOP, J.—I am of the same opinion on both points. The second would lead to serious consequences if we were obliged so to construe the act. It would be a monstrous thing to say that the offender should escape because some particular formalities were not observed in the mode of engaging the seaman. Upon the other point, the language of the section is certainly open to some doubt; but we must endeavour to put a reasonable construction upon it: and I think that the construction adopted by my Brother Blackburn is the most reasonable one, because it seems to meet the case when both parties, the solicitor and the person solicited, are in this country for six months after the offence is committed, when the period of limitation is to be six months; but if one goes away within six months, then there is to be a further period of two months after he comes back, and both are in this country at the same time.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion on both points. There are, no doubt, difficulties in the way of any construction of this enactment; but upon the whole I think that the most reasonable construction is that the section gives a period of six months if both the offender and the seaman remain in this country; but if that period is broken by either party going away, then there is a further period of two months after both are here together.

Conviction affirmed.

1868. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABIT-
Jan. 23. } ANTS OF IPSTONES.

Highway—Indictment for Non-Repair—Costs of Prosecution—Certiorari—5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. & 95.—5 W. & M. c. 11. s. 2, 3.

Where an indictment for the non-repair of a highway has been preferred by order of Justices under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 95, and has been removed by certiorari into this court at the instance of the defendants, the Judge who tries the indictment has no power, under that section, to direct that the costs of the prosecution shall be paid out of the rate. The costs in such a case are provided for by the 5 W. & M. c. 11.

The Queen v. Eardisland (1) dissented from.

This was an application for a rule calling upon the defendants to shew cause why an order should not be made by Mellor, J., directing that the costs of the prosecution should be paid out of the highway-rate.

Proceedings had been taken by the prosecutor under the General Highway Act; and an indictment had been preferred by the order of Justices against the parish for the non-repair of the highway.

The indictment was removed by certiorari, and was tried, before Mellor, J., at the last Summer Assizes for Stafford. The defendants pleaded, that the prosecutor was bound ratione tenuræ to repair the highway, and they obtained a verdict. The learned Judge refused to direct that the costs of the prosecution should be paid out of the rate; and, upon a subsequent application to him at chambers, he referred the matter to the Court.

Huddleston (J. O. Griffiths with him) moved for the rule.—The learned Judge was bound to direct the costs to be paid out of the rate. The words in section 95. are imperative, "shall be directed." The question is decided by The Queen v. the Inhabitants of Yarkhill (2), The Queen v.

Boughton (3), The Queen v. Haslemere (4) and The Queen v. Eardisland (1). In the last case the indictment had been removed by certiorari into this court, and it was held that the Judge sitting at Nisi Prius had power to make the order. Unless, therefore, the Court is prepared to say that that decision is wrong, the prosecutor is entitled to the rule now asked for.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—The prosecutor in the present case has put the law in motion himself, endeavouring to relieve himself of the burden which it appears he ought to have borne. But still, if the statute is imperative, you are entitled to a rule.]

In The Queen v. the Justices of Surrey (5) the Sessions had refused to make the order, but this Court held that they were bound to do so.

The COURT granted a rule nisi.

A. S. Hill shewed cause in the first instance.—The learned Judge was right in refusing to make the order, for the enactment in the 95th section as to costs does not apply to a case where the indictment has been removed by certiorari. Where that has been done, the Judge before whom it is tried sits as a Judge of this Court, and not as a Judge under a Commission of Oyer and Terminer. This is pointed out by Erle, J. in The Queen v. Eardisland (1). No case can be found where when the indictment has been removed by certiorari at the instance of the defendants, and a verdict obtained by them, the enactment has been held to be imperative, so that the prosecutor must have his costs paid out of the rate. In such a case the costs are provided for by sections 2. and 3. of 5 W. & M. c. 11, and the prosecutor will receive such costs as are reasonable.—He also referred to The Queen v. Chadworth (6).

Huddleston was then heard, in support of the rule.—He referred to The Queen v. Heanor (7) and to The Queen v. Preston (8).

(2) 9 Car. & P. 218.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule must be discharged, upon the ground that after an indictment for the non-repair of a highway has been removed into this court by certiorari, the prosecutor is no longer within the 95th section so as to be entitled to have his costs paid out of the rates. When a highway is out of repair, the surveyor may be summoned before Justices under section 94; and then section 95. provides, that if the duty and liability to repair is denied by the surveyor, or by the party charged with such liability, the Justices may direct an indictment to be preferred, and the costs of such prosecution shall be directed by the Judge of Assize, or by the Justices at Quarter Sessions, &c. As far as my opinion goes, it is quite plain that the meaning of the legislature was, that when the complaint was duly made, and the Justices were satisfied that the road was out of repair, the party who did what he was ordered to do in preferring the indictment should be indemnified out of the rates, so important was it thought to be that the road should not remain out of repair. But it was not intended that there should be any interference with the right of the defendants, whether they were the inhabitants of the parish or persons who were liable ratione tenuræ, to remove the indictment by certiorari into this court. There is a proviso to that effect at the end of the 95th section. That was done in the present case, and therefore incidents attached to this trial which do not attach when the indictment is tried in the ordinary course. The Judge tried the indictment as a Judge of this Court, and was no longer a "Judge of Assize," as intended by section 95. The indictment is removed upon recognition and finding securities to pay the costs. It may be that those who framed the provisions in section 95. did not foresee what the consequences would be, and I cannot think that it was intended that the costs of the prosecution should be directed to be paid out of the rates when the indictment was tried before the Judge of Assize, but not when it was tried before the Judge as representing this Court. Nevertheless, if the legislature failed to bear in mind the effect of the enactment and the proviso, and has omitted to give any power to the latter tribunal, it is not our duty to make such a provision. In terms, the 95th section only applies to an indictment tried in the ordinary course at the Assizes, or by the Chairman at Quarter Sessions; the language does not fit or square with a trial at Nisi Prius, where the costs depend upon the rates of taxation and practice in this court. The only order that could be made under section 95. is that the costs should be paid out of the highway-rates; while in the case of the indictment being removed by certiorari, every inhabitant of the parish would be responsible for costs. I am quite aware that this decision will, to some extent, overrule The Queen v. Hardistand (1); but I observe that the point was raised there in a very cursory manner, and was summarily dismissed without any great amount of consideration.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The distinction between this and other cases is, that in this case the indictment was removed by certiorari, and was tried by my Brother Mellor as a Judge of this Court, and representing this Court. The statute in question is unaltered by the recent Highway Act, because that act has not been adopted in the district. The legislature thought it right to give the Justices the power to direct an indictment.—[His Lordship read the section.]—The costs of the prosecution are to be directed by the Judge of Assize, or by the Justices, and I think that words like these would probably not have been used if the legislature had thought of a case like the present. I do not wish to decide whether the Judge of Assize or the Justices have any discretion as to whether the costs shall be directed or not; but the section does not in any way state what is to be done as to the costs where the indictment is tried before a Judge at Nisi Prius representing this Court. Whether it is a casus omissus, or whether the legislature thought that this question was sufficiently determined by the statute of William and Mary, I do not know; but the 2nd section of that statute provides for the parties indicted finding sureties, and the 3rd section provides that if they be convicted, they shall pay reasonable costs to the prosecutor, &c. The legislature may have thought that where a case was of sufficient importance to make it worth while to remove the indictment by certiorari, the costs might be left to be provided for under that statute; but it is clear that there are not words to enable this Court to direct that the costs shall be paid out of the rates. I am of course aware that the effect of this decision is really to throw doubt upon The Queen v. Eardisland (1); but the point was not very clearly brought before the Court in that case, and I do not think myself bound by it, the more as there was no means of taking the case to a court of error. I decide upon the one point, that this Court has no power to order the costs to be paid out of the rates under section 95.

MILLER, J.—I am of the same opinion. I should have thought myself bound by The Queen v. Eardisland (1) if the Court had expressed their opinion after greater consideration; but the matter appears to have been rather summarily dismissed, and when I look at the language used in the 95th section, I come to the conclusion that the words "Judge of Assize" mentioned in that section mean the Judge sitting at the assize under the Commission of Oyer and Terminer. A Judge so sitting is in a like position in that respect as the Chairman of Quarter Sessions, and the legislature did not contemplate the consequences which would flow from the provision as to the certiorari. There are no words in the 95th section which properly apply to a Judge sitting as a Judge of this Court, representing this Court. If a direction is made by a Judge sitting at Nisi Prius as representing this Court, it is considered as a direction of this Court. But when a Judge is sitting under the Commission of Oyer and Terminer, he has to dispose of the matter finally in the same manner as the Chairman of Quarter Sessions. It would amount to straining the words of the 95th section if we were to say that there was power in a case of this sort to direct that the costs of the prosecution should be paid out of the rate. I cannot find any words applying to such a case.

LEAH, J.—I do not think that the decision in The Queen v. Eardisland (1) is satisfactory. The question which is now before us not having been pointedly brought before the Court, and as it is a case which did not admit of an appeal, we are at liberty to reconsider the question and put what we think is the proper construction upon the statute. By the 95th section, the authority to direct payment of the costs of the prosecution out of the rate is given to the Judge of assize before whom the indictment is tried, when tried at the Assizes, and to the Justices at Quarter Sessions if tried there. Does the description "Judge of Assize" include the Judge sitting on the civil side, so as to comprehend the case of an indictment removed by certiorari, and entered on a record of Nisi Prius; or does it point exclusively to the Judge to whom the designation "Judge of Assize" properly belongs, viz. the Judge sitting under a Commission of Oyer and Terminer? I am of opinion that it means the latter, and contemplates a trial of the indictment on the criminal side only; and that for two reasons: First, because the proviso at the end of the 95th section, which gives, or rather preserves, to the party against whom the indictment is preferred the right to remove it into this court by certiorari, is silent as to the costs of the removal. I do not know why the proviso is limited to indictments found at the Sessions, nor is that point material in the present case. What is significant to the point is, that it leaves the costs in such a case apparently to be governed by the Certiorari Act, the 5 W. & M. c. 11. Secondly, because to hold that the enactment applies to the trial of an indictment at Nisi Prius would exclude certain cases from its operation, and thus make distinctions for which no reason can be assigned, for it is nearly confined to trials at "Assizes." Now there are no Assizes in this county—the county of Middlesex. If an indictment found at a Sessions in this county were removed by certiorari, it would be tried in this court, and in such a case, if the costs were not governed by the act of William and Mary, the prosecutor could not in any event have his costs. The same observation applies to the county palatine. I am therefore of opinion that the section applies only to indictments tried in the criminal court, and that when removed by certiorari, the costs can only be claimed under the recognizance given, or required, by the Certiorari Act.

{ MERIVALE, appellant, THE TRUSTEES OF THE EXETER TURNPIKE-ROADS, respondents.

Turnpike-Road—Cleansing and Scouring Watercourses—Duties of Occupiers of Adjoining Lands—3 Geo. 4. c. 126. (General Turnpike Act), s. 113.

The duty of cleansing, scouring and keeping open ditches and watercourses for the keeping of turnpike-roads dry, is cast by section 113. of the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. (the General Turnpike Act), not upon the occupiers of the adjoining lands, but upon the trustees themselves.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The material part of the case was as follows: At a petty sessions holden at the Guildhall, in the city of Exeter, on the 5th of July, 1867, the appellant appeared to answer the information and complaint of the respondents, the trustees of the Exeter turnpike-roads, under the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 113, for that she, being the owner and occupier of certain lands next to and adjoining that portion of the Exeter turnpike-road, in the parish of St. David, in the county of the city of Exeter, known as the Cowley Bridge Road, and having received due notice from the trustees of the said road to cleanse, scour and keep open the ditches, drains and watercourses of such portion of the said road as adjoined her said lands of a sufficient width and depth, so as to carry off the water therefrom without obstruction, and keep the same road dry, had failed so to do, contrary to the statute, &c., whereby she had incurred a penalty of not exceeding 5*l*.

Upon the hearing of the said summons and complaint, the following facts were proved, or admitted as proved: Prior to the passing of 7 Geo. 4. c. xxv. (1826) a parish road existed from Cowley Bridge to Stoke Bridge. By that act (which has expired, and the trusts continued under a new act), power was given to the respondents to make, widen and form a new line of road from Cowley Bridge to the Exeter turnpike-road, near Stoke Bridge, through and over the lands, grounds and hereditaments comprised in the maps and books of reference thereto, and amongst others, through the lands in question, then belonging to John Merivale, through whom the appellant derives title. In 1830 the new line of road was duly widened and formed. In forming and widening the said road through the said lands, a wood was cut through, whereby a high slope or bank of from 30 to 80 feet high was formed on the one side for some little distance. The foot of this bank or slope was stone fenced in the manner termed "stone ditching," and watercourses were duly formed by the respondents by the sides of the turnpike-road. The land adjoining the banks or slopes, which consist of loose shale and shillet, are not drained, nor is any provision made for carrying off the water falling thereon, and preventing the same from running over the said slopes; and by reason of the water flowing over the said slope and the action of the frost thereon, occasional landslips have taken place at the spot where the stone ditching or fencing was erected, and the earth has at times been carried, not only into the watercourses, but into and over the road itself. These slips have hitherto been removed by the owners or occupiers of the said lands. The slip in question took place where the above-mentioned stone ditching stands; and by it not only the watercourse by the side of the turnpike-road was filled up, and the water prevented from passing away, but a portion of the road itself covered and obstructed by the earth and rubbish.

The Justices were of opinion that it was the duty of the appellant, under the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 113, to remove all obstructions from the watercourses and ditches occasioned by the landslip, and to cleanse and keep open the same, and convicted her under the said statute in the penalty of 20*s*.

If the COURT should be of opinion that the appellant was and is liable to remove the obstruction occasioned to the watercourses and drains by reason of such slip as aforesaid, and to cleanse and keep open the same, then the conviction to stand, otherwise the summons to be dismissed.

Hayes, Serj. (Lopes with him), for the respondents, referred to section 113. of the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. (1), and contended that the appellant was duly convicted thereunder.

The COURT then called upon

Coleridge (Raymond with him), for the appellant.—The first portion of section 113, which is to be read divisim, relates to matters obligatory not upon adjoining occupiers, but upon the trustees themselves, viz., the making sufficient ditches, drains and watercourses for keeping the roads dry, and the scouring and cleansing of the same, all of which duties, being necessary to the preservation of the road, fall as properly upon the trustees as the making of the road itself. The second portion of the section, which relates to the making of bridges, &c. in places where carriageways, &c. are made leading from a turnpike-road into the adjoining lands, unquestionably imposes duties upon the occupiers of such lands; and further duties are cast upon them by the third portion of the section, which requires the occupiers of lands adjoining to or near turnpike-roads, through which water from turnpike-roads has been used to pass, to cleanse and scour the ditches, &c. necessary to its passage. Three separate and distinct sets of duties are thus created, of which the last two only have reference to the adjoining owners. The appellant was therefore wrongly convicted.

[BLACKBURN, J.—The section is not very clearly worded, and grammatically considered it would appear to cast the duty upon the appellant, the adjoining occupier. The question, however, is, are the words "by the occupier or occupiers of such lands or grounds," which occur at the end of the second portion of the section, to be read as having reference to all that goes before?]

If read by the light of other enactments, it is clear that the true construction of section 113. is that contended for. By

(1) Section 113, which enacts, "That ditches, drains and watercourses of a sufficient depth and breadth for the keeping all turnpike-roads dry, and conveying water from the same shall be made, scooped, cleaned and kept open, and sufficient trunks, tunnels, plate or bridges shall be made and laid where any carriage-ways or footways lead out of the said turnpike-roads into the lands or grounds adjoining thereto, by the occupier or occupiers of such lands or grounds; and every person or persons who shall occupy any lands or grounds adjoining to, or lying near such turnpike-road, through which the water hath used to pass from the said turnpike-road, shall and is and are hereby required from time to time, as often as occasion shall be, to open, cleanse and scour the ditches, watercourses and drains for such water to pass without obstruction; and that every person making default in any of the matters or things aforesaid, after ten days' notice to him, her or them given, shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding 5*l*."

Section 115. of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. enacts, "That in all cases where any gutter, drain, sink, sewer or under-drain, made, or hereafter to be made, under or at the sides of any turnpike-road shall be used as well for the conveyance of water from such turnpike-road as for conveying water, filth or other matters from the houses or premises of the inhabitants of any town, hamlet, village, street or place, and no specific mode of repair or persons liable to the expenses of maintaining the same shall be appointed; the expense of maintaining and repairing such gutter, &c. shall be borne and defrayed equally or in proportion by the Trustees or Commissioners of such turnpike-road, and the inhabitants of the town, &c., using the same," &c.

Section 66. of the 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. enacts, "That in all cases where the Trustees or Commissioners of any turnpike-road shall turn or alter any part or parts of any turnpike-road, or make any new road over and through any private grounds, or across any public or private footway, or shall take away any fence for widening or improving any such road, the said Trustees or Commissioners shall make, or cause to be made and planted, proper quickset hedges, or shall make or build proper fences or walls on both sides of such new-made road, or upon the side upon which any such fence may be so removed as aforesaid, with sufficient ditches to the same, and sufficient posts and rails or other fence on both sides of such quickset hedges to protect the growth thereof, &c., and also proper gates, stiles, posts, bridges and arches, where necessary, out of any such road into the lands adjoining, and shall keep such fences so to be made in good order and repair for and during the term of five years from the time that such fences shall have been made or set up; unless the owners or proprietors for the time being of any such land or ground shall agree with the Trustees or Commissioners to keep such fences in repair from an earlier period for such time as aforesaid."

Section 67. enacts, "That it shall be lawful for the surveyor or surveyors and such other persons as shall be appointed by the Trustees or Commissioners, &c., from time to time to cut, make or maintain drains or watercourses upon and through any lands lying contiguous to any such road, and also to make ditches in such places and in such manner as such surveyor, &c., by order of such trustees, &c., shall judge necessary; and make sufficient fences and barriers and other erections on any part or parts of the said road, in order to prevent any rivulet or current of water from flooding the same, as such surveyor, &c. shall judge necessary; making such satisfaction to the owners or occupiers of such lands so to be used, &c., for the damages they may sustain thereby as such trustees, &c., shall judge reasonable," &c.

the 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. s. 66, in cases where the trustees alter or make new roads through private grounds, &c., they are required to provide proper fences or walls, with sufficient ditches, and to keep the same in good order for the space of five years. Section 67. of the same statute requires the surveyors, or other persons appointed by the trustees, to cut, make and maintain drains or watercourses upon and through lands lying contiguous to the road, in such manner as shall appear necessary, making reasonable satisfaction to the owner for damages sustained.

[LUSH, J.—Section 115. of the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. seems to lead irresistibly to the conclusion that the duty of cleansing and scouring watercourses by the sides of turnpike-roads devolves, not upon the adjoining occupiers, but upon the trustees themselves.]

Hayes, Serj., in reply.—Section 66. of the 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. has no bearing upon the question; it relates to fences to be made, in certain cases, by the trustees for the private benefit of adjoining occupiers, and is altogether irrespective of section 113. of the 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, which was meant for the public benefit, and refers to the maintenance of water-courses for the keeping dry and preservation of turnpike-roads. The object of section 67. is to provide for the passage of water away from, and not alongside, turnpike-roads; and the duty of cleansing the ditches and drains necessary for that purpose is clearly imposed by the latter portion of section 113. of the earlier act upon the occupiers of lands near to or adjoining such roads. A similar liability is cast upon adjoining occupiers by the first portion of the same section. The conviction was therefore right.

BLACKBURN, J.—At first I was disposed to think that my Brother Hayes was right in his view of section 113. of the General Turnpike Act; but upon consideration I am of opinion that he was wrong, and that the appellant was improperly convicted. When a road is formed, it is essential to its preservation that means should be provided for the free passage of water alongside until it can be carried away by some outlet into and through the adjoining lands; and the question upon whom devolves the duty of cleansing and keeping open the ditches alongside such roads for this purpose, depends upon the proper construction to be placed upon the section under consideration. It enacts, that sufficient watercourses for the keeping of turnpike-roads dry "shall be made, scoured, cleansed and kept open"; and if, as contended for the appellant, this portion of the section is divisible from that which follows, the duty would be cast on the trustees. The section, however, then proceeds to provide for the making of tunnels, bridges and other works in places where carriage and footways are formed leading out of turnpike-roads "into the lands and grounds adjoining"; which tunnels, &c. are to be made "by the occupier or occupiers of such lands and grounds." I was at first disposed to the opinion that these latter words overrode the whole sentence, as, grammatically considered, they certainly appear to do; but on reflection I think that the parts of the sentence are separable, and that the earlier portion of it imposes a duty not upon the adjoining occupiers, but upon the trustees themselves. In fact, if in reading the words "shall be made, scoured, cleansed and kept open, and sufficient trunks, tunnels, &c. shall be made," we interpolate the word "that" between the words "and sufficient," the language of the section, which as it stands is somewhat obscure, becomes perfectly intelligible. That this is the proper construction of the section further appears from section 115. of the same statute which enacts, that where ditches along a turnpike-road serve the double purpose of conveying water from such road, and from the houses or premises of the inhabitant of any town, village, &c., the expense of its maintenance and reparation shall be borne equally or in proportion, according to circumstances, by the trustees and the inhabitants using the same. Upon the third portion of the section, which unquestionably casts upon the occupiers of lands adjoining, or near to turnpike-roads, through which water from the turnpike-road has been accustomed to pass away, the obligation of cleansing the ditches necessary for the purpose, no question arises; the appellant is not shewn to be the occupier of such lands, nor, in fact, was the conviction founded upon this part of the section. Nor do I think that sections 66. and 67. of the 4 Geo. 4. c. 95, which last is merely supplementary to the latter part of section 113. of the earlier act, have any bearing upon the question. The reason of my judgment that the conviction was wrong is, that by the first part of section 113. no such obligation as that contended for is cast upon the appellant.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. The object of the portion of section 113, on which the question arises, was, the keeping roads dry, which is necessary to their preservation; and the duty of cleansing and scouring the side ditches for the purpose has been imposed by the legislature not upon the adjoining owners, but the trustees themselves.

Embezzlement — Indictment — Money — Cheque—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. ss. 1, 71.

An indictment for embezzlement alleged the property embezzled to be money. The proof was that the prisoner had received a cheque, but no evidence was given that the cheque had ever been presented or cashed, nor did it appear that the maker had an account or balance at the bank on which it was drawn, but it was proved that he had received no notice of its dishonour:—Held, (Figgott, B. dissentiente) that in the absence of any proof that the cheque had been converted into money, the allegation in the indictment was not sustained, and a conviction upon such indictment must be quashed.

The Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for the West Riding of Yorkshire stated the following—

* Before Cockburn, C.J., Keating, J., Montague Smith, J., Figgott, B. and Shew, J.

CASE.

Peter Keena was tried before me and others, at the Michaelmas Adjourned Quarter Sessions, held at Bradford, for the West Riding of the county of York, on the 4th of December, 1867, charged in the first count of the indictment with embezzling, on the 18th of September, at the parish of Dewsbury, certain money, to the amount of 4*l.* 14*s.*, the property of Andrew Hirst, his master.

The second count charged him with embezzling, on the 16th of October, at the parish aforesaid, certain other money, to wit, to the amount of 16*l.* 14*s.*, the property of the said Andrew Hirst, his said master.

No proof was given of the payment of 4*l.* 14*s.* to the prisoner in the first count mentioned, and that count was abandoned; but proof was given of payment to the prisoner of 16*l.* 14*s.* in the second count mentioned, by a cheque for that amount, but no evidence was given that the cheque had ever been presented or cashed. It was proved that in August last the prisoner sold goods on behalf of the prosecutor for 16*l.* 14*s.* to James Fenton, and that it was the prisoner's duty to pay over all moneys he received to his master on the same day. James Fenton proved that the prisoner came to him on the 16th of October for payment of the above 16*l.* 14*s.*, and that he (Fenton) paid the prisoner the 16*l.* 14*s.* by cheque, whereupon the prisoner gave a receipt in these words, "Settled, 16th Oct., 1867, Peter Keena." Receipt was produced and not disputed. Fenton had not received any notice of dishonour of the cheque.

A. Miller, superintendent of police, proved apprehending the prisoner on the 29th of October at Liverpool, on board a vessel bound for America, and prisoner upon being charged with embezzling money, property of his master, said, "It is all right; I intended to send him the money when I got to America." The prisoner's counsel contended that there was no evidence to support the indictment; that payment by cheque was not a payment in money, as stated in the indictment; that the cheque might have been lost and never presented, or it might have been that James Fenton had no balance at the bank.

I held that the cheque was money, and directed the jury to take the law from me, that receipt of the cheque was receipt of the money.

The jury convicted the prisoner, and he was sentenced to be imprisoned in the House of Correction at Wakefield, for six calendar months, subject to a case for the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal on the above point.

No counsel appeared to argue the case.

[Campbell Foster, as amicus Curie, informed the Court that he was counsel for the prisoner at the trial, and that he then contended before the jury, that the explanation of the prisoner's statement upon being told of the charge referred to the money mentioned in the first count, which count had been abandoned.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—Our decision in this case must turn upon the construction to be put upon the 71st section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. (1). I think the meaning of that section of the act of parliament is, that if a servant receives a cheque for his master, and fraudulently appropriates it to his own use, and converts it into money, it is sufficient to allege and prove that he either embezzled the cheque, or that he embezzled money; if it is alleged that he embezzled money, then it must be proved that the cheque was cashed, and so converted into money. Upon the facts stated in this case, I can find no proof that the cheque was converted into money. I think, therefore, that the case technically failed. But further, as far as anything goes to the contrary in the case, James Fenton might have no money in the bank, nor even an account there; and I therefore also think the case failed substantially on the proof. It seems to me that if a man embezzles a cheque, and is intercepted before he has converted that cheque into money, I think there is evidence to go to the jury in support of an allegation in the indictment that he embezzled a cheque, being a valuable security, but not under the allegation of embezzlement of money. The conviction must be quashed.

KEATING, J.—I agree that the conviction must be quashed, and especially as the learned Chairman stated that the receipt of the cheque was the receipt of money.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J.—I agree. The description in the indictment of the property embezzled is money; proof of the embezzlement of a cheque does not satisfy that description, unless some statutory enactment provides that it shall be sufficient. The 71st section enacts that "such allegation, so far as regards the description of the property, shall be sustained, if the offender shall be proved to have embezzled or fraudulently applied or disposed of any amount, although the particular species of coin or valuable security of which such amount was composed shall not be proved." "Any amount" there means any amount of money. This indictment would have been satisfied if there had been proof of the receipt of any amount of money.

FIGOTT, B.—Though I do not say I differ, yet I doubt whether the legislature, upon the true construction of this statute, did not intend to say that, whilst a man might be guilty of the embezzlement either of a cheque or of money, as the case might be, if he were indicted for embezzling a cheque, and it turned out that he had embezzled money, or if he were indicted for embezzling money, and it appeared that he had really embezzled a cheque, the indictment describing the property as money should be sufficient in either case. The word "amount," in the section, seems to apply as well to valuable security as to coin.

SHEE, J. concurred.

Conviction quashed.

(1) 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 71. enacts (inter alia), that in every indictment for embezzlement, where the offence shall relate to any money or any valuable security, it shall be sufficient to allege the embezzlement or fraudulent application or disposition to be of money, without specifying any particular coin or valuable security; and such allegation, as far as regards the description of the property, shall be sustained if the offender shall be proved to have embezzled or fraudulently applied, or disposed of any amount, although the particular species of coin, or valuable security of which such amount was composed, shall not be proved. By the 1st section of the same act, the term "valuable security" shall include any warrant, order or other security whatsoever for money, or for the payment of money.

Jan. 18. }

24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 32.—Injury done exceeding in Amount 5l.—More Trees than One,

Upon an indictment for cutting eight trees with intent to steal, whereby an amount of injury was done to them exceeding 5l., framed upon the latter part of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 32, proof that the aggregate value of a number of trees cut at one time exceeded the amount of 5l. will satisfy the indictment, though no one tree was of the value of 5l.

The following CASE was reserved by the Chairman of the Devon Quarter Sessions.

Benjamin Shepherd was tried before me and other Justices of the Peace for the county of Devon, at the Midsummer Sessions, 1867. The indictment consisted of three counts. The first, under the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 32, charged the prisoner with stealing eight oak-trees, of a value exceeding 5l.; the property of the Right Hon. William Wells, Viscount Sidmouth, growing on lands of the said Viscount Sidmouth, in the parish of Upottery, in the county of Devon.

The second count, under the same statute and section, charged the prisoner with cutting with intent to steal these eight trees growing elsewhere than in a park, pleasure-ground, orchard or avenue, or any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house, thereby then doing injury to the said Viscount Sidmouth, to an amount exceeding the sum of 5l.

The third count charged a larceny of the trees. The charge of larceny was abandoned by the prosecution, as the trees had not been removed.

It was proved in evidence that a sale of standing timber, the property of Viscount Sidmouth, to the number of 261 oak-trees, had taken place by auction on the 5th of February, 1867, and the trees had been purchased by three persons, one of whom, Mr. Heath, purchased 49 trees, marked for the purposes of the sale with the numbers 73 to 120 inclusive, and 261. These trees were all standing on Aller Chapplehayes and Bucketchayes Farms in Upottery; they were not grouped together, but were for the most part standing in hedges on these farms, at various distances from one another. Mr. Heath employed the prisoner, who was a carpenter and accustomed to the work, to fell and bark these trees in the usual way. The prisoner engaged about five men to assist him in the work. None of the trees included in the sale were the subject of the indictment, but eight other trees not marked for sale or sold. The evidence shewed that the felling and ripping of the trees bought by Mr. Heath took place during the ripping season of 1867, which extended over the month of May, and that during that time the eight trees in question were felled, stripped of bark, and had their tops cut off. There was evidence to connect the prisoner with the felling of these trees; but there was no evidence to shew the precise day or days on which these trees, or any of them, were felled, or on how many days the prisoner and his assistants were engaged in the work; but it was proved that the work was commenced and steadily prosecuted without intermission until the whole number of trees which the prisoner had been employed to throw were thrown, and it was then found that the eight trees in question had also been felled, and were lying on the ground. The bark and tops of these eight trees had been removed and sold by the prisoner, and he offered the trees themselves for sale as they lay on the ground after the bark and tops had been removed from them.

The injury resulting from the cutting down of these trees did not amount in the case of any one tree to 5l. The value of the eight trees, with their tops and bark, amounted altogether to 24l. 15s. 9d. The evidence on the point of value and situation of the trees was as follows: one tree (worth 3l., tops and bark 1l.), total value 4l., stood in a field called "Wood Close"; another (worth 3l., tops and bark 1l.), total value 4l., stood in a hedge between this field and "Wood Close Meadow"; one tree (worth 2l. 10s., bark 10s. 6d.), total value 3l. 0s. 6d., stood between the bottom of "Yellow Close" and a field called "Chapplehayes Six Acres"; another, worth 1l. 15s. (no evidance as to the value of the bark and top of this tree was given), stood "two fields off Chapplehayes Six Acres"; one, numbered 71 (worth 3*l.*, bark and top 1*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.*), total 4*l.* 0*s.* 9*d.*, and another, numbered 72 (worth 2*l.*, bark and top 1*s.*), total value 2*l.* 1*s.*, stood in the same hedge between "Chapplehayes Six Acres" and "Bucketshayes Farm"; and another (worth 1*l.* 15*s.*, bark 10*s.* 6*d.*), total value 2*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.*, stood between "Yellow Close" (above mentioned) and "Chapplehayes Lane." The eighth tree (worth 2*l.*, bark and top 1*l.*), total value 3*l.*, stood on the edge of a marl-pit in "Chapplehayes Moor," but beyond the name "Chapplehayes," there was no evidence of the contiguity or proximity of this last-mentioned marl-pit to any of the before-mentioned situations of the other seven trees.

At the close of the case for the prosecution, the prisoner's counsel objected that there was no evidence to go to the jury that the prisoner at any one time cut any trees, thereby doing injury to an amount exceeding 5*l.* The Court overruled the objection, and left the case to the jury, directing them that, in order to convict the prisoner, they must be satisfied that he cut down at one time, or so continuously as to form one transaction, such a number of the trees as would make the injury done amount to a sum exceeding 5*l.* The jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to nine months' imprisonment with hard labour; but, at the request of the prisoner's counsel, the Court reserved the point, and the prisoner was discharged on bail to surrender in execution when called on by the clerk of the peace for the time being.

The question for the Court is, whether there was any evidence to go to the jury to shew that injury amounting in the aggregate to a sum exceeding 5*l.* was done by feloniously cutting trees so continuously as to constitute the offence charged in the second count of the indictment. If the Court should be of opinion that there was any such evidence, the conviction will be affirmed; if not, the conviction will be quashed.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Mortimer appeared for the Crown.—The question left to the jury was the proper one, and they have convicted.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—That seems to be so;

but the question for us is, whether there was any evidence to go to the jury upon which they could find that the prisoner had cut the trees down at one time, or so continuously as to form one transaction.]

The grouping of the trees upon the evidence, as stated in the case, shews that trees to more than the value of 5*l.* were so contiguous as to be evidence from which the jury might draw the inference that such trees were cut down at one time. Then, as no one tree was injured to the extent of 5*l.*, it was permissible to add the amount of injury done to the several trees to make up the total amount of injury done to exceed 5*l.* The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 32. enacts: "Whosoever shall steal, or shall cut, break, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage with intent to steal, the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any under-wood, respectively growing in any park, pleasure-ground, garden, orchard, or avenue, or in any ground adjoining or belonging to any dwelling-house, shall (in case the value of the article or articles stolen, or the amount of the injury done shall exceed the sum of 1*l.*) be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished as in the case of simple larceny; and whosoever shall steal, or shall cut, break, root up, or otherwise destroy or damage with intent to steal, the whole or any part of any tree, sapling, or shrub, or any under-wood, respectively growing elsewhere than in any of the situations in this section before mentioned, shall (in case the value of the article or articles stolen, or the amount of the injury done, shall exceed the sum of 5*l.*) be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be punished as in the case of simple larceny." In The Queen v. Hodges (1) it would appear that the indictment charged the stealing of more than one tree as making up the value of 1*l.*, under the first part of the section; and that case was on the repealed statute of 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29, which is re-enacted in the present consolidating statute, and contains the same words. And in The Queen v. Whiteman (2) it was assumed that the actual injury to all the trees was to be taken into consideration;

but as the indictment was on the latter part of the section, and it only amounted to 1*l*. without taking consequential injury into account, the conviction was quashed on the latter ground.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think the question was properly left to the jury, and upon the evidence which has been pointed out as to the situation and grouping of the trees, they might have been cut at one time. Then, upon the construction of the 32nd section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, can the injury done to two or more trees be taken into consideration in estimating the amount of injury done within the meaning of that section? I cannot but say that a clause so confusing and inartistically drawn ought never to have been allowed to remain in a consolidating statute; still I think that the construction we must put upon the section is, that the value of the injury done to two trees may be taken into consideration in estimating the amount. In the first part of the section, the words “whole or any part of any tree” would point to one tree; but then afterwards, when reference is made to the value, it speaks of the “value of the article or articles stolen.” Then, with reference to the injury done to things intended to be stolen, the amount of injury done must be read of the article or articles referred to before. It may be said that the word “articles” is used to refer to underwood reddendo singula singulis, and this undoubtedly creates a difficulty; but I resolve the doubt in favour of this conviction, on the ground that if the legislature would afford protection to a number of small sticks in the shape of underwood, it would certainly desire to give the same protection to young growing trees; therefore I think that the words “whole or any part of any tree, sapling or shrub, in case the amount of injury done should exceed 5*l*,” must be taken to extend not only to cases where the injury is done to one tree, sapling, &c., but to a number.

The other Judges concurred.

Maliciously Wounding Cattle—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. s. 40.—Wound—Evidence.

Upon an indictment for wounding a gelding, contrary to the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. s. 40. the prisoner was convicted upon evidence which shewed that the gelding had suffered a laceration of the roots of the tongue, which protruded, and a tearing of the mouth, which injuries might have been caused by a pull of the tongue by the hand; but there was no evidence to shew that any other instrument than the hand had been used:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of a wounding; and the conviction was affirmed.

The following CASE was stated by the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for Gloucestershire.

At the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the county of Gloucester, holden on the 1st of January, 1868, George Bullock was tried before me on an indictment which charged him with maliciously and feloniously wounding a gelding, the property of James Ricketts. The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

On the trial it was proved that the prisoner, who was sent by his master with a cart and horse to fetch stone from a distant field on the 20th of December last, at half-past one p.m. returned about four p.m., bringing back the horse with his tongue protruding seven or eight inches, and unable to draw it back into his mouth. The veterinary surgeon who examined the horse the following day proved that he found the roots and lower part of the tongue much lacerated, and the mouth torn and clogged with clotted blood. The injury he considered might have been done by a violent pull of the tongue on one side. He was obliged to amputate five inches of the tongue, and the horse is likely to recover.

The prisoner's statement was that the horse bit at him, and he did it in a passion.

* Coram Cockburn, C.J., Keating, J., Montague Smith, J., Pigott, B. and Shee, J.

There was no evidence to shew that any instrument beyond the hand had been used.

The prisoner's counsel contended that no instrument having been proved to be used in inflicting the injury, the prisoner could not be convicted under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. s. 40. For the prosecution, it was maintained that under the statute it was not necessary to shew that the injury had been caused by any instrument other than the hand or hands of the prisoner. The prisoner's counsel, on the point being reserved, declined to address the jury, and a verdict of guilty was found by them. I respited the judgment and liberated the prisoner on recognizance, in order that the opinion of the Justices of either Bench and the Barons of the Exchequer might be taken on the question, whether the prisoner was properly convicted of the wounding, there being no evidence to shew that he used any instrument other than his hand or hands.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Sawyer, in support of the conviction.—The question is, what is the proper construction to be put upon the word "wound" in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. s. 40, which enacts, "Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously kill, maim or wound any cattle shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable," &c. The language is substantially the same as that which was used in stat. 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 30. s. 16, and it is said that a "wound" cannot be inflicted unless some kind of instrument is used. At the trial the case of The Queen v. Jeans (1) was cited; but when the report of that case is examined it will be found that no decision was there given upon the present point: the only point decided was upon the word "maim," and the decision is to some extent in favour of the present contention on the part of the prosecution; for it would seem that if a permanent injury had been inflicted, the prisoner would have been convicted, although no instrument was used. If that would be the construction upon the word "maim," the same ought to be put upon the word "wound." But further, that case, as far as the meaning of the word "wound" is concerned, proceeded upon a misconception. Two cases, The King v. Owens (2) and The King v. Hughes (3), were cited for the defence, and the counsel for the prosecution appears to have given up the point, although neither of those cases supports the proposition in proof of which they were cited, viz., that the word "wound" must be taken to mean a wound caused by an instrument. Such a construction has been put upon the word "wound" in the 7 Will. 4. & 1 Vict. c. 85. s. 4; but the ground of it is explained by Patteson, J., in The Queen v. Harris (4), viz., that it was evidently the intention of the legislature, according to the words of the statute, that the wounding should be inflicted with some instrument, and not by the hand or teeth. In The King v. Stevens (5) that construction was upheld by seven Judges against five, and Alderson, B. afterwards, in Jennings's case (6), explained the reason in these words: "The Judges decided under the former statute, 9 Geo. 4. c. 31. ss. 11 and 12, that the 'wound' must be made by an instrument, because the word 'wound' is there used concurrently with 'stab' and 'cut'; and inasmuch as a stab or cut must be made by an instrument, they thought that the legislature intended by the word 'wound' an injury (not being a stab or cut) which was made by an instrument also." Of course this reason does not apply to a case arising under the present statute, which has the words kill, maim or wound only.—(He was then stopped.)

COCKBURN, C.J.—We need not trouble you any further. You have satisfactorily explained the doubt which has arisen in this case. The case last referred to gives the reason for putting the construction upon the old statute, namely, that the word "wound" was used in conjunction with the other words, "stab" and "cut." But under the statute which we now have to construe, there is nothing to shew that we are not at liberty to construe the word "wound" according to its ordinary interpretation. The mischief which is done to the animal is quite as great, although only done by the hand, as if an instrument had been used. It may possibly be that the guilt of the prisoner may not be so great as if he had inflicted the wound by the use of an instrument; but it is equally within the terms and spirit of the statute, and the conviction must be affirmed.

1867. } TOOMER AND ANOTHER, appel-

Turnpike—Exemption from Toll—Stores for the use of Troops—Stat. 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32.

The exemption from toll in the Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32, in favour of carts conveying stores belonging to Her Majesty, or for the use of Her Majesty's forces, applies where stores are being bona fide conveyed for the use of such forces, although at the time of claiming the exemption no property in such stores has passed to the Crown, and there has been no irrevocable appropriation of them for the use of such forces.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The case stated that an information had been laid before the Justices under 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, charging the respondent with having demanded and taken from the appellants, at a toll-gate called Farnborough Gate, on a turnpike-road, the sum of 6d. as a toll payable there in respect of a waggon drawn by two horses and containing hay, the said waggon and horses then being exempt from the said toll, as being employed in conveying commissariat for the use of Her Majesty's forces, within the meaning of the 32nd section of the said act.

At the hearing, before the Justices, it was proved by witnesses that on the 11th of December, 1866, the appellants were trading under the name of Messrs. Toomer Brothers, and were then contractors for the supply of forage for the use of Her Majesty's forces at Aldershot, in the said county, under and by virtue of a certain contract made on the 22nd of October, 1866, between them and Her Majesty's Deputy Commissary General, on behalf of Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for War, to supply hay at Aldershot Camp and Command, in such quantities, and at such times and at such barracks or camps as might be required within the command by the proper officer, as specified in certain conditions thereto annexed, for twelve months, commencing the 1st of November, 1866, (a copy of which said contract and conditions were thereunto annexed and made part of the case) (1). It was also proved that on the said 11th of December, 1866, the appellants under the said contract were by their servant conveying, in the said waggon drawn by the said two horses, certain hay to Aldershot Camp; that in order to take the said hay to Aldershot Camp it was convenient and necessary for the said waggon and horses to pass through the said toll-gate; that on the waggon and horses arriving at the said toll-gate, the respondent demanded and took from the appellants, the sum of 6d. as and for toll in respect of the said waggon and horses, and refused to allow the said waggon and horses to pass through the said toll-gate except on payment of such sum of 6d. as and for such toll as aforesaid, although the appellants then claimed exemption from such toll, on the ground that the said hay was hay for the use of Her Majesty's forces, and that by reason thereof the said waggon and horses were exempt from such toll. At the time when the said waggon and horses and hay passed through the said gate, and at the time when the said toll was demanded, the said hay had not nor had any part thereof been inspected or approved by any person in accordance with the said condition No. 4, nor by any person whatsoever on behalf of Her Majesty, nor had the same or any part thereof been actually delivered or offered to be delivered to any person on behalf of Her Majesty, or on behalf of Her Majesty's forces or commissariat, except as otherwise appears from this case. The respondent was then and is a person duly authorized to demand and take such toll as is legally payable at the said toll-gate, and the amount of the sum so demanded and taken would be the amount of toll legally payable for the said waggon and horses if any were payable.

It was contended for the appellants that no toll was payable, inasmuch as the waggon and horses were within the exemption from toll mentioned in the 32nd section of the said act, and were a waggon, or other carriage, and horses drawing the same, conveying commissariat or other public stores for the use of Her Majesty's forces. The respondent contended that the said waggon and horses were not within the said exemption. The said Justices were of opinion that the said waggon and horses were not within the said exemption. The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the said Justices were right.

C. Wood (Mangles with him), for the appellants.—The waggon and horses were exempt from toll by the 32nd section of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, which exempts them from toll when employed in conveying "public stores of or belonging to His Majesty, or for the use of His Majesty's forces." It is sufficient therefore for the exemption if the stores were being conveyed for the use of Her Majesty's forces, as has been already decided by this Court, the present case being substantially the same as that of The London and South-Western Railway Company v. Reeves (2).—(He was then stopped by the Court.)

case of The London and South-Western Railway Company v. Reeves, who is the defendant in this case (2), and as there is no appeal from the decision of this Court in these cases, it is asked that the present case may be allowed to be argued. There is, moreover, some distinction between the two cases, and the present one ought not necessarily to be governed by the former one. It now distinctly appears that the hay had not been approved by any one on behalf of the Crown, and that nothing had been done to pass the property in the hay to any one on behalf of Her Majesty. In The London and South-Western Railway Company v. Reeves (2), Erle, C.J. seems to have based his judgment on the fact that the property in the goods had passed to the Crown, for he is reported in the Law Reports, at p. 582, to have said, "that the fact that Her Majesty can refuse to receive the stores if of inferior quality cannot prevent their being her property."

[BOVILL, C.J.—No; the decision in that case was not on that ground, but on the ground that the hay was being conveyed for the use of Her Majesty's forces. There must be some mistake in this respect in the report. KEATING, J.—The passage cited does not appear in the report of the case in the Law Journal Reports. The point which the Chief Justice seems to have chiefly dwelt on in his judgment was the protection of the carrier, and he considers him equally protected with the contractor, on the principle of qui facit per alium facit per se. I observe, also, that Mr. Wood, in his argument, called the attention of the Court to the power of the officer in command to reject the hay.]

It is conceded that the mere power of rejection is not sufficient to prevent the exemption from applying; but it is contended that to entitle the contractors to carry the hay toll free, there must previously have been such an appropriation of it for the use of Her Majesty's forces as would have prevented the contractors from otherwise disposing of it; whereas, in the present case, there was nothing to have hindered the appellants after they had passed the toll-gate with the hay from substituting any other hay for it, and delivering such substituted hay under their contract for the supply of forage to the forces. The effect of the first and second conditions of the contract in this case is to make the contractor set up a shop at Aldershot for the use of the forces, and therefore, if the exemption in such a case as the present is to apply, the contractor will be able to bring a quantity of stores to his place at Aldershot toll free, on the plea that he intends to offer them for the use of Her Majesty's forces, but which in fact he may sell and dispose of in other markets. Suppose the appellants, after they had passed the toll-gate, had sold the hay to any dealer they had met with on the road before they reached Aldershot, is the exemption to apply because at the time they passed the toll-gate they said the hay was for the use of Her Majesty's forces? There surely ought to have been previously an irrevocable appropriation of the hay by the contractor for the use of the forces, and one test as to that would naturally be whether the property had passed.

It is admitted that to come within the exemption, the stores need not bespecifically Her Majesty's; they might be vested in some officer or other public authority for the use of the forces, and therefore to meet such a case the words in the act are “or for the use of,” &c. They ought, however, to have been ear-marked, or in some other way irrevocably appropriated, so as properly to be stores for the use of Her Majesty's forces.

[BOVILL, C.J.—It must be a question of fact to be ascertained by the Magistrates, whether the stores are or are not for the use of Her Majesty's forces; but the moment it has been ascertained that they are for such use, they are exempt.]

At the time the hay was being conveyed it was under the control of one who had no power to say it was for the use of Her Majesty's forces, for until some other person on the part of the Crown had assented to its being so used, it was uncertain whether it would be or not for the use of the forces. The contractors for the supply of hay for the forces might contract with other persons for the purchase of it, and there might be many hands and a long line of road through which it would pass before it came from the land where it was cut to the camp at Aldershot, and could it be said that all along such road every person who should assist in forwarding it would be entitled to pass with it toll free?

BOVILL, C.J.—In the former case no counsel appeared for the respondent, and therefore we have not been unwilling to hear this case argued. After hearing, however, what has now been urged on the part of the respondent, I have no doubt that the exemption applies to this case. The words of the statute exempt carts and horses employed in conveying public stores for the use of Her Majesty's forces. Mr. Harington says that the stores must be either Her Majesty's or under the control of Her Majesty, but those are not the words of the act. Here there was a contract for the supply of forage for the use of Her Majesty's forces at Aldershot, and the hay was going under that contract. I see no injustice which would be done even if the hay were afterwards appropriated to some other person; for in that case the contractor might have been proceeded against summarily under the statute, and the Magistrates would no doubt have convicted him, on its being proved that he made an untrue statement when he claimed exemption. The Magistrates form the proper tribunal to decide whether the stores are being conveyed with a bona fide intention of conveying them for the use of Her Majesty's forces. I do not agree with Mr. Harington that because these contractors were exempt, the persons who may have supplied them with the hay would be exempt also; for these others would not then, in point of fact, be conveying the hay for the use of Her Majesty's forces. I think there must be some mistake in the report of the former case in the Law Reports, for the judgment of the Court could not have proceeded on the ground of the property in the hay having passed to Her Majesty, but only on the ground of the hay being for the use of Her Majesty's forces.

WILLES, J.—I am of the same opinion.

BYLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. I was present at the time the decision in the former case was given, and my impression is, that it entirely turned on the latter branch of the act of parliament, which exempts stores for the use of Her Majesty's forces. It is to be observed that the vendors of the hay had here intended it for the use of the forces, and, further, that they had appropriated it for such purpose, although no doubt they might afterwards have revoked such appropriation. This is an exemption in favour of the Crown, and also in favour of the public; and therefore a fair and reasonable and not a strict construction should be put upon it.

False Pretences, Obtaining Money by—Passing the Note of a Bank which had become Bankrupt for a good Note—Evidence.

*An indictment charged the prisoner with obtaining money by falsely pretending that a five pound bank note was of the value of 5*l.* It appeared in evidence that the note was the note of a bank which had been made bankrupt forty years before, and had not re-opened, and the prisoner knew it. The bankruptcy proceedings were not produced, and there was no evidence as to what dividend, if any, had been paid:—Held, that the evidence was sufficient to justify the conviction of the prisoner.*

The following CASE was reserved by the learned Presiding Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for the North Riding of Yorkshire.

The defendant was indicted at the Epiphany Quarter Sessions of the Peace of the North Riding of Yorkshire, for obtaining money and goods by false pretences, with intent to defraud.

The first count of the indictment stated that the defendant falsely pretended to one John Beal, that a piece of paper was a bank note then current, and good and available for the sum of 5*l.*, and of the full value of 5*l.*, by which false pretence the defendant then unlawfully obtained from the said John Beal the sum of 5*l.* with intent to defraud; whereas in fact the said piece of paper was not a bank note then current, or good, or of the full value of 5*l.*, as the defendant then well knew.

The second count stated that the defendant falsely pretended to the said John Beal that there was then in existence a banking co-partnership of persons carrying on business as bankers, under the name of the Stockton and Cleveland Bank, and that a piece of paper, purporting to be a bank note of the Stockton and Cleveland Bank, for the payment of 5*l.* was then of value, by which false pretence the defendant then unlawfully obtained from the said John Beal 5*l.*, with intent to defraud; whereas, in fact, there was not any banking co-partnership then carrying on business as bankers under the name of the Stockton and Cleveland Bank, nor was the said piece of paper of any value whatever, as the defendant well knew.

The fifth count stated that the defendant falsely pretended, to one Walter Grimshaw, that a piece of paper was a bank note, then current, and good and available for 5*l.*, and then of the value of 5*l.*, by which false pretence the defendant then unlawfully obtained from the said Walter Grimshaw a boy's coat and a pair of leather leggings, and 4*l.* 7*s.*, with intent to defraud; whereas, in fact, the said piece of paper was not a bank note then current, or good, or of the value of 5*l.*, as the defendant then well knew.

The sixth count stated that the defendant falsely pretended to the said Walter Grimshaw, that there was then in existence a banking co-partnership carrying on business as bankers under the name of the Stockton and Cleveland Bank, and that a piece of paper purporting to be a bank note of the Stockton and Cleveland Bank, for the payment of 5*l.* was then of value, by which false pretence the defendant then unlawfully obtained from the said Walter Grimshaw a boy's coat and a pair of leather leggings, and 4*l.* 7*s.* in money, with intent to defraud; whereas, in fact, there was not any banking co-partnership then carrying on business as bankers under the name of the Stockton and Cleveland Bank, nor was the said piece of paper of any value whatever, as the defendant well knew.

It was proved that the defendant, on the 24th of October last, obtained, through one Hansill, from John Beal, a butcher at Whitby, 5*l.* in gold in exchange for a piece of paper purporting to be a 5*l.* note of the Stockton and Cleveland Bank, and that on the same day he made a small purchase, through Hansill, to the amount of 13*s.*, of Walter Grimshaw, a shopkeeper at Whitby, paying for the same with another piece of paper purporting to be a 5*l.* note of the same bank, receiving from Grimshaw the articles purchased and 4*l.* 7*s.* in exchange. The defendant told Hansill to be sure if any one asked about the notes to say that he (Hansill) got them from a man he did not know. The defendant was taken into custody a few days afterwards in his own house, when a similar note was found in his pocket, seven others inside his trowsers, and one in his boot, all of which were produced, and when charged with obtaining money by false pretences the defendant said, "The notes were mucky old things which the old man (meaning his uncle) had taken in payment of a dairy of cheeses at Yaem fair forty years ago, and that the bank had stopped payment directly after." It was also proved by John Heavisides, a printer at Stockton-on-Tees, that a bank, called the Stockton and Cleveland Bank, had formerly existed in that town, but had stopped payment about forty years ago, and had never re-opened, and was not now in existence. On cross-examination by the defendant's counsel, this witness stated that he knew the partners in the bank were made bankrupts, that he was employed by the Bankruptcy Commissioners to print in their presence the indorsements on the back of the notes, of their having been produced and exhibited to the Commissioners without which no holder of a note could get a dividend. The notes produced bore this indorsement; but the witness did not know what dividend was paid.

The defendant's counsel then made the following objection in writing: "It being proved that the partners of the bank became bankrupt, I object that, none of the bankruptcy proceedings being produced, there is no evidence that the notes are not of the value of 5*l.*, and no evidence that there are no assets to pay the notes in full, and therefore that there is no case for the jury."

I told the jury that there was no evidence that the notes were of no value; but that if on the evidence they believed the defendant to have passed the notes as good notes of an existing bank of the value of 5*l.*, knowing that the bank was insolvent, and had stopped payment forty years ago, and had not re-opened, and that the notes were not of the value of 5*l.*, they might find him guilty. The defendant was found guilty, and the Court had no reason to be dissatisfied with that verdict. At the request of the defendant's counsel, this case was granted for the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal, whether the defendant was properly convicted or not. The defendant was admitted to bail, to appear at the next Quarter Sessions of the North Riding of Yorkshire to receive judgment.

Shepherd, for the prisoner.—The indorsement on the back of the note was a memorandum which shewed that it had been exhibited in the proceedings in the bankruptcy of the partners in the bank. Then the bankruptcy proceedings ought to have been produced; and as they were not, there was no evidence here that the estate might not pay 20*s.* in the pound, or whether any or what dividend had been paid under the bankruptcy. It might be that the estate would pay 20*s.* in the pound, and that the dividends were still due on the note. There was no evidence as to what had been paid, if anything, nor therefore of the value of the note. In The Queen v. Clarke (1) it appeared, on an indictment for obtaining a bull by falsely pretending that a promissory note of V. & Co. was a good note, that the prisoner, when he uttered the note, said it was a very good one, and on being asked where he lived gave a false address. V. & Co. had ceased business above twenty years, and one of their then clerks swore that the note uttered by the prisoner had been regularly cancelled and withdrawn from circulation. The note was old and discoloured. The proceedings in bankruptcy against V. & Co. were not produced, and the prisoner was acquitted under the direction of Coleridge, J.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—In that case, the express ground of Mr. Justice Coleridge's direction was that there was no evidence that the prisoner knew that the bank had stopped.]

In The Queen v. Williams (2), under similar circumstances, Martin, B. directed an acquittal, on the ground that there was no evidence that the estate might not pay 20s. in the pound. In The Queen v. Spencer (3) Gaselee, J. directed an acquittal, on the ground that as the note might ultimately be paid there was no evidence that the prisoner was guilty of a fraud in passing it away. In The Queen v. Flint (4) the notes passed appeared on their face to have been exhibited in the bankruptcy of the bank, and there was hearsay evidence that the bank had stopped payment upwards of seven years before, but the notes had never been presented by the prosecutor for payment. The conviction was quashed on the ground that the evidence was not sufficient to shew the note was bad. In The Queen v. Evans (5) the prisoner obtained change to the full amount of 5*l.* for a note on a bank which had stopped payment eight years before, and had paid a dividend of 2*s.* 4*d.* in the pound six or seven years before; it was objected that there was not sufficient evidence to go to the jury in support of the allegation that the note was not good, or of the value of 5*l.*, or of any value whatever. The Chairman told the jury that there was evidence from which they might infer that the note was not of any value. The prisoner was convicted; but the conviction was quashed by the Court, on the ground that there was no evidence that the note was of no value; and Pollock, C.B. said: "For although 2*s.* 4*d.* in the pound has been paid upon it, it might still be of some value."

COCKBURN, C.J.—I have no doubt upon this point. The evidence stated in the case clearly shews that the prisoner passed off the notes of the Stockton and Cleveland Bank as good 5*l.* notes, well knowing that the bank had stopped payment forty years ago and had not re-opened; and that is, I think, amply sufficient.

The other Judges concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

Attorney—T. T. Trevor, Guisborough.

Note.—We have thought it desirable to report this case as settling a point upon which a difference of opinion seems to have prevailed, according to the reported statements of the law as laid down by learned Judges on circuit. For whilst Mr. Baron Martin, in The Queen v. Williams, cited in the argument of the case, seems to have thought that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the possibility that the bank might at a future time pay 20s. in the pound, entitled the prisoner to his acquittal, in The Queen v. Smith (1) Mr. Justice Talfourd seems to have held that, on an indictment for obtaining money by falsely pretending that the promissory note of a bank which had stopped payment by reason of bankruptcy, was a good and a valuable security for the payment of the amount mentioned in it, and was of that value, it was not necessary to prove the bankruptcy proceedings, and that it was sufficient to prove the time when the bank stopped payment, and that cash could not be obtained for the note on its being duly presented for payment, and prior to this case the matter seems to have created some doubt. Mr. Greaves, in his note to p. 636 of 2 Russell on Crimes, 4th edit., says in reference these cases, that "it deserves consideration whether these cases have ever been dealt with on the proper ground. Assuming that the evidence shews that the prisoner was guilty of a fraud in passing the note, it should seem that the only proper question is, was the note at the time it was passed an available note for the sum mentioned in it? The representation of the prisoner is that it was, and the truth or falsehood of that representation depends

Salmon Fishery Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 121), s. 36.—Instruments and Devices for catching Salmon — Licence — Evidence of Intention.

The bare use of the instruments and devices for catching salmon enumerated in section 36. of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1865, is sufficient to render an unlicensed person using them liable to the penalty therein mentioned, without evidence that they were used for the purpose of taking salmon.

CASES stated by Justices under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

LYNE v. LEONARD.

At a petty session holden at the Victoria Hall, Newport, in the county of Monon the state of facts at the time. Suppose a prisoner believes a note to be valueless and passes it for full value, how could his guilt be turned into innocence by the possibility that years afterwards some dividend may be paid on the note?—see the remarks of Pollock, C.B., Williams, J. and Crowder, J., infra, in The Queen v. Evans.—It does not, however, seem to be so much a question of principle as of evidence. Assuming the law to be as stated by Mr. Greaves, the question seems rather to be, is the fact of the bank having stopped payment and not re-opened for a lapse of time to be taken as sufficient proof against the prisoner in a criminal proceeding that the bank had not assets at the time of the passing of the note to pay it in full, after it has appeared in evidence that the bank has been made bankrupt and the non-production of the bankruptcy proceedings not accounted for, when by their production it might appear what the real value of the note was, and whether of full value or not? Because it must be borne in mind that the note must be shewn in fact not to be of the value pretended as well as that the prisoners believed it not to be of such value. The case in the text, however, shews that the bankruptcy proceedings need not be produced in such a case.

mouth, on the 1st of June, 1867, an information was preferred by Charles Lyne, secretary of the Usk and Ebbw Board of Fishery Conservators (hereinafter called the appellant), against William Leonard, who occupies a fishery at Undy, in the said county (hereinafter called the respondent), under section 36. of the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, charging "for that he the said William Leonard, after the time appointed by the conservators, did, on the 27th day of May, in the year of our Lord 1867, at the parish of Undy, in the said county, then and there use seventy fishing putts for catching salmon, without having any licence for the same," was heard and determined by the Justices, and dismissed on the ground that there was no proof that the putts were there for the purpose of catching salmon.

Upon the hearing of the said information, it was admitted by the respondent, and found as a fact, that he had seventy putts laid down in his fishery with circles (an apparatus formed of wire) at all times in them, to prevent salmon from passing into them; and the respondent alleged that the putts were there for the purpose of catching shrimps and flat fish only, and therefore that it was not necessary for the respondent to take out, and he did not take out, any licence for putts. It was argued, on the part of the appellant, that putts are fixed engines for catching salmon, and are so declared to be under the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, and that it was not necessary to prove the purpose for which they were put down. The Justices, however, were of opinion that it was necessary for the appellant to prove that the putts were laid down for the purpose of taking salmon, and that it was not sufficient, in order to bring the respondent within the penal clause, under which he was charged, to prove only the naked fact that the putts were there, and they declined to convict, on the ground that there was no evidence before them that the putts were there for the purpose of catching salmon, or that salmon had been caught in them.

The question of law arising on the above statement is as follows: Is the naked fact of the putts being placed in the fishery sufficient evidence on which to convict the respondent of using them for catching salmon, without a proper licence for the same?

LYNE v. FENNELL.

In this case the information under the same statute charged that the respondent, the occupier of a fishery at Goldcliffe, in the county of Monmouth, "after the time appointed by the conservators, did, on the 27th day of May, 1867, at the parish of Goldcliffe, in the said county, then and there use fifty-nine fishing putts for catching salmon, without having any licence for the same."

It was proved, on the part of the appellant, that the respondent had fifty-nine putts laid down, the nearest putt being about fifty yards from his putchers, and that they were laid down without circles or stop-nets over them, but the respondent denied that they were placed there for the purpose of catching salmon, alleging that they were intended to catch coarse fish and shrimps, and were laid down in a place where salmon do not usually run, and that they were not in the same position in which engines are generally placed for catching salmon, and that therefore it was not necessary for the respondent to take out a licence for the putts. It was argued, on the part of the appellant, that putts were fixed engines for taking salmon, and are so declared to be under the Salmon Fishery Act, 1861, and that it was not necessary to prove the purpose for which they were put down. The Justices declined to convict, on the ground that there was no evidence before them that the putts were there for the purpose of taking salmon, or that salmon had been caught by them.

The question of law upon the above facts is, whether the naked fact of the putts being placed in the fishery without circles or stop-nets, is sufficient on which to convict the respondent of using them for catching salmon, without a proper licence for the same.

Manisty, for the appellant.—By section 36. of the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121. from and after a certain appointed time, any person using within a fishing district putts, &c.

for the catching of salmon without a licence, is liable to a penalty of not less than double the amount to be paid for the licence, and not exceeding 20*l*. Section 33. provides for the issue of such licences, and both in that section and paragraph 2. of section 34. putts are enumerated amongst the instruments and devices for catching salmon, in respect of which licences are to be taken out by the person using them. The object of the legislature was clearly to prevent the use of these instruments, which are included under the term "fixed engines," by section 4. of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 109. by unlicensed persons; it was therefore not incumbent upon the appellant to prove that the putts were laid down for the purpose of taking salmon, and the Justices were wrong in not convicting.

No counsel appeared for the respondents.

BLACKBURN, J.—We think the Justices came to a wrong conclusion in both cases. Looking at sections 33, 34. and 36. of the 28 & 29 Vict. c. 121, it is obvious that the legislature intended that the use of these kinds of instruments should be confined to licensed persons; and it seems to me that the enactments in question are to be read entirely irrespective of the intention of the parties using them. In the first case, on which only any question can arise, it appears that the respondent used circles, for the purpose of preventing salmon from passing into the putts; but this circumstance, in our opinion, does not make the least difference, the rather that this apparatus may, at any moment, be removed from the instrument, which thereupon becomes immediately available for catching salmon. A putt no more ceases to be a putt because a circle is placed in it, than a bottle ceases to be a bottle when corked.

Case remitted to the Justices.

Factory—Accident preventing Person Injured from returning to Work—Factories Act (7 Vict. c. 15. s. 22).

By the Factories Act (7 Vict. c. 15), s. 22, "If any accident shall occur in a factory which shall cause any bodily injury to any person employed therein which shall have been of such a nature as to prevent the person so injured from returning to his work in the factory before nine of the clock of the following morning, the occupier of the factory, or in his absence his principal agent, shall within twenty-four hours of such absence send a notice thereof in writing to the surgeon appointed to grant certificates of age for the district in which the factory is situated," &c. A girl employed in a factory was tripped up by a rope placed in her way as a practical joke, and falling against some machinery not in motion, sprained her arm. She returned to the factory before nine o'clock on the following morning, having arranged that her mother should take her place as soon as possible, and came away after attempting to work for about an hour, using her knees and mouth instead of her injured arm:—Held, first, that the accident was one of which the occupier was bound to give notice according to the section above stated; secondly, that the girl was prevented from returning to her work within the meaning of the section, as it is necessary, in order to excuse the occupier from giving notice, that the person injured should return, not merely with the intention but with the ability to resume work.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

On the 9th of May, 1867, John Stephenson, cotton-manufacturer, appeared before two Justices, upon the summons of J. B. Lakeman, one of Her Majesty's sub-inspectors of factories. The summons charged Stephenson with being, on the 21st of March last, at Todmorden, in Lancaster, "the occupier of a certain factory within the same county, the same being a factory within the meaning of the Factories Act (7 Vict. c. 15), and that an accident then occurred in the factory which caused bodily injury to a young person named Jane Greenwood, of the age of fourteen years, employed therein, which was of such a nature as to prevent the person so injured from returning to her work in the factory before nine o'clock of the following morning, and that he did not, nor in his absence did his principal agent, within twenty-four hours of the absence of Jane Greenwood, send a notice of it in writing to the surgeon appointed to grant certificates of age for the district in which the factory is situated."

It was proved before the Justices that John Stephenson was the occupier of a cotton factory, and subject to all the provisions of the act 7 Vict. c. 15. It was also proved that Jane Greenwood was employed in the factory as a weaver, and that she was under the age of eighteen years, and so registered in the books of the factory. It was also proved that, on the 21st of March, 1867, at half-past five in the afternoon, Jane Greenwood was tripped up by and fell over a rope in the factory, which had been tied across the passage between the looms by one Richard Carter, a nephew of John Stephenson, and who was employed by him in the factory as a responsible servant, for a practical joke (or, as it was termed before the Justices, "fooling"). In consequence of this fall over the rope, Jane Greenwood was injured, and sustained a severe sprain to her right wrist and arm by her having fallen against a machine in the factory, but which machine was not in motion. She did not then leave the factory, but remained till six o'clock in order to await the return of the defendant from Manchester to tell him of the accident, and did so; but, after the accident and until six o'clock, she endeavoured to keep her looms running, but could not do her usual quantity of work. She returned to the factory next morning at five minutes past six o'clock; but it was proved that she so returned under an arrangement with her mother that, as they were poor and could not afford the loss of wages which would be consequent on her absence, she should go and "try" to work as she was best able, and remain there until her mother had lighted her fire and performed her domestic duties, when she was to come and take her daughter's place and work till her recovery; and thus, by this arrangement, reduce the loss of wages. It was proved before the Justices that the girl could not raise her arm above her waist or stretch it out, and was obliged to use her knee and mouth and one hand for the purpose of placing her cotton "cop" into the shuttle, with a slight assistance from the injured hand. Her mother came at twenty-five minutes past six and relieved her; but she was obliged to go home at five minutes after seven o'clock, having remained until that time in order that her mother might shew the defendant the state of the girl's arm, who then left and put herself under the care of Mr. Foster, a surgeon at Todmorden, who put her arm in splints, in which they were kept for five days. It was also proved that the girl did return to the factory after the fifth day, but contrary to the advice of her surgeon, and that the bandages were not removed from her arm till after the 16th of April. It was admitted that no notice whatever was sent to the certifying surgeon, as mentioned by the statute 7 Vict. c. 15. s. 22. The defendant contended before the Magistrates that, inasmuch as Jane Greenwood did actually return on the morning of the 22nd of March, and as he saw her at her looms, that no notice of the accident was required to be given by him to the certifying surgeon.

Mr. Lakeman, the sub-inspector, contended that the meaning of the words of the act, "return to his work," was returning and performing continuously the usual amount of regular work. That the 22nd section enacts, that any accident shall be reported which has been of such a nature as to prevent the injured person from returning to his work in the factory before nine o'clock next morning: hence the words require all accidents, whether from machinery or not, to be reported. That the words of the act also require all accidents to be reported which prevent the injured person from returning to his work. That if an accident occurred and the injured person returned, and was employed on some other work, such an accident should be reported, because he did not return to his work; and that though the girl came on the morning of the 22nd of March, at five minutes past six o'clock, and set on her looms, which were worked by steam power, she only did so for the short time she was at the factory in the morning, by the aid of her knee, mouth and hand, and the little assistance she could bear to give with the other hand, her object being to carry on the looms till her mother could come to attend to them, and so reduce the loss to her wages, which would have been otherwise greater. That the clear meaning of the words "return to her work" is, that the returning should be accompanied with the performance of her work, not the mere returning to the factory, but the returning to and doing her work; and although it was proved in evidence that the injured girl did return before nine o'clock on the following morning, and attempted to do her work, she could not do so efficiently, inasmuch as she was obliged to leave at five minutes past seven o'clock, and was laid up for some time afterwards; that such an attempt to perform work will not withdraw the case from the operation of section 22. of 7 Vict. c. 15; and, therefore, the defendant ought to have sent a notice of the accident to the certifying surgeon. The Magistrates said that it was not for them to look into the quantity of the work, or the quality of it, or whether it was done well or ill, or more or less expeditiously, or whether the girl continued at her work till breakfast-time; but the fact that she did come to her work before nine o'clock of the following day was sufficient to justify, in law, the defendant in not having sent a notice, and that consequently they could not convict him of any offence under the 22nd section of the Factories Act.

If the Magistrates were wrong in dismissing the summons on the grounds before mentioned, then they submitted to the Court whether the accident was such an accident as was intended by the section.

It was not proved or alleged that any arrangement existed on the 21st of March between the defendant and Jane Greenwood that she should return to her work before nine o'clock of the morning of the following day, nor that her return on the following morning was colourable on her part, to avoid the necessity for a notice to the factory surgeon.

The Attorney General (Sir John Karslake) (Hannen with him), for the appellant.—The first question is, whether the accident which occurred to Jane Greenwood was an accident within the meaning of the act, 7 Vict. c. 15. s. 22 (1); and it is submitted that there can be no doubt that it was such an accident. It is not necessary that the accident should be caused by the actual working of the machinery in the factory. In many cases it would be very difficult to say whether the accident was caused by the works in the factory or not. The legislature intended that every accident which occurred in a factory, no matter how caused, should be reported to the proper officer. There are provisions in the statutes which compel the owner or occupier of a factory to fence his machinery; it may possibly be to his interest to prevent an injury which would disclose a breach of the regulations from being made public. The next question is, whether the accident prevented the girl from returning to her work in the factory. It does not seem to have occurred to the Magistrates that there may be a colourable return which does not satisfy the words of the statute.

[LUSH, J.—It may be said that if a workman is absent, the foreman will know of it, but that he cannot know whether the workman is able to return to his work or not. Suppose the girl had worked on till the middle of the day, could she then be said to have returned, or not?]

No such difficulty arises in the present case, as for all practical purposes the girl was unable to resume her work on the next day.

No counsel appeared for the respondent.

(1) By 7 Vict. c. 15. s. 22, it is enacted, "That if any accident shall occur in a factory which shall cause any bodily injury to any person employed therein, which shall have been of such a nature as to prevent the person so injured from returning to his work in the factory before nine of the clock of the following morning, the occupier of the factory, or in his absence his principal agent, shall within twenty-four hours of such absence send a notice thereof in writing to the surgeon appointed to grant certificates of age for the district in which the factory is situated, in which notice the place of residence of the person injured, or the place to which he may have been removed, shall be stated; and the surgeon shall send a copy of such notice to the sub-inspector of the district by the first post after the receipt thereof."

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that our judgment should be in favour of the appellant. The true meaning of section 22. is, that to take a case out of the statute the person injured must not only return, but at the time of his return must be in a condition to work. A return with the intention of resuming work, is not by itself sufficient. In the present case it appears that although the girl returned with the intention of continuing her work, she had not the capacity to do so. The respondent does not appear to have had notice of her condition when she first returned; but he was bound, as soon as he knew of the real facts of the case, to give the notice required by the statute. With regard to the question whether the accident was of the description intended by the statute, it appears that the girl was not hurt by the machinery of the factory, but in consequence of a stupid trick played by a relation of the respondent. But there can be no doubt that the accident occurred within the factory; and the fact that it was not caused by the machinery does not exonerate the respondent from giving notice of it.

BLACKBURN, J., MELLOR, J. and LUSH, J. concurred.

Jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace—Warrant of Distress to levy Rates under Local Act—Limitation under Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11.—Power to state a Case under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

A local act provided that if any person rated under its powers should for ten days after demand neglect to pay the rate, it should be lawful for any Justice of the Peace of the borough, by warrant under his hand and seal, to authorize the collector to levy the rate by distress and sale:—Held, that the issuing of a warrant under this act was not within the limitation of Jervis's

Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11, which enacts that, in the absence of special limitation, complaints under the act are to be made within six months from the time when the matter of complaint arose.

Semble—that, upon application for such a warrant of distress as above mentioned, the Justices may state a case for the opinion of the Court under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. s. 2.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty session for the borough of Kidderminster, held on the 10th of May, 1867, a complaint was preferred by the respondent against the appellant for the nonpayment of two rates duly made according to the 53 Geo. 3. c. 83, "An act for paving, cleansing, lighting, watching and otherwise improving the streets and other public passages and places in Kidderminster, in the county of Worcester."

By section 67, the money directed to be raised by this act is to be assessed and collected by two assessors nominated by the Commissioners entrusted with the execution of the act. By section 68, rates made in pursuance of the act are to be allowed and signed by the Commissioners or any seven of them, who are empowered to amend such rates by inserting or causing to be inserted the name or names of any person or persons who ought to have been rated or who should appear to have been omitted therein, or by taking out the name or names of any person or persons whose name or names should have been inserted in any such rate and who ought not to be rated, or by varying, altering or reducing the amount of the rate. By section 72, the rates when signed and allowed by the Commissioners are to be collected, and if any person liable to pay them refuses or neglects to do so, "it shall be lawful for any Justice of the Peace of the borough of Kidderminster, by warrant under his hand and seal, to authorize and direct the collector or any other person to levy such rate or assessment and all arrears thereof by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such person or persons so refusing or neglecting to pay as aforesaid, rendering the overplus (if any) to the owner or owners of the goods and chattels to be so distrained, after deducting the costs of recovering the same, and of the distress and sale."

The 67th section and the two subsequent ones are as follows:—

Section 67. enacts, "That it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Commissioners, or any seven or more of them, not exceeding twice in every year, as they shall see occasion, under their hands to nominate and appoint, and they are hereby empowered to nominate and appoint, two or more inhabitants or residents in the said town, to be assessors, with their consent, of the money by this act directed to be raised, and from time to time to issue their order or precept to the said assessors to be appointed as aforesaid, specifying how much in the pound shall be raised by taxation upon all messuages, tenements, buildings and hereditaments, within the said town, at the same rate and in the same proportion as the same messuages, tenements, buildings and hereditaments shall be then rated or assessed in the poor rate or assessment for the relief of the poor of the said borough, and shall and may from time to time divide the said town into such suitable and convenient parts, and also direct and appoint the said assessors to such parts as they the said Commissioners shall think proper, for the more convenient and easy assessment and collection of the money by this act directed to be assessed and collected; and which said rate or assessment so to be made, raised and assessed as aforesaid, for the purposes of this act, shall be levied and assessed in the proportions following (that is to say), upon all and every person and persons who shall rent or occupy within the said town of Kidderminster any houses, tenements or other hereditaments, which shall for the time being be rated or assessed in the then rate or assessment for the poor of the said borough, under 5*l.* 1*s.*, in the pound; at 5*l.* and under 10*l.*, the sum of 2*s.* in the pound; at 10*l.* and upwards, the sum of 3*s.* in the pound; and the said assessors are hereby authorized and required to rate and assess the same accordingly, which said tenants and occupiers shall pay and are hereby made liable to pay the whole of every such rate according to the annual value or rent of all such houses, tenements, buildings or other hereditaments and premises whatsoever, to be occupied by him, her or them respectively, at which they shall be so rated in the said poor rate or assessment."

Section 68. enacts, "That all rates and assessments which shall be made in pursuance of this act as aforesaid shall be allowed and signed by the said Commissioners, or any seven or more of them, and they shall and may have power to amend any such rates or assessments by inserting, or causing to be inserted, the name or names of any person or persons who ought to have been rated, and shall appear to have been omitted therein, or by taking out the name or names of any person or persons whose name or names shall have been inserted in any such rate or assessment, and who ought not to be rated, or by varying, altering, raising or reducing the several and respective sum and sums of money which shall be charged, rated or assessed in such rate or assessment upon any person or persons whomsoever, regard being had to the then poor rate for the said borough, and such assessors shall appear and bring with them, at any time or place, when thereto required by the said Commissioners, or any seven or more of them, or by the clerk for the time being, a true copy of such assessment, fairly written and subscribed by them, and shall deliver the same unto the said Commissioners; and shall, upon any reasonable notice, from time to time attend upon the said Commissioners at any of their meetings in pursuance of this act, or at any Court or Courts of Quarter Sessions for the said borough, or at any adjournment thereof or otherwise, as there shall be occasion, then and there to explain, amend and justify such assessments; and after the said rates and assessments are so made and confirmed, the said Commissioners, or any seven or more of them, shall and may, and they are hereby authorized and required to cause the same to be collected and received as soon as may be, of and from the person and persons respectively on whom the same shall be rated, charged and assessed."

Section 72. enacts, "That when and so soon as the said rate or rates, assessment or assessments shall have been made, and assigned and allowed by the said Commissioners, or any seven or more of them, as aforesaid, the collector or collectors appointed by the said Commissioners shall, and he and they is and are hereby required to collect the same accordingly; and in case any person or persons who shall be rated or assessed, or subject or liable to the payment of any rate or assessment to be made or laid, or made payable by virtue of this act, shall refuse or neglect to pay such rate or assessment to any collector to be appointed as aforesaid, for the space of ten days next after personal demand made by the collector or collectors thereof, or demand in writing under the hand of such collector left at the last or usual place of abode of the person or persons so refusing or neglecting to pay as aforesaid, or on the premises so charged with such rate or assessment, then and in every such case it shall and may be lawful to and for any Justice of the Peace of the said borough of Kidderminster, by warrant under his hand and seal, to authorize and direct the said collector, or any other person to levy, such rate or assessment, and all arrears thereof, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of such person or persons so refusing or neglecting to pay as aforesaid, or on the goods and chattels so found on such premises, rendering the overplus (if any) to the owner or owners of the goods or chattels to be so distrained on demand, after deducting the costs and charges of recovering the same, and of such distress and sale; or it shall and may be lawful to and for the said Commissioners to recover any such rate or rates, assessment or assessments, due and payable by virtue of this act, by action of debt or on the case, in any of His Majesty's courts of record at Westminster, or in any court of request, wherein no essoin, protection, wager of law or more than one imparlance shall be allowed."

Sections 78. and 79. impose various penalties for offences committed against its provisions, and provide the particulars and special modes of recovering "all penalties, forfeitures and fines inflicted or imposed," the manner of levying and recovering whereof is not therein otherwise directed.

The following are copies of sections 78. and 79:

Section 78. "That all penalties, forfeitures and fines by this act inflicted or imposed, or authorized to be imposed, the manner of levying and recovering whereof is not herein otherwise directed, shall, upon the proof of the offences respectively before any one or more Justice or Justices of the Peace for the said borough, either by the confession of the party or parties offending, or by the oath of one or more witness or witnesses (which oath such Justice or Justices of the Peace is and are hereby authorized and required to administer, without fee or reward), be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party or parties offending, by warrant or warrants under the hand and seal or hands and seals of such Justice or Justices, which warrant or warrants such Justice or Justices is and are hereby empowered to grant; and the penalties and forfeitures, when recovered, after rendering the overplus (if any there be) upon demand to the party or parties whose goods and chattels shall be so distrained and sold, (the costs, charges and expenses of making such distress, and the keeping and selling thereof being first deducted) shall, if not directed to be otherwise applied by this act, be paid to the treasurer for the time being to the said Commissioners, and applied towards the purposes of this act, and in aid of the rates to be made in pursuance of this act, &c.; and in every such case where distress is directed to be made, levied or taken by this act, and sufficient distress shall not be found, and such penalties, forfeitures and fines shall not be forthwith paid, it shall and may be lawful for such Justice or Justices of the Peace, and he and they is and are hereby authorized and required, by warrant or warrants under his or their hand and seal or hands and seals, to cause such offender or offenders to be committed to the common gaol or house of correction of the county of Worcester, there to remain without bail or mainprize, for any time not exceeding one calendar month for the first offence, and for the second and every other offence of the same kind, for any time not exceeding three calendar months, unless such penalties, forfeitures or fines, and all reasonable charges and expenses attending the same, shall be sooner paid and satisfied."

Section 79. enacts, "That all and every Justice or Justices of the Peace, before whom any person or persons shall be convicted of any offence against this act, shall and may cause the conviction to be drawn up in the following words, or any other form of words to the same effect; (that is to say,)

"Be it remembered, That on this day of in the year of our Lord is duly convicted before me [or, us] of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the borough of Kidderminster, of having [here state the offence against this act, as the case may be] contrary to the form of the statute in that case made and provided; and I [or, we, as the case may be] do declare and adjudge that the said hath forfeited for his [or her, as the case may be] said offence, the sum of . Given under my hand and seal [or, hands and seals, as the case may be] the day and year above written."

All the powers, directions and authorities contained in the said act have been duly and legally transferred to and vested in the town council and body corporate of the borough of Kidderminster, under and by virtue of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 75, intituled, 'An Act to provide for the regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales.'

The complaint stated that the appellant was subject and liable to the payment of two rates and assessments, duly made and laid, and made payable by virtue of the act of 53 Geo. 3, to wit, a certain rate and assessment of 2*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*, made on the 2nd of August, 1865, and one other certain rate and assessment of 15*s.* 4½*d.*, made on the 6th of March, 1866, and had refused and neglected to pay such rates and assessments to the said Ebenezer Guest, the duly-appointed collector, for the space of ten days next after demand in writing made by him thereof, contrary to the said act of parliament, and therefore the said Ebenezer Guest prayed the issue of a warrant to levy the same by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the said appellant. It was heard and determined by the Justices, and they directed that a warrant should issue to levy the rates upon the goods and chattels of the appellant, pursuant to the statute of 53 Geo. 3. The appellant, being dissatisfied with their determination as being erroneous in point of law, did, pursuant to section 2. of the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, apply to them, in writing, to state and sign a case setting forth the facts and the grounds of their determination, for the opinion of this Court, and duly entered into a recognizance with a surety, as required by the statute. The Justices, in compliance with the application and the provisions of the statute, stated and signed the following case:

Upon the hearing of the complaint the above-mentioned rates or assessments were produced before us, the first appearing, to be signed by the assessors, on the 25th of July, 1865, and allowed and signed by the mayor and eleven councillors of the said borough, on the 2nd of August, 1865.

The second rate or assessment appeared to be signed by the assessors, on the 5th of March, 1866, and allowed and signed by the mayor and seven councillors of the said borough, on the 6th of March, 1866.

It was admitted by the appellant upon the hearing that he had not appealed to the council on the powers of the said act of 53 Geo. 3. against either of the said rates or assessments. It was admitted by the said appellant that all the proceedings before us as to the making and signing of the two several rates or assessments by the assessors, and the allowance and signing of them by the council, were legal and regular, with one exception, namely, that inasmuch as the rates or assessments appeared to be signed by the assessors, and allowed and signed by the council, on different days, they were in that respect illegal and void, and could not therefore be legally enforced against the appellant by distress.

It was also admitted that the requisite and proper statutory demand of the rates had been made upon the appellant by the collector, and that the appellant refused to pay.

It was proved in evidence that the written demand of the first rate was made on the 19th of October, 1865, and of the second rate on the 29th of May, 1866, in both cases more than six calendar months before the date of the complaint.

The appellant further objected to the jurisdiction of the Justices, upon the grounds that by the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 11, commonly called Jervis's Act, it was enacted "that in all cases where no time is already or shall hereafter be specially limited for making any such complaint or laying any such information, in the act or acts of parliament relating to each particular case, such complaint shall be made, and such information shall be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such complaint or information respectively arose," and that as upwards of six calendar months had elapsed, not only since the making of both rates, but since the demand for payment from the appellant, before the date of the complaint, the Justices had no power to issue a warrant of distress against him.

The respondent contended, as to the first objection, that as there was no time specified in the act of 55 Geo. 3, as to when the council should allow and sign the rate or assessment after being made by the assessors, it is perfectly immaterial to its validity whether it is the same day as when signed by the assessors, or within a reasonable time afterwards, as the two acts are distinct and separate, and that these rates may be compared to a poor-rate, which is first made by the overseers, dated and signed on one day, and afterwards on a necessarily different day is allowed and signed by two Justices. And as to the second objection, the respondent contended that Jervis's Act does not apply to such a case as the present, but only to cases where Justices are authorized by law, on complaint made to them, to make an order for payment of money or otherwise, and to hear and determine any matter between the complainant and the defendant, and make orders thereon in favour of the complaining party, that, in this case, the act of parliament directs in express terms the mode of proceeding to recover the rate, if not paid after demand, and does not even require any summons to a defaulter to shew cause why he should not pay, and does not give the Magistrates any power or discretion either to lessen or excuse the payment of the rate, or to make any order thereon; and that the summoning of the defaulter is more an act of courtesy than of necessity.

The Justices, however, being of opinion that the objections raised to their jurisdiction in the matter were not good in law, gave their determination against the appellant in manner before stated.

The questions of law for the opinion of the Court, therefore, were, first, whether the variance in the dates of signing the rates or assessments by the assessors, as stated in the case, and of the dates of allowing and signing the same rates by the members of the town council (acting as Commissioners under the act of 53 Geo. 3), rendered the rates or assessments illegal; secondly, if such variance did not invalidate the rates or assessments, whether their jurisdiction was ousted by the operation of Jervis's Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, or otherwise, so as to make it illegal for them to grant a warrant of distress to levy the rates upon the goods and chattels of the appellant.

If the Court should be of opinion that the Magistrates were right in their determination to issue a warrant of distress, then the same was to issue; but if the Court should be of opinion otherwise, then the complaint was to be dismissed.

F. T. Streeten, for the respondent.—There is a preliminary objection in this case, viz., whether the Justices had power to state a case under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. s. 2, inasmuch as the issuing a distress warrant for rates under this local act is not a matter for summary decision within the meaning of that section; it is a purely ministerial act, and the Justices were not called upon to determine anything.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—Though the Justices had no power to interfere in questions relating to the validity of the rate, other questions may arise on the application for the distress warrant, such, for instance, as a question of identity. MELLOR, J.—The preamble of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, which recites that "it is expedient provision should be made for obtaining the opinion of a superior Court on questions which arise in the exercise of summary jurisdiction by Justices of the Peace," goes to shew that it was intended to allow Justices to state a case on a question of law arising on any exercise of their jurisdiction. BLACKBURN, J.—Where Justices refuse to state a case, the remedy is by mandamus, or rule under Jervis's Act, to compel them; and there are cases in which we have refused so to compel them. But is there any case where we have declined to decide a point of law for them?

Ex parte May (1) is in point. Then, with respect to the questions of law raised by the case, the first is answered by the fact that the local act expressly gives an appeal to the Commissioners (now the town council) or the Quarter Sessions, or both.

[Harington, for the appellant.—It is not intended to argue that point. The only question is, whether Jervis's Act applies so as to limit the time for issuing the distress warrant to six months.]

Jervis's Act does not apply here. The 11th section of that act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, enacts "That in all cases where no time is already or shall hereafter be specially limited for making any such complaint or laying any such information in the act or acts of parliament relating to each particular case, such complaint shall be made and such information shall be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such complaint or information respectively arose." The words "such complaint" refer to the 8th section, and mean a complaint upon which the Justices have to make an order. Here no order need be made, and none is drawn up. The rate itself is the order,—a quasi record which the Justices cannot alter. There is a note to that effect in Mr. Oke's Magisterial Synopsis, 9th edit. p. 1165, where it is said that none of the provisions in Jervis's Act, especially that as to limitation of time in the 11th section, apply to the recovery of rates.—(He was then stopped.)

Harington, for the appellant.—If the limitation enacted in Jervis's Act does not apply, there is no limitation at all here, and it can scarcely be that a man is to be subjected to a distress for non-payment of rates years after they have been demanded. But it is submitted the Justices here were acting judicially, and had to exercise a discretion whether, upon a certain state of facts—such as identity of the person summoned, whether he was an occupier, or whether any demand had been made upon him—they would make the order for the warrant. In Sommerville v. Mirehouse (2), it was admitted that Justices had a judicial discretion to exercise upon an application for a warrant to enforce a rate.

[Streeten.—That was the case of a church-rate, the statute relating to which expressly directs service of an order for payment before the distress warrant can issue.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—In this case the rate is the order; and I am clearly of opinion that in issuing a distress warrant under the circumstances stated in the case, the Justices were acting as ministerial and not as judicial officers. They had not to make an order, and consequently the case is not within the limitation in Jervis's Act.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The persons rated have a right of appeal, so that our decision will expose them to no hardship.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that where, upon a complaint like this, a question of law arises which might turn out to be against the exercise of the Justices' power to issue the warrant, they may properly state a case to obtain our decision upon such question. It is clear they had the power here.

Nuisances Removal Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121), s. 12.—Nuisance caused by one Landowner, but arising on the Premises of Another—Order for Abatement.

By the Nuisances Removal Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121), s. 12, in any case where a nuisance (a term which includes ditches and drains injurious to health) is ascertained by the local authority to exist, they shall cause complaint thereof to be made before a Justice of the Peace, and the Justice shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance arises or is continued, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before any two Justices, who shall proceed to inquire into the complaint, and if it be proved to their satisfaction that the nuisance exists, shall make an order on such person, owner or occupier, for the abatement, discontinuance and prohibition of the nuisance. By section 13. the Justices may require the person upon whom the order is made to drain, empty, cleanse, fill up, amend or remove the injurious ditch, drain, &c. The occupiers of a brewery had for upwards of twenty years discharged the refuse from it into a barrel-drain, which, after passing along a turnpike-road, entered land belonging to another proprietor. The proprietor of this land did not get rid of the refuse as his predecessors had done, and it became after it had reached his land a nuisance:—Held, that the occupier of the brewery was a person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance was caused, and that an order of Justices directing him to abate the nuisance by cutting off all communication between the drains of his premises and the barrel drain was valid.

The defendant, having obtained the necessary consent, made a drain leading from his own premises through adjoining land. This drain, which received the refuse from several houses and pigsties belonging to the defendant, and let to yearly tenants, polluted the water of neighbouring streams, and became a nuisance:—Held, that the defendant must be taken to be a person by whose act, &c., the nuisance was caused, and might be ordered to abate and discontinue the nuisance.

BROWN, appellant; BUSSELL, respondent.

CASE stated by Magistrates under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

James Brown (the appellant) is a brewer, residing and carrying on business at Esher, in Surrey, and he was summoned with several of the inhabitants of the parish before the Justices, to answer a complaint made by the respondent (the officer for the committee of the Esher district appointed by the guardians of the Kingston Union), that a ditch or watercourse, situate at Sandown Park, in the parish of Esher, and within the district, under the 'Nuisances Removal Act for England, 1855,' of the complainant, was foul and offensive, and a nuisance injurious to health, and that the nuisance was caused by the act or default of James Brown and others.

The following facts were proved or admitted on the hearing of the summons:

The premises of James Brown are in the village of Esher. The open ditch complained of was proved by the respondent to be a nuisance injurious to health. It is on Ditton Marsh, by the side of the turnpike-road leading from Sandown turnpike-gate to Kingston-upon-Thames. James Brown and his predecessors at the brewery have as of right for upwards of twenty-five years previously and down to the complaint discharged their sewage and refuse water from the brewery into a covered barrel-drain which runs down the turnpike-road from the village of Esher towards Kingston, and turns into and upon the Sandown Park estate, where it discharges itself into an open ditch or watercourse. The then owner or occupier of this estate, for many, but not twenty, years, diverted and used and disposed of the sewage and refuse water by turning or allowing it to run over meadow lands belonging to the estate for the purpose of irrigating and fertilizing the land.

This user and disposal of the sewage and refuse water was afterwards discontinued by the owner or occupier of the estate, and the sewage or refuse water was turned by the owner or occupier into and down certain open ditches on the estate, which ultimately emerged from it at a point where it has caused the nuisance complained of. The present owner and occupier of Sandown Park estate was no party to the sewage being so used on the estate, and he objects to the same being turned on to or allowed to run over his lands.

No nuisance is complained of as arising from the sewer or drain at any point in its course until after it passes the point where the sewage emerges from Sandown Park estate; but it was proved by the respondent that the offensive matter causing the nuisance complained of came from the premises belonging to and in the occupation of the appellant and the other persons summoned, by means of the barrel-drain or sewer.

The appellant urged before the Justices that, inasmuch as he had by user, as of right, for upwards of twenty years, of the drain or sewer, acquired a prescriptive right amounting to an easement to discharge his sewage and refuse water on Sandown Park estate, and as no nuisance arose from the drain or sewer until it left Sandown Park estate, the nuisance complained of arose, not from the act of James Brown in making use of the sewer or drain, but from the act of the owner or occupier of Sandown Park estate in having (in lieu of using and disposing of the sewage or refuse water as formerly) caused the same to flow down through the open ditches on his estate, and so out on to Ditton Marsh by the turnpike-road, and that the person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance complained of arose or continued within the meaning of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121. s. 12. (1) was the owner of the Sandown Park estate, and not James Brown, and that therefore James Brown was not the person liable to abate the same, or otherwise liable in respect of it.

The Justices decided that they would not regard any private rights between the appellant and the owner of the Sandown Park estate, and held that the appellant was the person by whose act or default the nuisance complained of arose, and made an order "requiring the appellant within one week from the service of their order, or a true copy of it, according to the act, to abate the nuisance by cutting off all connexion between the drains of the premises belonging to the appellant used for sewage purposes and the drain or sewer leading to and entering the ditch or watercourse, so that all communication for sewage purposes between the premises of the appellant and the ditch or watercourse should cease, and so that the ditch or watercourse should no longer be a nuisance and injurious to health.

The questions for the opinion of the Court were, first, whether, on the above facts, the order was properly made on James Brown. Secondly, whether the order made by the Justices upon James Brown to cut off the connexion between the drains of his premises and the sewer in question was a valid order.

The case was amended by adding the following facts.

Witnesses were examined on both sides, and it was clearly proved, first, that the appellant's premises formerly drained into a sandpit or sand cave under the garden of

(1) By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, "An Act to consolidate and amend the Nuisances Removal and Diseases Prevention Acts, 1848 and 1849" s. 8, "The word 'nuisances' under this act shall include any premises in such a state as to be a nuisance or injurious to health: any pool, ditch, gutter, water-course, privy, urinal, cesspool, drain or ashpit, so foul as to be a nuisance or injurious to health."

By section 11. power is given to the local authority to examine premises where nuisances exist, to ascertain the course of drains, and to execute or inspect works ordered by Justices to be done under the act.

By section 12, "In any case where a nuisance is so ascertained by the local authority to exist, or where the nuisances in their opinion did exist at the time when the notice was given, and, although the same may have been since removed or discontinued, is in their opinion likely to recur or to be repeated on the same premises or any part thereof, they shall cause complaint thereof to be made before a Justice of the Peace; and such Justice shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before any two Justices, in petty sessions assembled at their usual place of meeting, who shall proceed to inquire into the said complaint; and if it be proved to their satisfaction that the nuisance exists, or did exist at the time when the notice was given, or, if removed or discontinued since the notice was given, that it is likely to recur or to be repeated, the Justices shall make an order in writing under their hands and seals on such person, owner or occupier for the abatement or discontinuance and prohibition of the nuisance as hereinafter mentioned, and shall also make an order for the payment of all costs a witness named Isaac. Secondly, that about twenty-two years ago the drain from the appellant's premises was first made through the witness Isaac's garden to join the barrel drain. All the witnesses agreed that the course of the drain before it was diverted was down the left side of the turnpike-road, and the Justices were satisfied from evidence that a culvert existed carrying the drainage under the turnpike-road from the left side to the right side before the drainage was diverted by the occupier of Sandown Park estate into his land.

Field (Pearce with him), for the respondent.—The order made by the Magistrates was a valid and proper one. The nuisance does not actually arise upon the appellant's premises. But that is not necessary. The Magistrates have found that the nuisance is due to a cause for which he ought to be responsible, the flow of refuse from his brewery.

[LUSH, J.—Do you mean to say that under this act an order for the abatement of a nuisance might be made against every one who lets his drainage flow into a large river,—the Thames, for instance?]

Such an order would be good so far as each separate offence was concerned. By section 33. of the act, "where proceedings under this act are to be taken against incurred up to the time of hearing or making the order for abatement or discontinuance or prohibition of the nuisance."

By section 13. "By their order the Justices may require the person on whom it is made to provide sufficient privy accommodation, means of drainage or ventilation, or to make safe and habitable, or to pave, cleanse, whitewash, disinfect or purify the premises which are a nuisance or injurious to health, or such part thereof as the Justices may direct in their order, or to drain, empty, cleanse, fill up, amend or remove the injurious pool, ditch, gutter, watercourse, privy, urinal, cesspool, drain or adit which is a nuisance or injurious to health, or to provide a substitute for that complained of, or to carry away the accumulation or deposit which is a nuisance or injurious to health, or to provide for the cleanly and wholesome keeping of the animal kept so as to be a nuisance or injurious to health, or if it be proved to the Justices to be impossible so to provide, then to remove the animal, or any or all of these things (according to the nature of the nuisance), or to do such other works or acts as are necessary to abate the nuisance complained of, in such manner and within such time as in such order shall be specified; and if the Justices are of opinion that such or the like nuisance is likely to recur, the Justices may further prohibit the recurrence of it, and direct the works necessary to prevent such recurrence."

several persons in respect of one nuisance caused by the joint act or default of such persons, it shall be lawful for the local authority to include such persons in one complaint," &c., shewing that proceedings against several persons at once are contemplated.

[BLACKBURN, J.—It may be that the legislature did not mean to try questions of right as between party and party, but only to find out what was the practical cause of the nuisance.]

There is every reason for believing that this was what was meant by the act, and there can be no doubt that, rightfully or wrongfully, the defendant has sent from his premises the refuse which causes the nuisance.

Day, for the appellant.—The appellant cannot be said to have caused this nuisance. The proprietor of Sandown Park estate has brought it into existence by the manner in which he has dealt with the sewage after it has reached his premises.

[LUSH, J.—If any person were by some apparatus to throw refuse into a ditch so that a nuisance arose, might he not be ordered to abate it?]

Not if what was complained of were done in the exercise of a right of drainage.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—It appears from the case that if it were not for the refuse from the brewery there would perhaps be no nuisance at all.]

Still there would be no nuisance if it were not for the new mode of disposing of the sewage on Sandown Park estate. If a sewer in Holborn were to become a nuisance, it could hardly be said that the occupier of a house in Russell Square might be ordered to cut off all communication between his house and the sewer.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—It is always for the Justices to decide who is the person by whose act or neglect the nuisance is caused.]

There is no appeal from the decision of the Justices in matters of fact, and in the present case it would have been more reasonable if the Justices had ordered a fresh sewer to be constructed according to the powers given them by section 22.

FRANCOMB, appellant; FREEMAN, respondent.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty sessions at Abergavenny, in Monmouth, in March, 1867, an information was preferred by W. C. Freeman, Superintendent of Police, Inspector of Nuisances for the Union (hereinafter called the respondent), against J. Francomb (hereinafter called the appellant), complaining that there was a drain so foul as to be a nuisance and injurious to health upon certain premises at Llanlello Pertholey, in Monmouthshire, caused by the act or default of (the appellant) the owner of the premises, contrary to the statute, &c. Both appellant and respondent and Mr. Warr, the person whose premises the drain especially affected, appeared. From the evidence given on behalf of the respondent, it appeared that there was a drain leading from the defendant's premises into a small watercourse. The drain conveyed the waste water, slops, &c., from five or six houses belonging to the appellant, and from several pigsties, into the stream which flowed into the complainant's premises. At the mouth of the drain there was an accumulation of black, stinking filth, which must be very injurious to persons using the water. The water in the stream was polluted by it; above the drain the stream was pure. The stream between the drain and the plaintiff's premises contained a quantity of filth from the drain; and the water, which had previously been drinkable, was unfit for use. It was a nuisance and injurious to health. There were two wells in Mr. Warr's garden through which the stream ran, the wells being supplied with water solely from the stream. Both of these received filth in large quantities from the stream. The appellant was cautioned when he made the drain in November, 1866, and promised to make a tank instead. On behalf of the appellant, he himself proved that he had ordered the refuse spoken of to be made to carry the refuse complained of under the road into the stream, instead of allowing it to flow over the surface of the road, as it had done for forty years before and upwards. The road was a private one, and not the appellant's property; but he had the consent of the owner to make the drain. The sties which sent refuse into the drain had been built on the site of old farm buildings from which the refuse had flowed over the surface of the road into the stream for forty years and upwards. There were four pigsties and six houses (let to yearly tenants) and all drained into the stream. It was proved by a sketch admitted by the appellant, that the watercourse into which the drain emptied itself was a natural stream running through the appellant's property; and that the drain joined it at a point a few yards below the houses. The stream, several years ago, had been diverted by Mr. Warr and made to pass through the middle of his property. He had also, by means of the watercourse, constructed two wells, which had supplied water to his tenants for five or six years.

It was objected by the appellant's solicitor that the appellant was neither the owner nor the occupier of the drain, nor of the road in question; and that, assuming the alleged nuisance to exist, the appellant was not the proper person to be summoned, as it was not by his act or default that the nuisance was caused or arose, but by the occupiers of the dwelling-houses and pigsties from which the drain was conducted, and the occupiers were the persons who should have been summoned. The Justices overruled the objection, and being of opinion that the drain running into the stream was a nuisance and injurious to health, and that as the drain had been laid down and constructed by the appellant the nuisance arose and was caused by the act, permission or sufferance of the appellant, ordered him to abate and discontinue the nuisance.

One question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the appellant was the right person to be proceeded against under the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121. s. 12 (2).

No counsel appeared for the respondent.

Harington, for the appellant.—The appellant was not properly called upon to abate this nuisance. The drain itself is not upon his property, and the refuse is poured into it by his tenants, who are not his servants or agents, and are beyond his control.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—It is true that his right to the use of the drain is only an easement; but it is his duty, and not that of the owner of the servient tenement, to keep the drain in repair.]

The Justices have no power to decide as to the right of the appellant to discharge foul water into a stream belonging to another person; and the present case is one which turns entirely upon private rights.

(2) There were other questions upon which nothing turned in the argument.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that, in both cases, our judgment should be for the respondent. Where a nuisance is caused by the joint contribution of a number of persons, so that what each person contributes is not by itself a nuisance but there is a nuisance in the aggregate, I should have hesitated very much before holding that the Magistrates could have made an order prohibiting any one person from pouring his drainage into the main sewer. But I understand that, in the present instance, independently of the subsequent contributions, a quantity of stuff is poured from the brewery of the appellant which by itself causes a nuisance. This being the case, the question is whether the fact that the nuisance arises upon a spot away from the appellant's premises prevents the Magistrates from making an order against him, and whether the process ought to be against the owner of the soil in which the nuisance exists. I do not think, upon the best consideration that I can give to the statute, that the appellant is protected. The Justices have to consider by whose act or default the nuisance is caused. If they cannot discover who is the person offending, they are directed to ascertain in whose land the nuisance exists. Here it was sufficiently proved that the act of the appellant in discharging refuse from his brewery caused the nuisance.

With regard to the other case, I have no difficulty whatever, and think that the order was quite right; for whether the drain was on the land of the appellant or that of some other person, it is manifestly a drain under his control, and which he is bound to keep in repair.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The statute casts upon the Justices the duty of finding out by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance arises or is continued, and they have found that the appellant is the person by whose act or default the nuisance arose. Now, if it be proved that a man sends from his premises enough refuse to cause a nuisance, it is surely no answer for him to say there are other persons who cause a similar nuisance. He himself causes a nuisance, and may properly be ordered to abate it. It is quite a different case, as my Lord has said, where a number of persons, each doing what by itself is not a nuisance, join in accumulating a mass of refuse which becomes offensive. The question which would arise in such a case would be rather difficult, and I should like to reserve my opinion. It may well be that a ditch may be in such a condition as that it may be more convenient for the local authorities to proceed under section 22. of the act, which enables them to lay down a fresh sewer; but I think that it is for them to decide as to the section under which they proceed.

In the case of Francomb v. Freeman the question is, whether the appellant can be said to be the person who has caused this nuisance, or the owner or occupier of the premises where it arises. He has let the premises which supply the drain to different tenants, and given them permission to use it. Very probably these tenants might be proceeded against under the act; but this would not affect the defendant's liability, for the case is not like that of Rich v. Bosterfield (3), where it was held that the owner of premises who had let them was not liable for a nuisance caused by smoke from a chimney which he had erected. Here the drain was used by the appellant's tenants in common, and he had granted to them the privilege of using it. It is just as if the owner of a house had let out part of it in chambers the tenants of which would have the privilege of using the chimneys in their rooms; but if the main chimney became smoky and a nuisance, the owner would be liable. It seems to me, beyond any doubt, that the appellant was the cause of a nuisance over which the Magistrates had jurisdiction.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. Under section 12. the Magistrates have to find out the person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance arises or continues, or if such person cannot be found, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises. This section clearly does not prevent them from dealing with the person who in their opinion is the very origin of the nuisance.

As for the second case, and the objection that there was a question of title which the Magistrates had no jurisdiction to try, it need only be said that the statute expressly authorizes the Magistrates to decide questions of title, as the primary question is always, by whose default was the nuisance caused?

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. The person made responsible by the statute is the person by whose act, default or permission the nuisance arises. This must mean the person who is the proximate cause of the nuisance, and the Justices have to find out who this person is. In the case argued by Mr. Field it appears that although the sewage from other premises flows into the drain, which causes the nuisance, yet that the refuse sent by the brewery is that which is particularly offensive, and that without it there would be, in fact, no nuisance. Whether this be the case or not is of course a question of fact which the statute has directed the Justices to decide.

Feb. 12. } GESSES OF REIGATE v. HUNT.

Penalties, Application of—Payment to Treasurer of County or Borough—Borough without a separate Court of Quarter Sessions.

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 31, the amount of any penalty ordered to be paid by Justices according to the act is to be paid, in the absence of specific directions in the statute on which the information shall have been framed, to the treasurer of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough or place for which the Justices shall have acted. A borough formed part of the petty sessional division of the county within which it was situated, but had no separate court of quarter sessions, the Justices for the county acting as Justices for the borough, concurrently with the mayor, according to the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 57, and there was a treasurer of the borough:—Held, that the mayor, while acting as Justice for the borough, was in the nature of a Justice for the county with powers limited to a special locality, and that penalties imposed by the borough Justices must, in the absence of directions in the penal statute, be paid to the county treasurer.

This was an action brought against the defendant to recover 48l. 12s. 6d. received by him as clerk to the Justices of the Peace for the borough of Reigate. By consent of the parties and an order of Lush, J., according to the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, the following CASE was stated for the opinion of the Court without pleadings.

By royal charter, dated the 11th of September, 1863, the parliamentary borough of Reigate, in Surrey, was constituted a municipal borough with a corporation under the title of "The mayor, aldermen and burgesses of the borough of Reigate," having all the powers and privileges held and enjoyed by the several boroughs named in the schedules to 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76, as fully and effectually as if the borough of Reigate had been one of the boroughs named in the 1st section of Schedule B. to the act; and Her Majesty did thereby extend to all the inhabitants of the borough of Reigate all the powers and provisions of that statute, and of any other acts amending or altering that act, or in anywise relating to it. The borough of Reigate before the 11th of September, 1863, formed part of the petty sessional division of the county of Surrey. There is no separate Commission of the Peace for the borough under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 98, and there has been no grant of a separate Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace to the borough. The Justices of the Peace for the county have since the date before mentioned, by virtue of section 111. of the statute, exercised the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace in and for the borough, and acted concurrently with the mayor for the time being, who, by section 57. of the statute, is ex officio a Justice of the Peace in and for the borough, and so continues during the year next succeeding his year of office.

The defendant, previous to the 11th of September, 1863, had been and still is clerk to the county Justices acting out of Quarter Sessions in and for the petty sessional division of Reigate; and since the incorporation of the borough he has acted as clerk to the Justices, both when acting as Justices for the county out of Sessions, and when acting as Justices in and for the borough.

From the time of the incorporation of the borough hitherto there has always been a treasurer of and for the borough.

The defendant has since the incorporation of the borough received divers sums of money, amounting to the sum of 48*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, ordered to be paid by the Justices of the Peace acting in and for the borough for fines and penalties, and otherwise for offences committed against certain statutes, which statutes contain no directions for the payment of such moneys to any particular person or persons, and such moneys have from time to time been paid over by the defendant to the treasurer of the county of Surrey, to whom the defendant contends they are payable.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the sums of money so received by the defendant should have been paid by him to the treasurer of the borough or to the treasurer of the county.

Macnamara, for the plaintiff. — The borough treasurer is entitled to the penalties recovered in respect of offences committed within the borough, according to the express words of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 31 (1). The defendant comes within the express words "clerk of the division in which the Justice or Justices usually sit," for in receiving the penalties he acts as clerk to the Justices of the borough. The Court of Quarter Sessions for the county might make an order for the payment of the amount of these penalties to the treasurer of the borough. It is immaterial whether the Justices were county Justices or not if at the time of the conviction they were acting for the borough.

Archibald, for the defendant. — In the absence of direct authority, it would be reasonable that the county which incurs the expenses of the prosecutions should have the benefit of the penalties. But there is strong authority for this view. In The King v. Amos (2), where Justices of the borough of Liverpool, which contributed to the rate for the county of Lancaster, had committed prisoners to the county house of correction for offences cognizable within the county, it was held, that the Justices at their borough sessions had a right to order the prisoners to be brought before them for trial there. This case was decided on the principle that those who suffer the burden ought to have the benefit. In the judgment of the Court, Bayley, J. says, that the power of Justices of liberties to commit to county houses of correction to which those liberties contribute, is founded upon the principle that to this extent, and with reference to county offenders within their limits, they are in the nature of and have the powers of county Justices. And in The Queen v. Dale (3), upon a conviction under the Alehouse Act, 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, by Justices of a borough which had a separate commission of the

(1) By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 31, "In every warrant of distress to be issued aforesaid the constable or other person to whom the same shall be directed shall be thereby ordered to pay the amount of the sum to be levied thereunder unto the clerk of the division in which the Justice or Justices issuing such warrant shall usually act; and if any person convicted of any penalty, or ordered by a Justice or Justices of the Peace to pay any sum of money, shall pay the same to any constable or other person, such constable or other person shall forthwith pay the same to such clerk; and if any person committed to prison upon any conviction, or order as aforesaid for non-payment of any penalty, or of any sum thereby ordered to be paid, shall desire to pay the same and costs before the expiration of the time for which he shall be so ordered to be imprisoned by the warrant for his commitment, he shall pay the same to the gaoler or keeper of the prison in which he shall be so imprisoned, and such gaoler or keeper shall forthwith pay the same to the said clerk; and all sums so received by the said clerk shall forthwith be paid by him to the party or parties to whom the same respectively are to be paid, according to the directions of the statute on which the information or complaint in that behalf shall have been framed; and if such statute shall contain no such directions for the payment thereof to any person or persons, then such clerk shall pay the same to the treasurer of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place for which such Justice or Justices shall have acted, and for which such treasurer shall give him a receipt without stamp; and every such clerk, and every such gaoler or keeper of a prison shall keep a true and exact account of all such moneys received by him, of whom and when received and to whom and when paid, in the form (T.) in the Schedule to this Act annexed, or to the like effect, and shall once in every month render a fair copy of every such account unto the Justices who shall be assembled at the petty sessions for the division in which such Justice or Justices aforesaid shall usually act, to be holden on or next after the first day of every month, under the penalty of 40*s.* to be recovered by distress in manner aforesaid; and the said clerk shall send or deliver every return so made by him as aforesaid to the clerk of the peace for the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place within which such division shall be situate, at such times as the Court of Quarter Sessions for the same shall order in that behalf."

peace, but no Court of Quarter Sessions, it was held that the portion of the penalty which by section 126. is to be paid to the treasurer of the county or place for which the Justices are acting, must be paid to the treasurer of the county in which the town is situated, and not to the treasurer of the borough. There the words were "treasurer of the county or place for which such Justices shall then act," and the Court held that the word "place," as used in that section, means a place for which a Court of Quarter Sessions is held, and said that the treasurer of the place meant in this section must clearly be treasurer of a place having a Court of Quarter Sessions, an officer under the control of the Justices making the order with the fund under their control.

Macnamara, in reply.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of opinion that this case is a very clear one, and that our judgment should be in favour of the defendant. The King v. Amos (2), a case respecting the borough of Liverpool, where there was no non-intromittant clause, is an authority in favour of the defendant. It is true that in the case of The King v. Amos (2) the county Justices had jurisdiction to try the same offences as the borough Justices; but the question was raised, whether, if the borough Justices had committed prisoners to the county house of correction, they had a right to order these prisoners to be brought before them for trial at the borough Sessions. This case could only be decided on the principle that the borough Justices, in committing those prisoners for trial were in the nature of and had the powers of county Justices. Now, I think that this case, together with that of The Queen v. Dale (3), also cited by Mr. Archibald, are ample authorities for what, apart from these, I should have thought a very reasonable proposition, that the mayor of such a place as Reigate, which has no Court of Quarter Sessions, and where there is no non-intromittant clause, is really in the nature of, if not altogether, a Justice for the county, with powers limited to a special locality. He acts as a Justice in and for the county, but his powers are limited to part of the county. Now section 31. of Jervis's Act provides "that in every warrant of distress to be issued the constable, or other persons to whom the same, shall be directed, shall be thereby ordered to pay the amount of the sum to be levied thereunder to the clerk of the division in which the Justice or Justices issuing such warrant shall usually sit, and if any person convicted in any penalty, or ordered by a Justice or Justices of the peace, to pay any sum of money, shall pay the same to any constable or other person, such constable or other person shall forthwith pay the same to such clerk; and if any person be committed to prison upon any conviction or order as aforesaid for non-payment of any penalty or any sum thereby ordered to be paid, &c., he shall pay the same to the gaoler or keeper of the prison in which he shall be so imprisoned, and such gaoler or keeper shall forthwith pay the same to the said clerk, and all sums so received by the said clerk shall forthwith be paid by him according to the directions of the statute on which the information shall have been framed; and if such statute shall contain no such directions for the payment thereof to any person or persons, then such clerk shall pay the same to the treasurer of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough or place for which such Justice or Justices shall have acted." Now it seems to be quite plain that the words "county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough or place for which such Justice or Justices shall have acted" must mean county, &c., or place having a court of Quarter Sessions. In The Queen v. Dale (3), Jervis, C.J. says: "The treasurer of the place meant in this section must clearly be treasurer of a place having a Court of Quarter Sessions, an officer under the control of the Justices making the order with the fund under their control. It would be strange that the same word should give to one fund, the borough fund, all the penalties for good convictions, and charge upon another fund, the county rate, all the costs for convictions which could not be sustained." The effect of our decision will be to appropriate the penalties so as to prevent any such injustice.

April 25.WATKINS, appellant, THE AS-SESSMENT COMMITTEE OF THE GRAVESEND AND MILTON
UNION, respondents.Poor-Rate—Occupation—Moorings—River Thames—Coal-Hulk.

The appellant was the owner of a coal-hulk, built for the purpose of being fastened to moorings, which the Thames Conservators undertook to fix in the bed of the river in order that she should be fastened thereto. The Conservators fixed the moorings permanently, and granted to the appellant "liberty and licence to fasten and henceforth keep fastened his coal-hulk or vessel called the Black Prince to the moorings placed by the said Conservators in the said river at Gravesend Reach, until either party shall have given to the other one calendar month's notice in writing to determine and put an end to this licence. In consideration whereof the said William Watkins agrees with the said Conservators to pay towards the expenses of the said Conservators of placing, *maintaining and repairing the said moorings the annual sum of 30*l.," &c. The appellant fastened his hulk to the moorings by means of chain cables from the stem, so that she would swing with the tide, and she remained so fastened for several years, although she might have been towed to any other part of the river. She was used as a store for coals for steam-ships in the river:—Held, that the appellant had no such occupation of the land or of the moorings as would make him liable to be assessed to the poor-rate.

1. Case stated under the provisions of the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 11, the question for the opinion of this Court relating to the rateability of the appellant to the poor-rates made and to be made for the parish of Milton-next-Gravesend, in the county of Kent.

2. In a valuation list for the parish of Milton-next-Gravesend, made under the provisions of the statutes 25 & 26 Vict. c. 103. and 27 & 28 Vict. c. 39, and in the rate, the name of the appellant, William Watkins, was inserted in the following manner (that is to say):

Name of Occupier.	Name of Owner.	Description of Property.	Name and Situation of Property.	Estimated Extent.	Gross Estimated Rental.	Rateable Value.
Watkins.	Watkins.	Land, and Coal-Hulk thereon.	Black Prince.	1,600 Tons.	300	240

3. The land mentioned in the column headed "Description of Property" was part of the bed of the river Thames within the parish occupied by the moorings herein-after mentioned. By virtue of the Conservancy Acts, 1857 and 1864, hereinafter mentioned, the bed and soil of the river Thames were vested in the Conservators of the said river. The coal-hulk mentioned in the same column was the hulk called the Black Prince in the column headed "Name and Situation of Property," and belonged to the appellant, and lay afloat on the river Thames within the boundary of the said parish of Milton. It was an iron-built vessel of 1,600 tons, expressly constructed for the purpose of being fastened to the moorings thereafter mentioned, and used as a depository for coals.

4. The hulk had not in itself any means of locomotion, either by sails or engines. The coals stored therein are brought in colliers, which can run alongside at all times of the tide and discharge their cargo into it. The coals being thus deposited in the same way as coals are deposited in warehouses or storehouses built on wharfs, are partly sold to the owners of steam-tugs and other steam-vessels, and partly used by the appellant for steam-tugs of his own. In either case the steam-vessel could receive the coal by coming alongside the hulk in the same manner as the collier which previously discharged it; or, if occasion should require, the hulk itself, with its store of coals, could be loosed from its moorings and towed by a steam-tug to any part of the river where there was sufficient water. It has, however, been at its present moorings since July, 1863, without removal, but in the ordinary course of things will, from time to time, at intervals of four or five years, require removal for repairs.

5. The hulk was fitted with proper apparatus for lifting coals and transferring them from the colliers to its own hold, and from its own hold to any vessel which might be placed alongside, and also with a cabin which was occupied by servants of the appellant, who reside there day and night, and have charge of the hulk and the coals kept there in store.

6. The moorings to which the hulk was secured are permanently fixed in the bed and soil of the river Thames by, and were the property of, the Conservators of the river Thames, incorporated and acting under the provisions of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1857 and 1864, which were to be taken as part of this case, and such moorings were fixed for the use of the hulk of the appellant. They were not provided with buoys, as was usual with moorings which are laid down for the temporary use of vessels in the river.

7. The moorings consist of two large iron fan-shape screws, which were screwed into the soil or bed of the river to a depth of about eight feet, and at a distance of about forty feet from each other. They were connected together by means of two chains which were shackled one to each screw, and both to a central ring; from this ring a third chain, called a "Pennant," was carried up to the surface of the water, where it terminated in another ring, to which ring the hulk was fixed, as therein after mentioned.

8. The whole of these moorings were the property of the Thames Conservators, and they were used by the appellant by virtue of the following document: "We, the Conservators of the river Thames, do grant to William Watkins, of 52, Lime Street, City, and Blackwall, liberty and licence to fasten and thenceforth keep fastened his coal-hulk or vessel called the Black Prince, to the moorings placed by the Conservators in the said river, at Gravesend Reach, until either party shall have given to the other one calendar month's notice in writing to determine and put an end to this licence. In consideration whereof the said William Watkins agrees with the said Conservators to pay towards the expenses of the said Conservators of placing, maintaining and repairing the said moorings, the annual sum of 30*l.*, and the due proportion of 30*l.* for any less period than a year, the first payment to be made on the 29th of September, 1864; and the said William Watkins further agrees that no more than three vessels shall at any one time be fastened or attached to the said coal-hulk, provided that under no circumstances whatsoever shall the said Conservators be liable for any damage or loss arising from or in consequence of the breaking of the moorings, chains or any imperfections or failure of the said moorings. Dated this 3rd day of August, 1863; signed, E. Burstall, secretary."

9. The chain-cables of the hulk itself were shackled to the upper ring of the moorings above described, and were brought on board through the hawse-pipes and secured to a windlass, by means of which the hulk itself was heaved up to or slackened off from the moorings. The hulk was moored entirely by the stem, and swung with the tide, and altered its position according to the set of the current; it never took the ground at any time or under any circumstances.

10. The appellant duly appealed to the Assessment Committee against the valuation list on the following grounds: That the land and coal-hulk thereon were not liable to be rated to the relief of the poor. That the appellant was not the occupier of any land with coal-hulk thereon in the parish. That the appellant, if rateable at all, was overrated both as respects the gross estimated rental and the net rateable value of the property. And upon the appeal he failed to obtain any relief.

11. The appellant thereupon gave due notice of appeal to the Quarter Sessions of and for the borough of Gravesend against a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish of Milton, made in accordance with the valuation list on the 7th of June, 1866; whereupon it was agreed that this case should be stated by consent under the provisions of the statute firstly above mentioned. It was further agreed that neither party should raise any technical difficulties or objections; and that the case should be decided on the merits. The Court was to be at liberty to draw any inferences of fact if it should think fit so to may do, to order the case to be amended in any way.

12. The question for the opinion of this Court, therefore, was—is the appellant, William Watkins, liable to be rated to the relief of the poor of the parish of Milton in respect of his occupation of the land and hulk under the circumstances stated in this case?

13. If he was so liable, the valuation list and the rate of the 7th of June, 1864, were to be confirmed, so far as to retain the name of the appellant and the description of the property therein; otherwise the same were to be amended by striking the name of the appellant and the description of property out of both. If, however, this Court should be of opinion that the appellant was rateable in respect of any portion of property, then the rate and valuation list were to be amended according to the judgment of this Court, and the amount was to be agreed upon between the parties. And it was further agreed that a judgment in conformity with the decision of this Court, and for such costs as this Court should adjudge, might be entered on motion by either party at the General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the borough of Gravesend holden next or next but one after such decision should have been given.

Barrow (G. Francis) with him, for the appellant.—The rate is altogether informal, but no objection will be made upon that score. The real point is, whether the appellant is rateable at all in respect of his occupation; it is submitted that he is not. He does not occupy any land which can be said to be enhanced in value by the possession and use by him of the Black Prince, which can be towed away altogether and taken to any other part of the river at the pleasure of the appellant. She is only moored by the stem, and swings round at every tide; the Conservators are at liberty to bring up at the moorings by their own boats if they please, the licence giving the appellant no exclusive possession. Suppose they were to bring up at the moorings or give any one else permission to do so, the appellant would have no right of action against them, for they have the property in them, and have simply licensed the appellant "to fasten and henceforth keep fastened" the Black Prince to the moorings which they have constructed until a month's notice is given by either party. Further, the rent of 30*l.* a year is to be paid simply towards the expenses. There is, therefore, no exclusive occupation of the moorings, nor indeed of any specific portion of ground, for the hulk swings with the tide, and can be hauled up close to or further from the moorings at pleasure. There are several decisions strongly in favour of the appellant—The King v. the Trent and Mersey Navigation Company (1), The King v. the Mersey and Irwell Navigation Company (2). But the fact that the occupation of the appellant is not sufficient to render him liable to assessment is plainly shewn by The Queen v. Morrish (3), where the occupation of the appellant was somewhat more conclusively shewn by reason of his having put up the fittings of the refreshment-rooms, while the present appellant has nothing to do with the moorings at all, except to hold on to them. In The Queen v. Morrison (4), the appellant was rated in respect of the value of his ship-building yard, as enhanced in value by reason of a floating dock used therewith; the Court held that this was not proper, but it was never even suggested that the appellant was rateable in respect of the land occupied by the dock. In The Queen v. Forrest (5), the appellants were held rateable in respect of a landing-pier, but that was because the pier rested at low water on blocks fixed in the bed of the river for that purpose, and was fastened to an iron staple fixed in the stone steps on the shore. That case is no authority against the present appellant, for the moorings do not belong to him, as in Ladewick; for the respondent.—The document under which the appellant has the right to use the moorings is more than a licence; it gives him such a right to occupy them as, combined with the facts disclosed by the case, shew that he has an occupation of the moorings and of the ground sufficient to make him liable to pay rates. The hulk was constructed for the purpose of being fastened to the moorings, and has in fact been there since the year 1863; so that he has had the sole and exclusive possession.

[BLACKBURN, J.—But it seems that the Conservators keep the possession of the moorings in themselves, for they have to repair them.]

If the document is a mere licence, still it is sufficient to give possession; see The Electric Telegraph Company v. the Overseers of the Poor of Salford (6).

[BLACKBURN, J.—In that case the appellants were the occupiers. The railway company did not erect the posts, and the appellants had the occupation of the land by means of the posts.]

But suppose the railway company had erected the posts, the occupation would have been sufficient, and the appellants equally rateable.

[BLACKBURN, J.—I doubt that. I think, probably, the railway company would be rateable as the occupiers of the land, enhanced in value by the rent which they received from the telegraph company.]

In The Queen v. Leith (7), it was held that the appellants were rateable in respect of a floating-pier near Westminster Bridge.

[LUSH, J.—The pier consisted of barges which were annexed to the land.]

The Queen v. Morris (8) does not govern this case, for the appellant was turned out at night, so that he had no occupation by himself or by his servants at that time. In The King v. the Trent and Mersey Navigation Company (1) there was no exclusive occupation at all.

Barrow was not called upon to reply.

BLACKBURN, J.—The question here is, whether or not the appellants were rateable. The rate is artificially expressed, no doubt as if the property were the Black Prince hulk itself; but in reality the question is, whether the appellants are occupiers of part of the bed of the river Thames, in such a way as to be rateable for the value of such land in the river; the value being enhanced by the fact that the Black Prince is moored and anchored to that portion of the land. The material facts appear to be stated in the 6th, 7th and 8th paragraphs of the case. It appears that the Conservators of the Thames made moorings in the river Thames expressly for the purpose of enabling the hulk of this particular appellant to be attached to them, and that those moorings are fixed to the bed of the river; and there can be no doubt that they do occupy part of the soil. They are described as being what they are, "two large iron fan-shaped screws, secured into the soil, and the chains connected with them"; and I think those moorings are so attached to the part of the soil of the river that if the appellants were made occupiers of the moorings, they would be occupiers of the soil. Then comes the question, are they occupiers of those moorings? The Conservators of the river Thames are the owners of the soil, and are the owners of the moorings also, and they might have demised them to the appellant for the moorings of barges, and having demised them the appellant would then have been the occupier of the land. There is also no doubt they might keep the possession on in themselves so as to be the occupiers of it, and for a sum of money, or for love or pleasure, if they pleased, grant to another person the privilege or easement that he should attach his barge to the moorings, in which case they would themselves still continue to be the occupiers; and unless there be something in the licence to prevent it, one or the other of these might be done; and in the present case the question depends on the terms of the written agreement, which are, "We, the Conservators, do grant liberty and licence"—they do not use the words "and demise," they may in their meaning shew that; but it is, "We, the Conservators, grant liberty and licence to fasten and henceforth to keep fastened his coal-hulk or vessel called the Black Prince to the moorings placed by the said Conservators in the said river, at Gravesend Reach, until either party shall have given to the other one calendar month's notice in writing to determine or put an end to this licence. In consideration whereof the said William Watkins agrees with the said Conservators to pay towards the expenses of the said Conservators in placing, and maintaining and repairing, the annual sum of 30*l*." Now, stopping there, without regard to the rest, which I do not think qualifies it, there are no words in express terms saying that the Conservators meant to part with the possession, or to give the appellant a tenancy, either at will or at sufferance. In this case it would be a tenancy at will from month to month. Is there anything to shew that they meant to make a demise? There might be many reasons why it would make a difference, and why the Conservators would not in such a case wish to make a demise. If they did so, and there came to be a quarrel as to the terms of the notice to quit, they could not get back the moorings without bringing an action of ejectment; but if they did not, it would only be a personal contract, and that might be a reason why they should wish not to make a demise; but this much is clear, that they have not in express terms said they would demise, and I rather think it would require something to shew that they intended it. Then, I think, from the terms in which it is said the appellant is to pay the money towards the expenses of maintaining and repairing, it is to be inferred that the Conservators are to maintain and repair; and although maintaining and repairing would not be inconsistent with the terms of a demise, it being possible that a landlord might demise a house with the implied term that he was to repair, yet prima facie the person to repair is the person in possession, and in such a case as this, it is more likely that they should repair than that the appellant should; consequently I think prima facie it would not be a demise or parting with possession, but merely a licence. Against that it is said there is the sole and exclusive possession. It seems that during the five years the appellant has been the sole person who has used the moorings, and, I think, if any rival hulk were moored there, it would have been contrary to what the parties intended; but his being the sole occupant is far from being conclusive and decisive. There may be a grant of an easement which is conveyed solely to one person and not to any one else, and yet there may not be any occupation, such as in the case of a wayleave to carry coals from a colliery to the sea-shore, an important right confined to that colliery alone; that does not make the person rateable for a private way over the land, and though he have the sole use of it, it does not make him the rateable landlord; or, in the more familiar case of a lodger who has the sole right to the use of the rooms in the house, but who is not made by that means the sole occupier, if the agreement is that the tenant of the house shall retain the possession, as in the general case of a lodging-house he does, for the purpose of looking after the management of it, the lodger being merely the inmate;—whenever that happens, the person occupying is rateable, although the lodger is the person in possession. So, here, I think the appellant has the exclusive right to moor the barge which is given from month to month, and though there would be a breach of the contract, and an action would lie if another barge were moored there, yet I think that is not decisive; it is a contract and an agreement by which the respondents bind themselves to let the appellant, and him only, use the moorings until they have given him a month's notice, instead of being a demise. That being the result, I come to the conclusion that the appellant is not the occupier, but is merely a person having a licence to use the moorings. This case is analogous to that of a lodger or a person who has the right, and there are a vast number of other cases, all of which have determined that it is only the occupier that is rateable, and not the person who has an easement, although that easement may be exclusive. As I have already said, I come to the conclusion that the appellant is not the occupier; the Conservators are the occupiers; and unless there be something in the Conservancy Act, or some other matter to relieve the Conservators from being rated in respect of the occupancy, the measure of the value of their occupancy would probably be guided by the money they gain by allowing the appellant to moor his barge to those moorings. In the present case, we can only say the wrong person is rated, and consequently there must be judgment for the appellant.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the facts of this case shew that the Conservators have put down the moorings and repair them; and that they prima facie would have the control of the repairs of the moorings occupied by this barge. They have given the appellant a liberty or a licence—and it appears to me nothing more than a personal licence—to moor this hulk at this spot; and although no other person can upset that right, and the Conservators would not allow anybody to do it without bringing an action against them, it seems to me to amount to this: “We give you liberty to moor the hulk there, and we will not give the liberty to anybody else.” I do not think it makes any difference when you come to consider what is the nature of the licence, because, although by the arrangement with the Conservators the appellant may have the exclusive use of the moorings during the time the contract remains in existence, it seems to me he has nothing more than a licence personal to himself to moor, and he is not the proper person to be rated.

LUSH, J.—No doubt the soil in the river, into which these moorings are secured, is occupied by some one; the question is, whether the moorings are occupied by the appellant. The soil of the river belongs to the Conservators of the river, and the moorings belong to them; prima facie they are the occupants of them, and they were so unless they have demised them to Mr. Watkins; on looking at the only document between the parties, it professes only to grant to him the use of the moorings for a given consideration for the purpose of mooring his hulk there. There is nothing in the circumstances, and no document that at all leads one to suppose there is a demise. Then it says, the Conservators put themselves under the obligation to keep them in repair. That strengthens the idea that they intended to keep them in their own occupation, and only to demise what the instrument itself describes as the mere use of them to the appellant. I think he is, therefore, not liable to be rated.

1868. } LAWRENCE, appellant, KING,

Highway—Animals lying about—Highway Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 101), s. 25.

By section 25. of the Highway Act, 1864, if any horse, mare or sheep is at any time found lying about a highway, the owner shall be liable to a penalty. Held, that this liability may be incurred if sheep are allowed to lie about a highway, although they were under the control of a keeper at the time they were so found lying about.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a Petty Sessions, holden at Hertford, on the 6th of July, 1867, the appellant appeared to answer a complaint in which it was charged that “on the 17th of January, 1867, at the parish of Hatfield, sixteen sheep and twelve lambs, the property of the appellant, were found lying about the highway there, contrary to the Highway Act, 1864.” The appellant was convicted and ordered to pay 2s. 4d., being at the rate of 1d. per head. The Justices found as a fact, “that the animals were under the control of a keeper at the time they were found lying about the highway.”

It was contended by the appellant that as there was a keeper with the sheep and lambs, when found by the respondent, they could not be said to have been found lying about the highway within the meaning of the 25th section of the Highway Act, 1864; but that in order to render the appellant liable to the penalty, as the owner of the sheep and lambs, the sheep and lambs should have been found “lying about the highway” without a keeper. The Justices thought that inasmuch as the words, “without a keeper,” which appear in the 74th section of the Highway Act, 1835, are omitted from the 35th section of the Highway Act, 1864, the intention of the legislature was to prevent any cattle being allowed to lie about any highway, for the purpose of depasturing or otherwise, whether with or without a keeper, as such practice is very common, and is the cause of considerable damage being done to the hedges, banks and fences of adjoining owners. No right of pasturage was claimed by the defendant on the sides of the highway.

The evidence was set out in the case, and it was proved that the appellant told a boy to take the animals along the road. The boy did so, and they stopped and grazed on the road from a quarter before ten a.m. until ten minutes past five p.m. Some of them laid down in the middle of the road, some on the sides of the road, some were feeding on the grass, and some nibbling the quicks of the hedges. The boy was part of the time walking about, and part lying about; he was lying down about one hour in the middle of the flock. Sometimes some of them got up, and others laid down. He was there during the whole time. There was no obstruction to any one; but supposing a carriage had passed, there would have been an obstruction.

The question for the opinion of this Court was, whether the Justices were right in their determination or not.

Denman (H. Ludlow with him), for the respondent, in support of the conviction. — The Justices were clearly right in the construction which they have put upon the 25th section. It is found as a fact that the sheep and lambs were lying about on the highway. The conviction must therefore be affirmed. A somewhat similar case, Morris v. Jeffries (1), was decided by this Court under the 75th section of 4 Geo. 4. c. 95, where it was held, that horses, under the control of a keeper, could not be said to be "straying" within the meaning of that section, which makes it lawful to seize and impound any horse, &c., which shall at any time be found tethered or wandering or straying or lying about any turnpike-road, &c. But that case was different from the present. The question was, whether the horses could be said to be straying, and the remedy given was to seize and impound. But, further, it is clear that the presence or absence of a keeper is immaterial under the section now in question, for it repeals the 74th section of the Highway Act, 1835, which provides that "if any horse, sheep, &c., be found wandering, straying or lying on any highway without a keeper," &c., the animals may be seized and impounded," and substitutes a new provision, viz., "if any horse, &c., or sheep is at any time found straying on or lying about any highway," &c., the owner shall be liable to a penalty. The words "without a keeper" must have been intentionally left out, and it must be taken that the legislature intended to prevent such animals being allowed to lie about the highways whether there was any one to look after them or not.

Poland, for the appellant. — The language of the section in question, and of the 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. s. 75, with the exception of the word "tethered" in the latter, are almost exactly the same; and therefore Morris v. Jeffries (1) is really decisive of the present case. The Justices have found as a fact that the sheep and lambs were under the control of a keeper.

Denman was not heard in reply.

BLACKBURN, J. — The Justices were quite right in their decision of this case, and also on the ground upon which they have rested that decision. Under the 74th section of the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, the offence is the allowing the animals to stray or lie about without a keeper. The plain construction to be put upon the Turnpike Act, 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. s. 75, was laid down by Morris v. Jeffries (1), that the owner of horses could not be convicted of allowing them to "stray" when they were under the control of a keeper. Under the section now in question, the 35th of the Highway Act, 1864, the legislature deal with the 74th section of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, and then make the substituted enactment, leaving out the words "without a keeper," shewing that they meant that if the animals were found lying about on the highway, though a keeper was with them, the owner should be liable to the penalty, the keeper having neglected his duty and having allowed them to lie about the highway. This construction would be pretty clear if the provision had been inserted in this act for the first time; but we find that the 25th section refers to the former 74th section, which contains the words now left out. The Justices find that the sheep were lying about on the highway. There is not much difference between the language of the 25th section of the new act and the 75th section of the 4 Geo. 4. c. 95, on which Morris v.

(1) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 143 not bns

Jeffries (1) was decided; but there is a great difference in the facts. In that case the horses could not be said to be "straying" when they were under the control of a keeper, while here they were "lying about" although the boy was with them.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the 25th section constitutes two offences; one, the suffering animals to stray upon the highway without any one to exercise a control over them; and the other, the permitting them to be lying about on the highway even although a keeper should be with them. The words "without a keeper" must have been intentionally left out, and the Justices were right in convicting the appellant.

Conviction affirmed.

Wounding with Intent to Resist Lawful Apprehension—Breach of the Peace—Fresh Pursuit.

The prisoner was indicted for wounding W. with intent to resist his lawful apprehension. The prisoner was engaged in a disturbance in the street, when R, a police constable, interfered to prevent it. A struggle ensued between R. and the prisoner. R. retired, and the prisoner went into his father's house, where he lodged, and fastened up the house. After an interval of an hour R. returned with W. and two other constables to the house, which was then fastened and all quiet. The prisoner, from inside the house, refused to admit the constables, who spent ten minutes to a quarter of an hour trying to get in. They then sent for a sergeant of police, and in about another quarter of an hour he came, and they then burst open the door of the house. They found the prisoner on the top of the stairs with a bill-hook in his hand, which he used against the policemen to resist his apprehension, and with which in so doing he wounded W, one of the policemen:—Held, that the apprehension was not lawful, as the first disturbance was at an end and there was no fear of its renewal; nor was there a fresh pursuit by the constables; and the conviction must be quashed.

The Queen v. Walker (1) followed.

CASE reserved by Montague Smith, J.

The prisoner was tried and convicted before me at the Spring Assizes, 1868, at Warwick, on an indictment which charged him with feloniously wounding George Wesson, a police constable, with intent to resist his lawful apprehension. The facts were that the prisoner lodged at his father's house, in Lower Town Street, Nottingham. About twelve o'clock on the night of Saturday, the 29th of February, the prisoner, suspecting a man called Wormald was listening at the windows of the house, came into the street and used threatening language to him. Raison, a police constable, came up and interfered to put a stop to the altercation, and the prisoner then turned upon him and struck him with his fist, and there was a struggle between them. Raison, the police constable, then went away for assistance, and remained absent for an hour. In the interval he changed his plain clothes for his uniform, and he returned to the house with three other constables, Wesson, Ash and Harabin. The prisoner had then retired into the house, and all was quiet. The door of the house was closed and fastened. Raison asked the prisoner to open the door and he refused. The constables tried the door several times, and after an interval of ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, finding they could not get into the house, they determined to send for a sergeant of police. One of them then went to the police-station, distant about half a mile, and after another interval of fifteen or twenty minutes returned with Sergeant Hind. The sergeant and Harabin went to the back door. Raison, Wesson and Ash remained by the front door. These three constables again demanded admission and were refused, and they then forced open the front outer door and entered the house. The constable saw the prisoner standing on the top of the stairs with a bill-hook in his hand. Raison asked the prisoner to come down. He refused, and threatened to kill the first man who came up. Weason then said, "Here's at him," and the three constables, Weason, Raison and Ash, ran upstairs to lay hold of him. The prisoner then struck Weason with the hook upon the head and wounded him; a struggle ensued in which Raison was also wounded by the prisoner with the hook. The prisoner was overpowered and taken into custody, having himself received severe wounds on the head from the constables in the struggle. It was contended for the prisoner that the apprehension was not lawful; the assault was over; there was no further assault or affray to be apprehended; and no such fresh pursuit as would justify the constables in breaking into the house or apprehending the prisoner,—see The Queen v. Gardiner (2) and The Queen v. Walker (1). If the apprehension was not lawful, it is to be taken that there was no excess in the resistance offered by the prisoner.

No counsel appeared.

KELLY, C.B. — In this case a police officer hearing a disturbance in the street proceeded to the spot, when a struggle ensued between him and the prisoner, so that he found it necessary to retire. He did so, and at the end of an hour returned with assistance. The prisoner was then inside the house, which was fastened up; but the policemen broke into the house and the prisoner was found on the stairs. The police officers attacked him with a view to his apprehension. The prisoner resisted, and in the struggle one of the police officers received a wound from the prisoner, for inflicting which wound the prisoner was indicted. The question is, whether there was a felonious wounding by the prisoner with intent to resist his lawful apprehension. The answer depends upon whether the apprehension, under the circumstances of the case, was lawful or not; that depends upon whether the attack by the policemen upon the prisoner inside the house was a continuance of the struggle which had previously taken place in the street. But an interval of an hour elapsed between the time of the policeman retiring from the struggle in the street and his returning to the house with the other policemen. The constables try the door of the house, and then a fresh interval takes place of ten minutes or quarter of an hour. They then send for a sergeant of police, when, after another interval of a quarter of an hour to twenty minutes or so, the house is broken open. It was impossible to say after this lapse of time that the policemen were in fresh pursuit. The hour was not accounted for, and we cannot infer that so long a time was necessarily spent in obtaining fresh assistance. We are of opinion, therefore, independently of authority, that the conviction should be quashed. But, also, it seems to us that the case of The Queen v. Walker (1) is a conclusive authority against this conviction.

KEATING, J. concurred.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J.—I agree that this conviction should be quashed. There was nothing in the evidence to shew that any apprehension existed that the previous affray would be renewed, for the prisoner had gone into the house and locked himself in. And I also think there was no evidence of a fresh pursuit by the policeman.

PIGOTT, B. and LUSH, J. concurred.

Conviction quashed.

Perjury—Description of Justices—Variance—Amendment—9 Geo. 4. c. 15.—14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 1.—Informal Complaint before Justices—Jurisdiction.

Perjury was assigned to have been committed on the hearing of a complaint for trespass in pursuit of game alleged to have been committed in a close in the parish of T, in the borough of T, before certain Justices assigned to keep the peace in and for the said county, and acting in and for the borough of T, in the said county. It appeared in evidence that the Justices were Justices for the borough of T. only, and were not Justices for the county. The indictment was amended at the trial by striking out the words "the said county," so as to make the averment be that they were Justices assigned to keep the peace in and for, and acting in and for, the borough of T. in the said county. The complaint alleged that the defendant was in the close for the purpose of destroying game, but omitted to allege that it was for the purpose of destroying game there:—Held, that the amendment was properly made as a variance in the description of a person described in the indictment under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 1, and that the complaint was sufficient in form to give the Justices jurisdiction to inquire into it, so as to make false evidence wilfully given on the hearing the subject of an assignment of perjury.

CASE reserved by Blackburn, J.

The prisoner was tried, before me, at the last assizes for Devonshire, for perjury. The indictment alleged that "at a petty session of the peace holden in the parish of Tiverton, in the county of Devon, a certain charge and complaint came on to be heard in due form of law before John Lane, Esq. and Samuel Garth, Esq., then respectively being Justices of the Peace of our Lady the Queen, assigned to keep the peace in and for the said county, and acting in and for the borough of Tiverton, in the said county, against Thomas Martin, for that he, to wit, on the night of the 31st of January, 1863, at Chettercombe Barton, in the parish of Tiverton, in the borough of Tiverton, unlawfully did enter and be on certain land there, called Quarry Down Close, with a certain gun and other instruments, for the purpose of taking and destroying game, contrary to the statute in such case made and provided," and then alleged that the prisoner committed perjury on the hearing of that complaint. On the evidence it appeared that an information or complaint in writing against Martin and the now prisoner Western was laid before a Justice of the borough of Tiverton in 1863. Western was then convicted, but Martin having absconded, a warrant issued against him, and he was not taken till 1868, when the complaint against him was heard before the two gentlemen named in the indictment, who were Justices for the borough of Tiverton only, and were not Justices for the county. On the hearing of this complaint Western was called as a witness, and swore that Martin was not the person who was with him poaching on that night: and on this the perjury was assigned. It was objected that though the two Justices for the borough had jurisdiction to hear the complaint, yet not being Justices in and for the county, the allegation in the indictment was not proved. To this it was answered, that the fact that they were Justices for the borough, which was within the county, was proof of the averment, or that the words "in and for the county" might be rejected as surplusage. I was, however, of opinion that the averment being descriptive required to be proved as laid. It was then urged that I had power to amend the indictment so as to cure the variance, either under the 9. Geo. 4. c. 15. or the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 1. I thought that the 9 Geo. 4. c. 15. did not apply to this case, and doubted whether the variance came within the meaning of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 1, as, though it was a variance in the description of persons in the indictment named and described, it seemed to me doubtful whether those words in the act were not confined to variances ejusdem generis with a variance in the name of such persons. I thought, however, that if I had power to make the amendment, it was proper to exercise it, and therefore directed the indictment to be amended by striking out the words "the said county," so as to make the averment be, that they were Justices assigned to keep the peace in and for, and acting in and for, the borough of Tiverton, in the said county," subject to the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal as to my power to make such an amendment.

It was further objected, that the information or complaint in writing (which was in the same words as those used in the indictment) disclosed no offence, as it did not allege that Martin was in Quarry Down Close for the purpose of destroying game there; and Fletcher v. Calthorpe (1) was cited in support of this position.

It appeared on the evidence that the charge actually made and heard before the Justices was for poaching there, and I thought that, inasmuch as the Justices had jurisdiction over the complaint, which was, in fact, heard before them, the prisoner, if he wilfully gave false evidence with intent to mislead them, was liable to punishment, even if the written complaint was informal; but having reserved the point as to the variance, I reserved this point also. The case was then left to the jury, and the prisoner was convicted and liberated on bail. Various other objections were made, which I refused to reserve. The opinion of this Court is requested, first, whether I had power to amend as I did, and if I had not such power, whether, as the indictment originally stood, there was a fatal variance; secondly, whether the form of the complaint before the Justices prevented the conviction of the prisoner under this indictment.

(1) 6 Q.B. Rep. 880; s. c. 13 Law J. Rep. (Q.B.) 95.

Collins, for the prosecution. — The amendment was rightly made, inasmuch as it amended the indictment by correcting a variance between a description of the Justices and the proof. They were described in the indictment as "Justices in and for the county," instead of "in and for the borough." Next, as to the informality in the information, it is submitted that if upon the authority of Fletcher v. Calthorpe (1) a conviction would be bad which omitted to allege that the defendant was in the close for the purpose of poaching there, yet the information is good enough without the word "there" for the purpose of giving the Justices jurisdiction to inquire into the charge.

KELLY, C.B.—We think the amendment was a proper one. There was a variance between the statement of the description of the Justices and the proof of it. As to the other point, the Justices had clearly jurisdiction to inquire into the complaint, and to try the offender. Therefore the perjury was well assigned.

The other JUDGES concurred.

Two prisoners were convicted under a count charging them with receiving goods knowing them to have been stolen upon proof that they were present aiding and abetting a third receiver who was found in actual possession of the box containing the goods, but the two former never had manual possession of the box:—Held, that the conviction was right.

CASE reserved by the learned Assistant Judge for Middlesex.

John Rogers, Richard Irwin, Alfred Johnson and Charles Byatt were tried, before me, at the Sessions for Middlesex, on the 3rd of March, 1868, for stealing and receiving a watch, the property of John Shaw. Byatt pleaded guilty; Rogers was found guilty of stealing; and Irwin and Johnson were found guilty of receiving with a guilty knowledge.

John Rogers resided at Liverpool, and forwarded by railway a box containing the watch in question and several other stolen watches to the prisoner Byatt, and the box was delivered in due course to Byatt, in the county of Middlesex. The box was addressed to his house in the handwriting of Rogers, and a similar box, empty, with similar address in Rogers's handwriting, was found at Byatt's. That box was taken by Rogers to the railway office in Liverpool on the 13th of January and booked as a parcel for London. Rogers was asked if he wished to pay the carriage, and he did so. The box was then forwarded in the ordinary manner. The box containing the articles named in the letter set out in the case (and amongst them the stolen watch in question) was sent by railway in the same manner on the 30th of January at ten o'clock in the morning, but the railway clerk could not say by whom it was brought to the office. The watch in question was stolen from the owner at Liverpool on the 29th of January about seven p.m. It was contended that as Rogers was not shown to have left Liverpool, the Court had no jurisdiction to try him. I told the jury that if they believed Rogers to have stolen the watch, his transmission of it into the county by the agency of the railway was sufficient to give the Court jurisdiction, although he did not personally convey it.

It was proved that Rogers had advised Byatt of the transmission of the box by a letter found in Byatt's possession, which letter was as follows :

"Liverpool, Jan. 30th, 1868.

"I send you up the goods this morning, they are as follows :

"Try and deal this time without so much wrangling; you did not come down as you promised.

"Dick."

Articles corresponding with this letter were contained in the box found at Byatt's.

Irwin and Johnson were proved to have been at Byatt's house on the arrival of the box, and the jury found that they knew of the box and the contents having been forwarded by Rogers, and that they were present on its arrival, aiding and abetting Byatt in the receipt of the watch in question, they well knowing it to have been stolen; but it was not proved that either of them had manual possession of it, all the prisoners, Byatt, Irwin and Johnson, having been taken into custody before the box was opened. I have to ask this honourable Court whether, upon the facts here stated, the conviction of Rogers, Irwin and Johnson, or either of them, can in point of law be sustained.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Collins, for the prosecution. — As to the conviction of Rogers, the question is, whether the Middlesex Sessions had jurisdiction to try him for this offence, under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 114. That section enacts, that "if any person shall have in his possession, in any one part of the United Kingdom, any chattel, money, valuable security, or other property whatsoever, which he shall have stolen or otherwise feloniously taken in any other part of the United Kingdom, he may be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished for larceny or theft in that part of the United Kingdom where he shall so have such property in the same manner as if he had actually stolen or taken it in that part." It is submitted that the possession of the watch by the railway company in London for delivery to Byatt was constructively the possession of Rogers. In The Queen v. Cryer (1),—where the prisoner had posted half of a stolen bank note at Bath, out of the county of Wilts, directed in a letter to the Bank of Swindon, in Wilts, which had issued it, requesting payment of it, and it arrived in due course at Swindon, and there was no evidence that the stolen half of the note was received by the prisoner in Wilts, or was ever in his possession in that county, unless the bankers at Swindon, to whom the note was transmitted, or the post-office servants in the county, could be regarded as his agents for transmitting the stolen property, and their possession in Wilts be treated as his possession,—the prisoner was convicted of receiving the property in Wilts, under the 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 56, which enacted that a receiver of stolen goods may be tried in any county in which he shall have had the stolen property in his possession; and it was there said by the Court, "It is plain that if he had employed a private agent to give it to the bankers in order to get it cashed, the possession, in point of law, would all along have remained in the prisoner; and why should it less remain so, because it is transmitted through a public agent by means and on behalf of the prisoner?" So, here, it is submitted that the railway company were the agents for Rogers, and the possession remained all along in him. The word "possession" in that statute and the present is to be construed in the same manner. The Queen v. Jones (2) was referred to in the above case, and it was there held, that the postmaster became the agent for the prisoner, who was indicted for obtaining money by false pretences so as to render him liable to be tried in the county where the letter containing the money was posted to him by the prosecutor.

[KELLY, C.B.—You say, then, either the possession of Byatt was the possession of Rogers, or else the possession of the railway company was the possession of Rogers as their consignor until delivery to the consignee.]

The case was originally stated without setting out the letter from Rogers to Byatt, found at Byatt's, and it was now adjourned for the learned Assistant Judge to state the terms of that letter.

May 2.—On the case being called on, it was deemed unnecessary to hear Collins farther, and the judgment of the Court was delivered by—

KELLY, C.B.—With regard to the conviction of Rogers, the facts were, that the watch was stolen by him at Liverpool, and forwarded by railway to Byatt in Middlesex, for the purpose of being sold and disposed of by him there. The question is, whether the possession of the watch, in contemplation of law, remained with Rogers. I think the authority cited to us is conclusive. Constructive possession is deemed equivalent to actual possession in criminal as well as civil cases; and here Rogers must be deemed to have retained the control over the article. Then, possession being thus retained by him, his conviction must be affirmed. Then, as to Irwin and Johnson, the jury have found that they knew of the box having been forwarded by Rogers, and that they were present on its arrival, aiding and abetting Byatt in the receipt of the watch, they well knowing it to have been stolen. Aiders and abettors in a felony can be indicted, tried and convicted as principals; therefore, as to them, the conviction must also be affirmed.

The rest of the JUDGES agreed.

Conviction affirmed.

Note.—The constructive possession of the watch by Rogers, in Middlesex, in the above case, could be rested on two grounds, viz., that the possession of the railway company was his possession as their consignor until delivery, or that Rogers retained the control over the watch when in Byatt's actual possession as receiver, and therefore continued to be constructively in possession of it. It does not appear quite clearly whether the Court rested their judgment upon both grounds or upon one only, and if so upon which; but inasmuch as they relied pointedly on the case of The Queen v. Cryer, if the Court adopted the reasoning of the judgment in that case, it would seem that it was the possession of the railway company which they deemed to be the possession of Rogers. But if it had been necessary, it would have been deserving of consideration, whether Byatt's possession was not also the constructive possession of Rogers. The Queen v. Smith, 1 Dears. 494; s. c. 24 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 135, was the converse case. There the prisoner was convicted as the receiver of a watch which was never in his actual possession, but was all the time in the possession of another person, who was the probable thief, but who had absconded, and so was never tried. The direction to the jury in that case was, that if they believed "that the watch was in the custody of a person with the cognizance of the prisoner, that person being one over whom the prisoner had absolute control so that the watch would be forthcoming if the prisoner ordered it, there was ample evidence to justify them in convicting the prisoner for feloniously receiving the watch." The jury then found the prisoner guilty, and stated that they believed that though the watch was in the hand or pocket of H, it was in the prisoner's absolute control. The above direction was deemed by the Court unexceptionable, and Lord Campbell said, "It has been held in decided cases, including The Queen v. Wiley, 2 Dears. 37, that there may be a joint possession in the receiver and the thief; that is the ratio decidendi on which the judgment in that case proceeds." And afterwards, "we have instances in real life that persons are employed to commit larcenies, and so deal with the stolen goods that they may be under the control of the employer. In this case H. may have been so employed by the prisoner, and the watch may have been under the prisoner's control; and if so, there was evidence of possession both by H. and the prisoner." And Mr. Justice Crowder says, "There was sufficient evidence that H. was the thief. The question is then put to the jury, was the watch under the control of the prisoner? And they say that it was. That finding is sufficient to support their verdict." So in the present case, if the letter from Rogers to Byatt were to be construed to shew that Byatt was acting under the control of Rogers, who was able to require the production of the watch if he had so chosen, it would seem, by analogy, that the possession of Byatt would be the possession constructively of Rogers. But perhaps the jury ought then to have found that Byatt was acting under the control of Rogers, which they were not required to do.

(2) 1 Den. C.C. 551; s. c. 19 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 162.

CASE reserved by Montague Smith, J.

The two prisoners were tried and convicted, before me, at the Spring Assizes for Warwickshire, 1868, on an indictment which charged them with feloniously, and without lawful authority and excuse, engraving upon a plate part of a promissory note purporting to be a part of a bank note of the British Linen Company, carrying on the business of bankers, for the payment of 5*l.*, contrary to the form of the statute, &c.—see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 16. The evidence shewed that the prisoners had engraved upon a plate part of a bank note for 5*l.*, purporting to be a note of a Scotch banking company called the British Linen Company, and had made arrangements with a printer for printing a large number of notes from the plate when engraved. It was proved that the British Linen Company was a Scotch banking company carrying on the business of bankers at Edinburgh and at other places in Scotland, and not carrying on the business of bankers out of Scotland. It was objected, on behalf of the prisoners, that they were not indictable under the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, inasmuch as that act did not apply to the engraving, &c., of the plates of notes of Scotch banks; and sections 19 and 55. of the act were referred to.

—The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 16, under which provision the conviction took place, applies to engraving in England upon a plate a bank note of a Scotch company. That section is as follows: "Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall engrave or in anywise make upon any plate whatsoever, or upon any wood, stone, or other material, any promissory note, bill of exchange, or bank post bill, or part of a promissory note, bill of exchange, or bank post bill, purporting to be a bank note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland, or of any other body corporate, company, or person carrying on the business of bankers, or to be a blank bank note, blank promissory note, blank bank bill of exchange, or blank bank post bill of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland, or of any such other body corporate, company, or person as aforesaid, or to be a part of a bank note, promissory note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland, or of any such other body corporate, company, or person as aforesaid, or any name, word or character resembling or apparently intended to resemble any subscription to any bill of exchange or promissory note issued by the Governor and Company of the Bank of England or the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland, or by any such other body corporate, company, or person as aforesaid, or shall use any such plate, wood, stone, or other material, or any other instrument or device, for the making or printing any bank note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill, or blank bank note, blank bank bill of exchange, or blank bank post bill, or part of a bank note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill, or knowingly have in his custody or possession any such plate, wood, stone, or other material, or any such instrument or device, or shall knowingly offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, or have in his custody or possession, any paper upon which any blank bank note, blank bank bill of exchange, or blank bank post bill of the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, or of the Governor and Company of the Bank of Ireland, or of any such other body corporate, company, or person as aforesaid, or part of a bank note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill, or any name, word, or character resembling or apparently intended to resemble any such subscription, shall be made or printed, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years and not less than three years,—or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.” It is submitted that prima facie the Bank of the British Linen Company, which is a Scotch bank, would be within the words, in the first part of the section, “of any other body corporate, company, or person carrying on the business of bankers.”

[KELLY, C.B.—The cognate term “such” is introduced in the repetition in the subsequent part of the section.]

A Scotch banking company would be “such” another company. But section 55. of the same act enacts that “nothing in this act contained shall extend to Scotland except as otherwise hereinbefore expressly provided.” The only operation, however, that can be given to this section is by referring it to section 1, where it is made an offence to forge the seal of England and Scotland, appointed under the Article of the Union to be kept, used and continued in Scotland, which is the only section where Scotland is mentioned, unless it can be explained to refer to Scotch banks as included under the general words in the 16th and other sections where banks are referred to. The present act is an act to consolidate the law relating to forgery, and is framed on 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 66; and the analogous provision in that statute was section 29, which enacted that “this act shall not extend to any offence committed in Scotland or Ireland.” The framers of the Consolidated Statute probably meant to express the same thing, by providing that the act should not extend to Scotland. The 19th section of the present act makes it an offence to engrave upon any plate a bill, promissory note, &c., purporting to be the bill, note, &c. of any foreign prince or state, or of any person or company of persons resident in any country not under the dominion of Her Majesty, so that if the 16th section does not extend to a Scotch banking company, there will be this great anomaly, that the forgery of a foreign note will be punishable, whilst the forgery of a Scotch note will not be an offence; for there is nowhere any other enactment to protect Scotch banks against the forgery of their notes in England. In The Queen v. Hannon (1) an indictment framed on the 18th section of the 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 66. for having a plate for engraving the notes of the Bank of Upper Canada was upheld, on the ground that the words of that section, upon which the present one is founded, were large enough and intended to include the colonies. And in The Queen v. Keith (2), an indictment also framed upon the 18th section of 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 66, for engraving part of a note purporting to be a note of the very company in question, namely, the British Linen Banking Company, was upheld; but certainly this point was not taken. On these grounds it is submitted that the conviction was right.

KELLY, C.B.—This case raises a very important question, but we think it free from difficulty. The indictment appears to have been framed on the 16th section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. [His Lordship read the section].—The question turns on the words, “or of any other body corporate, company or person carrying on the business of bankers,” following on the mention of the Bank of England and the Bank of Ireland. In a subsequent part of the section, upon a similar collocation, the phraseology is changed by the introduction of the word “such.” Then, are these general words, after the specifying of the Banks of England and Ireland, intended to include Banks of Scotland? We are all of opinion that a bank in Scotland or in any of the colonies is intended to be included by them. Such is their literal construction; but we think it not merely the literal construction, but the substantial meaning and actual intention of the legislature; and the only doubt is raised by the 55th section. It would be of serious import if that section were to exclude Scotland from the operation of the statute, for it would be a felony to forge a note of the Bank of England, Ireland or Wales, or of any foreign country, whilst it would leave bankers in Scotland and in the colonies without protection, so that any one might with impunity forge in England notes of any such bank. We cannot suppose that the legislature could have intended any such thing as that. The words “nothing shall extend to Scotland” merely mean nothing shall extend to offences committed in Scotland, which was the express enactment in 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 66. The mode of procedure in Scotland is different from that of England, and therefore Scotland was excluded from the act; but the legislature meant no more than to exclude from the operation of the act offences committed in Scotland, which would be dealt with and punished according to that procedure. We find in the 1st section a provision relating to the Great Seal of Scotland, and we do not find any enactment in which Scotland is expressly mentioned; therefore the words in the 55th section, “except as otherwise hereinbefore expressly provided,” seem to have been introduced ex majore cautela, and have, in effect, no operation.

The other JUDGES concurred.

Note.—The great anomaly that would exist if the notes of a Scotch bank might be forged with impunity in England, while those of foreign states are protected, has probably induced the Court to cast aside the 55th section, which excluded Scotland from the operation of the act, somewhat summarily. But had the case been argued by counsel for the prisoner, it would have probably been brought to the notice of the Court that this anomaly has existed before, but had been remedied by legislation, which was prior to and repealed by the late Consolidated Statute. In The Queen v. M'Kay, B. & R. 71, a conviction of uttering a note of this same company, the British Linen Company, was held wrong under the 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, containing similar general words, which were, however, restrained by the 4th section of that act, which provided “that nothing in this act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to that part of Great Britain called Scotland.” Now, it is to be observed that the words there used are in substance the precise words used in the present act, but the effect of them was in that case deemed to be to exclude Scotch bankers from the protection of the act. This was, however, remedied in the 41 Geo. 3. c. 57, which was expressly enacted with reference to Great Britain and Ireland. Then, by the subsequent act, 46 Geo. 3. c. 89, Scotch banks were again included by section 8, which expressly enacted that “all and every the clauses and provisions in this act contained shall extend to every part of Great Britain.” Then, under the 11 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 66, Scotch banks were still protected, because the excepting clause, viz., section 29, provided that “this act shall not extend to any offence committed in Scotland or Ireland.” Therefore there was nothing in that clause to limit the effect of the general words describing bankers in the 18th section of that act, and so The Queen v. Keith was rightly decided. But now that act is repealed, and in place of the excepting clause in that act, is inserted one changing that language, and returning to the words of the 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. s. 4, under which The Queen v. M'Kay was decided. To deprive Scotch banks of their protection would seem to be a great anomaly; but if the legislature have so expressed themselves as to effect that result, it may be questioned how far it is advantageous for the Court to refuse to give effect to their enactments. It is to be observed, that there is no enactment in the act to prevent its operation to the Colonial bankers, and therefore the observations of the Court with reference to such banks would seem to be beside the point of the case; for all the cases seem to agree that the general words describing bankers would include Scotch as well as Colonial banks, and the difficulty is caused by the language of the section excluding Scotland only from the act.

 1868. } THE QUEEN v. HICKLIN AND April 29. } ANOTHER.

Obscene Book—Publication with intent to expose Errors of Religious Sect—Misdemeanor "proper to be prosecuted as such"—Lord Campbell's Act (20 & 21 Vict. c. 83).

By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, an act "for the more effectually preventing the sale of obscene books, pictures, prints and other articles," it is enacted that upon complaint before two Justices of the Peace, that any obscene books, papers, prints, &c., are kept in any place within their jurisdiction "for the purpose of sale or distribution, exhibition for purposes of gain, lending upon hire, or being otherwise published for purposes of gain," and upon the Justices being satisfied that any of the articles so kept are of such a character that the publication of them would be a misdemeanor and proper to be prosecuted as such, they may cause such books, &c. to be seized and destroyed in the manner provided by the act.

A society of persons called "The Protestant Electoral Union,"—(whose objects were stated to be, amongst others, "to protest against those teachings and practices of the Romanist and Puseyite systems which are un-English, immoral and blasphemous"; to "maintain the Protestantism of the Bible and the liberty of England," and "to promote the return to parliament of men who will assist them in these objects; and particularly will expose and defeat the deep-laid machinations of the Jesuits, and resist grants of public money for Romish purposes")—exposed for sale at their office a pamphlet entitled, "The Confessional Unmasked, shewing the depravity of the Romish priesthood, the iniquity of the confessional, and the questions put to females in confession." This pamphlet consisted of extracts from the works of theologians on the doctrines and discipline of the Church of Rome, and particularly on the practice of auricular confession. On the side of the page were printed passages in the original Latin, correctly extracted from the works of these writers, and opposite each extract was placed a free translation of it into English. The pamphlet also contained a preface and notes, and comments condemnatory of the tenets and principles of the authors of the works from which the extracts were made. About one-half of the pamphlet related to casuistical and controversial questions which were not obscene, but the remainder of the pamphlet was obscene, relating to impure and filthy acts, words and ideas. A member of the society kept and sold these pamphlets with the purpose of promoting the objects of the society, and exposing what he deemed to be errors of the Church of Rome. Two Magistrates, purporting to act under the above-mentioned statute, ordered a number of these pamphlets while in his possession to be seized and destroyed:—Held, that, notwithstanding the object of the defendant was not to injure public morals, but to attack the religion and practice of the Roman Catholic Church, this did not justify his act nor prevent it from being a misdemeanor proper to be prosecuted, as the inevitable effect of the publication must be to injure public morality; and although he might have had another object in view, he must be taken to have intended what was the natural consequence of his act, and had therefore been guilty of an offence within the meaning of the statute.

This was a SPECIAL CASE stated by the Recorder of Wolverhampton for the opinion of this Court.

At the Quarter Sessions for the borough of Wolverhampton, held on the 27th of May, 1867, Henry Scott appealed against an order made by two Justices of the borough, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83 (1),

(1) By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, after reciting that it is expedient to give additional powers for the suppression of the trade in obscene books, prints, drawings and other obscene articles, it is by section 1. enacted—"It shall be lawful for any Metropolitan Police Magistrate, or other stipendiary Magistrate, or for any two Justices of the Peace, upon complaint made before him or them on oath, that the complainant has reason to believe and does believe that any obscene books, papers, writings, prints, pictures, drawings or other representations are kept in any house, shop, room, or other place within the limits of the jurisdiction of any such Magistrate or Justices, for the purpose of sale or distribution, exhibition for purposes of gain, lending upon hire, or being otherwise published for purposes of gain, which complainant shall also state upon oath that one or more articles of the like character have been sold, distributed, exhibited, lent, or otherwise published as aforesaid, at or in connexion with such place, so as to satisfy such whereby the Justices ordered certain books which had been seized in the dwelling-house of the appellant within their jurisdiction to be destroyed, as being obscene books within the meaning of the statute.

The appellant is a metal-broker, residing in the town of Wolverhampton, and a person of respectable position and character. He is a member of a body styled "The Protestant Electoral Union," whose objects are, inter alia, "to protest against those teachings of the Romish and Puseyite systems which are un-English, immoral and blasphemous," to "maintain the Protestantism of the Bible and the liberty of England," and "to promote the return to parliament of men who will assist them in these objects, and particularly will expose and defeat the deep-laid machinations of the Jesuits and resist grants of money for Romish purposes." In order to promote the objects and principles of the society, the appellant purchased from time to time, at the central office of the society in London, copies of a pamphlet entitled "The Confessional Unmasked, shewing the depravity of the Romish priesthood, the iniquity of the confessional and the questions put to females in confession," of which pamphlets he sold between two and three thousand copies at the price he gave for them, viz., 1s. each, to any person who applied for them.

A complaint was thereupon made before two Justices of the borough by a police officer, under the direction of the watch committee of the borough, and the Justices issued their warrant under the above-named statute, by virtue of which warrant 252 in number of such pamphlets were seized on the premises of the appellant, and ordered by the Justices to be destroyed as above mentioned.

The pamphlet (a copy of which accompanies and is to be taken as part of this case) consists of extracts taken from the works of certain theologians who have written at various times on the doctrines and discipline of the Church of Rome, and particularly on the practice of auricular confession. On the side of the page are printed passages in the original Latin, correctly extracted from the works of those writers, and opposite to each extract is placed a free translation of such extract into English. The pamphlet also contains a preface and notes, and comments condemnatory of the tenets and principles laid down by the authors from whose works the extracts are taken. About one-half of the pamphlet relates to casuistical and controversial questions which are not obscene, but the remainder of the pamphlet is obscene in fact, as relating to impure and filthy acts, words and ideas.

Magistrate or Justices that the belief of the said complainant is well founded, and upon such Magistrate or Justices, being also satisfied that any of such articles so kept for any of the purposes aforesaid are of such a character and description that the publication of them would be a misdemeanor and proper to be prosecuted as such"—power is given to the Magistrate or Justices to order any of the articles above mentioned to be seized and destroyed.

The appellant did not keep or sell the pamphlets for purposes of gain nor to prejudice good morals, though the indiscriminate sale and circulation of them are calculated to have that effect; but he kept and sold the pamphlets as a member of the "Protestant Electoral Union," to promote the objects of that society and to expose what he deemed to be errors of the Church of Rome, and particularly the immorality of the confessional.

I was of opinion that under these circumstances the sale and distribution of the pamphlets would not be a misdemeanor, nor, consequently, be proper to be prosecuted as such, and that the possession of them by the appellant was not unlawful within the meaning of the statute. I therefore quashed the order made by the Justices, and directed the pamphlets seized to be returned to the appellant; but at the request of the parties I have stated this case for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench. If the Court shall be of opinion upon the facts stated that the sale and distribution of the pamphlets by the appellant would be a misdemeanor and proper to be prosecuted as such, the order of the Justices for destroying the pamphlets so seized is to be enforced; if not, the order is to be quashed.

Kydd, for the respondent.—The decision of the Recorder was right. In order to make out that the publication of this pamphlet is a misdemeanor, the appellant must shew that it was published with an intention contrary to morality. But this cannot be shewn. The fact that the book is, first, controversial; secondly, that it is published with the object of enlightening the community as to the practices of the Romish Church, is conclusive evidence against any such intention. In The King v. Woodfall (2), Lord Mansfield says, "Where an act is in itself indifferent, if done with a particular intent it becomes criminal; then the intent must be proved and found: but where the act is in itself unlawful (as in this case), the proof of justification or excuse lies on the defendant, and in failure thereof the law implies a criminal intent." In their answers to questions put to them by the House of Lords on Mr. Fox's Libel Bill, the Judges said, "The crime consists in publishing a libel; a criminal intention in the writer is no part of the definition of the crime" — 22 State Trials, 229. But in Atton's case (3), although Lord Mansfield told the jury that the publication of Junius's celebrated Letter to the King was a libel, and the guilt of publishing it an inference of law from the act of publication, his Lordship admitted that the publication of a libel might be justified as legal or excused as innocent, by circumstances to be established by the defendant's proof. In Starkie on Evidence, 3rd edit. p. 1450, reference is made to a case of The King v. Dodsworth (4), where the defendant was indicted under the Reform Act for a false statement at the poll, that he had the same qualification for which his name was originally inserted on the register, and it appeared that he had ceased to occupy the tenement, but did at the time of the poll occupy another of the same value; it was held, that the jury to convict him must be satisfied that he was stating what he knew to be false. In The King v. Lambert (5), Lord Ellenborough, while stating that in his opinion it was doubtful whether the writing in question was meant as a calumny upon the Sovereign, allowed the jury to draw a conclusion favourable to the defendant from other parts of the work. In Buckmaster v. Reynolds (6), where the question was whether an intentional obstruction of the voting at an election of vestrymen by actual violence, was an offence within the meaning of section 21. of the Metropolis Local Management Act, Chief Justice Erle says, "A man cannot be said to be guilty of a delict unless to some extent his mind goes with the act. Here it seems that the respondent acted in the belief that he had a right to enter the room, and that he had no intention to do a wrongful act." In Dr. Johnson's 'Lives of the Poets,' vol. 2, he states that Savage lampooned the clergy in a poem entitled 'The Progress of a Divine,' for which an information was moved against him on the ground that it was an obscene libel; but it was urged "that obscenity was criminal when it was intended to promote the practice of vice, but that Mr. Savage had only introduced obscene ideas with the view of exposing them to detestation;" and the plea was admitted by Sir Philip Yorke, who dismissed the information. In Mr. Murray's Standard Edition of Lord Byron's works, p. 317, mention is made of Murray v. Benbow (7), an application to Lord Eldon for an injunction to restrain a piratical edition of Lord Byron's 'Cain'; and his Lordship, in refusing the injunction, said, "You have alluded to Milton's immortal work. It appears to me that the great object of the author was to promote the cause of Christianity. There are, undoubtedly, passages in it which, if that were not its object, it would be very improper by law to vindicate the publication; but taking it altogether, it is clear that the object and effect was, not to bring into disrepute, but to promote the reverence of our religion."

[BLACKBURN, J.—In the present case the Recorder has found that the object and effect of the work are of a very different kind.]

In Starkie on Slander and Libel, 2nd edit. 147, it is said, speaking of the criminal liability of an author in respect of the publication of his opinions, "A malicious and mischievous intention is in such cases the broad boundary between right and wrong."

[BLACKBURN, J.—Do you contend that the mere fact of having a legitimate object justifies the insertion of any matter, however improper or mischievous? LUSH, J.—

(7) See Petersdorff's Alldrig. vol. 6, p. 558.

Could you justify the sale of this pamphlet to boys in the streets?]

The defendant is bound to answer these questions in the affirmative. In many published works passages quite as objectionable as those in 'The Confessional Unmasked' may be found. For example, the modern edition of Clarkson's 'Practical Divinity of Papists,' published at Edinburgh.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—I suppose that this work is for circulation among a limited class of persons.]

Chaucer's works, Savage's 'Poem on Valentine's Day,' Jeremy Collier's 'English Stage,' Bayle's Dictionary, and a certain picture at Dulwich Gallery, might, on the same grounds, be objected to.

[LUSH, J.—It does not follow that, because such picture is exhibited, a photograph of it might be handed about in the streets.]

At the trial of Mr. MORON for blasphemy (8), Lord DENNEN, in directing the jury, said; "It was not sufficient that mere passages of such an offensive character should exist in a work in order to render the publication of it an act of criminality. It must appear that no condemnation of such passages appear in the context." In the case of The King v. Gathercole (9), Alderson, B. laid down the law respecting a libel on a religious institution, saying "The defendant has a right to entertain his opinions, to express them, and to discuss the subject of the Roman Catholic religion and its institutions; but he has no right to say of any particular body of persons (e.g. the inhabitants of a nunnery) that the place they inhabit is a brothel of prostitution, for in doing that he is attacking the individual characters of the body of whom the nunnery consists." In a case before the House of Lords, reported by Dr. Philip Farrer, and noticed in Campbell's Lives of the Chief Justices, vol. 2, p. 513, Lord Mansfield says, "The essential principles of revealed religion are part of the common law; so that any person reviling, subverting or ridiculing them, may be prosecuted at common law. But it cannot be shown from the principles of natural or revealed religion that, independent of positive law, temporal punishments ought to be inflicted for mere opinions with respect to particular modes of worship." He also cited Lawrence v. Smith (10), and The Queen v. Reed (11).

A. S. HILL, for the appellant.—The question is whether, looking at the words of the statute, the fact that it was the object of the defendant to promote the interests of the society to which he belonged makes the misdemeanor of which he has been guilty one which it is not proper to prosecute. This question involves two others: first, need any criminal intent be specified in the indictment? secondly, if this is the case, is not the intent necessarily implied from the publication of the book? With regard to the first question, the case may be illustrated by The King v. Vandonillo (12), where it was held that a person might be indicted for carrying along a public highway a child infected with the small-pox, although no particular intention of doing mischief was suggested. The publication of an indecent book is indictable, although it was once doubted, in The Queen v. Reed (11), in the sixth year of Queen Anne; but, from a note to this case, it appears that the authority of it was destroyed by The King v. Carl (13), which was an indictment for printing and publishing a libel called 'The Nun in her Smock.' In The King v. Dixon (14), where the defendant was indicted for supplying loaves of bread with which alum had been mixed to a military asylum, Lord Ellenborough said that it was a universal principle that when a man is charged with doing an act of which the probable consequence may be highly injurious, the intention is an inference of law resulting from the doing of the act; and the indictment alleged that the defendant delivered the loaves for the use and supply of the children, which could only mean for the children to eat. The publication is therefore prima facie indictable, and it lies on the defendant to excuse himself—The King v. Topham (15).—(He was then stopped.)

COCKBURN, C.J.—We have considered this matter, and we are of opinion that the judgment of the learned Recorder of Wolverhampton must be reversed, and the decision of the Magistrates be affirmed. This was a proceeding under the act of the 20 & 21 Vict. whereby it is enacted that, in respect of obscene books sold or distributed, Magistrates may order the seizure of such publications, in case they are of opinion that the works in question would have been the subject-matter of an indictment at law, and that such a prosecution ought to be instituted in the particular case, and they have power to order a destruction of the works. Now it is found here, as a fact, that the work which is the subject-matter of the present proceeding was, to a considerable extent, an obscene publication; and, by reason of the obscene matter in it, calculated to produce a pernicious effect in depraving and debauching the minds of the persons into whose hands it might come. The Magistrates were of opinion that the work was indictable, and that the publication of it was a fit and proper subject for indictment. We must take the first finding of the Magistrates to have been adopted by the learned Recorder, because it is not upon that ground he reversed their decision; he leaves that ground untouched; but he reversed their decision upon the ground that, although this work was an obscene publication, and although its tendency upon the public mind was that suggested upon the part of the information, yet that the immediate intention of the respondent was not so to affect the public mind, but to expose the practices and errors of the confessional system in the Roman Catholic Church. And we must take it upon the finding of the learned Recorder that such was the motive of this publication; that its intention was honestly and bona fide to expose the errors and practices of the Roman Catholic Church in the matter of confession. Upon that ground the learned Recorder thought an indictment could not have been sustained, inasmuch as, to the maintenance of the indictment, it would have been necessary that the intention should be alleged; namely, that of corrupting the public mind by the obscene matter in question. In that respect, I differ from him. I think that, if there be an infraction of the law and an intention to break the law, the criminal character of such publications is not affected or qualified by there being some ulterior object, which is the immediate and primary object of the parties in view, of a different and of an honest character. It is quite clear that the publishing an obscene book is an offence against the law of the land. It is perfectly true, as has been pointed out by Mr. Kydd, that there are a great many publications of high repute among the literary productions of this country, and many other works, the tendency of which is innocent and, it may be said, immoral; and possibly there might have been subject-matter for public indictment and prosecution in many of these works. But it is not to be said that, because there are in many standard and established works objectionable passages, that therefore the law is not as alleged on the part of this prosecution, namely, that obscene works are the subject-matter of indictment; and I think the test of obscenity is this, whether the tendency of the matter charged as obscenity is to deprave and corrupt those whose minds are open to such immoral influences and into whose hands a publication of this sort may fall. Now, with regard to this work, it is quite certain that it would suggest to the minds of the young of either sex, or even to persons of more advanced years, thoughts of a most impure and libidinous character. The very reason why this work is put forward, to expose the practices of the Roman Catholic confessional, is the tendency of questions involving practices and propensities of a certain description to do mischief to the minds of those to whom such questions are addressed, by suggesting thoughts and desires which otherwise would not have occurred to their minds. If that be the case, as between the priest and the person confessing, it manifestly must equally be so when the whole is put into the shape of a series of paragraphs, one following upon another, each involving some impure practice, some of them of the most filthy, and disgusting and unnatural description it is possible to imagine. I take it, therefore, that, apart from the ulterior object which the publisher of this work had in view, the work itself is, in every sense of the term, an obscene publication, and that, consequently, as the law of England does not allow of any obscene publication, such publication is indictable. We have it, therefore; that the publication itself is a breach of the law. But then it is said, "Yes; but the respondent's purpose was not to deprave the public mind; his purpose was to expose the errors of the Roman Catholic religion, especially in the matter of the confessional." Be it so. But then the question presents itself in this simple form: may you commit an offence against the law in order that thereby you may effect some ulterior object which you have in view, which may be an honest and even a laudable one? My answer is emphatically, No. The law says you shall not publish an obscene book. An obscene book is here published; and a book the obscenity of which is so clear and decided that it is impossible to suppose that the man who published it must not have known and seen that the effect upon the minds of many of those into whose hands it would come would be of a mischievous and demoralizing character. Is he justified in doing that which clearly would be wrong, legally as well as morally, because he thinks that some greater good may be accomplished? In order to prevent the spread and progress of Catholicism in this country, or, possibly, to extirpate it in another, and to prevent the state from affording any assistance to the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, is he justified in doing that which has necessarily the immediate tendency of demoralizing the public mind wherever this publication is circulated? It seems to me that to adopt the affirmative of that view would be to uphold something which, in my sense of what is right and wrong, would be most reprehensible. It appears to me the only good that is supposed to be accomplished is of the most uncertain character. This book, we are told, is circulated at the corners of streets and in all directions, and of course it falls into the hands of persons of all classes, — young and old, — and the minds of those hitherto pure are exposed to the danger of contamination and pollution from the impurity it contains. And for what? To prevent them, it is said, from becoming Roman Catholics; when the probability is, that 999 out of every 1,000 into whose hands this book would fall would never be exposed to the chance of being converted to the Roman Catholic religion. I think the old, sound and honest maxim, that you shall not do evil that good may come, is applicable in law as well as in morals; and here we have a certain and positive evil produced for the purpose of effecting an uncertain, remote and very doubtful good. I think, therefore, the case for the Magistrate's order is made out; and although I quite concur in thinking that the motive of the parties who published this book, however mistaken, was an honest one, yet I cannot suppose but that they knew perfectly that this book must have the tendency which in point of law makes it an obscene publication; namely, the tendency to corrupt the minds and morals of those into whose hands it might come. Though the mischief of it can scarcely be exaggerated, it is not upon that that I found my judgment. I take it, where a man publishes a work manifestly obscene, he must be taken to have had the intention which is implied from that act, and that as soon as you have an illegal act thus established quoad the intention and quoad the act, it does not lie in the mouth of the man who does it to say, "Well, I was breaking the law, but I was breaking it for some wholesome and salutary purpose." The law does not allow that. You must abide by the law, and if you accomplish your object, you must do it in a legal manner or let it alone. You must not do it in a manner which is illegal. I think that the Recorder's judgment must be reversed, and the conviction must be allowed to stand.

BLACKBURN, J. — I am of the same opinion. The question arises under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, an act for "the more effectually preventing the sale of obscene books," and so forth; and the provision in the 1st section is — (the learned Judge read section 1: at length). Now, what the Magistrate or Justices are to be satisfied of is this, — that the belief of the complainant is well founded; and also "that any of such articles so published for any of the purposes aforesaid are of such a character and description," that is to say, of such an obscene character and description, "that the publication of them would be a misdemeanor and proper to be prosecuted as such"; and having satisfied themselves in respect of those things, they may proceed to order the seizure of the work. So that the Justices are to be satisfied of three things: first, that the articles, complained of, have been, and are published; secondly, that they are of such a character that it would be a misdemeanor to publish them; and lastly, that it would not only be a misdemeanor to publish them, but a misdemeanor proper to be prosecuted as such. Then, and then only, are they to issue their warrant to seize them. I think, with respect to the last clause, that the object of the legislature was to guard against the vexatious prosecution of publishers of old and recognized standard works, in which there may be some obscene or mischievous matter. In Moxon's case (8) the publication of Shelley's 'Queen Mab' was found by the jury to be an indictable offence. I hope I may not be understood to agree with what the jury found, namely, that the publication of 'Queen Mab' was sufficient to make it an indictable offence; I believe that it was a prosecution instituted merely for the purpose of vexation and annoyance. I think the legislature put in that provision as to the propriety of the prosecution to guard against such a case.

It appears that the Magistrates in petty sessions were satisfied that the work was a proper subject for indictment. There was an appeal to Quarter Sessions to reverse their decision, which was successful. The learned Recorder, in stating the grounds on which he reversed their decision, says, "About one-half of the pamphlet relates to casuistical and controversial questions, which are not obscene; but the latter half of the pamphlet is obscene in fact, as containing passages which relate to impure and filthy acts, words and ideas. The appellant did not keep or sell the pamphlet for purposes of gain, nor to prejudice good morals, though the indiscriminate sale and circulation of it is calculated to have that effect; but he kept and sold the pamphlet as a member of the Protestant Electoral Union to promote the objects of that society, and to expose what he deemed to be errors in the Church of Rome, and particularly the immorality of the confessional. I was of opinion that the sale and distribution of the pamphlet would not be a misdemeanor, nor be proper to be prosecuted as such;" and upon that ground he quashed their decision, leaving to us the question whether he was right or not. Upon that I understand the Recorder to find the facts as follows: he finds that one-half of the book was in fact obscene, and he finds that the effect of it would be such that the sale and circulation of it was calculated to prejudice good morals, but he decides that it would not be indictable at all as a misdemeanor, and consequently; that it would not be proper to prosecute it as a misdemeanor; and his reason is this, that the object of the person publishing it was not to injure public morality, but to expose the errors of the Church of Rome, and particularly the immorality, as he thought it, of the confessional. I have come to the conclusion that the Recorder was wrong, and that it would be indictable. I take the rule of law to be as stated by Lord Ellenborough in The King v. Dixon (14). He says, "It is a universal principle that when a man is charged with doing an act," that is, a wrongful act without legal justification, "of which the probable consequence may be highly injurious, the intention is an inference of law resulting from the doing the act." And although the respondent may have had another object in view, he must be taken to have intended that which is the natural consequence of the act. If he does an act which is illegal, it does not make it legal because he did it with some other object. That is not a legal excuse, unless the object was something which rendered the particular act he did lawful. That is illustrated by The King v. Dixon (14). There a contractor supplied bread to a Military Asylum, which was unwholesome and deleterious; and although it was not shewn or suggested that he intended to make the children suffer, yet Lord Ellenborough held, that he had done an unlawful act in giving them bread which was deleterious, and that an indictment could be sustained. So in a case in which a person carried another who was suffering from a contagious disease, along a public road, to the danger of the health of all those who happened to be in that road, it was held to be a misdemeanor, without its being said that he intended that anybody should catch the disease. If a person carried anybody suffering from small-pox through a crowd, that would be an indictable offence, although he might be perfectly innocent of any wish to infect anybody in that crowd. If, on the other hand, the Small Pox Hospital was on fire, and an individual in endeavouring to save the infected inmates from the flames, took some of them into the crowd, although some of the crowd would be liable to catch the small-pox, yet, in that case he would not be guilty of a wrongful act, and he would not do it with a wrong intention. Now, in the present case the Recorder has found that one-half of this book is obscene, and nobody who looks at the pamphlet can for a moment doubt that, and that the indiscriminate circulation of it in the way in which it appears to have been circulated, must be calculated, and is calculated, to prejudice the morals of the people. The object was to expose and attack the Roman Catholic religion, or practice rather, and particularly the Roman Catholic confessional, and it was not intended to injure public morals; but that would be no excuse whatever for the act. I do not think there is anything wrong in taking the view that the Roman Catholics are not right; any Protestant may say that, without saying anything illegal. Any Roman Catholic may say, if he pleases, that Protestants are altogether wrong, and that Roman Catholics are right; there is nothing illegal in that. But I think it never can be said that in doing that you may do something contrary to public morality; that you may publish obscene publications, and distribute them amongst every one, schoolboys and every one else, when the inevitable effect must be to injure public morality, on the ground that you have an innocent object in view, that is to say, that of attacking the Roman Catholic religion, which you have a right to do. If the book is an obscene publication, then, notwithstanding that the wish was not to injure public morality, but merely to attack the Roman Catholic religion and practice, still, I think its publication would be an indictable offence. The question, no doubt, will be a question for the jury, but I do not think you could construe this act by saying, that whenever there is a wrongful act of this sort committed, that you must take into consideration the intention and object of the party in committing it, and if a laudable one, that that would deprive the Justices of jurisdiction. The Justices must themselves be satisfied that the publication, such as the publication before us, would be a misdemeanor on account of its obscenity, and therefore that it would be indictable if it was such a misdemeanor. The Recorder has found that it is obscene, and he supports the Justices in every finding, except in what he has reversed it upon. He finds the object of the appellant in publishing the work was not to prejudice good morals, and consequently he thinks it would not be indictable at all. But I do not understand him for a moment to say that if he had not thought there was a legal object in view, it would not have been a misdemeanor at all, and that therefore it would have been vexatious or improper to indict the seller of such a book, nor do I think that anybody who looks at it would for a moment have a doubt upon the matter. I have come to the conclusion that the publication is a misdemeanor, and that an indictment would lie; and consequently the Recorder's decision is quashed, and the conviction is affirmed.

MELLOR, J.—I confess that it is with some difficulty, and with some hesitation, that I have arrived very much at the same conclusion as that at which my Lord and my learned Brothers have arrived. My difficulty was mainly whether or not this case was, having regard to the finding of the Recorder, within the act with reference to obscene publications. I am not certainly in a condition to dissent from the view which my Lord and my Brothers have taken as to this question; and if it be answered in the affirmative, then I agree with what has been said by my Lord and my Brother Blackburn. The subject itself, if it is a subject which may be discussed at all, and I think it undoubtedly may, is one which cannot be dealt with without, to a certain extent, producing authorities for the assertion that the confessional would be a mischievous thing to be introduced into this kingdom, and therefore the offence, it appears to me, is very much a question of degree, more or less, and proper for the jury. Now I take it for granted, that the Magistrates themselves were perfectly satisfied that this pamphlet went far beyond anything which was necessary or legitimate for the purpose of attacking the confessional, and I think that on looking at this book myself, I cannot question the finding either of the Recorder or of the Justices. It does appear to me that there is a great deal here which there cannot be any necessity for, in any legitimate argument on the confessional and the like; and in this view, I certainly am not in a condition to dissent from my Lord and my Brother Blackburn. Therefore, with the expression of hesitation I have mentioned, I agree in the result at which they have arrived.

LURK, J.—I agree entirely in the result at which the rest of the Court have arrived, and I adopt the argument and the reasoning of my Lord Chief Justice and my Brother Blackburn.

1868. } THE QUEEN v. M'KALE.*
April 25. }

Larceny — Inchoate Transaction — Obtaining Money by False Pretences.

A. and B. went into a shop, and A. bought a pennyworth of sweets, and gave a florin in payment. The prosecutrix put the florin into the till and took out of the till one shilling and sixpence in silver, and five-pence in copper, and put the change on the counter. A. took up the change; B. said to A. that he need not have changed, and threw down a penny. A. took up the penny and then put down sixpence in silver and sixpence in copper, and asked the prosecutrix to give him a shilling in change. She took a shilling from the till and put it on the counter beside the sixpence in silver and sixpence in copper. A. then said to the prosecutrix that she might as well give him the florin and take it all. She took the florin from the till and put that on the counter, expecting she was to receive two shillings of the prisoner's money. The prisoner went away with the florin. The prosecutrix did not discover her mistake till she was putting the change into the till, but at the same moment B. distracted her attention by asking the price of some sweets:—Held, that the transaction was inchoate when the prosecutrix discovered her mistake, and that she never intended finally to part with her property in the florin till she received two shillings of the prisoner's money, and that the offence was larceny, and not obtaining money by false pretences, and that the conviction was right.

CASE reserved by the Chairman of Quarter Sessions for Nottinghamshire.

At the Sessions holden at Nottingham in December last, Patrick M'Kale was indicted and tried before me for feloniously stealing two shillings, the moneys of Elizabeth Pickering.

At the trial, it was proved that Mrs. Pickering kept a shop for the sale of small articles; that on the 25th of October the prisoner and another man, not in custody, both strangers to Mrs. Pickering, went into her shop, and the prisoner asked Mrs. Pickering for a pennyworth of peppermints (sweetmeats), which she served, and prisoner put on the counter a two-shilling-piece in payment. Mrs. Pickering took up the two-shilling-piece and put it into the money-drawer, and took out of the same drawer a shilling and a sixpence in silver, and five-pence in copper, and put these moneys (one shilling and elevenpence) on the counter as the proper change for the two shillings, after deducting the penny for the sweetmeats. The prisoner took up the one shilling and elevenpence, and the other man said to prisoner "What was it you gave her?" Mrs. Pickering replied, "A two-shilling-piece"; the other man said to the prisoner, "You need not have changed," and at the same time threw down a penny on the counter. The prisoner took up the penny and put a sixpence in silver and sixpence in copper on the counter, and said to Mrs. Pickering, "Here, mistress, give me a shilling for this." Mrs. Pickering then took a shilling out of the money-drawer and put that shilling on the counter, and prisoner said to her, "You may as well give me the two-shilling-piece and take it all." Mrs. Pickering then took from the money-drawer the same two-shilling-piece she had received from the prisoner, and put that on the counter, expecting she was to receive two shillings of the prisoner's money in exchange for it. The prisoner took up the two-shilling-piece and Mrs. Pickering took up the silver sixpence and the sixpence in copper put down by the prisoner, and also the shilling put down by herself, and was putting them into the money-drawer, when she saw she had only got the silver sixpence and sixpence in copper of the prisoner's money, and the shilling of her own money in exchange for the two-shilling-piece, but at the same moment the prisoner's companion pointed to some twist sweetmeats, and said to her, "How do you sell that?" and before she could speak the prisoner pushed his companion by the shoulders and said, "You don't want any of that," and both went out of the shop, the prisoner taking the two-shilling-piece.

Corroborative evidence was given, and the prisoner denied being in the shop.

In answer to a question, Mrs. Pickering said she did not intend parting with the two-shilling-piece without getting full change for it.

Upon this evidence it was contended by the counsel for the prisoner, first, that upon the facts proved the prisoner could not be convicted of larceny upon the present indictment. Secondly, that Mrs. Pickering parted not only with the possession of the two-shilling-piece, but also with the property in it, and therefore there was no larceny.

Upon these objections counsel for the prisoner called upon me not to let the case go to the jury. I refused to stop the case, and directed the jury, first, that Mrs. Pickering was deprived of a shilling in value, for that the prisoner, taking the two-shilling-piece, left her in exchange only one shilling of his money. Secondly, that although Mrs. Pickering did put down the two-shilling-piece on the counter, intending to part with it in exchange for two shillings, yet that, if the jury believed she intended only to part with it in exchange for two shillings of the prisoner's money, the parting with it by her under the circumstances stated would not be a parting with the property in it, if the jury believed those circumstances to be fraudulently contrived by the prisoner and his companion.

I left it to the jury to say whether the taking away of the two-shilling-piece under the circumstances was an error or mistake, and unintentional on the part of the prisoner, or whether they believed that the prisoner and his companion went into the shop intending to defraud Mrs. Pickering; and that they did obtain from her by fraud the two-shilling-piece, meaning to steal from her a shilling in value; and if they should be of the latter opinion, I directed them that that was larceny.

Upon this direction, the jury found the prisoner guilty; and a case being demanded, I state this case for the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal.

If the Court shall be of opinion that the facts proved do not amount to larceny, and that my direction was wrong, the prisoner is to be discharged; but if the Court think the facts proved do amount to larceny, and that I directed the jury right, the prisoner is to be brought up for sentence.

John Mellor, for the prisoner.—The property in the two-shilling-piece was parted with by Mrs. Pickering when she put it down on the counter. She may have been under a mistaken impression that the money on the counter was all of it the prisoner's money; but if she intended to part with her property in the two-shilling-piece at that moment, the prisoner cannot be convicted of larceny, for there would be no trespass committed by him in taking it. This constitutes the distinction between larceny and obtaining money by false pretences. In 2 Rus. on Crimes, 196, 4th edit. by Greaves, it is laid down that "if the owner part with the property in goods taken, there can be no felony in the taking, however fraudulent the means by which such delivery was procured." So in The Queen v. Nicholson (1), cited at length in 2 Rus. on Crimes, 198, it was held that the property in the post-bills and cash was parted with by the prosecutor under the idea that it had been fairly won, and that a conviction for larceny was wrong, and there the prosecutor was under the mistaken impression that the gambling transaction was a real one, whilst in truth it was a preconcerted scheme to deprive the prosecutor of his money.

[KELLY, C.B.—But here the transaction was not complete. Mrs. Pickering discovered her mistake before she had passed the property in the money. The whole transaction was in fieri when the prisoner went off with the money.]

In the ring-dropping case, the prosecutor never intended to part with the property in the watch, &c., but always intended to get it back again—The Queen v. Patch (2).

[MONTAGUE SMITH, J.—Here the prosecutrix parted with the two-shilling-piece on condition that she should have two shillings of the prisoner's money, but this she never got.]

No; she parted with the florin under the mistaken impression that she had got two shillings of the prisoner's money on the counter.

[KELLY, C.B. — But she discovers her mistake while she is putting the money into the drawer, and before she has finished putting it away.]

Case, for the prosecution.—The conviction for larceny is right, for the prosecutrix never had parted with her property in the florin. The transaction is still inchoate and incomplete when she discovers her mistake, and would have rectified it but for the act of the prisoner's companion in drawing off her attention to some sweets, and the prisoner's leaving the shop. In The Queen v. O'neer (3), the prisoner was indicted for stealing 35*l.* He had obtained a quantity of gold, went to a public-house, and the prosecutor came into the house, having a quantity of notes. The prisoner shewed his gold, the prosecutor asked him to give him some of the gold in change for notes. This was done to a small amount, and afterwards the prisoner offered to accommodate the prosecutor in a similar manner. The prosecutor put down notes to the amount of 35*l.*, which the prisoner took up and went out, promising to return immediately with the gold, which he never did. And this was held to be larceny, and the question turned upon the intention of the prisoner. It was there said, "As to what had been said with regard to parting with the property, it had in truth never been parted with at all. That could only be done by contract, which required the assent of two minds, but here was not the assent of the mind either of the prosecutor or the prisoner. The prosecutor only meant to part with his notes on the faith of having the gold in return, and the prisoner never meant to barter, but to steal." The Queen v. Williams (4) is on all-fours with the present case. There the prisoner went to the shop of the prosecutor and asked the prosecutor's son, who was a boy, to give him change for a half-a-crown. The boy gave him two shillings and six penny pieces, and the prisoner held out a half-a-crown, of which the boy caught hold of the edge, but never got it. The prisoner then ran away, and it was held to be a larceny. The Queen v. Rodway (5) is in point to the same effect.

[PIGOTT, B. referred to The Queen v. Jackson (6), where it was held not to be larceny when the chattel had been parted with under the impression that the prisoner had returned a parcel containing diamonds, which in fact he had not done.]

Mellor, in reply, referred to The Queen v. Bunce (7), decided by Mr. Baron Channell and Mr. Justice Crompton, and the note thereon in 2 Rus. on Crimes, 202, in which it is said that wherever the prosecutor parts with the property without expecting it to be returned, the indictment ought to be for false pretences.

KELLY, C.B.—This case has been very ably argued on both sides. The question is whether a larceny has been committed by the prisoner. The distinction is well settled between obtaining a chattel by means of a fraud and stealing it. If the property in the chattel is parted with by the prosecutor, though the possession is obtained by a fraud, that would not be a larceny; but then the transaction must be complete. Then the question is, had the prosecutrix parted with the property in the florin when the prisoner carried it off? I think not. Mrs. Pickering kept a shop for the sale of sweets; the prisoner came in; the florin is taken out; the money is put on the counter; the shilling belonging to Mrs. Pickering is also there. The prisoner says, "You may as well give me the two-shilling-piece and take it all." Mrs. Pickering then took the same two-shilling-piece and put that on the counter, expecting she was to receive two shillings of the prisoner's money. The prisoner wishes to have the two-shilling-piece, and he is to give a shilling and sixpence in silver and sixpence in copper for it. Did the prosecutrix part with the property in the two-shilling-piece at the moment she put it on the counter? Clearly not. She expected to receive two shillings of the prisoner's money; and if her attention had not been distracted, she would have stopped the prisoner before he left the shop. The placing of the money on the counter was only one step in the transaction. The taking up of the two-shilling-piece by the prisoner could not affect the question whether the prosecutrix intended to part with the property in the money, and would not make the transaction complete. Nor, again, would the taking up of the other money by the prosecutrix affect that question or complete the transaction. She is putting it into the drawer when she discovers her mistake; the transaction is not then completed, and she has not received the change which she expected to receive when her attention is taken off and the prisoner quits the shop. I think her property in the florin continued until she received what she expected to receive. It appears to me to be the same case as if the prisoner, with 18s. in his hand, had asked her to give him a sovereign in change, and she lays the sovereign on the counter and he the silver: he takes up the sovereign and leaves the shop before she has counted the silver; and then she counts the silver, and discovers that she has only 18s. instead of 20s. I think that would be larceny. The cases cited by the counsel for the prosecution bear out this view of the case. Then, as to The Queen v. Jackson (6), referred to by my Brother Pigott, that was a case of a pawnbroker's servant who delivers a chattel to the prisoner, receiving in exchange what he believes to be a parcel of diamonds, does not open the parcel at the time, and does not discover that they are not diamonds, then the accused leaves the shop, and the parcel is put away. There the transaction is complete; all took place and was done before the chattel was delivered over, with the knowledge that the prisoner was about to depart with it. But no such distinction as that between larceny and obtaining property by means of false pretences exists in this case. The putting the money on the counter was no final delivery to the prisoner of the coin. I think, therefore, this conviction should be sustained.

KEATING, J., and PIGOTT, B., concurred.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J.—I have felt some doubt, but now think that the conviction is right. The prosecutrix thought that she would get 2s. of the prisoner's money when she put down the two-shilling-piece expecting to receive it. She did not get that money.

LUSH, J.—Upon the construction of the facts that the prosecutrix put down the two-shilling-piece expecting to receive 2s. from the prisoner,—that is to say, two shillings from the prisoner's pocket as well as the shilling of her own on the counter,—I think the conviction right; but I was in doubt for a long time, for I thought that she parted with the two-shilling-piece thinking that the two shillings on the counter were the prisoner's money.

Conviction affirmed.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1868. } THE QUEEN v. THE GUARDIANS
May 9. } OF THE MEDWAY UNION.

Pauper Lunatic—Order of Adjudication—Order of Maintenance—Party to Appeal
—16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 97.—24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 6.

By an order of Justices, dated the 29th of September, 1865, the last legal settlement of a pauper lunatic was adjudged to be in the parish of A, in the union of F, and the guardians of F. were ordered to pay certain costs of maintenance to the guardians of the Medway Union, who had obtained the order, and certain other costs to the treasurer of the asylum in which the lunatic was confined:—Held, that the overseers of A. had, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 108, a right to appeal against the order, and that there was nothing in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. to deprive them of such right.

This was an appeal by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Aldershot, to the General Quarter Sessions of the county of Kent, held on the 5th of July, 1866, against an order adjudicating the settlement of one Henry Wilson, a pauper lunatic, and ordering certain expenses of his maintenance to be paid as therein mentioned, when the order was quashed, subject to the following

CASE.

The order appealed against was made by two Justices of Kent, dated the 29th of September, 1865, and directed to the Guardians of the Medway Poor Law Union, hereinafter called the respondents, and the Guardians of the Farnham Poor Law Union, whereby the Justices did adjudge the last legal settlement of Henry Wilson, then confined in the Lunatic Asylum, at Barming Heath, in the county of Kent, to be in the parish of Aldershot in the Farnham Poor Law Union, and whereby the Justices did order the guardians of the poor of the Farnham Union to pay to the respondents certain sums which had been expended by the respondents as in the order mentioned, and also weekly and every week from the date of the order to pay to the treasurer of the asylum a certain further sum as in the order set forth.

A copy or duplicate of the order, together with the statements required by the statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 99. s. 107, setting forth the grounds of adjudication, including the particulars of the settlement relied on in support thereof, and addressed to the guardians of the poor of the Farnham Poor Law Union, and to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Aldershot, was sent by the respondents to the guardians and the churchwardens and overseers respectively on the 5th of October, 1865.

Against this order the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Aldershot entered an appeal to the above-mentioned sessions. Upon the appeal coming on to be heard, it was objected on the part of the respondents that the appeal ought to have been brought by the guardians of the poor of the Farnham Poor Law Union, and not by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Aldershot, and it was contended that the churchwardens and overseers had no right to appeal against the order, inasmuch as they were not parties to the order or proceedings before the Justices, and the expenses of maintaining the lunatic were under the statute, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. ss. 6. and 7, thrown upon the common fund of the Farnham Poor Law Union. The Court overruled the objection, heard the appeal upon the merits, and quashed the order.

The question for the decision of this Court was, whether the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Aldershot had a right to appeal against the order.

If the Court should answer this question in the affirmative, the order of Sessions was to be confirmed; but if in the negative, the order of Sessions was to be quashed.

Barrow and Jephson, for the appellants.—This is an order made under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 97, and by section 108. it is provided that if the guardians of any union or the overseers of any parish feel aggrieved by any such order, they may appeal against the same. In The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding (1) it was held that this section expressly gave a right of appeal to the overseers, and that decision is binding upon the question now before the Court. It will be said that a difference is made by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 7, which provides that the guardians may appeal, and that inasmuch as by section 6. the costs as to lunatic paupers are thrown upon the common fund of the union, it was intended that the overseers should no longer have any right to appeal. But it is submitted that that is a mistake. The overseers of the parish in which the lunatic is adjudged to be settled had, at the time this order was made, an interest in the question whether the order was right or not, because the order would, if unappealed against, have been conclusive as to the settlement of the pauper, and of others deriving their settlement from him.

(1) 26 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 41.

Again, the overseers of this parish would have a peculiar knowledge, which neither the guardians nor the overseers of any other parish in the union would possess. The family of the lunatic would be chargeable to the parish. The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. does not touch the right of appeal given by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 97. s. 108. There is no express repeal of that section, and there is no repugnancy or contrariety which, according to the ordinary rule laid down in Dwarris on Statutes, 674, would amount to an implied repeal. The appeal given by section 7. is ex abundanti cautela.

Prentice and Biron, for the respondents.
—The provision in section 7. of 24 & 25 Vict. s. 55. is entirely useless if the contention of the appellants is correct; for according to that argument, the guardians as well as the overseers had an undoubted right of appeal existing in them under section 108. of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 97. But this order is made under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55; and when it is found that a right of appeal is expressly given to the guardians, and none at all to the overseers, it follows that the legislature must have intended that there should be no longer any right of appeal in the latter. The order is not directed to the overseers, though it is true that notice was given to them of the order being made.

[HANNEN, J.—This order is in exactly the same terms as it would have been in, supposing it had been made under section 97. of 17 & 18 Vict. c. 97. Can you say that the two acts are so inconsistent as to amount to a repeal of the 108th section?]

That act may be disregarded altogether now. The expenses are thrown upon the common fund, so that the guardians are the proper parties to appeal against the order.

LUSH, J.—I am of opinion that the Sessions were right. Under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. it was decided, in The Queen v. the Justices of the West Riding (1), that either the overseers or the guardians or both had a right of appeal; and then the question arises whether there is anything in the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. which shews that the overseers have no right of appeal against this order. Under the former statute the guardians, upon whom the order had been made, would charge expenses against the parish in which the lunatic had been adjudged to be settled; that is now altered by the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 6, which throws the costs of maintenance, &c., upon the common fund instead of upon the individual parish. But the order is still made under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, and the same meaning must be put upon the statute as was decided in the case already referred to. The costs of maintaining the family of the lunatic might still be thrown upon the parish of settlement, and I can hardly suppose that the legislature intended to take away the right of appeal from the overseers. It is said that by implication, section 7. has that effect; but I am of opinion that section 108. of the first act and section 7. of the second may well stand together. I do not see that it has the effect contended for. It says, the guardians "may appeal against or defend any orders in respect of any lunatic paupers hereby made chargeable upon the common fund of the union, in like manner and subject to the same incidents and provisions as are contained in the said last-cited act in respect of lunatic paupers chargeable to any parish in such union, provided that any appeal now pending may be continued and determined as though this act had not been passed." I do not know why it should have been enacted that the guardians might appeal; the legislature seem to ignore the provision in the former act, but there is nothing inconsistent in the two enactments, and there is nothing to shew that the 108th section is repealed by implication.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Turnpike Act (3 Geo. 4. c. 126), s. 32.
 —Exemption from Toll—Curate—Parochial Duties.

The curate of a parish was engaged by the rector of a neighbouring parish of C. to discharge his clerical duties during his temporary absence through illness. There was no licence from the bishop or other authority by which the curate was empowered to perform the duties. He rode through a turnpike-gate on his way to the parish church of C. to perform the ceremony of marriage :—Held, that he was not entitled to the exemption from toll given by 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32. to the curate of a parish on parochial duty within his parish.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. for the opinion of this Court.

At a petty sessions holden at Hackthorpe in and for the division of West Ward, in the county of Westmorland, on the 2nd of September, 1867, an information and complaint preferred by the Rev. Joseph Brunskill, hereinafter called the appellant, against Sarah Watson, herein-after called the respondent, under 4 Geo. 4. c. 95. s. 30, charging for that she, the said Sarah Watson, on Saturday the 6th of July, 1867, at the parish of Clifton, in the county of Westmorland, then being the collector of the tolls at a certain turnpike-gate there called the Clifton Turnpike-Gate, on a certain turnpike-road, there situate, called "The Eamont Bridge and Heronsyke Turnpike Road," unlawfully did demand and take from Joseph Brunskill the sum of twopence, as and for the toll of a horse on which he was then riding, he being exempt from the payment of such toll by reason of his being de facto curate of the parish of Clifton, and going on his parochial duty within his said parish of Clifton, and then and there duly claiming the exemption, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, was heard and determined by the Justices, the parties being then present; and upon such hearing the information and complaint were dismissed.

Upon the hearing, it was proved on the part of the informant, the appellant, that he was a clergyman of the Church of England, and curate of the parish of Askham, which adjoins the parish of Lowther, and was resident at Hackthorpe, in the parish of Lowther, in the county of Westmorland, distant about two miles and a half from the rectory of the parish of Clifton, in the same county, but was not a beneficed clergyman having the cure of souls; that shortly prior to the 6th of July, the rector of the parish of Clifton, through ill health, was obliged to leave his parish and go to the sea-side, and he engaged the appellant to discharge the clerical duties of the parish of Clifton during his absence.

The appellant admitted, first, that the arrangement or engagement between himself and the rector of Clifton was not communicated to the bishop of the diocese; secondly, that the appellant was not licensed as the curate of the parish of Clifton de facto, or otherwise by the bishop of the diocese during the rector's absence; thirdly, that the appellant had no written or verbal permission or authority from the bishop authorizing him to perform the duties of curate or other clerical duties, of or for the parish of Clifton during the rector's absence. On Saturday, the 6th of July, 1867, the appellant was riding on the turnpike-road from Hackthorpe, in the parish of Lowther, where he resides, into the parish of Clifton, for the purpose of performing a marriage ceremony in the parish church of Clifton, which was to take place on that day. On arriving at the Clifton turnpike-gate, situate within the parish of Clifton, at which the respondent was collector, toll to the amount of twopence was demanded by the respondent; the appellant claimed exemption, telling the respondent that he was the acting clergyman of the parish of Clifton, and that he was then going on the parochial duties of the parish, namely, to perform the marriage service. The appellant paid the toll, and summoned the collector as herein-before mentioned.

It was contended by the appellant, on the authority of Temple v. Dickinson (1), that he was de facto curate of the parish of Clifton, and at the time of demand made he was actually going to the Clifton parish church for the purpose of discharging clerical duty therein, and was therefore entitled to the exemption claimed.

It was contended by the respondent's counsel that the appellant was not legally entitled to exemption from the toll under the statute 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32, on the ground that he was not curate of the parish of Clifton within the meaning of the exemption, he having no permission or sanction whatsoever from the bishop of the diocese to perform the duties of curate of that parish.

The Justices being of opinion that the appellant was merely the officiating minister for the time being of the parish of Clifton, at the request of the rector of Clifton during his absence, and not de facto or otherwise curate of the parish of Clifton, with the permission or sanction of the bishop of the diocese to act in that capacity, decided that he was not entitled to the exemption claimed, and dismissed the information and complaint as hereinbefore stated.

The opinion of this Court was requested as to whether they were right in point of law.

Crompton Hutton, for the appellant.—The facts stated in the case shew that the appellant was de facto the curate of Clifton, and therefore it follows that he was exempt from the payment of toll. It is not necessary that he should have been licensed or appointed by the bishop—see Temple v. Dickinson (1), where Lord Campbell, C.J. said, "There seems to me no doubt that the respondent was within the exemption of the act. He was de facto curate, though not perhaps legally so for want of a formal licence; but it was not for the turnpike-man to question the legal title." The fact that he had not obtained a licence from the bishop is immaterial, and does not prevent him from being curate de facto, the officiating minister of the parish.

[LUSH, J.—If a clergyman goes away for a single Sunday, and employs a neighbouring clergyman to bury a single corpse for him on that day, could it be said that the latter would be exempt under this section?]

Yes, the section exempts any clergyman going to perform parochial duties in the absence of the clergyman of the parish.—He also referred to Rogers's Ecclesiastical Law, 274, and to Arthington v. the Bishop of Chester (2).

H. James, contra, was not heard.

LUSH, J.—We need not trouble you, Mr. James, to argue this case. I am of opinion that our judgment must be for the respondent. By the 32nd section, "no toll shall be demanded or taken from any rector, vicar or curate going to or returning from visiting any sick parishioner, or on other his parochial duty within his parish." The question is, whether this gentleman could be said to have been a curate within the meaning of those words at the time he passed the gate. I am clearly of opinion that he could not, and therefore that he is not within the exemption from toll. Take the case of a neighbouring clergyman going on a mission for the purpose of giving temporary assistance in conducting a funeral service in the temporary absence of the rector of a parish. I think that he could not be said to be in the exercise of his parochial duty as a curate within his parish. The argument must go the length that he would be exempt from toll if he was invited by another clergyman to do his duty in his parish simply for one day. The intention of the legislature was to give the benefit of the exemption to the rector, vicar or curate actually performing the parochial duties within his parish. Temple v. Dickinson (1) was a very different case from the present. There was an interregnum after the resignation of the vicar, and Mr. Dickinson had been appointed by the churchwardens, and authorized by the bishop's secretary, to officiate as curate until the new incumbent should come into residence. He was therefore responsible for the performance of the duties of the benefice. The Court held that he was de facto curate, although he was not possessed of a regular licence; but that decision does not touch the present case.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Betting-Houses—Act for the Suppression of—16 & 17 Vict. c. 119. ss. 1, 3.—“Office or Place.”

Upon a slip of land adjoining a race-course during the races was erected a temporary wooden structure, five feet high, without a roof. Over it a board was exhibited, upon which was the name of the proprietor and betting lists containing the odds upon and against each horse which he was willing to bet. The structure had two frontages, and boards used as desks fronting each way. At each desk within a man sat with a book for the purpose of recording the bets made with persons outside. Persons betting deposited money and received a card containing the terms of the bet:—Held, that this was an “office or place” within the meaning of the Act for the Suppression of Betting-Houses.

CASE stated by Justices of Doncaster under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, the material facts of which were as follows:

On the 19th of September, 1867, at Doncaster petty sessions, an information was preferred against the appellant by the respondent under the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119. s. 3, for having the care and management of and assisting to conduct the business of a certain office and place within the limits of the borough of Doncaster, being then and there opened, kept and used for the purpose of betting with persons resorting thereto, and for the purpose of money being received by and on behalf of the occupier and keeper of the said office and place as and for the consideration for an assurance, undertaking, promise and agreement, express or implied, to pay money on certain events and contingencies of and relating to a certain horse-race, contrary to the form of the statute, &c.

The corporation of Doncaster, as lords of the manor, are owners of the soil of the Doncaster Town Moor, commonly called the Race-Course. Upon a portion of this ground have been built certain race-stands, and the ground upon which they are built and that adjoining and in front is inclosed by iron railings, and called the Inclosure.

On the east side of the inclosure, at a distance of 6 feet, is a permanent wooden palisade, and the space so formed, about 44 yards long by 6 feet deep, was up to the year 1866 not employed during the races except for the purposes of police.

In 1867, previously to the race meeting of that year, the committee of the town council that managed the race meetings let to one William Nicholl the use of the said strip of land at the east end of the grand stand inclosure for the four race days of the race-meeting of September, 1867, for the purposes of betting and exhibiting betting lists.

On the race day of the 10th of September, 1867, the said strip of land so let to the said William Nicholl as aforesaid was partitioned, and upon each plot of land so partitioned a wooden structure was erected, five feet high: the iron palisades above mentioned being at one side and the wood fence above mentioned on the other. These structures presented two frontages, and the structure of which the appellant was charged with having the care and management was covered with green baize and had boards used as desks fronting each way. There was a book on each desk, and a man sat at each desk who acted as clerk and recorded the proceedings in the books. Over this structure on a board fronting both ways was the name and address, “William Nicholl, of Nottingham.” There were papers, partly written and partly printed, on it, with the names of races, horses and betting prices. The betting list exhibited on it the odds upon and against each horse in each race which the proprietor of the structure, William Nicholl, was willing to bet. The appellant [Shaw] transacted the betting business at one frontage of this structure; he betted the odds, six half-sovereigns to one against a horse called Knight Errant in the Great Yorkshire Handicap, received a deposit of half-a-sovereign, and called out the transaction to the clerk at the desk, who entered it in the book and gave to the taker of the odds a card on which were a number and the following words: “William Nicholl, Nottingham. All in, run or not. All bets paid immediately the winner has passed the scale. No objection afterwards will on any consideration be entertained." Other similar transactions by the appellant took place on the same day. It was contended, inter alia, on the part of the appellant, that the structure on the race-common was not a "house, office, room or place" within the meaning of the act.

The Justices, however, being of the contrary opinion, convicted the appellant.

The questions for the opinion of the Court were, first, whether the structure was a "betting office" within the meaning of the act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119; secondly, whether the structure was a "place" within the meaning of the same act (1).

Manisty (Merevether with him), for the appellant.—The structure in respect of which the appellant was convicted was not an "office or place" within the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119. s. 3. The act was aimed against betting-houses and places of a

(1) The 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119. ss. 1, 3. enacts as follows:

Section 1. "No house, office, room or other place shall be opened, kept or used for the purpose of the owner, occupier or keeper thereof, or any person using the same, or any person procured or employed by or acting for or on behalf of such owner, occupier or keeper, or person using the same, or of any person having the care or management or in any manner conducting the business thereof, betting with persons resorting thereto; or for the purpose of any money or valuable thing being received by or on behalf of such owner, occupier, keeper or person as aforesaid as or for the consideration for any assurance, undertaking, promise or agreement, expressed or implied, to pay or give thereafter any money or valuable thing on any event or contingency of or relating to any horse-race or other race, fight, game, sport or exercise, or as or for the consideration for securing the paying or giving by some other person of any money or valuable thing on any such event or contingency as aforesaid; and every house, office, room or other place opened, kept or used for the purposes aforesaid, or any of them, is hereby declared to be a common nuisance and contrary to law."

permanent character—Doggett v. Cattermoss (2). This structure was open at the top and perfectly movable. The legislature did not mean to interfere with persons making bets on a race-course, but to put down a certain well-known class of establishments which was considered to be of a pernicious character. All the town council have here done is to confine to a certain appointed spot what people might otherwise do in every part of the inclosure. How does this really differ from betting under a tree in Hyde Park, which was held not to be within the statute?

Sleigh, for the respondent, was not called upon.

KELLY, C.B.—I am of opinion that the decision of the Magistrates in this case was right, and that the respondent is entitled to the judgment of the Court. The question arising upon this statute is, whether this "structure," as it is called in the case, was "a house, office, room or other place opened, kept or used" for the purposes against which the act was intended to provide? Now, let us see how it is described in the case itself.—[His Lordship here read the description of the structure as set forth in the case.]—Now, to suppose that this is not an office or place used for the purpose of betting, is really to suppose that the act is of no avail whatever. If we were to determine that this was not an office or place within the meaning of the act, hereafter, whenever it was intended to erect betting-offices in contravention of the intention of the act, it would only be necessary to follow the description of the structure here employed in order to set the act at defiance. It does not seem to me to matter whether this structure had a roof or not, or whether it was fastened by some means or other into the earth or not; it was a structure in which the business of betting could be and was conducted, as appears by the terms of this case; and in my opinion clearly came within the meaning of the words, "office or place," as used in this act. That being so, it further appears that the purpose to which the building was applied was plainly contrary to the provisions of the act. The act recites, "Whereas a kind of gaming has of late sprung up tending to the injury and demoralization of improvident persons, by the opening of places called betting offices or houses, and the receiving of money in advance by the owners or occupiers of such houses or offices, or by other persons acting on their behalf, on their promises to pay money on events of horse-races and other contingencies." Does not that exactly correspond with the business which was here carried on? Let us see how the betting was in this case effected.—[His Lordship here read that part of the case which described the use made of the structure.]—Thus a deposit is made, and a card is given which is an undertaking to pay if the event shall occur. That is what is stated, and it is clearly a receiving of money in advance for the sole purpose of paying money on the event of a horse-race, the very thing which the act was passed to prevent. I am thus of opinion that this was an office or place within the meaning of the act of parliament, and that the business there conducted was the very betting or gaming in respect of horse-races which the act of parliament contemplated and was intended to prevent.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion. I think that this was an "office" or "place." There are many offices moving on wheels in the docks at Liverpool, where merchants have structures of that kind for the purpose of transacting the business of unloading and loading ships; and there is no doubt a structure of that sort, in which a clerk sat for the purpose of doing business, would be an "office" or "place." But there is more than that here. The place here is not movable; the person owning it is confined to one piece of ground, and he does there exactly what the legislature has declared to be illegal, and wished to prevent.

PICOTT, B.—I am of the same opinion.

The arguments for the appellant really come to this, that the fact that this place is of wood instead of brick is to affect the construction of the act of parliament, the object of the act being to prevent betting-offices in towns. The enacting clause is larger than the preamble, and appears to me clearly to include the present case. I do not agree with Mr. Manisty that, by giving this construction to the act of parliament, we shall circulate the betting over the whole course, because this mode of betting only goes on by one man's having a temporary office or place with the necessary fittings, and in which there may be clerks to take account of the bets that are made with persons outside. The act of parliament was intended to put an end to all these injurious and demoralizing proceedings.

Conviction affirmed.

the property of Jane Austin. It appeared that, on the evening of the 16th of January last, the prosecutrix, being on her way from Robertsbridge, where she had been to pay some bills, to her home at Brightling, and having some money loose in her hand had occasion, owing to the dirty state of a part of the road, to hold up her dress, and in doing so let fall a sovereign. It being then dark, she did not stop to look for the sovereign, but on the following morning she started to go to the spot, in the hope of finding the lost coin. In the mean time the prisoner, coming from Robertsbridge towards Brightling in company with a man named Hilder and his son, and seeing, at the spot where the prosecutrix had dropped her sovereign, a sovereign lying in the road, picked it up and put it in his pocket, observing that it was a good sovereign and would just make his week up. Proceeding onwards the men soon afterwards met the prosecutrix, then on her way to the spot where the sovereign had been dropped. According to her statement, on meeting the men she addressed Hilder, whom she knew, and asked, in the hearing of the prisoner, "if he had stumbled on a sovereign," stating that she had lost one and was going to look for it, to which inquiry Hilder answered in the negative. She was, however, contradicted by Hilder and his son, who were called as witnesses for the prosecution, as to any such conversation having taken place. But it was clear that the fact of the sovereign thus picked up by the prisoner being one which had been lost by the prosecutrix was speedily brought to the prisoner's knowledge. The fact of the prosecutrix having lost a sovereign and of the prisoner having found one having come to his master's ears, the master asked him if he had found a sovereign, to which he answered that he "was not bound to say." The master further asked if he had not heard that Mrs. Austin had lost one, to which the prisoner made the same reply. On the master asking whether it would not be more honest to give the sovereign up to her, he answered that "he could just manage to live without honesty." Being asked by a police constable whether he remembered going up the Brightling Road and picking up a sovereign, he answered, "I don't know that I did." On the officer saying, "I have been informed by witnesses that you did so; and if you did, it did not belong to you, more particularly as you know to whom it belonged." The prisoner said he did not want to have anything more to say to the officer, and went into his house. On a subsequent occasion, however, he admitted to the same witness that he had picked up the sovereign. The witness Hilder also stated that the prisoner afterwards came to him and asked him if he could say that he (prisoner) had picked up a sovereign? and on receiving an answer in the affirmative, said that if that was so he must go to and see the prosecutrix, who had applied to him several times about it. In summing up to the jury on this state of facts, I told them that where property was cast away or abandoned, any one finding and taking it acquired a right to it, which would be good even as against the former owner, if the latter should be minded to resume it. But that when a thing was accidentally lost, the property was not divested, but remained in the owner who had lost it, and that such owner might recover it in an action against the finder. As to how far larceny might be committed by a person finding a thing accidentally lost, it depended on how far the party finding believed that the thing found had been abandoned by its owner or not. That where the thing found was of no value, or of so small value that the finder was warranted in assuming that the owner had abandoned it, he would not be guilty of larceny in appropriating it; or if, not knowing, or not having the means of discovering the owner, the finder, from the inferior value of the thing found, might fairly infer that the owner would not take the trouble to come forward and assert his right, so that practically there would be an abandonment, and so believing appropriated the thing found as virtually abandoned by the owner, he would not be guilty of larceny. So, although the value of the article might render it impossible in the first instance to presume abandonment by the owner, yet if, from the fact of no owner coming forward within a sufficient time, the finder might reasonably infer that the owner had abandoned and given up the thing as lost, there would be no criminality in an appropriation of it by the latter.

On the other hand, I pointed out that there were things as to which it could not be supposed that they had been intentionally abandoned, or the owner be supposed to have given up his property; thus, ex. gr., a purse of gold, or a pocket-book containing bank notes, found in the road, could not possibly be supposed to have been intentionally placed there; or a diamond ornament, found outside the door of an assembly room, to have been intentionally dropped by the lady who had worn it; or a box or parcel left in a public conveyance or a hack cabriolet, to have been left with the intention of abandoning the property. That in all these cases, as the property remained in the owner, and the presumption of abandonment was plainly negatived by the circumstances, a person finding such an article and appropriating it to himself with an intention of wronging the owner, if he knew who the owner was, or had the means of finding the owner—as where the name and address of the owner were on the thing found—or had the means of ascertaining the owner, as in the case of a cabman who knew the house at which he had taken up or set down a person by whom an article must have been left in the carriage, would clearly be guilty of larceny. And even where the finder did not know the owner, if the nature of the thing found precluded the presumption of abandonment, and gave every reason to suppose that the owner would come forward and assert his claim, and the finder nevertheless determined to appropriate the chattel and to keep it, though he should afterwards become aware who the owner was, this too, if done with the intention of wrongfully depriving the unknown owner of property, which the finder knew still to belong to him, would be larceny, provided such intention was contemporaneous with the original taking of possession.

I told the jury that while, to constitute larceny in appropriating an article thus found, there must be a guilty intention of taking that which was known to belong to some one else, and which the party appropriating knew he had no right to treat as his own, this intention might be gathered from the value of the article and the other circumstances of the case, especially the conduct of the party accused, as to concealment or otherwise. In this respect, I told them they might properly take into account the conduct of the prisoner Glyde in maintaining silence when he heard the question put by the prosecutrix to Hilder, if they believed that portion of her evidence; or, at all events, in refusing to say whether he had found a sovereign or not, and only acknowledging it when Hilder had told him he was prepared to speak to the fact. As the result of this reasoning, I left it to the jury to say whether the prisoner, on finding the sovereign, believed it to have been accidentally lost, and nevertheless with a knowledge that he was doing wrong, at once determined to appropriate it to himself, and to keep it, notwithstanding it should afterwards become known to him who the owner was. I told the jury, if they were of that opinion, to find the prisoner guilty. But, inasmuch as there was nothing to shew that the prisoner, on appropriating the sovereign on finding it, had any reason to suppose that the owner would afterwards become known to him, I doubted whether an intention on his part of keeping it, even if the owner should become known to him—he not believing that the latter event would come to pass—would amount to larceny. I therefore thought it right to take the opinion of this Court whether the conviction can be sustained on the facts I have stated.

Lumley Smith, for the prosecution.—In this case the prisoner at the time of his picking up the sovereign, though he had not the means at that time of ascertaining the owner, nevertheless intended to deprive the owner of it, whoever he might be, and to convert it to his own use, and therefore is guilty of larceny; and, secondly, upon the evidence, he could not have supposed that it had been abandoned: therefore, also, he would be guilty. The Queen v. Moore (2) is an authority in favour of this conviction. There the prosecutor dropped a ten pound note in the prisoner's shop, where he had made purchases, and the prisoner found it there. The next morning the prosecutor told the prisoner of his loss, and after that the prisoner converted the note to his own use by changing it, and the jury found that though the prisoner did not know who the owner was when he picked it up, nor had the reasonable means of knowing, yet he believed that the owner could be found, and intended when he picked it up to deprive the owner of it, whoever he might be; and it was held that he was rightly convicted.

[MARTIN, B.—The prisoner could not have supposed that a person had intentionally abandoned a sovereign; and that seems to be the essence of the crime. BLACKBURN, J.—The question seems to me to be whether it is necessary to go on to say that the prisoner had a present reason to believe that the owner could be found.]

The jury have found that he made up his mind at the time when he found it to appropriate it to himself, whether the owner should afterwards appear or not; therefore, there is here a felonious taking at the time when the prisoner picked up the sovereign, and this distinguishes the case from The Queen v. Preston (3).

[BLACKBURN, J.—In The Queen v. Moore (2), Wightman, J. points out three ingredients in that case: first, a felonious intention of appropriating a chattel at the time of finding it; secondly, a belief at the time of finding that the owner could be found; thirdly, a subsequent appropriation after the owner has been discovered. In this case the second ingredient is not found to have existed. Is not the question now whether those first and third ingredients will do without the second?]

In The Queen v. Peters (4) the prisoner was convicted of the larceny of some jewelry which he had found in the garden of a house where he had been at work, and the only two questions left by Rolfe, B. were, whether the prisoner picked up the things, and with what intention he took them home. The Queen v. Christopher (5) was similar to the present case, except that here the jury have found that the prisoner at the time of finding had the felonious intention, whilst in that case it was left to them that if he subsequently had such intent he was guilty, and the conviction was quashed on that ground; and probably if the jury had found in that case, as here, upon that point, the conviction there would have been affirmed. In that case the Court felt that they were bound by The Queen v. Thurborn (1), but Williams, J. said, that though he agreed with the decision in that case, he had never been able to agree with some of the principles there laid down. In The Queen v. Thurborn (1) the marginal note is, that if A. find the chattel of another and instantly appropriate it animo furandi, that is, with the intent of usurping the entire dominion over it, but under such circumstances as to warrant a jury in finding that at the time of the appropriation he really believed that the owner could neither find the chattel nor be found himself, such appropriation is not larceny. In that case a note had been accidentally dropped on the high road. There was no name or mark on it, nor had the prisoner when he found it any reason to believe that the owner knew where to find it again. The prisoner meant to appropriate it when he picked it up. The day after, and before he had disposed of it, he was informed that the prosecutor was the owner, and had dropped it accidentally. He then changed it and appropriated the money taken to his own use. There Parke, B. thought that the original taking was not felonious, and in the subsequent disposal of the note there was no taking. Parke, B. in his judgment refers to and relies on a passage in Lord Coke, in 3 Inst. 108; where he says, that "If one lose his goods and another find them, though he convert animo furandi to his own use, it is not larceny, for the first taking is lawful. So if one find treasure-trove or waif or stray, and convert them ut supra, it is no larceny, both in respect of the finding and that dominus rerum non apparet." But it is submitted that is too broadly laid down.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—It is impossible that Lord Coke could have meant that if the thing lost had the name and address of the owner, that the finder would not be guilty of larceny.]

of B. in the highway, and take and carry it away, and hath all the circumstances that may prove it to be done animo furandi, as denying or secreting it, yet it is not felony." This is also too broadly laid down. Merry v. Green (7) is also referred to, and there the subject of the finding of marked articles is discussed.

[MARTIN, B. referred to Archbold's Crim. Plead. (16th edit.), 304, where it is said that "in all cases of larceny, one of the questions for the jury is, whether the defendant took the goods knowingly." COCKBURN, C.J.—But here the question is, whether, when the finder of an article, not knowing who the owner is, determines at the time to keep it, whether the owner could be found or not, is guilty of taking it knowingly? BLACKBURN, J.—If the finder does not know at the time who the owner is, he has a perfect right to it against the whole world but the true owner, and then he does not know who is the true owner. I think Lord Wensleydale (then Baron Parke) intended to treat Thurborn's case (1) in the light of the one put by the Lord Chief Justice. COCKBURN, C.J.—I am inclined to think that if it is present to the mind of the finder, at the time of the finding, that there is a possibility that the owner may be discovered, that is a felonious taking. But the jury have here found only that at the time of the finding the prisoner intended to keep the sovereign if the owner should at any time be found.]

According to Bracton, the definition of larceny is, "Furtum est contrectatio rei alienæ fraudulenta cum animo furandi, invito illo domino cujus res illa fuerit"—Bracton, lib. 3. c. 32. f. 150. In Mr. Greaves's note upon Thurborn's case (8) that case is much criticized.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think that the facts in this case do not make out a case of larceny. The question is raised as to how far a person who finds a thing is warranted in supposing that it is abandoned by the owner. The value may be such that whilst no one can suppose it to have been intentionally abandoned, yet a person may at the same time believe that it is very doubtful whether the owner will ever take steps to recover it. If the property belonged to a poor man he probably would take the trouble to reclaim it, but if to a rich man he would not. Then, if the finder does not know, nor has any reasonable means of knowing, who the owner is, he cannot resolve that doubt. The finder may say, I do not believe the owner will be found, but whether or no I intend to keep it. But if from the value of the article or other circumstance the finder must know that it cannot be abandoned, and he says to himself, Though I do not think the owner will come forward yet I will appropriate it, that I think is larceny. I do not think that the rule laid down in Thurborn's case (1) goes the length of saying that that is not larceny. Here I think there was no evidence to shew that, when the prisoner picked up the sovereign, he had any reason to believe that the true owner would come forward. This case is not, I think, of sufficient importance to have Thurborn's case (1) reconsidered before all the Judges, and I think this conviction must be quashed.

MARTIN, B.—If there were no authority on the point I should have said that this was a felony. There was a taking, and the circumstances shew that the sovereign was not abandoned. Then, I think there was evidence of a taking and evidence that the taking was felonious, upon the authority of The Queen v. Christopher (5). I think Thurborn's case (1) was rightly decided, but the reasons given for that decision have not been acquiesced in. The second point there decided is, that to justify a conviction for larceny the finder must have reasonable means at the time of the finding of knowing who the owner is, but I doubt whether that is right. But the present case is concluded by authority.

WILLES, J.—I think that Thurborn's case (1) is in point.

BRAMWELL, B. concurred.

BLACKBURN, J.—I might wish the law to be as my Brother Martin does, but Thurborn's case (1) is in point. And I am inclined to think we should have to adhere to it if it were to be re-considered. And I do not think that, without the interference of the legislature, where the original taking is innocent and the conversion only unlawful, we could hold the crime of larceny to be completed. Then, we are bound to act on Thurborn's case (1), and here it is clear that there was no evidence that the prisoner had any means of finding the owner at the time of picking up the sovereign, and the jury were not asked that question. Therefore, I think the conviction should be quashed.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

May 30. } THE QUEEN v. SHAW.*

Lunatic—8 & 9 Vict. c. 100.—Interpretation Clause—"Of Unsound Mind."

By the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100. s. 90, "every person who shall receive into an unlicensed house, not being a registered hospital nor an asylum, or take the care or charge of any person therein as a lunatic," without having such order and medical certificates as are mentioned in the section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. By section 114, "lunatic" shall mean every insane person and every person being an idiot or lunatic, or of unsound mind:—Held, that imbecility arising from natural causes, such as intemperance, or from the natural decay of the faculties through old age, would constitute the patient affected thereby a person of unsound mind within that section.

Edward Charles Shaw was convicted before me, at the last Spring Assizes for the county of Hertford, on an indictment, under the statute 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100. s. 90, charging him with having taken charge of and received to board and lodge, in a house not being a duly registered hospital or licensed asylum, one John Clode, a lunatic or alleged lunatic; as also with having done so without the other conditions and formalities required by the statute having been complied with. All the facts necessary to support the indictment (assuming the said John Clode to have been a lunatic) were fully established. But a question arose whether the said John Clode was a lunatic within the meaning of the act; the term "lunatic" being by the interpretation clause declared to mean "every insane person, and every person being an idiot or lunatic, or of unsound mind."

It appeared that Mr. Clode, a man of fifty-five years of age, having had, after indulging for some time in habits of intemperance, three attacks of paralysis, had been placed with the defendant, a medical man, not as a lunatic, but as an invalid whose memory had become greatly impaired by bodily weakness and infirmity. It did not appear that he laboured under any delusions or mental aberration; neither was he subject to fits of frenzy or violence. But it was clear that his mental faculties had fallen into a state of exceeding weakness and imbecility, as will appear from the following facts: He was insensible to the calls of nature, and utterly regardless of all cleanliness, and was satisfied to remain in a most revolting state of filthiness. It appeared that he had been visited, by order of the Lord Chancellor, by two physicians, Drs. Blandford and Bennett, thrice by the former and once by the latter. Dr. Blandford proved that on visiting defendant's establishment on the 31st of October last, he found Mr. Clode, at between six and half-past six in the afternoon in bed, in a room about twelve feet square and six and a half feet high. He was lying on the remains of two old mattresses covered over with a piece of old carpet, with no other bed-clothes whatever, and without pillow or bolster. The mattresses, one of which was of flock, the other of straw, were soaked with fæces and urine, which was dripping through on to the floor, and were quite rotten. The walls of the room were filthy, having marks of fingers, dirty with fæces, having been smeared on them, as was also the case with a post which supported the ceiling. The smell in the room was, in the words of the witness, "most abominable." The room was without carpet of any sort. There was an old wash-stand with a basin and jug, but no water, soap or towel. Not far from the bedstead was a heap of ashes and on it two chamber-utensils, one full of fæces. Mr. Clode's trousers were wet with urine, and a pair of drawers lying there were dirty with fæces. He was lying in a flannel shirt, the tail of which was gone. He was very wet with filth, as was the piece of carpet with which he had been covered. Emma Coughtree, a witness, proved that, since the month of May, she had been employed to clean out Mr. Clode's room once a week; that his bed consisted of two rotten mattresses and a piece of old carpet, and an old coat: there were no sheets or blankets. She stated that, on first going there, she had to remove a pail, as well as two chamber utensils, full of excrement, which was all flowing over on to the floor, while under the bed there was "quite a pond drained from the mattresses."

It appeared that after the first visit of Dr. Blandford a slight improvement in the attention to the comforts of Mr. Clode took place. According to the evidence of the witness Emma Coughtree, on the 1st of November the two old mattresses were removed, and carried to a dunghill, having fallen to pieces from rottenness in the course of removal. A straw bed and palliasses were substituted, and two straw pillows supplied.

On the 25th of November, which was after the improvement just referred to had taken place, Mr. Clode was visited by Dr. Bennett. This witness stated that, having desired to see Mr. Clode's room, he was conducted to it by the defendant; but on entering the room the stench was so intolerable that he proceeded no further. Nevertheless, he saw Mr. Clode's bed, which he described as having a very miserable, dirty-looking mattress on it. The room itself also looked miserable and dirty. Chloride of lime had evidently been recently used, but though the smell of it was very strong, it was not sufficient to overpower the stench of the room.

It appeared that Mr. Clode was not dissatisfied with, and was probably insensible to, the disgusting state in which he was thus suffered to remain. He, indeed, said, in answer to a question from Dr. Blandford, how he came to be in such a room? that it was in a very disgraceful state; but on being asked by Dr. Bennett, on going to his apartment, whether he liked his room, he answered "Yes"; and on being asked whether he was comfortable in it, answered "Oh, very comfortable," and on being further asked whether his bed was comfortable, his answer was "Oh, very."

This insensibility to filth in so revolting a form was strongly insisted upon by the two medical witnesses for the prosecution as a marked indication of the utter decay of the intellectual faculties of the patient. But there was also striking proof that Mr. Clode's mental faculties in general, and more especially his memory, had become very seriously impaired. According to the evidence of the medical witnesses, it was extremely difficult to fix his attention on any subject, or to get him to converse. "He did not seem," said Dr. Bennett, "to take interest in anything," and he gave only "monosyllabic answers." He remembered, however, that he had lived in Park Street, Windsor, and, in his interview with Dr. Blandford, kept saying, "I'm John Clode of Windsor," in a silly way. He remembered, said Dr. Bennett, that he had taken part in elections for Windsor, but could not remember the names of the candidates, or on which side he had acted. On being asked if he had any family, he remembered he had a wife, and a daughter married, but on no occasion of his being visited by the medical witnesses could he remember, though frequently asked, the name of his daughter. Neither could he remember the name of the people with whom he was then living. When asked on each occasion how long he had been where he then was, his answer was "five months," though in fact he had been there as many years. This mistake he made twice during the same interview, though corrected by the defendant, who refused, after the first interview with Dr. Blandford, to allow the patient to be seen alone. When asked on more than one occasion why he remained at the defendant's, his answer was "that he intended to leave next week, when the railway would be open." Both Dr. Blandford and Dr. Bennett declared their positive opinion that there was decided unsoundness of mind in Mr. Clode in respect of the general decay of mental power, as well as of loss of memory and insensibility to the ordinary instinctive repugnance to filth. They agreed that there was an absence of active dementia or morbid delusion, and ascribed the existing symptoms to a decay of the intellectual and moral faculties, whether proceeding from paralysis, softening of the brain, or any other cause from which such decay could arise. Two medical witnesses, called on behalf of the defendant, stated that there were no symptoms of insanity in Mr. Clode, and had given certificates to that effect; but one of them admitted that there was unsoundness of mind in respect of loss of memory arising from softening of the brain.

I directed the jury, if they believed the evidence for the prosecution, to find the defendant guilty, which they accordingly did; and looking on the case as an aggravated one, in consequence of the neglect with which the patient had been treated,—more especially as the defendant had insisted on having his pay doubled in consideration of extra comforts to be afforded,—I sentenced the defendant to a fine of 100*l.* and six months' imprisonment; but deeming it worthy of consideration whether imbecility and loss of mental power, arising either from natural decay, or from paralysis, softening of the brain or other supervening cause, if unaccompanied by frenzy or delusion of any kind, constituted unsoundness of mind, so as to be lunacy within the meaning of the act on which this indictment was framed, I reserved that question for the decision of this Court. If the Court shall be of opinion that John Clode was a lunatic within the meaning of the 90th section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, the verdict is to stand, otherwise not.

Woollett (Griffin with him), for the prisoner.—The conviction cannot be supported. The 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100. s. 90. enacts as follows: "That no person (unless he be a person who derives no profit from the charge, or a committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor) shall receive to board or lodge in any house, other than an hospital registered under this act, or an asylum, or a house licensed under this act or under one of the acts hereinbefore repealed, or take the care or charge of any one patient as a lunatic or alleged lunatic, without the like order and medical certificates in respect of such patient as are hereinbefore required on the reception of a patient (not being a pauper) into a licensed house; and that every person (except a person deriving no profit from the charge, or a committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor,) who shall receive to board or lodge in any unlicensed house, not being a registered hospital or an asylum, or take the care or charge of any one patient as a lunatic or alleged lunatic, shall, within seven clear days after so receiving or taking such patient, transmit to the secretary of the Commissioners a true and perfect copy of the order and medical certificates on which such patient has been so received, and a statement of the date of such reception, and of the situation of the house into which such patient has been received, and of the christian and surname and occupation of the occupier thereof and of the person by whom the care and charge of such patient has been taken; and every such patient shall at least once in every two weeks be visited by a physician, surgeon, or apothecary not deriving, and not having a partner, father, son, or brother who derives, any profit from the care or charge of such patient; and such physician, surgeon or apothecary shall enter in a book to be kept at the house or hospital for that purpose, to be called 'The Medical Visitation Book,' the date of each of his visits, and a statement of the condition of the patient's health, both mental and bodily, and of the condition of the house in which such patient is, and such book shall be produced to the visiting Commissioner on every visit, and shall be signed by him as having been so produced; and the person by whom the care or charge of such patient has been taken, or into whose house he has been received as aforesaid, shall transmit to the secretary of the Commissioners the same notices and statements of the death, removal, escape and recapture of such lunatic, and within the same periods, as are hereinbefore required in the case of the death, removal, escape and recapture of a patient (not being a pauper) received into a licensed house; and that every person who shall receive into an unlicensed house, not being a registered hospital nor an asylum, or take the care or charge of any person therein as a lunatic, without first having such order and medical certificates as aforesaid, or who, having received any such patient, shall not within the several periods aforesaid transmit to the secretary of the Commissioners such copy, statement and notices as aforesaid, or shall fail to cause such patient to be so visited by a medical attendant as aforesaid, and every such medical attendant who shall make an untrue entry in the said medical visitation book, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." First, Clode was received and taken charge of and kept as an invalid, and not as a lunatic or person of unsound mind—under an advertisement in that form inserted by his friends; and he had no knowledge that Clode was of unsound mind, and without such knowledge he ought not to be convicted.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—Surely the fact of his friends choosing to advertise in that way does not prevent his being received as a lunatic. BLACKBURN, J.—Was not the treatment he was allowed to receive treatment which could only be applied to a person of unsound mind? and is not that evidence of knowledge of his unsoundness of mind?]

There was evidence given at the trial that Clode was allowed free egress and ingress to the house at all times alone, and had been a boarder there for five years.

[COCKBURN, C.J. said that it might be taken that those facts were in evidence.]

Then such treatment is evidence on the other hand that he was not treated as a lunatic.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—In many places where lunatics are kept they are allowed to walk about the country without restraint and unattended, but the point I intended to reserve is, whether a case of imbecility, aggravated by intemperance and other natural causes, which I was inclined to think would be lunacy in the usual acceptation of the term, was not unsoundness of mind within the meaning of the interpretation clause by which the term lunacy is interpreted; in other words, is the imbecility of old age from the mere natural decay of the faculties within it?]

The physicians had given certificates of soundness of mind.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—That was in reference to lunacy in the strict sense.]

In the Schedules to the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 26, the forms of medical certificates are given, and they always refer to the person of unsound mind as a proper person to be taken charge of and detained under care and treatment.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—That does not mean to be shut up in a house, but merely kept and lodged.]

It is submitted that here Clode's condition was nothing more than the natural result of the acts of intemperance in which he had indulged during a long time.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—But is not such a case an object of the care of the legislature as intended to be applied by this statute? Put the case of an old man who had fallen into a state of imbecility from extreme old age and his relations had put him in Shaw's charge, ought he legally to have been allowed to undergo this treatment?]

It is submitted such a case is not within the statute.

Parry, Serj. (Poland with him) appeared to support the conviction, but was not called upon.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The case is within the mischief of the statute. Upon the facts there was evidence of unsoundness of mind. Then the interpretation clause provides that a lunatic shall mean a person of unsound mind, and therefore, I think, the conviction should be confirmed.

MARTIN, B.—I concur, for I think there was evidence here of unsoundness of mind analogous to idiocy, and Clode's condition was the state of an inferior animal.

The other learned Judges concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1868. } THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES
April 30. } OF WESTMORLAND.

Quarter Sessions—Power of Adjournment—Alteration of Prison—Notice under Prisons Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), s. 24.

By the Prisons Act, 1865, s. 24, the consideration of a presentment of the necessity for the alteration or enlargement, or for rebuilding of an existing prison, or for the building of a new prison, "shall not be entertained by the prison authority, unless not less than three weeks' previous notice has been given in some one or more public newspaper or newspapers circulating within the district of the prison authority, of their intention to take the same into consideration, at a time and place to be mentioned in such notice," &c. In the county of W. presentments had been made that the house of correction and the gaol in the county were insufficient, and that it was necessary that alterations should be made, or that a new gaol should be built for the county. Notice was duly given, as required by the above section, that at the Easter Sessions the presentments would be taken into consideration. That was done, and a committee of Justices was appointed to consider the question, to consult the Government, and to report at the Michaelmas Sessions in the same year. The proceedings were specially adjourned to the Michaelmas Sessions. The committee made their report, and the Justices at the Michaelmas Sessions made an order that the gaol should be altered and adapted, &c. : Held, that, due notice having been given for the Easter Sessions, and the proceedings having been specially adjourned in order that the committee should consider and make a report, the Justices had jurisdiction to make the order, although no fresh notice had been given that the presentments would be taken into consideration at the Michaelmas Sessions.

This was a rule calling upon the Keepers of the Peace and Justices in and for the county of Westmorland to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue, directed to them to remove into this Court an order of Sessions made at a General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held on the 17th of October, 1867, ordering that the gaol at Appleby be altered and adapted in accordance with the provisions of the New Prisons Act; and that sufficient cells be provided for the reception of the whole of the prisoners within the county.

It appeared from the affidavit upon which the rule nisi was granted, that the usual notice was given by advertisement in the local newspapers that the sessions would be holden at Kendal on the 17th of October, but that it did not appear from the said notice, contained in the advertisements in the newspapers, that the subject-matter of the above-mentioned order was intended to be considered at the said sessions, nor was there any mention of reference to the same, and no other notice was given of the holding of the said sessions, or of its being intended to consider the subject-matter of the said order thereat, or make any order with reference thereto.

It appeared from the affidavits in opposition to the rule that, at an adjourned Epiphany Sessions holden at Kendal on the 22nd of January, 1867, six of the Visiting Justices of the House of correction at Kendal presented that "the provisions of the Prisons Act, 1865, cannot be carried out at the above prison according to the existing arrangement thereof; and that it is necessary either to build a new prison for the county, or to materially alter the above prison; and they recommended that the above prison should be altered according to the plan prepared by the county surveyor, so as to contain thirty-four separate cells for males and twelve cells for females, with the other requisites of the act; and in such other way as shall be approved by the Court." At the same sessions, four of the Visiting Justices of the gaol at Appleby presented "that the provisions of the Prisons Act, 1865, cannot be carried out at the above prison according to the existing arrangement thereof, and that it is necessary to materially alter the above prison according to the existing arrangement thereof, and that it is necessary to materially alter the above prison in order to comply with the provisions of the Prisons Act, 1865."

At the same sessions the following order was made:—"That the said presentments be taken into consideration at the Easter General Quarter Sessions, to be holden at Kendal on Thursday, the 11th of April next, at 11.30 a.m.; and that the said presentments be duly advertised by public notice in pursuance of the provisions of the Prisons Act, 1865, section 24, stating that it is intended to take the subjects therein mentioned into consideration at the time and place above mentioned."

Notice was accordingly given by the clerk of the peace by advertisement in the local newspapers, and at the Easter Sessions on the day mentioned the consideration of the two presentments was taken and entertained, and it was resolved, "That a committee be appointed to consider the gaol question, to consult the Government, and to report to the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions, 1867, upon the expediency of having one or two gaols; and that the committee consist of" [here followed the names of seven Justices]. The proceedings and resolutions were then and there by special adjournment continued to the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions, 1867; but such special adjournment was not substantively recorded, as such a substantive record was not customary at those sessions, when a report was to be made. At the Michaelmas Sessions the committee made their report, and the matter was considered by the Justices assembled, who made the order above set out and now complained of. A gaol committee was also appointed to settle with the Home Secretary the plans, &c. for the necessary alterations in the gaol at Appleby.

Maule and Hawcutt shewed cause against the rule.—The Court will see that no fault can be found with the proceedings of the Justices. It is said that the 24th section of 28 & 29 Vict. c. 186. requires that not less than three weeks' previous notice shall be given of the intention of the prison authorities to take the matter into their consideration, and that such notice has not been given. In truth, it had been given for the Easter Sessions, when the matter was to be brought on for consideration, so that the prison authorities at that sessions were perfectly competent to deal with the question. It was then thought better that a committee should be appointed to make a report; and as some time must elapse before the report could be made, it was considered expedient that the further consideration should stand over until the Michaelmas Sessions. The three weeks' notice was equally good for that sessions. A special presentment had been made, the notice had been given, and the Justices assembled at the sessions had ample powers to order the special adjournment of the proceedings. The report made by the committee and the acts done by them became the acts of the Sessions, and any Court of Quarter Sessions may lawfully delegate such powers to a committee—see The King v. the Justices of Glamorganshire (1). Lord Kenyon said in that case, "With regard to the appointing of the committee, it was proper that the information should be acquired out of the sessions; and the act of the committee was afterwards confirmed by the Sessions, so that it was the act of the Sessions." Again, the Sessions may adjourn a particular case without adjourning the sessions—Keen v. the Queen (2).

Manisty and A. S. Hill, in support of the rule.—It is submitted that the requirement of the 24th section has not been complied with. If the matter was to be taken into consideration at the Michaelmas Sessions three weeks' notice ought to have been given previous to that time, and after the Trinity Sessions, or, at any rate, after the Easter Sessions. The Court of Quarter Sessions are a varying body, and it might well be that many Justices might be altogether unaware that the matter was to be taken into consideration at the Michaelmas Sessions; the public have a right to claim that all the Justices should have notice. Again, there cannot be such an adjournment as has been made here, but only from one sessions to the next—see The King v. Grince (3) and The King v. Hedingham Sible (4), and other cases collected in the same book.

[BLACKBURN, J.—I know of no case in which it has been held that business may not be adjourned to the next sessions but one, as well as to the next. If there be any reason for such a rule, one would think that it would apply as well to this Court as to the Quarter Sessions. When we grant a mandamus to the Sessions to hear an appeal, we order that continuances should be entered. MELLOR, J.—That seems to me to shew that the jurisdiction of the Sessions is not gone after the particular sessions are over; but that for the sake of order and convenience we command that continuances should be entered, so that it may appear that the appeal has been adjourned from sessions to sessions. COCKBURN, C.J.—The King v. the Justices of Sussex (5) is very applicable to the present case.]

(5) Ibid. par. 902.

The whole practice of the Quarter Sessions, as established throughout England, is against such a power of adjournment as has been exercised in this case.

COOKBURN, C.J.—I think that the rule must be discharged. It appears that due notice had been given, as required by the 24th section, that the consideration of the presentment would be entertained at the Easter Sessions. When it was brought on for consideration, it was resolved that it should be referred to a select committee, who were to consult with the Government, and report to the Michaelmas Sessions upon the expediency of having one or two gaols in the county. Now, it is said that inasmuch as the Michaelmas Sessions would not be those which would be holden next after the Easter Sessions to which the notice was applicable, it was necessary that new notices should be given that the question would come on at the Michaelmas Sessions, because each of these Courts of Quarter Sessions is a separate and independent Court. But I think it would lead to most grievous inconvenience, if there was not in such a Court an inherent power to adjourn the consideration of business, which had been properly brought before them, to such a time as they may consider they will be in a better position to decide upon it. As good an illustration as any of that view is this: that whereas the act of 17 Geo. 2. c. 28 s. 4. provides that an appeal against a poor-rate must be to the next General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace, we all know that the practice established from that time to the present, and sanctioned by all the Courts of Quarter Sessions and by this Court is, that if the grievance arises before the holding of the Court of Quarter Sessions to which according to the statute the appeal must be made, and if there be not time to give the necessary notice of appeal, the Court of Quarter Sessions always enters the appeal and adjourns or respites it to the next Quarter Sessions, at which the Court becomes seised of it, and deals with it, although the act of parliament has expressly enacted that the appeal must be to the next Court of General or Quarter Sessions after the cause of grievance has arisen. It is clear that when the matter is brought before the Court it may be adjourned; but it is said that although it may be that the Court has a right to adjourn the consideration of a particular matter from one sessions to the next, there is no power to adjourn to the next but one; but I think that it does not matter to which of such sessions the adjournment is made. If the Court of Quarter Sessions did it improperly, this Court would control their action; but when once a matter is properly before them, there must be a power of adjournment. The King v. the Justices of Sussex (5) is a decision strongly in point. In that case, upon an appeal against an order of removal, the Justices at the sessions ordered that a special case should be stated for the opinion of this Court. Before it was stated, the Court adjourned, and "the cause was neither retained nor ended." Upon these facts an application was made to this Court for a mandamus to compel the Justices to proceed with the appeal. It was held that the mandamus must go unless the respondents would consent to a case being stated; and that by ordering that a special case should be stated, they had virtually ordered that the appeal should be adjourned till the case was stated, and that the want of an adjournment or a respite was only the omission of the clerk, and might at any time be supplied. I think that when the Justices of Westmorland determined at the Easter Sessions to refer the consideration of the presentment to a committee to report at the next Michaelmas Sessions, it really amounted to an adjournment of the whole matter to those sessions. All the Justices who were present at the Easter Sessions had notice that the whole matter was virtually adjourned to the Michaelmas Sessions; and as the requisite notice had been given previously to the Easter Sessions, all has been done that the law requires.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. By the 24th section the prison authorities have no power to entertain the consideration of the presentment, unless not less than three weeks' previous notice has been given as required. Here the prison authorities are the Court of Quarter Sessions, and notice, as required, was given in the first instance for the Easter Sessions. The matter was then entertained, but was not disposed of, by that Court. It is obvious that if that Court had adjourned the matter for two or three days, continuing the consideration during the same sitting, it would certainly have not been necessary to give fresh notice. The adjournment would have been a sufficient notice to come to any adjournment of the Court, and the notice originally given would have been sufficient to give jurisdiction. The Court of Quarter Sessions is one Court under one commission; and holding its sittings four times a year, and the first Court, although it may adjourn, is simply continued. In Kear v. the Queen (2) Patteson, J. said, "The Sessions have only one commission, so it is quite correct for the Justices to adjourn a case from one session to another, because they are not advised what judgment to give"; and Erle, J. says, "I think that the Sessions are a continuing Court, and that they have power to adjourn a case from one session to another; and it is most important that they should have such power." He also says that the case of Bodnia v. Warlingen (6) is no authority to shew that the Sessions cannot adjourn a case without also adjourning the session; and Coleridge, J. says, "The practice of this Court in issuing writs of mandamus to the Sessions to enter continuances and hear an appeal illustrates the point. Our writ does not give the authority to the Sessions to continue process, but merely directs them to exercise the authority which they already possess, and to do that which they ought to have done in furtherance of the ends of justice. We issue our writ to them for this purpose after they have completely disposed of a case. This we could not do if each session were a distinct Court. We deal with the Justices as one Court sitting from session to session." Then I can see no reason why the prison authorities sitting at the Easter Sessions should not be able to adjourn the consideration of the presentment until the Michaelmas Sessions. If they had allowed the consideration to drop, they ought to have given a new notice, but they did not do so; they appointed the committee and virtually adjourned the matter to the Michaelmas Sessions, when the report would be presented. It comes exactly within The King v. the Justices of Sussex (5); all the Justices who were present at the Easter Sessions must have been aware that this was done, and therefore the notice was as good for the Michaelmas Sessions as for those holden at Easter. Mr. Manisty says that the Justices have no power to adjourn to any sessions except the next; but I see no principle upon which such a proposition can be supported, nor do I know of any enactment or decision to support it. In general it would be desirable to adjourn to the next sessions, but in some cases, especially when the report of a committee is to be received, it may be very prudent and proper to adjourn for six months. If it be a continuing Court, I see no reason why there should not be a bona fide adjournment to the next sessions but one.

MELLOR, J.—I do not think that we ought to exercise our jurisdiction to quash this order of Sessions. It is conceded that the jurisdiction to make it attached at the Easter Sessions, the notice being then sufficient. At that time the prison authorities did enter upon the consideration of the presentment, but found that it was expedient that a committee should be appointed to make inquiry into the whole matter. This was a course most convenient and proper, and they also passed a resolution directing that the report should be presented at the Michaelmas Sessions. There were obvious reasons for doing this, and in substance it was a proper adjournment, for they were seized of the jurisdiction to consider the matter, and if so, they had necessarily jurisdiction to adjourn it. In point of fact, was there not an adjournment of the further consideration of the matter to the Michaelmas Sessions? I should be very unwilling to interfere with the proceedings of the Justices unless I saw clearly that there had either been some excess of jurisdiction, or that the matter had been allowed to drop by an omission to do something which was necessary to keep it up. I find neither authority nor principle for the objection which has been taken.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The section only requires that the notice should be given three weeks before the consideration of the presentment is to be entertained, that is, entertained in the first instance, and no further notice is required when the matter is once fairly under consideration. In no sense can it be said to have been dropped, for it was resolved that it should be referred to a committee, who were to report at the Michaelmas Sessions, and while it was under their consideration it was under the consideration of the prison authorities. I know of no authority which supports Mr. Manisty's contention, that there is no power to adjourn over an intermediate sessions, nor can I see any principle upon which such a proposition can be maintained. There is no real objection to the order being made.

Rule discharged.

Weights and Measures—Scales “incorrect or otherwise unjust”—Adjustment not Part of Machine—5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 63. s. 28.

A shopkeeper made use of a pair of scales which had a hollow brass ball hanging upon the weight-end of the beam. These balls were constructed with a neck which could be unscrewed, so as to allow shot to be placed in the interior, and, although hung by a stout brass wire hook upon the beam, were easily removable from it by merely lifting them off. When one of these balls had been removed and replaced, after the shot with which it was partly filled had been removed, it was found that the scale was unjust and against the purchaser:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the Magistrates might reasonably find that these scales were weighing machines incorrect or otherwise unjust, within the meaning of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 63. s. 28 (1).

CASE stated by Justices according to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

(1) By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 63. s. 28, “in England and Ireland it shall be lawful for every Justice of the Peace of any county, riding, or division, or of any city or town, and in Scotland for every Sheriff,

At a petty session, at Tunbridge Wells, in Kent, on the 17th of September, 1867, before two Justices, on information preferred by John Stringer, hereinafter called the respondent, against Josiah Carr, hereinafter called the appellant, under section 28. of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 63, charging for that he the respondent, inspector of the weights and measures of and for the district known as No. 16, in the division and county aforesaid, on the 27th of August, 1867, at the parish of Tunbridge, as such inspector as aforesaid, being then and there duly authorized in writing, under the hands of two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace in and for the county, did enter a certain shop within his jurisdiction as such inspector, and wherein goods were then exposed for sale, and that he did then and there examine all weights, measures, steelyards, and other weighing machines, then and there being, and did then and there compare and try the same with the copies of the imperial standard weights and measures authorized to be provided under the act of parliament passed in the 6th year of his late Majesty William the Fourth, intituled, ‘An act to repeal an act of the 4th and 5th years of his present Majesty relating to weights and measures, and to make other provisions instead thereof,’ and that the said shop was then and Justice, or Magistrate of any borough or town, or for any inspector authorized in writing under the hand of any Justice of the Peace in England and Ireland, or of any Sheriff, Justice or Magistrate in Scotland, at all seasonable times to enter any shop, store, warehouse, stall, yard or place whatsoever within his jurisdiction, wherein goods shall be exposed or kept for sale, or shall be weighed for conveyance or carriage, and there to examine all weights, measures, steelyards or other weighing machines, and to compare and try the same with the copies of the imperial standard weights and measures required or authorized to be provided under this act; and if, upon such examination, it shall appear that the said weights or measures are light or otherwise unjust, the same shall be liable to be seized and forfeited; and the person or persons in whose possession the same shall be found shall on conviction forfeit a sum not exceeding 5*l.*; and any person who shall have in his or her possession a steelyard or other weighing machine which shall on such examination be found incorrect or otherwise unjust, or who shall neglect or refuse to produce for such examination, when thereto required, all weights, measures, steelyards or other weighing machines which shall be in his or her possession, or shall otherwise obstruct or hinder such examination, shall be liable to a like penalty.”

there kept or used by the appellant, and that upon such examination it did then and there appear that three pairs of scales then and there found, and then and there in the possession of the appellant, were unjust, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, was heard and determined by us, the Justices, and upon such hearing we convicted the appellant.

The appellant, being dissatisfied with the determination, upon the hearing of the information, as being erroneous in point of law, applied to the Justices to state a case, which was stated as follows:

At the hearing of the information it was proved before the Justices, and admitted by the appellant, that the respondent on the 27th of August, 1867, visited the shop of the appellant, and there found three pairs of scales which were correct as to balance in the way they then were, but the respondent found hanging upon the weight end of the beam of each pair of scales a hollow brass ball. These brass balls are constructed with necks which can be unscrewed so as to allow shot to be placed in the interior; and they were hung by stout brass wire hooks upon the beams of the scales, and were easily removable therefrom by merely lifting them off. The respondent took one of these balls off a pair of scales, and having unscrewed the neck he removed the shot with which it was partly filled; and then replaced the ball in its former position, and on testing the scale found the latter to be then unjust and against the purchaser. It was admitted by the respondent that similar balls were very generally used by tradesmen for the purpose of adjustment.

It was contended by the respondent that this brass ball was not part of the scales, and was easily detached therefrom; that if the ball could be considered part of the scales, yet the shot with which the same was loaded could not be so considered, as it could be removed at any time without apparent alteration in the scales, and consequently the scales themselves were unjust. On behalf of the appellant, it was contended that the brass ball with its load of shot was a mere instrument of adjustment attached to and forming part of the scales; that the scales were from time to time corrected by adding to or removing shot therefrom; and as the scales in question were correct at the time they were used by the appellant and first examined by the respondent, and were only rendered incorrect by the respondent removing the ball or the shot, the appellant could not be convicted of any offence.

The Justices, however, were of opinion that the ball was not part and parcel of the scales, inasmuch as it merely hung thereon by its own weight, and could be detached in an instant. They were further of opinion that as the shot could be removed from the ball and replaced at pleasure, it could not be considered a proper instrument of adjustment. They therefore found that the scales were unjust, and accordingly convicted the appellant of having in his possession an unjust scale.

The questions of law, if any, arising on the above statement therefore are: first, whether the Justices were correct in their view of the case, that the ball referred to being hung loosely on the beam of the scale did not form part of the scales; secondly, whether the shot in the ball being entirely removable was or was not a proper instrument of adjustment, or could be considered a part of the scales or otherwise.

Anderson, for the respondent.—The brass balls formed no part of the scales.

[BLACKBURN, J.—This information seems to treat of the offence as if it came within the provision in the section against "weights or measures light or otherwise unjust," in which case there is both a forfeiture of the article and a penalty. But the offence proved is, having "a steelyard, or other weighing machine incorrect, or otherwise unjust," for which a penalty only is imposed.]

It does not appear that the scales were ordered to be forfeited.

[BLACKBURN, J.—The statement in the information that the scales were unjust contrary to the statute &c., is sufficient.]

He was proceeding to argue,—but the Court called upon

Cohen, for the appellant.—There is nothing illegal in this mode of adjusting the scales.

[BLACKBURN, J.—What is there to distinguish these scales from scales which are incorrect, and made right by means of a weight placed in one of them?]

In The London and North-Western Railway Company v. Richards (2), the marginal note is,—Upon the conviction of a railway company under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 63. s. 28. for having in their possession a weighing machine which, upon examination thereof, duly made by the inspector of weights and measures, was found to be incorrect, held, that a machine which, from its construction, was liable to variation from atmospheric and other causes, and required to be adjusted, was not incorrect upon examination within the meaning of the statute if examined by the inspector before it had been adjusted, Wightman, J. saying in his judgment, "This weighing machine before adjustment is false, but in the true state of adjustment for weighing it is correct. It is too much to say that because the machine requires adjustment before it is used it is an incorrect or otherwise unjust machine."

[BLACKBURN, J.—In the case cited the scales were perfectly just in themselves, but liable to get out of repair from the effect of the atmosphere. I do not say that the scales in the present case would be necessarily unjust if the balls were screwed firmly into the scales. COCKBURN, C.J.—And it would appear that in the case cited the mode of adjustment was an integral part of the machine.]

In The Great Western Railway Company v. Bailie (3), where a railway company kept a weighing machine, which for a fortnight had been so out of repair that, when anything was weighed in it, the weight appeared to be four pounds more than was really the weight, it was held that they were liable to be convicted. If the shot were fraudulently removed, and the inspector were suddenly to enter the shop it could not be replaced in time to prevent the fraud from being discovered. It would be just as easy to take off the scales and substitute new ones. The Magistrates have not found any fraudulent intention.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am very clearly of opinion that this conviction must be affirmed. There was some difficulty at first in consequence of a doubt whether the Justices had not convicted the appellant for having unjust weights instead of an unjust weighing machine; but I think that it is sufficiently clear that the conviction was for having unjust scales. Now, I am very far from saying that where, as in The London and North-Western Railway Company v. Richards (2), weighing machines become so affected as to require adjustment, and anything which is part of the machine is made use of to remedy the loss which it may from time to time sustain, that this contrivance ought not to be taken into account as affecting the justness of the scales. But when you find the instrument in itself imperfect and unjust, and only to be perfected and properly adjusted by the introduction of some temporary contrivance, which at any time may be attached to or taken from it, then I think that the weighing machine becomes unjust. Here there is only something to rectify an original defect in the balance, and there is no doubt that it can be used and is used, in many instances, for the purposes of fraud. It may at any moment be taken off, and although Mr. Cohen has argued that the sudden arrival of the inspector cannot be guarded against, yet as this officer cannot be everywhere at once it would be quite easy in selling goods to make use of these scales when they were unjust as against the purchaser. I think that the Magistrates were quite right.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. Two offences are mentioned in the section, that of having weights or measures light or otherwise unjust, and that of having steelyards or weighing machines incorrect or otherwise unjust. I at first imagined that the information was for having unjust weights or measures, which would not have been proved; but looking more closely at the information, I see that it is for having unjust scales, and the question arises, is there evidence to justify the Magistrates in finding that these scales were incorrect or otherwise unjust? Now, it appears that these scales by themselves, and without the brass balls and the shot inside them, are incorrect and against the purchaser. Do the balls and the shot prevent the scales from being incorrect? This turns upon the question whether they are an integral part of the machine, and if they are and bring out a correct result the machine would not be incorrect. In the case of The London and North-Western Railway Company v. Richards (2), Mr. Justice Crompton says, "The great beauty of the machine is, that when an inaccuracy may, or rather must, constantly occur, the machine has in itself an appliance by which that inaccuracy may be remedied. Unless that appliance, which is an integral part of the machine, is used the instrument cannot be said to be properly tested." In that case the contrivance for adjusting the machine was an integral part of it. I do not say that if these balls had been fastened firmly to the scales that this circumstance might not have been taken into account in deciding whether there was evidence of fraud. But from the description given of the scales—(the learned Judge read the description)—I think that the Justices might well draw the conclusion of fact that the brass balls were no more part of the machine than a half-ounce weight placed in one of the scales. The fact that the balls can be easily lifted off does not necessarily prevent them from being part of the machine, but it is strong evidence of fraud, and not easily rebutted. If scales must have some adjustment, the owners must take care to screw on the adjustment so that it may be permanently fixed to the machine and not removable from it, and the machine must not be against the purchaser when it is removed, or the Justices will be right in drawing an inference against them.

Judgment for the respondent.

Poor-Rate—Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings incorporated for Constructing Public Works—Servants of the Crown—Consolidated Fund—Beneficial Occupation—Chelsea Bridge—Mandamus.

*The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods and Forests were, by act of parliament, incorporated for the purpose of making a bridge over the Thames, which had been recommended by the Commissioners for Improving the Metropolis, and the plans of which had been approved of by the Commissioners of the Treasury. Power was given to obtain an advance of money from the Consolidated Fund, such advance to be repaid out of the money collected by way of tolls which the corporation were authorized to take by means of toll-houses and collectors to be established on the bridge. These tolls were to be applied, first, in payment of all expenses of management and collection of the tolls; secondly, in maintaining the bridge; thirdly, in repayment of the money advanced; and the surplus, if any, was to form a fund for such metropolitan improvement as the legislature should determine. By a subsequent act this provision as to the surplus was repealed, and it was provided that when a sum of 80,000*l.* and interest had been paid off no toll should be demanded of foot-passengers. The bridge was built, and vested in the Commissioners, and the tolls taken exceeded the cost of maintaining the bridge. 13,500*l.* of the 80,000*l.* advanced had been repaid, and not more than 2,500*l.* towards the said sum of 13,500*l.* was received from the tolls and proceeds of the bridge. The Commissioners were assessed in a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish in which part of the bridge and of its approaches was situate:—Held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, affirming the decision of the Court below, that they were not liable, the only occupation being by the Crown or by* the Commissioners, as servants of the Crown, acting for and on behalf of the Crown.

This was an appeal against a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench upon a demurrer to the return to a writ of mandamus.

The writ and return are set out at length in the report of the case when in the court below, ante, page 25.

It will be sufficient here to state shortly that this was a mandamus to the defendants, Justices of Middlesex, ordering them to issue a warrant to levy by distress and sale upon the goods and chattels of the Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings, the amount due from them in respect of a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish of the prosecutors. The Commissioners were by act of parliament incorporated for the purpose of making what is now called Chelsea Bridge. Power was given to them to take tolls, which were to be applied, first, in payment of expenses of management and collection of the tolls; secondly, in maintaining the bridge; thirdly, in repayment of the money advanced out of the Consolidated Fund. When the money advanced was paid off, no tolls were to be demanded in respect of foot-passengers, but the other tolls were to remain. Only a portion of the sum advanced had been repaid when the Commissioners were assessed to a poor's rate in respect of the bridge and its approaches, alleged to be in their occupation. They refused to pay the rate, and the defendants refused to issue a warrant to distrain upon their goods and chattels.

Upon a demurrer to the return to a writ of mandamus, the Court of Queen's Bench gave judgment for the defendants.

The Attorney General (Sir J. D. Karslake with him), for the defendants, was not called upon.

KELLY, C.B.—In this case a rate has been made upon the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, in respect of certain tolls received upon a bridge which has been constructed by the Commissioners, who are made a corporation for that purpose, under certain acts of parliament.

It appears that the Commissioners for the Improvement of the Metropolis having reported to the Crown in favour of certain improvements in or near the metropolis, among others, reported that a bridge should be constructed upon or near the spot in question. For the purpose of constructing that bridge an act of parliament was passed, authorizing a fund to be provided by the Crown to bear the expense of the construction of the bridge in question, and to receive the tolls, which were to be, in the first place, devoted to certain expenses connected with the works; and, finally, to keeping the bridge in repair, and doing the other acts which are necessary to be done by reason of the undertaking, and to be applied in repayment of some very large sums to be advanced by the Treasury out of moneys in the hands of the Crown, which were granted to the Crown by parliament, and which were applicable to public purposes; and whenever those sums should be repaid, then towards the diminution of the tolls; but no provision was made for any surplus moneys arising from the receipt of the tolls which were to be in the hands of the Commissioners.

Now, these are the facts of the case which were authorized by the acts of parliament. The question is, whether these Commissioners are rateable in respect of these tolls to the poor-rates of the parish in which the bridge, or a portion of the bridge, is situate? I am of opinion that they are not; and, upon this plain and simple ground, that the occupation of this bridge is not a beneficial occupation, that it is not an occupation by any individual, or any body of persons, whether for private or for public purposes, but that it is in contemplation of law an occupation by the Commissioners on behalf of a Government department, or public board, as servants of the Crown, that is, on behalf of the Crown itself.

The exception that was specially made in the judgment of the House of Lords, in The Mersey Docks case (1), was an exception in favour of property occupied by the Crown, or by the servants of the Crown, or any department of the Government acting on behalf of the Crown. In this case, in the first place, the work is a public work recommended in a report to the Crown by certain Commissioners appointed by the Crown; and, therefore, without more, it is to be constructed by the Crown out of public funds, or, in other words, by the State or Government of the country on behalf of and for the benefit of the public. For convenience, and convenience alone, the work is to be constructed, and under orders given under the powers of an act of parliament. It is to be executed, not by the Crown itself in its own person, which would, of course, be the Sovereign herself in her own person, which would be impracticable and impossible, but by the department of the Government to which works of that nature are assigned in the ordinary carrying on and execution of the business of the country. If it had been a work connected with the Navy, the board by which it would have to be carried out would, in all probability, have been the Board of Admiralty. If it had been the construction of a port, or anything relating to the Commerce of the country, probably it would have been the Board of Trade; but as it happens to be a work to be executed upon what was claimed to be the property of the Crown,—and which must at least be taken to form part of the property of the Crown, it would naturally have been left in the hands of that department which deals with the property of the Crown, and which executes works, or contracts for the execution of works connected with the land or other property of the Crown, namely, the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. The task was, therefore, committed to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests, and the powers in question are conferred upon those Commissioners; and for that purpose, and for that purpose only, and for that reason, and for that reason only, they are made a corporation. It is quite clear upon this that the Commissioners entered into the occupation of property claimed to be the property of the Crown, upon which they constructed the whole or part of the bridge in question, and in respect of passengers and vehicles upon this bridge they are entitled, under the act of parliament, to receive certain tolls.

In what character, then, or on whose behalf, do they occupy this bridge and receive these tolls? They do so, certainly not for their own benefit. It is merely because they happen to constitute that department of the Government to which public works of all descriptions, to be executed by the Crown, are invariably and necessarily committed. It is in that character, and that character only, that they occupy the bridge and receive the tolls in question. They are bound, under the act of parliament, to apply those tolls to the specific purposes pointed out by the act. If there should be a surplus, that surplus really is money belonging to the Crown, and they could not apply one shilling of it without the authority of the Crown.

Only 13,500*l.* out of the 80,000*l.* advanced had been repaid at the time the rate was made. But in case there shall arise a surplus, which surplus will be in the hands of the Commissioners, that surplus, no doubt, will be disposed of according to the provisions of an act of parliament yet to be passed. In the mean time this corporation would hold that money on behalf of the Crown; it would be public money belonging to nobody but the Crown, and they would be trustees of that money until it was appropriated by the Crown, or the proper authorities under the authority of that act of parliament.

But to return to the question of occupation. According to the strict terms of the statute of Elizabeth, and the substance and true effect of the decision in The Mersey Dock case (1) by the House of Lords, there must be occupation other than an occupation by the Crown, or for or on behalf of the Crown. Here there is no such occupation. The occupation is by this public Board or department of the Government, existing only under the appointment of the Crown, and under the authority of the Crown, and for the purposes of the State, and who exist, not only in the capacity conferred upon them or created by this act of parliament, but in every capacity in which they act at all as a department of the Government, as servants of the Crown, by and on behalf of the Crown, for the public benefit of the State.

Under these circumstances, we are all of opinion that the corporate body in question, created by this act of parliament, are not liable to be rated in respect of these tolls, and consequently the judgment of the Court will be in favour of the Crown.

We may observe, as is suggested by my Brother Bramwell, that when we look to the form in which this case comes before us, we find that it is upon a mandamus to the Magistrates to issue their warrant to levy a certain sum of money, the amount of the rate in question, by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the Commissioners of Works. They do not, and they cannot, possess goods and chattels to the value of a single shilling, except that which belongs to the Crown. It does not belong to them in their corporate capacity, but strictly for and on behalf of the Crown, and cannot be applied to any purposes except for the purposes of the Crown. Under these circumstances, really to order these Magistrates to seize the goods and chattels of these Commissioners would be to order them to seize the goods and chattels of the Crown, which are held by a Government department merely on behalf of the Crown, in order to satisfy this poor-rate (10).

(10) With reference to this part of the judgment, it may be observed that it was arranged, by consent, that the question should be brought before the Court of Queen's Bench in the present form.

Upon all these grounds we are of opinion that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench should be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

[IN THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.]

1868. { THE METROPOLITAN BOARD OF June 25. { WORKS, appellants, CLEVER, respondent.

Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 98.—Laying out Road for Building—Width of Street.

The respondent was the owner of land lying between roads A. and B; he built houses along road A. with back gardens running down to road B, and he then took down the old fence of road B, and placed an oak fence with gates 3 feet back on his land:—Held, that he could not be compelled, under the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102. s. 98, to put back his fence to 20 feet from the centre of road B.

This was an appeal under the provisions of the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. against the decision of a Police Magistrate for the Metropolis, dismissing a complaint made by the appellants against the respondent for not setting back a fence 20 feet from the centre of a road called Hither Green Lane.

CASE.

The respondent is the lessee for a long term of years of certain property situate on the south side of Hither Green Lane, near to the Lewisham and Bromley Road, Lewisham. The respondent's property is bounded on the north by Hither Green Lane, and on the south by a road called Ladywell Park Road. Hither Green Lane is a road which has been from time immemorial a public highway, and has been from time to time repaired by the parish authorities. It is of irregular width, being from 19 to 20 feet wide in some places, and increasing to from 23 to 24 feet in width in others, but in no part exceeding 25 feet in width. Hither Green Lane has within the past year, or thereabouts, been formed and laid out for building as a street for the purposes of carriage traffic.

The respondent has erected eleven houses on his said land, and placed those houses so as to front the Ladywell Park Road, which is a new road laid out for building purposes. The respondent's houses have long narrow strips of garden behind, extending to the Hither Green Lane, from which they are divided by an oak park-fence, with a gate to each, affording an approach from, and exit to, the Hither Green Lane.

The respondent's said houses were completed about 1866, and at that time the respondent's land was divided from Hither Green Lane by a bank and thorn-fence thereon. When the houses were completed, the respondent caused the fence to be grubbed up and the bank to be levelled, and set the line of the present oak-fencing about 3 feet within the outermost edge of the old bank, and the respondent's oak-fencing is placed several feet within the distance of 20 feet measuring from the centre line or crown of the roadway along a right line drawn at right angles to the course of the said street.

The respondent has himself done no act towards forming or laying out Hither Green Lane as a street for the purpose of carriage traffic, otherwise than so far as the removal of the old thorn-fence and the erection of the oak park-fence may be such act, nor has he any present intention of doing any such act, or putting up any building fronting towards Hither Green Lane.

On the 1st of May, 1857, the following by-law was made in pursuance of the powers vested in the Metropolitan Board of Works: "Four weeks at the least before any new street shall be laid out, written notice shall be given to the Metropolitan Board of Works, at their office, Spring Gardens, in the county of Middlesex, by the person or persons intending to lay out such new street, stating the proposed level and width thereof, and accompanied by a plan of the ground, shewing the local situation of the same.

"Forty feet at the least shall be the width of every new street intended for carriage traffic; twenty feet at the least shall be the width of every new street intended only for foot traffic: Provided that the said width respectively shall be construed to mean the width of the carriage and footway only, exclusive of any gardens, forecourts, open areas, or other spaces in front of the houses or buildings erected or intended to be erected in any street. Every new street shall, unless the Metropolitan Board of Works . . . consent, . . . have at the least two entrances of the full width of such street, and shall be open from the ground upwards. The measurement of the width of every street shall be taken at a right angle to the course thereof, half on either side from the centre or crown of the roadway to the external wall or front of the intended houses or buildings on each side thereof, but where forecourts or other spaces are intended to be left in front of the houses or buildings, then the width of the street, as already defined, shall be measured from the centre line up to the fence, railing, or boundary dividing, or intended to divide, such forecourts, gardens or spaces from the public way. The carriage-way of every new street must curve or fall from the centre or crown thereof, at the rate of three-eighths of an inch, at the least, for every foot of breadth. In every new street the curb to each footpath must not be less than 4 nor more than 8 inches above the channel of the roadway, except in the case of crossings, paved or formed for the use of foot-passengers; and the slope of every footpath towards the curb must be half an inch to every foot of width, if the footpath be unpaved; or not less than a quarter of an inch to every foot of width if the footpath be paved. In this by-law the word 'street' shall be interpreted to apply to and include any highway (except the carriage-way of any turnpike-road), and any road, public bridge (not being a county bridge), lane, footway, square, court, alley or passage, whether a thoroughfare or not, and a part of any such highway, road, bridge, lane, footway, square, court, alley or passage. In case of any breach of the regulations contained in this 'by-law,' the offender shall be liable for each offence to a penalty of 40s., and in case of a continuing offence, to a further penalty of 20s. for each day after notice thereof from the Metropolitan Board of Works."

The appellants contend that on the above facts the Magistrate ought to have convicted the respondent; that the 98th section of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102. clearly contemplates the street being made the full width of 40 feet, measuring 20 feet on each side of the centre line of the roadway to the nearest external wall, fence or boundary of the houses or land on each side of the street; that for the purposes of the act, the part, whether wall, fence or building, abutting on the street is to be deemed the front, although the same plot of land may also abut on another street, and although a house or building fronting the last-mentioned street may be erected thereon; that there need be no act by, or intention of the particular owner to form or lay out his land for building purposes; but that if the old road be, in fact, formed or laid out for building purposes, as a street for carriage traffic, all the land on each side, situate within 20 feet of the centre line or crown of the roadway, must be laid into the new street as formed for buildings.

The respondent contends on the other hand, that unless and until some act of user or intention to build happen or exist on the part of the individual owner of land fronting the new street, or unless or until he do some further act than that above detailed, to lay out or concur in laying out such street, he is not liable to be called upon to set back his fence leaving a space of 20 feet between it and the centre or crown of the roadway; and that particularly in the present case, as his houses front the Ladywell Park Road, the provisions of section 98. and of the by-law do not extend to compel him to set the oak fencing back to the required distance, nor is he to be forced thus to give up and throw into the new street so much of his property as lies between the existing boundary and the line of 20 feet, measuring from the centre or crown of the roadway in Hither Green Lane.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether, under the facts before appearing, the line of the respondent's oak fencing ought to be set back to a distance of 20 feet, measuring southwards from the centre line or crown of the roadway in Hither Green Lane. If the Court shall be of opinion in the affirmative, then the respondent is to be convicted in the penalty of 40s.; but if the Court shall be of opinion in the negative, then the decision of the Magistrate is to stand affirmed.

Philbrick, for the appellants.—In the case relied on by the other side, The Metropolitan Board of Works v. Cox (1), the Magistrate found that the lane had not been laid out for building, whereas here he has found that it has been so laid out; that case, therefore, is not in point; whilst Taylor v. the Metropolitan Board of Works (2) seems in favour of the appellants. The question is, whether the act of the majority binds, or whether the particular owner must shew an intention to build by his acts. The object of the statute is to secure a wide street, and it could not be intended that one owner should be able to frustrate this.

[WILLES, J.—The case is the same as if the old fence remained, and if so, where is there anything to shew that the old fence is to be put back?]

The section contemplates the widening of an old road, and widening it continuously, and it is not necessary to wait till the owner actually builds. There is no hardship; he gets the benefit of the wide street.

Codd, for the respondent.—It is found here that the respondent has done no act. The Metropolitan Board of Works v. Cox (1) is therefore a direct authority in his favour; and Taylor v. the Metropolitan Board of Works (2) is distinguishable. It is further to be observed, that here the houses do not face towards this lane.

Philbrick, in reply.—It is a question of fact whether, looking to what has been done, generally, the Magistrate thinks the place has been laid out as a street—The Queen v. Fulford (3).

WILLES, J.—I am of opinion that the Magistrate's decision was right, and should be affirmed. This is abundantly clear when section 98. is considered. The section imposes a penalty for violating an enactment, which is, that "no existing road, &c. being of a less width than 40 feet shall be hereafter formed or laid out for building as a street for the purposes of carriage traffic, unless it be widened to the full width of 40 feet." Who breaks that enactment if the road has been formed for building as a street? The person who has so formed or concurred in forming it, and we must take care we have a person before us who committed the offence. Did the defendant? All he did was to move this old fence a little way back, and so to give a little advantage to those using the road. Is that a laying out for building? Clearly not, unless it was to make a line between intended buildings and the road. But it is found he had no such intention, for it is found that he has done no act towards laying out the lane as a street, unless the removal of the old fence be such an act. Therefore, if any offence has been committed, it is not by him. This seems to be the view taken in Taylor v. the Metropolitan Board of Works (2), where Blackburn, J. says that the owner must shew an intention to make buildings of such extent as will form part of a street. I am, therefore, of opinion that the decision should be affirmed, with costs.

(2) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 53.

(3) 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 122.

BYLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. The defendant is an owner of land adjacent to one side of the lane for a considerable distance, and he never had any intention to make a street, though some other owners of adjacent land had. It is a very serious matter to take a man's land, and without plain words we ought not to construe the enactment so as to apply to the present case. It appears to me that the enactment does not apply; and I also think that the case of The Metropolitan Board of Works v. Cox (1) is in point.

1868.
May 27.

THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE BRADFORD UNION, appellants, THE CLERK OF THE PEACE FOR THE COUNTY OF WILTS, respondent.

Lunatic Prisoner—Order of Secretary of State—Removal to Asylum—Cost of Maintenance—Retrospective Order—Time for making Order—3 & 4 Vict. c. 54.

H. L. was convicted of felony, at the Lent Assizes for Wilts, 1864, and was sentenced to be imprisoned in the gaol at D. for twelve calendar months. While undergoing his sentence he became insane, in June, 1864, and was removed by an order of a Secretary of State to a lunatic asylum, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54. On the 28th of March, 1867, two Justices of the county of Wilts, sitting in the borough of D, adjudicated the place of the last legal settlement of H. L. to be in the parish of B, in the union of B, and they ordered the guardians of the union to pay to the keeper of the gaol 5l. 15s. 3d., for the reasonable charges of inquiring into the settlement, and of conveying him to the asylum, and to pay to the keeper of the asylum 114l. 15s. 4d. for the cost of maintenance from the 23rd of June, 1864, to the 25th of March, 1867, and the weekly sums which should from time to time be ordered for his maintenance:—Held, first, per totam Curiam, that the order was not bad by reason of its having been made after the expiration of the term of the sentence. Secondly, that the county Justices had jurisdiction to make it, although they were sitting in the borough which possessed an exclusive jurisdiction. Thirdly, (Blackburn, J. dubitante,) that the order was bad as to the 114l. 15s. 4d., on the ground that it was retrospective.

Held, per Mellor, J., that the order was not bad simply because it was retrospective, but because the keeper of the asylum ought to have applied for it in a more reasonable time, and that, after so great a lapse of time, the Justices ought not to have made it.

CASE stated by consent, and by the order of Shee, J., under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 11.

Henry Lewis, referred to in the order hereinafter mentioned, was convicted of felony, committed in the county of Wilts, at the Wilts Lent Assizes, 1864, and was sentenced to be imprisoned in the House of Correction for the county, situate in the borough of Devizes in the county, for twelve calendar months, and whilst undergoing such sentence, namely, in June, 1864, he became insane, and was, by an order of Her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for the Home Department, removed from the prison to a house licensed for the reception of lunatics, situate at Britton Ferry, in the county of Glamorgan, in pursuance of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54, and in which house the lunatic has ever since been confined and maintained.

The order of the Secretary of State was as follows:—"The Right Hon. Sir George Grey, Bart., one of Her Majesty's most Hon. Privy Council and Principal Secretary of State, &c.—Whereas by an act passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of Her present Majesty, intituled 'An act for making further provisions for the confinement and maintenance of insane prisoners,' it is enacted that, 'If any person while imprisoned in any prison or other place of confinement, under any sentence of death, transportation, or imprisonment, or under charge for any offence, or for not finding bail for good behaviour, or to keep the peace, or to answer a criminal charge, or in consequence of any summary conviction or order by any Justice or Justices of the Peace, or under any other than civil process, shall appear to be insane, it shall be lawful for any two Justices of the Peace of the county, city, borough, or place where such person is imprisoned, to inquire, with the aid of two physicians or surgeons, as to the insanity of such person; and if it shall be duly certified by such Justices and such physicians or surgeons that such person is insane, it shall be lawful for one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, upon receipt of such certificate, to direct, by warrant under his hand, that such person shall be removed to such County Lunatic Asylum, or other proper receptacle for insane persons, as the said Secretary of State may judge proper and appoint.' And whereas it has been certified to me under the hands of the Rev. Alfred Smith and Edward B. Edgell, Esq., two Justices of the Peace, and under the hands of R. Montgomery and T. B. Austin, surgeons, being persons authorized as aforesaid, that Henry Lewis, who was, at a gaol delivery holden in and for the county of Wilts, on the 24th day of March, 1864, convicted of larceny, and sentenced to be imprisoned for one year in the House of Correction at Devizes, for the same, has become insane. And, whereas the lunatic asylum at Britton Ferry, in the County of Glamorgan, has been recommended to me as a fit and proper receptacle for the said lunatic. And, whereas it has been certified to me by two Justices of the Peace that they intend to make an order upon the parish of Bradford-on-Avon, in which the said lunatic has been adjudged to be settled, for the weekly maintenance of the said lunatic in a lunatic asylum, I do hereby, in pursuance of the act of parliament above recited, authorize and direct you to cause the said Henry Lewis to be received from the said House of Correction into the said lunatic asylum, there to remain (maintenance for the said lunatic to be provided as aforesaid) until further order shall be made herein; and for so doing this shall be your warrant. Given at Whitehall, the 18th day of June, 1864, in the 27th year of Her Majesty's reign,

"The Superintendent of the Lunatic Asylum at Britton Ferry, in the county of Glamorgan, and all others whom it may concern: Warrant for the reception of Henry Lewis in the Lunatic Asylum at Britton Ferry, in the county of Glamorgan."

The officers of the parish of Bradford and the guardians of the poor of the Bradford Union were not informed of the lunacy of Henry Lewis, or of his removal to the asylum, until August, 1865, when the proprietor of such asylum applied to the guardians for the expense of maintaining the lunatic up to that date. In December, 1866, the guardians were again applied to by the clerk of the peace for the county of Wilts, to pay the expenses of maintaining the lunatic. On both occasions they refused to make any payment, on the ground that no order had been made on them, and that they were not liable to do so.

The case then set out an order of two Justices of the county of Wilts, sitting in the borough of Devizes (the Secretary of State not having otherwise directed), made on the 28th of March, 1867, whereby they adjudged the place of the last legal settlement of Henry Lewis to be in the parish of Bradford, in the union of Bradford, in the county of Wilts, and ordered the guardians of the union to pay to the keeper of the house of correction 5*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, the reasonable charges for inquiring into the settlement, and of carrying Henry Lewis to the asylum, and to pay to the keeper of the asylum 11*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*, being the aggregate amount of the weekly sums or charges for his maintenance in the asylum from the 23rd of June, 1864, to the 25th of March, 1867, and also to pay from the last-mentioned day such weekly sums as should from time to time be directed by the same or other Justices for the maintenance of Henry Lewis in the asylum.

The settlement of the lunatic had not been previously adjudged.

The borough of Devizes is a borough with a separate commission of the peace, and has a separate court of quarter sessions and a recorder, and the charters contain a non-intromittant clause.

The order was served upon the guardians, with the notice and grounds of adjudication, signed by the keeper of the house of correction and by Charles Pegge, the proprietor of the asylum.

The ground of adjudication was that Henry Lewis was born in the parish of Bradford in the year 1807.

The settlement of the lunatic was, at the time of the making of the order, in the parish of Bradford.

The guardians of the union duly gave notice of appeal against the order, dated the 28th of March, 1867, to the clerk of the peace of the county, to the clerk of the peace of the borough, to the keeper of the house of correction, and to the proprietor of the asylum. The grounds of appeal against such order were as follows :

First, That the order bearing date the 28th of March, now appealed against, was bad, illegal and void in law upon the face thereof.

Secondly, That the Justices being Justices of the county only, and not for the borough, had no jurisdiction to make the order.

Thirdly, That, at the time of the making of the order, Henry Lewis was not imprisoned in any county, city, borough or place within the jurisdiction of the Justices, or a criminal lunatic within the meaning of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54.

Fourthly, That the sentence of imprisonment of Henry Lewis had expired long before the making of the order.

Fifthly, That the order was retrospective, and therefore bad.

Sixthly, That the Justices had no power in and by the order, to order the guardians to pay the expenses incurred in inquiring into the insanity of Henry Lewis, or for conveying him to the asylum in June, 1864.

Seventhly, That the Justices, in and by the order, had no power to order the guardians to pay the aggregate amount of the weekly sums or charges for the maintenance of Henry Lewis in the asylum, from the 25th of June, 1864, to the 25th of March, 1867, or any part thereof.

Eighthly, That the Justices had no power, in and by the order, to order the guardians to pay any weekly sum for the future maintenance of the lunatic in the asylum.

Ninthly, That the order adjudging the settlement of the lunatic and ordering the guardians to pay the expenses of inquiring into his insanity, and the expenses of maintaining the lunatic, ought to have been made (if at all) at the time when the lunatic was conveyed from the prison to the asylum, or within a reasonable time thereof.

Tenthly, Negativating the settlement of the lunatic in Bradford parish.

Eleventhly, That all the allegations contained in the notice sent to us, and in the grounds upon which the adjudication of the Justices took place, are, and each of them is, untrue ; and we shall require you to prove the same at and upon the trial of the appeal.

Twelfthly, That the notice and grounds of adjudication sent to us are not signed by the persons required by law to sign the same.

Thirteenthly, That the order ought to have been obtained by the clerk of the peace of the borough or by the clerk of the peace of the county.

To avoid any difficulty arising from the mode in which the appeal clause to the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54. is worded, separate notices of appeal were given both for the borough and county sessions.

The questions for the opinion of this Court were :

First, Whether, under the circumstances above stated, the order dated the 28th of March, 1867, was a good and valid order.

Secondly, Whether the guardians were liable to pay the sum of 5*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, being the charges of inquiring into the insanity of Henry Lewis and his conveyance to the asylum ; or the sum of 11*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* being the aggregate amount of the weekly sums for his maintenance in the asylum from the 25th of June, 1864, to the 25th of March, 1867.

Thirdly, And whether the guardians were liable to pay the weekly sum of 16*s.* for his maintenance subsequently to the 25th of March, 1867, in the asylum.

If this Court should answer these questions or the first in the affirmative, the order was to be confirmed. But if the Court should answer the first question in the negative, then the order was to be quashed. And if the Court shall answer the second question in the negative and the third in the affirmative, or the third in the negative and the second in the affirmative, then such part of the order as was held to be bad was to be quashed, if this Court should think it right to do so.

Coleridge (Wyndham Slade with him), in support of the order.—The order is properly made under section 2. of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54 (1). It will be said that it cannot be made after the term of imprisonment has expired, but it is submitted that that is not so ; the end of the 1st section shews that the Secretary of State has power over the lunatic, although the term of imprisonment may have expired—see The Queen v. the Clerk of the Peace for the West Riding of

under his hand, that such person shall be removed to such county lunatic asylum or other proper receptacle for insane persons as the said Secretary of State may judge proper and appoint ; and every person so removed under this act, or already removed or in custody under any former act relating to insane prisoners, shall remain under confinement in such county asylum or other proper receptacle as aforesaid, or in any other county lunatic asylum or other proper receptacle to which such person may be removed, or may have been already removed, or in which he may be in custody by virtue of any like order, until it shall be duly certified to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, by two physicians or surgeons, that such person has become of sound mind, whereupon the said Secretary of State is hereby authorized, if such person shall still remain subject to be continued in custody, to issue his warrant to the keeper or other person having the care of any such asylum or receptacle as aforesaid, directing that such person shall be removed back from thence to the prison or other place of confinement from whence he or she shall have been taken, or, if the period of imprisonment or custody of such person shall have expired, that he or she shall be discharged."

Section 2, "That in all such cases as aforesaid, unless one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State shall otherwise direct, it shall be lawful for such two Justices, or any other two Justices of the Peace of the county, city, borough, or place where such person is imprisoned, to inquire into and ascertain, by the best evidence or information that can be obtained under the circumstances, of the personal legal disability of such insane person, the place of the last legal settlement, and the pecuniary circumstances of such person ; and if it shall not appear that he or she is possessed of sufficient property which can be applied to his or her maintenance, it shall be lawful for such two Justices, by order under their hands, to direct the overseers of the parish where they adjudge him or her to be lawfully settled, or in case such parish be comprised in a union declared by the Poor Law Commissioners, or shall be under the management of a board of guardians established by the Poor

(1) "That if any person, while imprisoned in any prison or other place of confinement under any sentence of death, transportation, or imprisonment, or under a charge of any offence, or for not finding bail for good behaviour or to keep the peace or to answer a criminal charge, or in consequence of any summary conviction or order by any Justice or Justices of the Peace, or under any other than civil process, shall appear to be insane, it shall be lawful for any two Justices of the Peace of the county, city, borough, or place where such person is imprisoned to inquire, with the aid of two physicians or surgeons, as to the insanity of such person ; and if it shall be duly certified by such Justices and such physicians or surgeons that such person is insane, it shall be lawful for one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, upon receipt of such certificate, to direct, by warrant

Yorkshire (2). The custody remains until a certificate is given that the prisoner is sane, and the expenses which are incurred during the whole time are to be recovered by an order of Justices made under section 2.

[LUSH, J.—It seems from the provisions

Law Commissioners, then the guardians of such union, or of such parish, (as the case may be,) to pay on behalf of such parish, in the case of any person removed under this act, all reasonable charges for inquiring into such person's insanity, and for conveying him or her to such county lunatic asylum or receptacle for insane persons, and to pay such weekly sum as they or any two Justices shall, by writing under their hands, from time to time direct, for his or her maintenance in such asylum or receptacle in which he or she shall be confined, and in the case of any person removed under any former act relating to insane prisoners, to pay such weekly sum as they or any two such Justices as aforesaid shall, by writing under their hands, from time to time direct, for his or her maintenance in the asylum or receptacle in which he or she is confined; and when the place of settlement cannot be ascertained, such order shall be made upon the treasurer of the county, city, borough, or place where such person shall have been imprisoned; but if it shall appear, upon inquiry, to the said or any other two Justices of the county, city, borough, or place where such person is imprisoned, that any such person is possessed of property, such property shall be applied for or towards the expenses incurred or to be hereafter incurred on his or her behalf, and they shall from time to time, by order under their hands, direct the overseers of any parish where any money or securities for money, goods, chattels, lands, or tenements of such person shall be, to seize so much of the said money, or to seize and sell so much of the said goods and chattels, or receive so much of the annual rent of the lands or tenements of such person, as may be necessary to pay the charges, if any, of inquiring into such person's insanity, and of removal, and also the charges of maintenance, clothing, medicine, and care of any such insane person, accounting for the same at the next special petty sessions of the division, city, or borough in which such order shall have been made, such charges having been first proved to the satisfaction of such Justices, and the amount thereof being set forth in such order." of the statute that the property of the prisoner may be applied towards the expenses incurred, so that it would seem that there must be power to make the order although the term of imprisonment has expired.]

Next, it will be said that these county Justices have no power to sit in the borough and make the order there. The borough has a Court of Quarter Sessions, with a non-intromittant clause, but the gaol is part of the county of Wilts, and the Justices have power to sit in it for a county purpose—see 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 6, referring to 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42; and see also 6 Geo. 4. c. 64. s. 48.

Poland (Lopes with him), contra.—The order is wholly bad, or, at any rate, it is bad in respect of the sum of 11*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*, being retrospective as to that amount. As to the first point, at the end of the twelve calendar months Henry Lewis ceased to be a criminal lunatic, within the meaning of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54; he would then be entitled to be treated as any other lunatic in a private asylum, and the Justices had no power to make the order. The keeper of the asylum must apply to the Secretary of State for the repayment of the expenses of maintaining the lunatic.

Next, the 6th section of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. no doubt incorporates some of the provisions of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42; but then by section 35. nothing in the act is to apply to orders made with respect to lunatics; and by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 77. s. 1. that section is not to have any controlling effect upon the 6th section, It is submitted that the result is, that the county Justices have no jurisdiction within the borough to make this order.

[MELLOR, J.—If it had been intended to have the effect which you suggest, some other words would have been introduced. The controlling effect of section 35. on section 6. is repealed by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 77.]

Next, the order is bad as to the sum of 11*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* The order of the Home Secretary was made in 1864, while the present order was made in March, 1867. It is a principle of law that the ratepayers of that year should not be compelled to pay the expenses incurred in former years. If such an order be held good, why should not one be made for all past times? Under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 97. an order may be made for the repayment of all moneys paid for the last twelve months; but that is by the express provision of the statute, without which it could not have been done at all. So in sections 98. and 99; and by section 133. nothing in the act is to affect 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54. The Queen v. the Clerk of the Peace for the West Riding of Yorkshire (2) does not decide that an order can be made for past expenses. The same objection was taken in The King v. Maulden (3), and Lord Tenterden, C.J. says, "the next question is, Is the order good altogether? It is objected to as being retrospective. The effect of a retrospective order is, to bring on inhabitants who ought not to bear it, a charge incurred during a former period. It is quite unnecessary that the Justices should have the power of making a retrospective order; for an order for the payment of a weekly maintenance might have been made as soon as the pauper was placed in the asylum; and as there is not any necessity that the Justices should have such power, and as no such power is expressly reserved to them, I am of opinion that they had it not." This order, therefore, so far as it relates to the by-gone time is bad, but good as to the residue.—See also The King v. St. Nicholas, Leicester (4), and The Queen v. Darton (5).

COCKBURN, C.J.—Three objections have been made to the validity of this order. With regard to the two objections which have been made to the whole order, I am of opinion that our judgment must be for the respondent. The first objection is, that the order was made after the period of imprisonment to which the lunatic had been sentenced had expired.—[His Lordship went through the facts stated in the case as to this point.]—I think that the appellants properly refused to pay the expenses of the maintenance of the lunatic, because no order had then been made upon them, and if they had paid them, they would have done so in their own wrong. No order was applied for until the month of March, 1867. It was objected that the order was bad on the ground I have mentioned, and at first I thought that it was so. I think, however, on a more careful examination of the section, it appears that although the period of imprisonment had expired, yet that if the lunatic had, during the time of imprisonment been transferred from the prison in which he had been confined to a lunatic asylum, he would be entitled to his discharge at the expiration of the sentence. That is borne out by the subsequent enactment in 23 & 24 Vict. c. 76. s. 8, which provides that when by reason of the expiration of the term of imprisonment, the prisoner would be entitled to his discharge, if duly certified to have become of sound mind, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of State to order the discharge, although he may not have been certified to be of sound mind, to the intent that he may be placed in a county lunatic asylum, or otherwise subjected to the same care and treatment as lunatics not being criminal. This shews plainly that without the order of the Secretary of State he could not have been discharged. The order is therefore good so far as this objection is concerned.

The second objection is, that the order is bad because the Justices making it were county Justices, who made it while sitting in the borough. The 6th section of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. enables Justices of the Peace for the county to act within the town. This is incorporated into 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. by section 6. of that act; but then it is said that section 35. provides that nothing in the act shall extend to complaints or orders made with respect to lunatics. But then by 26 & 27 Vict. c. 77. that section is not to affect section 6, and therefore, by what is certainly a most remarkable piece of legislation, the operation of section 6. is left untouched, but the rest of the act, as section 11, which gives a limit to the time within which complaint must be made, is not to apply to these orders. This objection, therefore, also fails.

The third objection is, that the order is bad in part, because it is retrospective, that is to say, as to the payment of the 11*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* The question arises whether, under the 2nd section of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54. such an order can be made. I quite feel that mischief and inconvenience may result from our holding that such an order cannot be made where the keeper of the asylum has no right to refuse to receive the lunatic, and yet without an order cannot recover the expenses of the maintenance. Such a position is not satisfactory, but if the legislature has not provided for such a case, it is not for us to legislate with a view to cure the omission. I am of opinion that we cannot so construe section 2. as to make it operative, so as to enable the Justices to make the order. —[His Lordship read the various provisions of the sections, and then continued]—Now, prima facie, that language seems to be prospective; there is nothing in it which speaks of the power to make the order as to the expense already incurred, and we start with this undeniable and indisputable rule of law, that a rate must be prospective and not retrospective, for the reasons given, namely, that the expenses ought to fall upon the ratepayers for the present time, and that by making a retrospective rate, the expenses are made to fall upon those who were not ratepayers at the time they were incurred. This is a principle long adopted and long acted on. It occurred to me that the order might be good, although retrospective, if it had been applied for within a reasonable time; but the statute is silent as to past expenses, and I find nothing to warrant it being made as to expenses incurred between the removal and the order. I lament that I should be obliged to come to this conclusion, but the omission must be cured by the legislature if it is to be cured at all.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion on all the points but one, and as to that I do not doubt sufficiently to say that I dissent. The first question arises on the statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54.—[His Lordship read the 1st section.]—I agree with my Lord and the rest of the Court that the Secretary of State may send the prisoner who becomes lunatic to the asylum, and that he is to be confined there till he is certified to be of sound mind, the Secretary of State having power to change the asylum in which he is confined, and then he may be discharged upon the order of the Secretary of State. I think that during the interval between the time at which the Secretary of State sends him to the asylum and the time of his discharge, he is to be considered to be in confinement under the order of the Secretary of State, and is to be maintained in the same way as he would be entitled to be maintained while he was in the asylum during the term of imprisonment. Then comes the question how he is to be maintained. The answer is to be found in section 2, for section 1. is silent upon it.—[His Lordship read the section.]—I entertain some doubts as to the meaning of these words, enabling the Justices to make the order upon the overseers or the guardians or the treasurer of the county. It seems to me that the keeper of the asylum has merely an equitable claim upon the government for the maintenance of the lunatic, and he cannot get the money unless he gets an order under that section. While the prisoner is confined in the asylum he must be maintained, and it must take some time, some few weeks, to ascertain where his settlement is, if it can be ascertained, and before the treasurer can be ordered to pay the expenses. The legislature must have intended that the keeper should go on keeping and maintaining him all that time. Then the time keeps running on, and if the order is afterwards made, the body of ratepayers will be changed, and it will be hard upon them if they are made to pay. Does the section mean that the Justices may make an order for the maintenance from the date of the order during the confinement already unprovided for, or does it mean maintenance from the day and date when he was sent to the asylum? I am inclined to think that the true construction is, to give power to make the order for the weekly payments from the time the lunatic was sent to the asylum. The principle upon which retrospective orders are said to be bad was pretty clearly laid down in The King v. Maulden (3) and other cases. But in The King v. Maulden (3) Lord Tenterden says, that there was no necessity that the Justices should have power to make such an order. In the present case, unless there is power to make the order now objected to, the keeper of the asylum cannot get the expenses at all except through the benevolence of the Crown. If I could find anything in the act to shew that it might be made retrospective so far as a reasonable period is concerned, I should be willing to say that if the application was made in a reasonable time, the Justices ought to have power to make the order, but I cannot find anything of that sort. As to the other point, I agree with the rest of the Court.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not desire to add anything to what has been said upon the first point. With reference to the second point, I will only say that I think the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 77. has the effect which my Lord and my Brother Blackburn have put upon it, and that is the only rational meaning which can be suggested, although the legislature has not expressed its meaning very plainly.

As to the third point, I differ from the rest of the Court. When I consider the language of the act and the object which the legislature had in view, it seems to me that, ex necessitate rei, there must be power to make an order in some respects retrospective. It could never have been intended that the keeper of the asylum should be left to the equitable consideration of the Treasury in these matters, and I think that the intention was, that all the expenses of the maintenance, of the removal to the asylum and of the inquiry into the state of mind of the lunatic, should be thrown upon the parish in which he was settled. I do not feel the difficulty which is felt by the rest of the Court in dealing with the expenses of maintenance. Looking at the necessity of the case and all the circumstances, I think that we must put upon the words the construction for which I think they are large enough,—that it was intended to give the Justices power to order that the costs of maintenance should be paid from the time of the removal of the lunatic to the time at which the order is made. Such an order would be to a certain extent retrospective; but I think that the Justices would have power to make such an order. I think, however, that the person who applies for such an order must come promptly if he wishes to get back the money which he has expended. If he chooses to pay the necessary expenses it is his own fault, and he cannot be allowed to go against the principle which has been established, that you must not throw upon the ratepayers of one year the expenses incurred in another, unless there is some statutory enactment giving power to do so. But I come to the same conclusion as the rest of the Court, that the order is bad, because the keeper of the asylum is precluded from obtaining it.

LUSH, J.—The first question is, whether the order was made in time. The prisoner was under confinement and became insane, and then he was removed to the lunatic asylum, where he continued. Had the Justices power to make the order after the term of imprisonment had expired? I cannot doubt that they had such power; so long as he continued in the asylum, they had power under the 2nd section to ascertain the place of his last legal settlement, and to direct the overseers to pay the charges for the inquiry into his sanity, the expense of removal and the maintenance. I think, therefore, that the order is so far good. The second question is, whether they had power to make the order while they were sitting within the borough. I agree that they had such power. The third question is, whether they could make it so as to enforce the payment of bygone expenses. I agree with my Lord that the language of the 2nd section is prospective merely. I can see no qualifying words.—[His Lordship read from the section.]—The words are capable of meaning that the order may be made for the whole maintenance, past and future, or they may mean future maintenance. Do they mean the whole or the future only? I am unable to agree with my Brother Mellor that the order might be made as to part of the past expenses, for if there is power to make it as to part, there is power to make it as to the whole, so that it could be made for the whole expenses running over a series of years. I cannot interpret the statute as saying that there is power to make a retrospective order, there being nothing to qualify the rule of law which prevails in such cases. So far, therefore, as it applies to the sum of 114*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*, I think it bad.

Judgment accordingly.

*Poor-Rate — Parliamentary Borough Vote — Owner rated instead of Occupier
—30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. s. 7.*

The appellant and five other persons each occupied a room in a six-roomed house in the parish of Sunderland-near-the-Sea, in the parliamentary borough of Sunderland; each had the exclusive possession of his own room, and used in common the street-door, &c.; the owner occupied no portion of the house; at the time of the passing of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. the owner was rated in respect of the whole house instead of the occupiers, by virtue of the Small Tenements Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 99), the provisions of which were then in force in the parish; after the passing of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102, the churchwardens and overseers of the parish separately rated the six occupiers:—Held, that the rate was bad, and that the owner (not the occupiers) was rateable, under the exception which is contained in 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. s. 7, and which provides that "where the dwelling-house or tenement shall be wholly let out in apartments or lodgings not separately rated, the owner . . . shall be rated . . . to the poor-rate."

This was a case stated by consent, and by order of Willea, J., for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas, under the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 11:

CASE.

1. A rate or assessment for the relief of the poor of the parish of Sunderland-near-the-Sea, in the county of Durham, and for other purposes chargeable thereon according to law, was made by the churchwardens and overseers of the said parish, on the 20th of November, 1867, after the rate of 1s. 10d. in the pound, in which rate or assessment the occupiers of a certain house or tenement, situate at No. 5, Queen Street, within the said parish, were rated or assessed as follows:—

signed by a majority of the churchwardens and overseers of the said parish, and the said rate or assessment was duly allowed on the 30th of November, 1867, by George Hudson and H. R. A. Johnson, Esqs., two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said county.

3. On the 22nd of May, 1868, William Stamper, an occupier named in the said rate or assessment of one of the rooms in the house or tenement referred to in the said rate or assessment, gave notice to the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the said parish, to the assessment committee of the Sunderland Union, in the said county of Durham, and to Thomas Lawson, of Bishop Wearmouth, the owner of the tenement mentioned in the said rate or assessment, in the following terms:

"County of Durham, to wit.

"To the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Sunderland, &c.

T

"Take notice that I, being rated as an occupier of a room in a certain tenement, No. 5, Queen Street, in the parish of Sunderland-near-the-Sea, comprised within the said Sunderland Union, in a certain rate or assessment for the relief of the poor of the said parish, and for other purposes chargeable thereon according to law, made on the 20th of November, 1867, after the rate of 1s. 10d. in the pound, do intend, at the next general quarter sessions of the peace to be holden in and for the county of Durham, at Durham, in the said county, to appeal against the said rate or assessment; and that the particular causes and grounds of such appeal are: First, that, as an occupier of a room in the said tenement, I am not by law liable to be rated or assessed to the relief of the poor of Sunderland-near-the-Sea. Secondly, that the room which I occupy in the said tenement is not a house or tenement liable to be rated or assessed to the relief of the poor of the said parish. Thirdly, that the dwelling-house or tenement of which the room for which I am rated or assessed forms a part, is wholly let out in apartments or lodgings, and the owner of such tenement is liable by law to be rated or assessed in respect thereof to the relief of the poor of the said parish, and not the occupier of any separate apartments or lodgings in the said dwelling-house or tenement. Fourthly, that I am not an occupier of any land, house or tenement within the said parish liable by law to be rated or assessed to the relief of the poor of the said parish. And take notice that at the time of the said appeal I mean to avail myself of all or some one or more of the said causes and grounds in support of the said appeal.

(Signed) "William Stamper."

4. The said parish of Sunderland-near-the-Sea is within the parliamentary borough of Sunderland, in the county of Durham.

5. The house, No. 5, Queen Street, mentioned in the said rate or assessment, is one of the many houses in the said parish which are wholly let out to different tenants in separate rooms.

6. The house was originally built and intended as a separate dwelling-house for the occupation of one family only. It is a six-roomed house, and has three storeys, containing two rooms on each floor, namely, one room on each side of the passage and staircase. There is one outer or street door, and a water-closet and other conveniences, all of which since the occupation of the house by the several tenants have been and are used in common by all of them. The six rooms in the house are tenanted by the six persons respectively whose names appear in that portion of the rate hereinbefore set forth; and whatever furniture is in the room is the property of the tenant occupying the same. The owner, Thomas Lawson, does not reside in, or, by himself, his family, or servants, occupy any portion of the said house or tenement; neither has he, nor does he exercise, nor is he entitled to have or exercise, any control or interference with the tenants, nor does he supply the tenants with any attendance or service of any kind or description whatever. Each tenant has the exclusive occupation of his or her own respective room, is liable to a week's notice to quit, and the rents are payable weekly by each, as follows, viz. Edward Woods, 2s. per week; John Oave, 1s. 8d. per week; William Stamper, 2s. per week; Margaret Havelock, 1s. 8d. per week; William Knight, 1s. 8d. per week; Thomas Humble, 1s. 8d. per week.

The assessed taxes or house-duty, the rates leviable under the Public Health and Local Government Acts, and the rent of the water supplied by the water company of the district for the purposes of the water-closet, are all paid by the owner of the said tenement.

7. The Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 7, enacts, with regard to any parish situated either wholly or partly within a parliamentary borough, as follows:

"Where the owner is rated at the time of the passing of this act to the poor-rate in respect of a dwelling-house or other tenement situate in a parish wholly or partly in a borough, instead of the occupier, his liability to be rated in any future poor-rate shall cease, and the following enactments shall take effect with respect to ratings in all boroughs.

(1.) After the passing of this act no owner of any dwelling-house or other tenement situate in a parish either wholly or partly within a borough shall be rated to the poor-rate instead of the occupier, except as hereinafter mentioned:

(2) The full, rateable, value of every dwelling-house or other separate tenement, and the full rate in the pound payable by the occupier, and the name of every occupier, shall be entered in the rate-books :

Where the dwelling-house or tenement shall be wholly let out in apartments or lodgings not separately rated, the owner of such dwelling-house or tenement shall be rated in respect thereof to the poor-rate :

Provided as follows :

(1.) That nothing in this act contained shall affect any composition existing at the time of the passing of this act ; so nevertheless that no such composition shall remain in force beyond the 29th of September next.

(2.) That nothing herein contained shall affect any rate made previously to the passing of this act, and the powers conferred by any subsisting act for the purpose of collecting and recovering a poor-rate shall remain and continue in force for the collection and recovery of any such rate or composition.

(3.) That, where the occupier under a tenancy subsisting at the time of the passing of this act of any dwelling-house or other tenement which has been let to him free from rates is rated and has paid rates in pursuance of this act, he may deduct from any rent due or accruing due from him in respect of the said dwelling-house or other tenement any amount paid by him on account of the rates to which he may be rendered liable by this act."

8. By the 61st section of the said act it is enacted, that, unless there is something in the context repugnant to such construction, the term "dwelling-house" shall include any part of a house occupied, as a separate dwelling and separately rated to the relief of the poor.

9. The 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99, intituled, "An Act for the better assessing and collecting the poor-rates and highway-rates in respect of small tenements," commonly called "The Small Tenements Rating Act," received the royal assent on the 14th of August, 1850.

10. After the passing of that act, it was duly adopted in and by the parish of Sunderland-near-the-Sea, and continued in force until the passing of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102.

11. From the 7th of October, 1850, the owners of small tenements in the said parish the yearly rateable value whereof did not exceed 6*l.*, were duly rated to the poor-rates levied in the said parish, instead of the several occupiers of the same.

12. The following is a copy of so much of the rate for the relief of the poor of the said parish which was in existence at the time of the passing of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102, as relates to the said premises of the appellant :

No.	Owner.	Description of property.	Situation of property.	Gross estimated rental.	Rateable value.	Amount of rate assessed upon and payable by the owner instead of the occupier, by virtue of the statute or statutes in that behalf.
1225	Thos. Lawson	House.	5, Queen-st.	25 l.	20 l.	1 l.

The question upon which the opinion of the Court is desired upon the above statement of facts is, whether the said William Stamper is liable by law to be separately rated in the said rate or assessment to the relief of the poor of the said parish, as an occupier of a room in the said dwelling-house, being a part only of the said dwelling-house ; and, if not so liable, what shall be done or ordered by the Court in the premises.

The Solicitor General (Lovesy with him), for the appellant.—The question is, whether the owner or the occupiers are rateable under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. s. 7. The house is wholly let out in apartments which previously were not separately rated, and that section enacts that where a dwelling-house shall be wholly let out in apartments or lodgings not separately rated, the owner shall be rated. It is true that the interpretation clause (section 61.) says that,

"dwelling-house" shall include "any part of a house occupied as a separate dwelling, and separately rated to the relief of the poor"; but this is only to hold good if there is nothing in the context repugnant to such construction, and here such a construction would be manifestly repugnant. Further, when the 7th section speaks of "apartments or lodgings," "lodgings" do not mean lodgings in the ordinary popular sense. The expression is taken from the first statute relating to the rating of small tenements, viz., Sturges Bourne's Act, 59 Geo. 3. c. 12, a statute which was followed by the 13 & 14 Vict. c. 99; and a consideration of those statutes shews that "apartments or lodgings" does not mean lodgings in the ordinary sense, as to which there was no necessity for the statutes, as they never were rated; but is meant to apply to cases where the occupier may be treated as something more than an ordinary lodger. Moreover, the words of section 7. are "not separately rated," and here the rooms were not separately rated; and if it be urged that "rated" means "rateable," the answer is, that the legislature has used both phrases in the statute, and shewn that they knew how to distinguish between them. The section looks to what is existing, in fact, at the time of the passing of the statute; and its effect is, that where the Small Tenements Acts are in force, those acts are to cease and the occupiers to be rated, unless the case falls within the exception, as the present case does. Under the Reform Act, 2 Will. 4. c. 45. s. 27, it was held, in Cook v. Humber (1) that the meaning of "house" was a question of structure, and not merely of the mode of occupying; and it may be said that the words of the interpretation clause, "occupied as a separate dwelling," re-introduce the question of structure; but even if this be so, the 7th section was intended to meet cases where the building was structurally one house, as here. The section gets rid of the Compounding Acts, so that the occupiers become rateable; but, as it was foreseen that in one case the occupiers would be too poor to pay rates, the section provides that, in such case, the owner shall be still rated; and that case is the present one, which falls within the intention and words of the statute.

Manisty (Bruce with him), for the respondents.—Although it had two objects, the main object of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. was to extend the franchise and, amongst other things, to establish household suffrage accompanied by payment of rates,—a suffrage which rests on sections 3. and 8, combined with the interpretation clause, section 61. The intention (which is what we should look to) was, that where a man had a separate exclusive occupation (not as a mere lodger) and contributed to the rates, he should be qualified to vote. In Pitts v. Smedley (2) a lodger is defined to be "the occupier of part of a house, where the landlord resides upon the premises and retains the key of the outer door."

[BOVILL, C.J.—In Cook v. Humber (1) Erle, C.J., says, "The common meaning of 'lodgings' is, part of a house used for residence."]

In Toms v. Luckett (3) the exclusive control over the door is made the test; and in Nolan's Poor Law it is said: "In order to constitute a rateable occupier it is necessary, not only that the person should have possession, but that he should have such a control and dominion over the subject as implies freedom from any paramount occupation or direct interference by a superior with his domestic arrangements and internal management, such as a farmer enjoys over his farm and the master of a family over his house. Although, therefore, if a tenement be divided by a partition and inhabited by different families, the owner in one and a stranger in another, these are several tenements and severally rateable,—per Holt, C.J., Tracey v. Talbot (4);—yet no lodger, though possessing the principal part of the house, was ever rated; but the owner, how small soever the part reserved for himself, is, in the eye of the law, the tenant for the whole, and is rated as the occupier." The expressions used in The Queen v. Smith (5) are also much to the same effect. And in the present case there was exclusive occupation, and no part reserved. We now come to the exception contained in the 7th section, of which the effect is, that where the owner lets the whole house so that he has no dominion, and it is occupied solely by tenants who are rated and pay rates, these occupiers are to be rated.

[BOVILL, C.J.—Your contention therefore is, that “rated” means “rateable,” whilst the other side say it means “rated at the time of the passing of the act.”]

The question is not to be determined by the fact of the Small Tenements Acts being in force in the parish, for, if so, the result would be different in the different parishes of the borough, according as those acts had or had not been adopted therein; and another consequence would follow from such a construction, viz, that the owner would be rated just as he was under the Small Tenements Acts, but would not have the advantage of compounding. The 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. s. 19. clearly points to the existence of such an occupation by lodgers as would make them rateable, and it is clear that where the house is wholly let out they are so liable. The exception merely meant to say, ex abundanti cautela, that in one case the owner was to be liable, and it applies where the owner chooses to let out to persons in such a manner that he would still be occupier in point of law, and they would not be separately rated.

The Solicitor General, in reply.—At the passing of this new act these rooms were not separately rated; and that being so when the act passed, the question is, whether this was to be altered. It is said that we must construe the act according to its intention, and not its words; but we must get at the meaning of what is expressed. Again, we must take into account what existed in fact and law at the time of the passing of the act. When the act passed there were pure lodgers, and also cases where the occupants were, in fact, not treated as simple lodgers; where they no doubt were occupiers, and the owner was an occupier also. If an owner had tenants occupying separate houses whose annual value was below 6*l.*, and the Small Tenements Acts were adopted, the owner had to pay a compounding rate whether he liked or not. Under the present statute this is to cease, and the occupiers are to be rated, and if they be rated and pay rates they are entitled to be registered. And if there were nothing more, the act would apply to all cases where the owner was previously rated instead of the occupiers. But then comes an exception as to compounding, which says, in effect, that some compounding householders let out their houses in lodgings which are not pure and simple lodgings (for there was no necessity to provide as to that), but are lodgings in the sense in which the term is used in Sturges Bourne's Act, where it may be doubtful whether the occupant is an occupier or a lodger; and that the owner who, in such a case, has been rated shall continue to be rated. The result of the argument on the other side is, that the provision is not wanted; and, further, the 7th section has nothing to do with lodgers; and no case but the present can be put to which it can be applicable. The expression “not separately rated” applies to actually existing facts, and if “rated” were to be read “rateable,” the provision would have no sense. The occupants are either simple lodgers or are occupiers of apartments or lodgings in the sense of Sturges Bourne's Act: in the first case the clause is not wanted, and in the second we have the very case contemplated.

Cur. adv. vult.

BOVILL, C.J.—The appellant in this case is the occupier of one room in a house situate within the respondents' parish; and by a rate made for the relief of the poor on the 20th of November, 1867, he was rated at a sum of 6*s.* 5*d.* upon a rateable value of 3*l.* 10*s.* per annum, in respect of his occupation of that room. He appealed to the Quarter Sessions against the rate; and this special case has been stated, in order to obtain the decision of this Court upon the question of whether he was liable to be so rated. Although the question is brought before us in this form, the determination of it involves the general principle upon which parochial officers must act in rating similar property, and will thus necessarily affect the lists of voters in parliamentary boroughs, and the rights of persons to be placed upon the register. The appellant in this particular case objects to be rated, and the parish officers are insisting that they have a right to rate him; but, in many cases, the position of the parties would be reversed. The parishes would probably prefer to rate the owners of small houses rather than the occupiers of the separate apartments; and the occupiers of the apartments might prefer to be rated, in order to obtain the qualification for being placed upon the register of voters. We have, however, to determine what is the proper construction to be placed upon the act of parliament, with reference to this and other similar cases. The enactment, or rather the exception, in section 7. of the act of last session is, that, "Where the dwelling-house or tenement shall be wholly let out in apartments or lodgings not separately rated, the owner of such dwelling-house or tenement shall be rated in respect thereof to the poor-rate." The house in question contained six rooms, and is stated to have been wholly let out to different tenants (of whom the appellant is one) in separate rooms,—each tenant occupying one room, and all six tenants having the use in common of the street-door, passage, staircase, and other conveniences. The owner or landlord does not reside upon the premises, or occupy any part of them, or exercise any control over the tenants, each of whom has the exclusive possession of his own room. The case, therefore, seems to come precisely within the description of a "dwelling-house wholly let out in apartments": and the only remaining question is, whether, at the time this rate was made, on the 20th of November, 1867, these apartments were "not separately rated," within the meaning of this clause of the statute. The apartments were not in fact separately rated at the time of the passing of the act, nor at the time when this rate was about to be made. If those words mean not separately rated at the time the act was passed, or at the time a rate is to be made, the exception would apply, and the owner of the house, and not the separate tenants of the rooms, ought to be rated, and the appellant would be entitled to succeed on this appeal. It was contended, however, for the parish, that the words "not separately rated" must be read as if they were "not liable to be separately rated"; and that they were intended to apply, not to a case like the present, where the separate tenants of the apartments alone occupied the house, but to cases where the owner or landlord let out the rooms, but himself resided in or kept the control over a part of the house, in such a sense as that he would be the occupier in point of law, and therefore rateable as such occupier. Upon the facts submitted for our consideration in this case, neither the owner or landlord nor any person representing him resides in or occupies any part of the house; and that has always been considered a material circumstance in determining whether the different parts of a house are to be considered as separate and independent dwellings or tenements; and, as each tenant of a room here has the sole and exclusive occupation and control over it, although he has the use of the other parts of the house in common with the other tenants, he must, I think, be considered as the occupier of a separate tenement for rating purposes. Indeed, unless this be so, there would be no person who could be properly described as the occupier, I think, therefore, that, under the statute of Elizabeth, and but for the exception in the 7th section of the act of last session, these separate occupiers of rooms would be liable to be separately rated to the relief of the poor. This, then, raises the difficulty as to the meaning and effect of the words "not separately rated," which are introduced into the exception in the 7th section, and which have given rise to the present question. If those words mean "not liable to be separately rated," this part of the section would, in my view of the occupation of the rooms, have no operation upon the case, and the separate occupiers of the rooms must be rated. But if, on the other hand, they mean, not separately rated at the time of the passing of the act, or when the rate has to be made, then the exception would apply, and the owner of the house, and not the tenants of the several rooms, must be rated. In considering what is the right interpretation of the exception, it is necessary to look to the other parts of the same section, to bear in mind the general scope and object of the act, and to consider the exception with reference to the various other provisions which are contained in the act. There is no doubt that the principal object and general scope of the late act were, to create a considerable extension of the parliamentary franchise, and in boroughs, by section 3, to extend it (subject to certain qualifications) to occupiers of dwelling-houses who were rated to the relief of the poor; and, by the effect of the interpretation clause, section 61, it was extended to occupiers of any part of a house occupied as a separate dwelling, and separately rated. At the time the act was passed, in many places the parish officers were entitled to and did rate the owners of houses instead of the occupiers, under the Small Tenements Act and other statutes; and it is manifest that, so long as those acts and that system remained in operation, and the owners were rated instead of the occupiers, the occupiers of those houses or parts of houses, not being rated, could not under the 3rd section of the act be properly placed upon the register of voters. The 7th and 8th sections of the act were no doubt introduced in order to alter the previous system of rating the owners instead of the occupiers, and to make the occupiers again rateable, with a view to the parliamentary franchise. The first part of the 7th section enacts that the rating of the owner instead of the occupier is to cease; and the effect of the 8th section is, to make the previous rating of the owner, or his liability to be rated instead of the occupier, at the time the act was passed, coupled with the subsequent actual rating of the occupier, a sufficient rating for the purpose of the occupier being placed upon the register. The language of the 7th section, so far as it is material to the present question, is as follows: "Where the owner is rated, at the time of the passing of this act, to the poor-rate in respect of a dwelling-house or other tenement situate in a parish wholly or partly in a borough, instead of the occupier, his liability to be rated in any future poor-rate shall cease, and the following enactments shall take effect with respect to rating in all boroughs: 1. After the passing of this act, no owner of any dwelling-house or other tenement situate in a parish either wholly or partly within a borough shall be rated to the poor-rate instead of the occupier, except as hereinafter mentioned. 2. The full rateable value of every dwelling-house or other separate tenement, and the full rate in the pound payable by the occupier, and the name of the occupier, shall be entered in the rate-book. Where the dwelling-house or tenement shall be wholly let out in apartments or lodgings not separately rated, the owner of such dwelling-house or tenement shall be rated in respect thereof to the poor-rate." These enactments are not confined to dwelling-houses or parts of houses, but apply to all tenements, and are of general application to the then existing laws for rating to the relief of the poor; and in terms and in substance they seem to apply to all cases in which at the time of the passing of the act the owner was rated instead of the occupier, viz., where the occupier was liable to be rated under the statute of Elizabeth, but by reason of some general or special statute was not so rated, and where the owner was rated in place of the occupier. By the first part of the enactment in section 7. and the first sub-enactment, it is clear that the rating of the owner was to cease in all cases "except as hereinafter mentioned"; and then comes the exception upon which the present question arises, and which is introduced by way of qualification upon the previous general enactment in the same section. Now, in the first place, it seems to me that this clause was intended to be an exception from and to apply in cases which came within the principal enactment, viz., in cases where there was an occupier who would have been liable to be rated as such under the statute of Elizabeth, but where the owner instead of such occupier was rated under the provisions of some other statute; whereas, in the case put by Mr. Manisty, and to which he contended the exception was intended to apply, viz., that of the owner occupying or having control over part of the house, the owner would be the person properly rateable as the legal occupier. That would not be a case of the owner being rated instead of the occupier, and there would therefore have been no occasion for the exception. The principal enactment in the first part of the section would not include such a case, and the exception therefore would be wholly unnecessary. It further appears to me that, both in the 7th and in the 8th sections, the time of the passing of the act is made the dividing point with reference to the rating and liability to be rated of the owner instead of the occupier; and I think the words "not separately rated," in the exception, must also be construed as having reference to the same time, viz., the passing of the act. It is further to be observed that, in the very next section, the 8th, the legislature, in referring to the rating of the owner at the time of the passing of the act, uses the words "is rated," or "is liable to be rated," which shews that they were fully alive to the difference between the two expressions: and this makes it still more difficult to read the words "not separately rated," in the exception, as meaning "not liable to be separately rated," as contended for by the respondents. Again, the exception mentions lodgings as well as apartments; and in the case of lodgers no rating is required, their right to be placed upon the register being specially provided for by the 4th section. Upon these grounds, and after the best consideration which I have been able to give the matter, it seems to me that this is a case in which "the house was wholly let out in separate apartments not separately rated," within the true meaning of the exception, and that the owner of the house, and not the occupiers of the separate apartments, must therefore be rated in respect of it. The owner not being a party to the proceedings, and it not being stated what is the amount upon which he ought to be rated, we are not in a position to say how the rate should be amended; and the proper course will therefore be that it should be quashed.

BYLES, J.—I am of opinion that the assessment of the appellant is wrong. I collect from the case that the appellant, though he may be called a lodger in the popular sense of that word, is more than a mere lodger in its strict legal sense; for he has the exclusive occupation of a particular room, and has a right to use the outer door, the staircase, and other conveniences, as easements appurtenant to his occupation, the owner not residing on the premises, and therefore not retaining his control over the outer door, or his character of master or paterfamilias. I therefore think the tenant was before the statute 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. liable to be rated. But I think the late statute takes away that liability, and shifts it on the owner. Sub-section 1. of section 7, and the exception ingrafted thereon, appear to govern this case. The effect of the rule and exception is this. The rule is, no owner is to be rated instead of the occupier. The exception is this—except where the house is wholly let out in apartments or lodgings not separately rated; and, in cases falling within this exception, the owner shall be rated. An exception implies that the case excepted is one which, but for the exception, would have fallen within the rule. The rule here applies only to cases where there is an occupier as well as owner; so, therefore, does the exception. The excepted cases, therefore, include cases of occupation, properly so called. It follows that the apartments or lodgings mentioned in the section include rooms of which the tenant is occupier, and for a trespass to which he could bring an action of trespass. The effect of the enactment in the present case is, to make the owner rateable instead of the tenant. The words "not separately rated" introduce some difficulty, and their meaning is very doubtful. The appellant has contended that they mean, not separately rated at the passing of the act; the respondent, that rated means rateable, or that the words "separately rated" mean actually rated before, or by the rate in question. Some violence to the words, or some difficulty, attends both constructions, perhaps attends any construction. Possibly the words mean not separately rated as being "separate dwellings," like the flats in Edinburgh, or the houses in Victoria Street. But, as without those words the sense of the clause seems to be clear, and as there is (to say the least) no more difficulty in bending those words to fit that clear sense than to fit any other sense, the presence of those words does not seem to me to preclude the appellant's construction of the clause. There are other considerations which tend to the conclusion that the owner, and not the occupier, is in this case the person to be rated. The main object of the act (as appears from the preamble) was, to amend the laws relating to the representation of the people. Any alteration in the law of rating was secondary and subsidiary to the main object. In settling the qualification for voting in boroughs, the governing intention seems to have been to confer the franchise on every ordinary rated occupier of a dwelling-house (which expression by the interpretation clause includes not every dwelling, but only every "separate dwelling"), and to exclude from the franchise lodgers, unless their lodgings were worth, if unfurnished, 10*l.* a year. The word "lodger" is nowhere defined in the act; and section 4. subsection 2. speaks of him as occupying separately and as sole tenant part of a dwelling-house. From all which it may be argued that the legislature, even in section 4, did not use the words "lodger" and "lodgings" in their narrow and strict legal sense, but in the popular sense, so as to comprehend occupiers of rooms, where the rooms form part of a dwelling-house, and were not intended and constructed to form complete separate dwellings, as they do in the flats of Edinburgh, in the chambers of the Inns of Court, or in the houses in Victoria Street. Flats are as much separate dwellings as ordinary adjoining houses are. The difference is, that flats are under one roof, and are divided one from another by a horizontal plane, but ordinary adjoining houses by a perpendicular or vertical plane. And, independently of the introduction in section 4. of the word occupy, it may be remarked that it is a recognized rule in the construction of acts of parliament, that words are to be taken in their ordinary and popular sense, unless the context requires a different sense. It may be, therefore, that the appellant is within the meaning of the statute a lodger; but that precise question is perhaps not before us. For these reasons, I think the occupier in this case is not now liable to be rated, but that the owner is liable.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J.—The appellant complains that he is rated to a poor-rate made for the parish of Sunderland, for one room occupied by him in a house. The rateable value of the room appearing on the rate is 3*l*. 10*s*. I am of opinion that the appellant is not liable to be so rated. The case finds that the house, consisting of six rooms, was built and intended for the occupation of one family only; and the structure apparently remains in its original state. The six rooms are let in separate rooms to six persons. There is only one street-door, and one set of domestic offices, which are used in common by the six occupiers. The owner does not reside in the house, or exercise any control over the occupiers. At the time of the passing of "The Representation of the People Act, 1867," the owner was rated for the house, the rateable value of which was 20*l*., and, as appears in the rate, "instead of the occupier," by virtue of the Small Tenements Act, 13 & 14 Vict.

c. 99, the provisions of which were then in force in Sunderland. The question in the appeal turns on the construction of the 7th section of 'The Representation of the People Act, 1867,' and especially of an enactment found, in the shape of an exception, in that clause. It will be necessary, in order to ascertain the scope and meaning of the enactments in the 7th clause, to advert shortly to the two clauses defining the qualifications of voters in boroughs. The 3rd clause defines "the occupation franchise," and requires as part of the qualification the rating of the voter "as an ordinary occupier." The 4th clause defines "the lodger franchise," and confers the right to vote on a man who "as a lodger has occupied separately and as sole tenant lodgings." Rating forms no part of this qualification. The 3rd clause contains all that need have been enacted to carry out the intention of the legislature as regards rating, if rating had depended simply on the statute of 43 Eliz., "for the relief of the poor." But, in several places, owners were rated, instead of the occupiers, in respect of small tenements, by virtue of statutes passed for the purpose; and the legislature found it necessary to deal with the state of things which so existed. Hence the clause in question, which is in terms a rating clause, and nothing more. This clause (the 7th) does not expressly refer to the Small Tenements Acts; but, assuming the existence of the mode of rating introduced by them, and confining the new legislation to parliamentary boroughs, enacts that, "Where the owner is rated at the time of the passing of the act in respect of a dwelling-house or other tenement, instead of the occupier, his liability to be rated in any future poor-rate shall cease." The clause then proceeds to enact, that, "after the passing of the act, no owner of any dwelling-house or other tenement shall be rated to the poor-rate instead of the occupier." If the clause had stopped there, it would have been clear: but it adds, "except as hereinafter mentioned." These words clearly point to an exception in which provision will be made for some cases where, after the passing of the act, owners shall still be rated "instead of the occupiers." The exception, which is in imperative words, runs as follows: "Where the dwelling-house or tenement shall be wholly let out in apartments or lodgings, not separately rated, the owner of such dwelling-house or tenement shall be rated in respect thereof to the poor-rate." This exception clearly keeps alive or re-enacts the liability of the owner to be rated instead of the occupier in one class of cases; and the question is whether the case of this house falls within that class. Now, when the rate appealed from was made, the house was wholly let out in single rooms, which were not separately rated; and it would certainly seem that a house so let out is a house wholly let out in apartments or lodgings, in the ordinary and popular sense of those words. If this house does not answer the description, it is difficult to suggest one which would do so. The exception clearly cannot apply to the case of a house in which the owner lives, and takes lodgers to live in the same house with him; for the enactment expressly deals with a house "wholly" let out in lodgings, and therefore assumes to deal with houses in which the owners do not live, but wholly and entirely let them out, as in this case. Strong support is given by previous legislation to this view of the enactment. The words are evidently taken from Sturges Bourne's Act, 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. s. 19, which describes houses "let out in lodgings or in separate apartments." That act, in order to remedy the mischief arising from the evasion of the payment of rates in such cases, makes provision for rating the owner instead of the occupiers. In introducing the same words into the exception with which we are dealing, and which has the same object as Sturges Bourne's Act, viz. to render the owner liable to be rated instead of the occupier in a certain class of cases, it seems reasonable to presume that the legislature was dealing with the same sort of apartments and lodgings as those described in the former act. Now, it is, I think, clear that the rooms in this house in Sunderland exactly answer the description of apartments in Sturges Bourne's Act. That act dealt with rooms so occupied as to be rateable under the Statute of Elizabeth; and these rooms would be, as rightly contended by the respondents, rateable under that statute, if no other legislation had intervened. If, then, these rooms do fall within the description of Sturges Bourne's Act, the inference is very strong that they were intended to be comprised in the enactment with which we are now dealing, which employs the same language for the same object as the former act. As far as I can collect the intention of the legislature from the language used, it was meant to make a distinction between the occupiers of mere rooms and apartments in an ordinary house, and the occupiers of small houses, and of parts of houses, as defined in the interpretation clause, i.e. occupied as "separate dwellings," such as chambers in the Inns of Court. The first are really and practically lodgers, differing from lodgers, properly so called, only in this, that the owner does not live in the house, but lets it out wholly instead of partially in lodgings. The legislature may well have intended that the occupiers of mere apartments should not be rated as "ordinary occupiers;" and it may have been governed by two considerations in making the distinction to which I have adverted,—first, the great inconvenience of assessing the occupants and collecting the rates of separate rooms in houses of this description, as a purely rating question,—secondly, the anomaly which might exist in the franchise, if a lodger, properly so called, that is, a man who lived in a house partially let out in lodgings was not entitled to the franchise, unless his lodgings unfurnished were of the value of 10*l.* a year, whilst the man who occupied one room in a house wholly let out in lodgings, was entitled to it, however small the value of his room might be. The great difficulty in the construction of the enactment arises from the words "not separately rated." It was contended for the respondents that those words limit the operation of the exception to the case where the rooms are not separately liable to be rated; and that "rated" must be read "rateable." But, first, the legislature has used the word "rated"; and I cannot construe it to mean "rateable" unless the context compels me to do so. But the context leads to a contrary conclusion. If "rated" is to be read "rateable," and the exception is to be construed to be confined to apartments not liable to be rated as separate tenements, by reason of the occupiers being mere lodgers only, the whole enactment becomes inoperative, because, on the hypothesis, the owner would by the statute of Elizabeth, and without the enactment, be rateable; and the owner certainly never could be rated "instead of the occupier," because, on the hypothesis, there is no occupier liable to be or who could be rated. The words cannot, therefore, I think, be read in a way which would render the enactment in which they are found meaningless and nugatory. Again, the words cannot mean that, in case, after the passing of the act, the apartments, shall in fact be separately rated, the owner shall not be rated, because that would in effect be to give to the overseers an election to rate the occupiers or the owner, which cannot be presumed to have been the intention. But, if that were the proper construction, it could not avail the respondents in this case; for, at the time of making the rate appealed from, the occupiers were not in fact rated. The words "not separately rated" are satisfied by holding them to mean not separately rated at the time of the passing of the act; and they may have been introduced to leave cases, if any, where apartments in a house wholly so let out were at the time of the passing of the act separately rated, in statu quo, unaffected by the exception. This limited meaning is not inconsistent with the general intention which seems to pervade the enactment, viz. an intention to put the occupiers of lodgings in an ordinary house wholly let out in lodgings, and the owner of a house so let, in the same position as the occupiers of lodgings in a house partially so let out, and the owner of such house. I have endeavoured to reach the mind of the legislature through the words they have used, adopting the rule of construction given by Lord Wensleydale in The King v. the Inhabitants of Banbury (6), where that learned Judge says: "The right rule of construction is, to intend the legislature to have meant what they have actually expressed, unless a manifest incongruity would result from doing so, or unless the context clearly shews that such a construction would not be the right one." The above construction will not, as I have before incidentally observed, affect the case of occupiers of apartments in houses so constructed as to be occupied separately, and which by actual severance are separate dwellings, as chambers in the Inns of Court.

(6) 1 Ad. & E. 142.

These if not dwelling-houses, are clearly parts of houses "occupied as separate dwellings," and are not, as I think, "apartments or lodgings" within the meaning of those words in the 7th clause. It was made a question during the argument whether the room occupied by the appellant was a "dwelling-house" at all within the meaning of the act, even as dwelling-house is interpreted, and whether the distinction between dwelling-house and lodgings, depending on the principle of actual severance in structure of the house, as defined in the cases of Cook v. Humber (1) and Henrette v. Booth (7), was not intended to be preserved by the late act. I do not think it necessary to decide whether the room in question ought to have been deemed to be part of a house as defined in the interpretation clause or not, supposing the case had to be decided on that ground alone, and the exception in the 7th section had not been introduced into the act; because I think, for the reasons already given, this room is an apartment or lodging within the meaning of that exception, and that the liability to be rated is governed by that enactment. The consequence will, no doubt, follow, that the present appellant will only be entitled to vote, if at all, upon the lodger franchise. The question of the right to vote is not directly before the Court; but reasons may be suggested for considering the occupiers of the house in question to be "lodgers" within the meaning of the 4th clause. It may not be necessary to confine the meaning of the words "as a lodger" to lodgers properly so called, in a statute which (in the 7th clause) uses the word a house "wholly let out in lodgings"; and it may be that the statute can be so construed as to include under the term "lodgers" both the persons who live in houses partially let out in lodgings, and in which the owner resides, and those who live in houses wholly let out in lodgings, especially where, as to the latter class, the owner of the house is made liable to be rated. The word "lodgers" is not defined in the act; but the provisions to which I have adverted may tend to shew that the word was not used in the confined sense of "mere lodgers"—to quote the words of Maule, J., (7) 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 500; s. c. 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 61.

in Toms v. Luckett (3),—but in a more enlarged sense, intended to describe the occupants of lodgings such as those existing in the present case, which are neither houses, nor severed and separate dwellings, such as chambers and flats. It was said by the Court in Cook v. Humber (1) that “a lodger is a tenant, if the premises are let to him.” There is no doubt that that is so, although the owner lives in the same house; and that for many legal purposes there is no distinction, as regards the occupants of lodgings, between the cases where the house is partially let out and where it is wholly so let out, provided that the lodgers in each case have the right to the exclusive possession of their own rooms. The 8th section does not seem to me to advance the argument for the respondents; for that clause is framed to make provision for the first registration of occupiers, in cases where the owner is no longer liable to be rated in their stead, and does not affect the point arising for our decision, which turns on the question whether the owner in the particular case is not still so liable. If the above construction be correct, the operation of the 7th clause, taken as a whole, will be, that occupiers of small houses, and of separate parts of houses, as chambers, will for the future be liable to be rated, notwithstanding the Small Tenements Acts, whatever the value of their holding, and that the owner will no longer be rateable in respect of them; and, so far as rating is concerned, such occupiers will be qualified to vote upon the occupation franchise; but that, as regards the occupiers of lodgings, where the house is wholly let out in apartments, as in this case, not separately rated when the act passed, the owner, and not the occupiers, must be rated, and the occupiers will be entitled to vote, if at all, upon the lodger franchise. For the reasons I have given, I think the appellant is entitled to our judgment, and that the rate must be quashed.

Turnpike — Exemption from Toll of Clergyman visiting Sick Parishioner.

A clergyman driving out to visit a sick parishioner is exempted by 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32. from paying toll in respect of his carriage and horses, although accompanied by his wife and family.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The respondent, as collector of tolls on the road leading from Rickmansworth to Sudbury, made complaint before a Justice of the Peace for Middlesex against the appellant for passing through the turnpike-gate without paying toll in respect of a horse drawing a carriage with four wheels. It appeared, upon the hearing of the complaint, that the defendant was the perpetual curate of St. John's, Wembly, and that on the 22nd of October, 1867, he was sent for to visit a sick parishioner within his parish; that he went to visit her in a pony carriage drawn by one pony; that he took with him in the carriage his wife and two daughters; that he could have gone the whole way through his own parish, but that the distance was shortened by nearly a mile by going into the turnpike-road, which was in another parish, and on which road was the Sheepcote toll-gate; that he went by the turnpike-road, and that on passing the toll-gate the complainant demanded the toll, which the defendant refused to pay, alleging that he was exempt as being the perpetual curate of the ecclesiastical district of St. John's, Wembly, then going to visit a sick parishioner within his own district or parish. For the non-payment of this toll the present complaint was made. It was contended, by the defendant, that he was entitled to the exemption claimed by reason of the proviso in 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32 (1).

It was contended, by the complainant, that although the defendant was personally exempt from toll, that exemption did not extend to the persons conveyed with him

(1) By 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32. no toll shall be demanded or taken by virtue of this or any other act or acts of parliament on any turnpike-road or from any person or persons for any horse or horses, or other beast or cattle, or for any wagon, wain, cart or other carriage employed in carrying in his carriage. To this it was replied, by the defendant, that inasmuch as the person being the driver and owner of a carriage is the person liable to pay the toll, if it could not be levied upon the clergyman driving it could not be levied upon the other occupants of the carriage, and therefore could not be demanded at all.

The Magistrates were of opinion that inasmuch as persons on military duty could not take others with them, even although the statute had exempted the carriage conveying them, still less was it competent to a clergyman to do so, for whom the statute had made the exemption merely a personal one. It was also their opinion that although the clergyman driving the carriage was personally exempt, he did not thereby also avoid the liability he might incur as being the driver by reason of other persons who were not exempt being in the carriage with him, the liability of the driver of a carriage being a liability to pay the charge incurred by the carriage and its contents. They therefore convicted the defendant in the penalty of 1s. and costs. If the Court should be of opinion that the defendant was rightly convicted, the conviction was to remain; if otherwise, to be quashed.

F. T. Streeten, for the respondent.—It is submitted that this conviction can be supported. The persons in the carriage were more than could be necessary for the visitation, and it could not surely be contended that a clergyman on parochial duty could drive out in a coach and four and take a party of friends with him.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—It is a question of bona fides. Here there can be no doubt as to the bona fides of the appellant.]

The exemption as far as the clergyman is concerned is a personal one.

[BLACKBURN, J.—No; the exemption applies to the horses or carriages of the clergyman. If the appellant had taken out his wife and family for a drive and called or conveying, or going empty to fetch, carry or convey, or returning empty from carrying or conveying, &c., or of or from any person or persons going to or returning from his, her or their usual place of religious worship tolerated by law on Sundays or any day on which divine service is by authority ordered to be celebrated, &c., or from any rector, vicar or curate going to or returning from visiting any sick parishioner, or on other his parochial duty within his parish.

on a sick parishioner by the way, it might have been different. But here the finding of the Magistrates is in his favour.]

May 2. { PANY, appellants; THE GUARDIANS OF ST. ASAPH
UNION, respondents.

Poor - Rate—Artificial Watercourse — Water conveyed by Pipes for the Purpose of Working Lead-Mines—Rateable Value.

The proprietors of a lead-mine obtained, in consideration of annual payments, the right of diverting a natural spring upon the land of an adjoining proprietor, and of conveying the water over the land of intervening proprietors to iron pipes laid down near their own mine. This water was required for steam pumping-engines and other machinery used in working the mine:—Held, first, that there was sufficient evidence to shew that the mine-owners were so far occupiers of the land covered by the pipes and watercourse as to be rateable in respect of it; secondly, that the rateable value of this land was not its ordinary value for agricultural purposes, but the increased value which it had acquired from its use in working the mine, for that, although the mine itself was not rateable, the pipes and watercourse could in no respect be considered as part of it.

The King v. the Overseers of Bilston (1) explained.

Upon appeal by the Talargoch Mining Company, Limited, against a valuation list of the parish of Dyserth, within the St. Asaph Union, the following CASE, by an order of Lush, J., was stated for the opinion of the Court, pursuant to 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 11.

In the parish of Dyserth, in the county of Flint, there is a lead-mining company known as "The Talargoch Mining Company, Limited," and according to the memorandum of association of the company, "the objects for which the company is established are the raising, working and selling of lead ore, and other minerals, upon and under a certain mine known as Talargoch." From this mine between 300 and 400 tons of lead ore are raised monthly. A spring, rising in the adjoining parish of Curn, used to run along its natural course in the parish of Dyserth, and turn a corn-mill, the property of Mr. Shipley Conway; but the company requiring the water to work an hydraulic pumping-engine on the mine, and for other purposes, took a lease of the mill, and diverted, by an artificial and new watercourse, of about a mile and a half in length, wholly within the parish, so much of the water as was required for the purposes of the mine, after providing sufficient for the inhabitants along the stream. When the new watercourse was originally constructed, the company were not seised or possessed of any of the lands through and over which the water flowed, but they paid the occupiers of those lands an annual sum for carrying the water over their lands. In consequence, however, of the dissatisfaction expressed by one of the principal occupiers on the line, who undertook to the company, the latter were induced to purchase the interest of the superior landlord in the premises, and then let the whole of the farm to the occupier. To some other riparian proprietors, however, the company still make annual payments for the lands respectively occupied by their watercourse. The total amount paid to all the occupiers, including the occupier of the farm belonging to the company, is 7*l.* 7*s.* 6*d.* The rateable value of the land in which the water flows is, for agricultural purposes, 2*l.* The new watercourse is partly open and partly tunnelled, and the whole, with the walls, sluices, flood-gates, pipes, and other works connected therewith, are from time to time cleansed, repaired, renewed, maintained and kept in order by the company. At the terminus and destination near the mine, the water, for about 250 yards, is conveyed by large iron pipes, which pipes were laid down so as to lead in the first instance to the hydraulic engine. In consequence of the uncertain supply of water in the summer, the company found it necessary to put down a steam pumping-engine; and from 1862 to the present time, the hydraulic engine has not been in use, but the pipes still convey the water to the mine.

A portion of the water (a six-inch pipe) is conveyed through the pipes that were put down to feed the hydraulic engine to feed a steam pumping-engine, and which water, after supplying this engine, returns into the natural watercourse. The remainder of the water, which flows along the artificial course, passes into a pool to supply another steam pumping-engine and to work a water-wheel which winds the ore and refuse out of the mine. Attached to the wheel is a pair of crushers to crush the ore, and also a circular saw, which is used to saw timber used in the mine, and for other purposes, such as sawing boards for the repair of carts used in the mine, and upon a few occasions, as and when required, for the repair of the buildings of the farm belonging to the company. After passing over the water-wheel, the water is used to wash and clean the ore in order to make it merchantable, and it then returns into the natural course. According to the custom of the trade, the ore is crushed, washed and cleansed before it is removed from the mine.

Whilst the company held the water corn-mill before mentioned, they paid 100*l.* a year for it, and they were rated at 100*l.* for the mill, and paid their rates; but the lease thereof having expired, they have now made a fresh arrangement with the landlord, by which they have given up the mill, and pay him 100*l.* per annum for the flow of water to their mine. The occupiers of the mill-house and the land attached to it, are now rated at a reduced rateable value, consequent on the loss of the flow of the water to the mill. The parish officers of Dyserth considered that the watercourse is enhanced in value by the water flowing on it, and was subject to be rated to the relief of the poor, and have rated the two acres of land covered with water, at 100*l.* The assessment committee considered, on the above facts, that the company were rateable, and have rated them at 100*l.*

The opinion of the Court is requested, whether the company is liable to be rated for the land on which the water flows, and if so, whether to the amount of the agricultural value of the land, or to the amount of its enhanced value by reason of its being converted into a watercourse and applied to the purposes above set forth.

If the Court should be of opinion that the company are liable to be rated, then the company agree, that a judgment in conformity with such decision, and for such amount, and for such costs as the Court may adjudge, may be entered on motion by the respondents, at the sessions next, or next but one, after such decision shall have been given. If the Court be of a contrary opinion, then the respondents agree that a judgment in conformity with the decision of such Court, and for such costs as such Court may adjudge, may be entered on motion by the company at the sessions next, or next but one, after such decision shall have been given.

Watkin Williams, for the respondents.—First, the company are rateable in respect of the pipes through which the water is conveyed. They could maintain trespass for so much of the land as is covered by the pipes. It is conceded that the mine itself is not rateable—Rowles v. Gell (1), the ground of exemption being that coal-mines are alone mentioned in the statute. But the occupation of property by means of pipes is rateable. In The Queen v. the Proprietors of the West Middlesex Waterworks (2), where a waterworks company conveyed water by means of a main under the surface of the highway, and no freehold or leasehold interest in the soil was vested in the company, it was held that the company were in possession of the space in the soil which the mains filled and were rateable in respect of them. In The King v. the Overseers of Bilston (3), where an engine used in working a mine was held not to be the subject of a rate, the engine was just as much a part of the mine as if it had been underneath it. It does not matter whether property is occupied for the benefit of other non-rateable property or not—The King v. Cunningham (4). If the owner of a lead-mine opened a tramway of the 300*l.* a year for the sole benefit of the mine the rateability of this way would not be affected by its proximity to the mine which is not rateable. With regard to the value of the occupation of the watercourse, the overseers have adopted no new principle in assessing it at the value of 100*l.* a year. It cannot be said that this watercourse is only used for the purpose of working the mine. Could it be said that houses built for the use of men employed in working the mine were not rateable?

Mellish (M'Intyre with him), for the appellants.—As to the question whether the company are in occupation of the land over which the water is diverted, it must be remembered that this watercourse was originally a natural stream, and although diverted has all the incidents of a natural stream as regards the adjoining owners. The company cannot therefore be considered as occupiers of the land covered by this stream, at least of that portion of it which lies open.

With regard to the second question, the Court must say whether the case can be distinguished from The King v. Bilston (3), where it was distinctly held that the occupier of an ironstone mine could not be rated in respect of an engine which had been erected for the purpose of drawing water from the mine, on the ground that the engine was not profitable but burdensome except as respected the mine itself. Here the watercourse has no value except in respect of a subject-matter which is not rateable.

[BLACKBURN, J.—The King v. Bell (5) shews that if the owner of mines lays a railroad over the surface of the adjoining land for the purpose of carrying away the ore, that would be rateable.]

Here the watercourse would pass under a conveyance of the mine without express words.

W. Williams, in reply.—Two questions remain to be decided by the Court. First, are the company in occupation of the land over which the water flows? Secondly, can the watercourse be considered as part of the mine? As to the first question, no doubt can be entertained but that the company occupy the land by means of their pipes. With regard to the second the sum of seven guineas paid by the company is not the rent of the land which they actually occupy. The annual value of this land is of much greater amount owing to the presence of the watercourse.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think that our judgment must be for the respondents. The only difficulty is in determining what is the real question submitted to us. If it was intended to raise any question as to the rateability of the watercourse, because of its being accessory to the working of a lead-mine, I think that the answer is, that although the mine itself is not rateable, and although, according to the case of The King v. the Overseers of Bilston (3), anything which forms part of the machinery of the mine is also exempted from rateability, yet here we are dealing with a watercourse passing over a considerable extent of land, and we must look at the case as one where the value of the land is enhanced by the presence of the watercourse which passes over it, so that the rateable value is increased. On the other hand, if it was intended to rate the sum of 100*l.*, which is annually paid, not as rent for the land covered by the water, but for the right to divert the water from its natural spring, I agree with Mr. Mellish that this would not be a proper subject for a rate. With regard to the rateable value of the land covered by the watercourse, I think that the enhanced value of this land with the water upon it, by reason of its neighbourhood to the mine, was properly taken into account. Suppose that, instead of the present state of things, the company were neither owners nor occupiers of the land covered by the watercourse, they would have to pay so much rent for the use of it, and the amount of that rent would be a proper measure for the rate. Mr. Williams says, that this hypothetical rent must be assumed to have been the basis of the present rate. If the overseers had in mind, when they made the rate, the 100*l.* which is paid for the privilege of diverting the water, they went upon a wrong basis; but there is nothing to shew that this was the case, and they may very well have considered that 100*l.* fairly represented the annual value of the land covered with the water. The rate must, therefore, be affirmed.

BLACKBURN, J.—I quite agree with what the Lord Chief Justice has said. The first question, as to the occupation of the land covered by the watercourse, and the bricks and other articles by which the water is confined, is one of fact. If the company are occupiers of the land so covered by the water, they are rateable in respect of it: if what they possess is only an easement without any exclusive occupation they are not rateable. As to the pipes, I see no distinction between this case and those which have decided that gas and waterworks companies so far occupy land by means of their mains as to be rateable in respect of them. Then comes the other question, what is the rateable value according to which the land covered by the watercourse, ought to be assessed? It has been said that inasmuch as this stream is used in working a lead-mine, which is not rateable, the enhanced value of the stream ought not to be taken into account, and the case of The King v. the Overseers of Bilston (3) has been relied upon. There it was held that an engine used in working a mine of ironstone was not rateable. But I think that it must be taken that there the shaft was part of the mine itself. There is nothing to shew that it occupied any land distinct from the pit. If it did I should hesitate before I concurred with the decision. In the present case the value of the land is enhanced by reason of the facility for taking water to the mine. If another person were proprietor of the land in which this watercourse flows, he might let the use of the water to the company from year to year, and the rateable value would be the rent which they might reasonably be called upon to pay. There might be various circumstances to determine what has been called the higgling of the market. No doubt the existence of the watercourse would be a great element in estimating this annual value; for if it were merely agricultural land, they would have to incur great expense in collecting and conducting the water. Therefore the enhanced value of the land with the water upon it, must be taken into account, independently of the right to divert water from the spring. It may be that the assessment committee have erroneously taken the value of this right into account, but if they have merely considered the 100*l.* as the proper annual value of the land covered by water, they are right.

1868. }
 April 22. } THE QUEEN v. WATSON.

Poor-Rate—Township—Hamlet detached from a Township for Ecclesiastical Purposes, but remaining attached to it for Civil Purposes.

There is no legal objection to the inference that a hamlet or township once extended into two parishes, and afterwards became detached and annexed to the one parish for ecclesiastical purposes, continuing to form part of the other parish for civil purposes.

The hamlet of T. had for a hundred years past, and for anything that appeared to the contrary before that time, been rated to the poor and highway rates of the adjacent township of H, which maintained its own poor and highways separately, and together with another township formed the parish of H. On the other hand, the lands in T, from the earliest period, were tithable to the adjacent parish of K, as being situate in that parish, and the occupiers were rated to and paid church-rates in that parish, and also Easter and other ecclesiastical dues, and never paid tithes, &c. to H :—Held, that there was no ground for disturbing the long-established usage of rating T. to the poor-rates of H, as it was impossible to say that this usage could not have had a legal origin from the tithes having been severed from T. and conferred upon the parish of K, while T. itself was associated with H. as one township for rating purposes according to the act 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12.

Upon appeal, by Joseph Watson to the Quarter Sessions for the East Riding of York, against a poor-rate made by the churchwardens and overseers of the parish of Hessele, the Sessions dismissed the appeal, and ordered the rate to be confirmed, with costs, subject to the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench on the following

CASE.

On the 1st of September, 1865, a poor-rate was made, in conformity with the valuation list then in force, by the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the parish of Hessele, in the East Riding of the county of York, which rate was thereafter duly allowed and published. In and by the rate the appellant, Joseph Watson, and the respondents, Henry Barkworth, Christopher Leake Ringrose, John Burstall Thompson and John Percy Clark, are respectively rated for and in respect of lands in their respective occupations situate in the township or hamlet of Tranby.

Against this rate the appellant duly appealed to the above-mentioned Sessions, and the question raised on the appeal and material for the purposes of this case is, whether the appellant and the four respondents are liable to be rated in respect of their respective occupations of so much of the property therein rated as is locally situate in the township or hamlet of Tranby, it being contended, on behalf of the appellant, that he and they were not legally liable to be rated to, and in respect of, such property in the parish of Hessele, but in the adjacent parish of Kirk Ella, in the said East Riding, of which it was contended that Tranby formed a part.

The parishes of Hessele and Kirk Ella are both ancient immemorial parishes. Hessele consists, independently of the disputed district of Tranby, of the township of Anlaby and the township of Hessele, the former of which maintains its own poor and highways separately, and has its own overseers and surveyors. The churchwardens and overseers of Hessele make poor-rates for the remainder of the parish, and which rates, like the present rate, are commonly called rates for the "township of Hessele," but which rates for a considerable time past, as hereinafter mentioned, have included the lands of Tranby.

The district of Tranby has commonly been called a township or hamlet, but it has not maintained its own poor or highways separately, nor appointed a constable. It consists of a considerable tract of agricultural land, having on it three or four gentlemen's residences, one of which has a lodge and farm-house attached to it. It lies adjacent to Hessele and also to Kirk Ella, but the residences in Tranby, with one exception, are nearer to the parish church of Hessele than that of Kirk Ella.

For about the last one hundred years, and for anything that appears to the contrary before that time, the lands in Tranby have been rated to the relief of the poor of Hessle, exclusive of the township of Anlaby, and the overseers of that part of Hessle parish have acted for Tranby as if it were a part of their district.

The earliest rate of which there is evidence is that of the year 1765, and in that and the six succeeding years the ratepayers of Tranby, though included in the Hessle rates, are inserted in a list by themselves, headed "Tranby Tenants," and ending with a summary of the amount under the head "Total Tranby Assessments"; but this practice was not continued after 1772, but all the persons rated both in Hessle and Tranby are included in one general list. The Tranby lands have also, as far back as the memory of living witnesses extends, and for anything that appears to the contrary beyond that time, been rated to the highway-rates for Hessle, exclusive of Anlaby, and the Hessle surveyors of highways have repaired the roads of Tranby as if it were a part of their district. The county-rate also, which was made upon or in respect of Hessle exclusive of Anlaby, included the lands of Tranby.

On the other hand, the lands in Tranby from the earliest period have been tithable to Kirk Ella, as being situate in that parish; the occupiers have been rated to, and paid church-rates in that parish, and also Easter dues and all other ecclesiastical dues, and have never paid tithes, church-rates, or any ecclesiastical dues to Hessle; some of the residents of Tranby have had seats in the parish church of Hessle, but not as of right, and some of the bodies of deceased inhabitants of Tranby have been buried in the church or churchyard of Hessle, but this has been only under permission, and not as of right, and double fees have been charged, as in the case of strangers. The incumbent of Hessle sometimes married Tranby people, when it was wished he should do so, but he married them, not at Hessle, but at Kirk Ella Church, by the permission of the incumbent of that parish. In fact, as to all ecclesiastical matters, Tranby has uniformly and immemorably been treated and reputed as a part of the parish of Kirk Ella.

In the year 1792 an act of parliament was passed (32 Geo. 3. c. cix.), intitled 'An Act for dividing, inclosing, draining, and improving the open fields, meadows, pastures, commons and waste grounds within the several townships or hamlets of Hessle, Anlaby, and Tranby, in the county of the town of Kingston-upon-Hull, and for making a compensation in lieu of tithe for certain ancient inclosed lands within the said several townships or hamlets, and also within the township or hamlet of Woolferton, otherwise Woolfretton, in the said county.' The act may be referred to, and taken to form a part of this case. In the preamble it was recited, amongst other things, that within the townships of Hessle and Anlaby were certain open fields, grounds, and lands therein respectively mentioned and described, and that within the township or hamlet of Tranby, in the said county, was a certain open field called by the name of "Tranby Field," with several pieces of sward ground, the whole containing about 400 acres, which said several open fields, meadows, pastures, commons and waste grounds in the preamble mentioned, are described as situate within the several parishes of Hessle and Kirk Ella, in the said county, and reciting, amongst other things, that the vicar of the parish and parish church of Hessle aforesaid was entitled to certain glebe lands and common rights within the said several fields, lands and grounds, or some of them, and that the said vicar and one Walter Strickland were respectively entitled to all manner of tithes, both great and small, arising within such parts of the said fields, lands and grounds, as were situate within the parish of Hessle aforesaid, and that Robert Carlisle Broadley, Esq., and William Wade, clerk, as vicar of the parish and parish church of Kirk Ella aforesaid, were respectively entitled to all manner of tithes, both great and small, arising within such parts of the fields, lands and grounds as are situate within the parish of Kirk Ella, and that as well the respective townships or hamlets of Hessle, Anlaby and Tranby aforesaid, as the lands in each of them belonging to the several proprietors in the fields, lands and grounds lie intermixed and dispersed in small parcels." Commissioners are then appointed for putting the act into execution.

The 24th section of the act is as follows: "And whereas disputes may arise between the inhabitants or proprietors of lands in the respective townships of Hessle, Anlaby and Tranby aforesaid, and also the inhabitants or owners of lands in some of the parishes, townships, or places adjoining to the same, touching the respective boundaries thereof; and it will be necessary upon the said intended division and inclosure to settle and ascertain all such boundaries, as well of the townships of Hessle, Anlaby and Tranby aforesaid, as also of the adjoining parishes, townships or places; therefore be it enacted, that the said Commissioners shall and may, and they are hereby authorized and empowered to inquire into, ascertain, set and determine, and fix, not only the boundaries of the said several townships or hamlets of Hessle, Anlaby and Tranby, but also the boundaries of such parishes, townships or places adjoining to the same, and after the said boundaries shall be so respectively ascertained, set out, determined and fixed, the same shall, and they are hereby declared to be the boundaries as well between the respective townships of Hessle, Anlaby and Tranby aforesaid, as also the parishes, townships, or places respectively adjoining to the same, subject to an appeal at the Quarter Sessions in manner hereafter mentioned, and any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding."

The 25th section enacted, that the Commissioners should make allotments to the said vicar of Hessle and Walter Strickland that should be equal in value to their then glebe lands and grounds directed to be inclosed, for and in lieu of such respective glebe lands.

By the 26th section the Commissioners were required to make allotments to the vicar of Hessle, Walter Strickland, Robert Carlisle Broadley and the vicar of Kirk Ella, of the different lands thereby directed to be inclosed in lieu of all manner of tithes, both great and small, and all vicarial and ecclesiastical rights, dues and payments arising or payable within, for, or in respect of the lands and grounds by the said act directed to be inclosed.

Directions then follow for the division of the allotments amongst the persons in the sections mentioned. Section 27. contains powers for the general allotment of the residue of the lands of Hessle, Walter Strickland, Robert Carlisle Broadley and the vicar of Kirk Ella, were respectively entitled to certain great and small tithes arising out of the several messuages and ancient inclosed lands within the several townships or hamlets of Hessle, Anlaby, Tranby and Woolferton aforesaid, and which were within the several parishes of Hessle and Kirk Ella, the Commissioners were required by their award to order that the owners of the messuages and inclosed lands should annually pay to the vicar of Hessle, Walter Strickland, Robert Carlisle Broadley and the vicar of Kirk Ella, such sums of money as the Commissioners should deem to be a just recompense for all the last-mentioned tithes.

By section 53. it was enacted, that the Commissioners should draw up their award in writing, with a plan annexed thereto as therein mentioned. The concluding provisions of this section are in the words following: "The several allotments and divisions, and all orders, directions and regulations and determinations so to be made as aforesaid, and declared in and by the same award, shall be final, binding, and conclusive unto all the parties interested therein."

The Commissioners appointed by and acting under and in execution of the act, duly made their award in writing, and dated the 23rd of February, 1796.

All the rated lands and tenements in Tranby mentioned in the rate appealed against are dealt with in and by the award; parts of them, which consisted of old inclosures in Tranby, were charged by the Commissioners pursuant to section 32. of the act with tithe rents payable to Robert Carlisle Broadley and the vicar of Kirk Ella and their respective successors, in lieu of their former rights to tithes in respect of the said old inclosures, and which tithe rents have been since regularly paid. The remainder of the rated lands, being the greater part thereof, and consisting of allotments of Tranby Field and the other open lands in Tranby, were awarded, set out, and allotted, in different parts and allotments, to certain persons through whom the present owners and occupiers thereof, including the appellant, respectively derived title. The award does not purport to set out, determine, or fix the boundaries of any townships or parishes otherwise or more particularly than shewn in and by the description and declarations hereinafter mentioned. Of the 51 acres, in respect of which the appellant is rated in the rate appealed against, about 38 acres are old inclosures charged with tithe-rents as above mentioned. The following is the extract from the award relating thereto, that is to say: "Kirk Ella Tithing. The whole annual payments to be made to the said Robert Carlisle Broadley, his heirs and assigns."—[Here followed the names of two owners, and the numbers on the plan and the total quantity, together with the amount of the annual tithe rent; the letter T. being affixed.]—The case then proceeded: By the letter T. in the above extract is meant to be stated that the lands are in the township of Tranby.

Of the rate of 3*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.*, at which the appellant is rated, 2*l.* 4*s.* 2*d.* is in respect of these 38 acres of old inclosure. The remainder of the said 51 acres consists of new inclosures allotted by the Commissioners, and declared by them to be in the township of Tranby and parish of Kirk Ella.

The following is an extract from the award respecting one of the said allotments for which the appellant is rated, that is to say, "We do also award, set out, allot, and appoint unto the said William Green and his heirs, all that other piece or parcel of land situate, lying, and being in Tranby Field, containing 12 a. 2 r. 18 p. be the same more or less, adjoining lands herein awarded to the said Joseph Sykes on or towards the east, lands herein awarded to Francis Green on or towards the west, old inclosure and Maize Lane on or towards the north, and Swanland Road on or towards the south; and we do order and direct that the said William Green, his heirs and assigns, shall make and for ever hereafter maintain good and sufficient ditches and fences on the east side and south end of this allotment; and we declare this allotment to be in the said township of Tranby and parish of Kirk Ella aforesaid."

Of the 255 acres and more for which the respondent Thompson is rated, 30 acres are old inclosure, and are charged in the Kirk Ella Tithing in the same manner as the appellant's 38 acres, and similarly marked with the letter T. Of the rate of 17*l.* 4*s.* 7*d.*, at which the said appellant is rated, 2*l.* 0*s.* 6*d.* is in respect of these 38 acres of old inclosure. All the remainder of the lands mentioned and rated in the extract from the rate appealed against, except West Field and Pit Top as hereinbefore mentioned, are new inclosure, allotted in similar terms mutatis mutandis, and declared to be in the township of Tranby, and parish of Kirk Ella aforesaid.

The practice of rating Tranby lands to the poor above mentioned as a part of Hessele, was continued without opposition or objection until recently, when the parish of Hessele, finding their existing burial-ground insufficient, expended a considerable sum of money, exceeding 1,500*l.*, in purchasing a new burial-ground, and in the expenses connected therewith, which expenditure under the recent Burial Acts became a charge on the poor-rate. The rate-payers of Tranby, who were entitled as of right to bury in the churchyard of Kirk Ella, which was sufficient for the necessities of that parish, and was likely to continue sufficient for many years to come, objected to this new charge upon them, and became desirous, if they could legally do so, to put an end to the practice of rating the lands in Tranby as a part of Hessele parish, and the present appeal was brought with the concurrence of all of them to try its validity.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the lands and tenements in Tranby mentioned in the rate appealed against, or any of them, are liable to be rated to the relief of the poor in the parish of Hessele.

If the Court shall be of opinion that the lands and tenements, or any of them, are not liable to be so rated, then the said rate is to be amended by striking out of the said rate so much as relates to the lands and tenements which are not liable to be so rated, and the order of the Court of Quarter Sessions is to be quashed. But if the Court shall be of opinion that all the lands and tenements are liable to be so rated, then the order of the Court of Quarter Sessions is to be confirmed.

Prideaux and Lewers, for the respondents.—There is nothing to shew that Tranby could ever have been part of the parish of Kirk Ella. There are even authorities to shew that a part of one parish cannot be treated as a part of another parish for the purpose of the highway rate. In Dawson v. Willoughby-with-Sloothby (1), where a hamlet claimed exemption from the highway rates of its parish, on the ground that it had been assessed and was liable to the highway rates of a neighbouring parish, the Court held that a part of one parish could not legally be united to another parish for the purpose of the repair of the highways. The reasonable presumption is that Tranby and Hessele formed one reputed parish for the purposes of the poor-rate at the time of 43 Eliz. c. 2. Sharpley v. the Overseers of Mablethorpe (2) is similar to the present case. There the ground of appeal was that the rating parish consisted of two distinct parishes. It was shewn that there were two rectories which were distinct for ecclesiastical purposes, and there was evidence to shew that there had been originally two churches. There was also other evidence which left it uncertain whether there was one parish or two. But as it was proved that there had been a single rate for the relief of the poor during the last 150 years, the Court held that there was evidence that these districts were reputed as one parish at the time of the 43 Eliz. c. 2; so that the rate was good even if the parishes had been, in fact, immemorially distinct. The powers given by the 43 Eliz. to be executed in parishes are, by the 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12 (3), extended to all townships and villages, whether parochial or extra-parochial—The King v. the Inhabitants of Rufford (4). A parish may comprise one or more villis—Com. Dig. tit. 'Parish.' In Lousley v. Hayward (5) it was held that a pew in the body of a church might be prescribed for as appurtenant to a house out of the parish; so part of the evidence relied on by the appellant is of little importance. It is enough to shew that there is evidence that Tranby formed part of a reputed parish in the time of Queen Elizabeth—Hilton v. Pawle (6), Nichols v. Walker (7). The Commissioners under the Inclosure Act had no power to set out the boundaries of Hessele for civil purposes.—They also referred to The King v. Leigh (8) and Domesday, vol. 1.

P. Thompson, for the appellant.—The weight of the evidence is in favour of the presumption that Tranby forms part of the parish of Kirk Ella. A township cannot legally form part of one parish for temporal purposes, such as the relief of the poor, whilst it forms part of another separate and distinct parish for ecclesiastical purposes, such as burial, marriage and other ecclesiastical services. The combination of the occupiers of lands in the township of Tranby, in the parish of Kirk Ella, with the occupiers of lands in the township of Hessele, in the parish of Hessele, for the purpose of the maintenance of the poor of these two townships jointly, has arisen from considerations of mutual convenience only, and can be put an end to at any time.—He cited The Queen v. Ashby Tolville (9).

MELLOR, J.—In this case I am of opinion that the rate must be confirmed, and that the order of Sessions was right. The case, no doubt, has some difficulty; but I think that, unless the appellant can shew us some legal objection to the practice which has hitherto prevailed, we ought to give effect to it according to the rule laid down by Lord Campbell in the case of Sharpley

(3) By 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. s. 21, after reciting that the inhabitants of Lancashire, Cheshire, Derbyshire, Yorkshire, Northumberland, Durham, Cumberland and Westmoreland, and many other counties in England and Wales, by reason of the largeness of the parishes within the same, have not nor cannot reap the benefit of 43 Eliz., it is enacted, that all and every the poor, needy, impotent and lame person and persons within every township or village within the several counties aforesaid, shall from and after the passing of this act be maintained, kept, provided for and set to work within the several and respective townships and villages wherein he, she or they shall inhabit, or wherein he, she or they was or were last lawfully settled, according to the intent and meaning of this act; and that there shall be yearly chosen and appointed, according to the rules and directions in the said act of the 43rd year of Queen Elizabeth mentioned, two or more overseers of the poor within every of the said townships or villages, who shall from time to time do, perform and execute

v. Mablethorpe (3), where he says, "I can see no reason whatever for disturbing the usage which has prevailed so long." In this case it may be that, before the origin of the parishes, when the churches were first erected, the persons who founded them were the owners of the land, the tithes of which were originally assigned to these churches, so that in process of time the tithes of particular ecclesiastical districts became assigned to particular churches till there was a division, and that may have been anterior to the subsequent actual division of the parishes; and it may be that originally this district of Tranby had its tithes assigned to the church of Kirk Ella, and yet, for all civil purposes, may have been formed into a district consisting of itself and the township of Hessle; and it may be that, after the formation of parishes, the tithes of Tranby were appropriated to the church of Kirk Ella for ecclesiastical purposes, and it may then have been formed into a township together with the township of Hessle; and being so at the time of the statute of Elizabeth, became by reputation such a township or parish as may, under that act, be entitled to maintain the poor and have all the privileges that properly belong to a parish or township; and, at the same time, it may be that, owing to circumstances and the actual bargain or understanding upon which the union or separation may have taken place, it may have been the practice for some of the inhabitants of the district of Tranby to go to the church of Kirk Ella, and that may account for the usage subsequently, and for the payment of church and other ecclesiastical dues. But we have, on the other hand, for a hundred years at least, and without any evidence to the contrary, the fact that it has uniformly been rated to the poor for the township of Hessle as part of that township, and has uniformly contributed to the highway rates; and it also appears, though I do not rest so much upon that, there is evidence that there is a manor of Hessle-cum-Tranby, a manor consisting of Hessle and Tranby. No doubt, in the origin of ecclesiastical divisions, the limits of parishes followed the ambit of the manors, though cases have often occurred in which the parish has included two manors. However that may be, I think there is here abundant evidence to shew that the district of Hessle and Tranby is a district that properly maintains its own poor and had the power and authority to make a rate. Under these circumstances, I am of opinion that the order of Sessions should be confirmed.

LUSH, J.—I think that we ought not to disturb a state of things which has existed for so long a period of time unless we can see that it could not have had a legal origin. The case finds as a fact that for more than a hundred years the inhabitants of Tranby have been assessed to the poor-rate by the overseers of the township of Hessle; and where the inhabitants of a township have during a certain period supported and maintained a common highway and been assessed to the highway rate, and there is no evidence to raise a presumption to the contrary, I should have no difficulty in inferring that the practice could be traced back still further, and that it had a legal origin. I think that it may have had a legal origin for more reasons than one, but it is sufficient to refer to one, which is this: the township of Tranby was originally, whatever it may be now, merely a part of the township of Hessle, though it may have been part of the parish of Kirk Ella. I am not aware of any legal impossibility for a township to run into and to consist of portions of two parishes, and I see it is called in the act of parliament the "township of Tranby," sometime a hamlet. If I had to decide whether it was a separate township or not, I should say that the evidence is wanting to shew that it ever was a township of itself, because I find that it is an incident to a township that it should have a constable, and it is necessary that it should once have had a church of its own, for the solemnization of sacraments and burials, and so on. It is found that Tranby never had a church of its own, nor a constable. Now, for a very long period, this particular district has been associated with Hessle in the maintenance of the poor and of the highways. This association could have had a legal origin if, in fact, it was a portion of a township, because then the statute of Charles would have enabled this township, though it might consist of portions of two parishes, to appoint overseers of its own, and separately to maintain its own poor. This being so, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, with evidence that Tranby is not a township of itself, we find it associated in all civil matters with the district around it, and I have no hesitation in inferring that it was, and necessarily so, a part of the township of Hessle, and this is one, though not the only, mode of accounting for the usage which has existed for so long a time, and which we are therefore bound to maintain.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems to me that if we assume that Hessle and Tranby were originally united together as one township all difficulties at once vanish, and that therefore, as we ought if possible to uphold what has existed so long, we should admit what from the evidence appears to be a reasonable conclusion. I think that this conclusion may be drawn both from negative and positive evidence. The negative evidence is, that though three divisions have been referred to and mentioned in Domesday Book, Tranby does not appear to have been mentioned, though it seems to be included in one or other of those divisions. Then there is the fact that the Tranby lands have been rated with Hessle to the highway-rate. Now, it may very well be that one township, as a township, may be liable to repair the highways irrespective of any parochial divisions that are consistent with the supposition that they belong to one township. Now, "vill" or township is a natural division, and it seems to be nothing more than a collection of houses. But upon reference to Co. Lit., 115, b, and the other authorities collected in Com. Dig., tit. 'Vill,' the division of parishes appears to be not a natural but an artificial division, and may have been dependent on circumstances which it is impossible for us to ascertain. It may well have been that a parish established for certain purposes may have had its natural division cut into two parts, and in this way Tranby may have been attached to the ecclesiastical division of Kirk Ella, while for civil purposes it remained attached to its own division of the township of Hessle. And I agree with my learned Brothers that if this state of things had existed down to the time of the statute of Elizabeth and subsequently, and had become inconvenient, the statute of Charles would then have enabled another arrangement to be introduced under which Tranby would revert to its old civil association with Hessle. This seems to me to reconcile all the difficulties of the case, and to uphold what has continued for so long a period of time.

May 8.

THE QUEEN v. EYRE.

Justice of the Peace — Jurisdiction — Offence committed out of Great Britain by Officer of the Government — Binding over Prosecutor and Witnesses to appear in Queen's Bench — Court of Oyer and Terminer.

By 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 12, and 42 Geo. 3. c. 85, offences committed out of Great Britain by governors of colonies and officers of the government under colour of, or in exercise of their offices, may be prosecuted or inquired of, heard and determined in His Majesty's Court of King's Bench here in England, either upon information or indictment, and the offence may be laid to have been committed in Middlesex:—Held, that the power conferred upon Justices by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. ss. 2, 17, 20, of binding over the prosecutor and witnesses to prosecute or give evidence against any person charged with an indictable offence, committed on land beyond the sea, at the next court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or superior court of a county palatine, or court of General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace, extends to cases where the offence is one of those specified in 42 Geo. 3. c. 85, and that the description "court of oyer and terminer," in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 32. s. 20, applies to the Court of Queen's Bench.

Rule calling upon James Vaughan, Esq., one of the Metropolitan Police Magistrates, sitting at the Bow Street police court, and Edward John Eyre, Esq., to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue directed to the Magistrate, commanding him to hear the evidence on certain charges preferred against Mr. Eyre on the 22nd of April, 1867, on the prosecution of Peter Alfred Taylor, Esq., and to proceed therein according to law.

It appeared from the affidavits that while Mr. Eyre was within the jurisdiction of the police courts of the metropolis, application was made by Mr. Taylor to the Magistrate previously mentioned, for a warrant or summons against Mr. Eyre, directing him to appear at the police court to answer certain charges to be preferred against him for offences alleged to have been committed by him against the provisions of 11 & 12 Will. 3. and 42 Geo. 3. (1), that is to say, among other things, for issuing an oppressive and illegal proclamation. Mr. Vaughan thereupon issued two summonses as prayed, and on the 22nd of April Mr. Eyre appeared at the police court in obedience to these summonses. Mr. Taylor, upon whose information the summonses had been issued, was also in attendance with the witnesses for the prosecution, who were prepared to give evidence in support of the charges. Mr. Vaughan then stated that since granting the summonses his attention had been directed to 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 20. That the trial provided for by the statute must take place in the Queen's Bench, and that he, Mr. Vaughan, had no power to bind over the prosecutor or witnesses to appear at the Court of Queen's Bench, or at any other place except at the next court of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery, or superior court of a county palatine, or Court of General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace at which the accused was to be tried, and that the Court of Queen's Bench was not one of these courts, and that he had therefore no power to bind over any of these parties to the Court of Queen's Bench. That by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 22. the recognizances, depositions and so forth, were directed to be delivered to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be had, who, in this case would be the officer of the Queen's Bench, so that if he proceeded to hear the case,

(1) By 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 12, after reciting that "a due punishment is not provided for several crimes and offences committed out of this His Majesty's realm of England, whereof divers governors, lieutenant-governors, deputy governors, or commanders-in-chief of plantations and colonies within His Majesty's dominions beyond the seas, have taken advantage, and have not been deterred from oppressing His Majesty's subjects within their respective governments and commands, nor from committing several other great crimes and offences, not deeming themselves punishable for the same here, nor accountable for such their crimes and offences to any person within their respective governments and commands," it is enacted, that "if any governor, lieutenant-governor, deputy-governor, or commander-in-chief of any plantation or colony within His Majesty's dominions beyond the seas, shall, after the 1st day of August, 1700, be guilty of oppressing any of His Majesty's subjects beyond the seas, within their respective governments or commands, or shall be guilty of any other crimes or offences, contrary to the laws of this realm, or in force within their respective governments or commands, such oppressions, crimes and offences shall be inquired of, heard and determined in His Majesty's Court of King's Bench here in England, or before such Commissioners and in such county of this realm as shall be assigned by His Majesty's commission, and by good and lawful men of the same county, and that such punishments shall be inflicted on such offenders as are usually inflicted for offences of like nature committed here in England."

By 42 Geo. 3. c. 85. s. 1. it is provided, "That from and after the passing of this act, if any person who now is, or heretofore has been, or shall hereafter be employed by, or in the service of His Majesty, his heirs or successors, in any civil or military station, office or capacity, out of Great Britain, shall have committed, or shall commit, &c., any crime, misdemeanor or offence in the execution, or under colour, or in the exercise of any such station, office, capacity or employment as aforesaid, every such crime, &c. may be prosecuted or inquired of, and heard and determined in His Majesty's Court of King's Bench here in England, either upon an information exhibited by His Majesty's Attorney General or upon an indictment found; in which information or indictment such crime, &c. may be laid and charged to have been committed in the county of Middlesex; and all such persons so offending, and also all persons tried under any of the provisions of the said recited act, passed in the reign of King William aforesaid, or this act, or either of them, for any offence, &c., and not having been before tried for the same in Great Britain, shall on conviction be liable to such punishment as may by any law or laws now in force, or any act or acts that may hereafter be passed, be inflicted for any such crime, &c. committed in England, and shall also be liable, at the discretion of His Majesty's Court of King's Bench, to be adjudged to be incapable of serving His Majesty in any station, office or capacity, civil or military, or of holding or exercising any public employment whatever."

and should be satisfied that there was a prima facie case against the defendant, he (Mr. Vaughan) would have to bind over the witnesses and prosecutor to go to the Central Criminal Court, while the depositions and recognizances, and all the statements that were made before him, would have to be sent to the officer of the Court of Queen's Bench. That by section 25, in the case of an indictable offence committed on land beyond the seas, the Justice, if he thought proper to commit, would have to commit to the common gaol of the county. That the common gaol of the county of Middlesex is Newgate, and therefore if Mr. Eyre were committed for trial without bail, he would be sent to Newgate, and on the sessions of the Central Criminal Court being held, as no indictment could be preferred there, he would be at once discharged; and he (Mr. Vaughan) had therefore come to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction in the matter.

The counsel for the prosecution called the attention of the Magistrate to the words of 42 Geo. 3. c. 85. s. 1. and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 2. (2), and contended that reading

(2) The act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. recites "that it would conduce much to the improvement of the administration of criminal justice within England and Wales if the several statutes and parts of statutes relating to the duties of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace therein with respect to persons charged with indictable offences were consolidated, with such additions and alterations as may be deemed necessary, and that such duties should be clearly defined by positive enactment."

By section 2. "In all cases of indictable crimes or offences of any kind or nature whatsoever committed on the high seas, or in any creek, harbour, haven or other place in which the Admiralty of England have or claim to have jurisdiction, and in all cases of crimes or offences committed on land beyond the seas, for which an indictment may legally be preferred in any place within England or Wales, it shall be lawful for any one or more of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for any county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place within England or Wales in which any person charged with having committed or with being suspected to have committed any such crime or offence shall reside or be, or shall be supposed or suspected to reside or be, to issue his or their warrant to apprehend the person so charged, and to cause him to be brought before him or them, or some other Justice or Justices of the Peace for the same county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough or place, to answer the said charges, and to be further dealt with according to law."

By section 20. "It shall be lawful for the Justice or Justices before whom any such witness these sections with section 25. of the last-mentioned act it was the duty of the Magistrate, if he was satisfied that there was a prima facie case, to commit Mr. Eyre to the common gaol of the county in which he (the Magistrate) had jurisdiction, there to be safely kept until delivered in due course of law, which would be by his trial in the Court of Queen's Bench, which was a court of oyer and terminer, and such a court as described in the sections referred to. It was also contended that section 20. of the same statute did empower the Magistrate to bind over the witnesses to appear at the Court of Queen's Bench, being a court of oyer and terminer applicable to the trial of this particular offence, but that, even if the legislature had inadvertently omitted to give power to the Magistrate to shall be examined as aforesaid, to bind by recognizance the prosecutor and every such witness to appear at the next court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or superior court of a county palatine, or court of General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace, at which the accused is to be tried, then and there to prosecute, or to prosecute and give evidence, or to give evidence, as the case may be, against the party accused, &c.; and the several recognizances so taken, together with the written information (if any), the depositions, the statement of the accused, and the recognizance of bail (if any) in every such case shall be delivered..... to the proper officer of the court in which the trial is to be had, before or at the opening of the said court on the first day of the sitting thereof, or at such other time as the Judge, Recorder, or Justice who is to preside in such court at the said trial shall order and appoint."

By section 25. "When all the evidence offered upon the part of the prosecution against the accused party shall have been heard, if the Justice or Justices of the Peace then present shall be of opinion that it is not sufficient to put such accused party upon his trial for any indictable offence, such Justice or Justices shall forthwith order such accused party, if in custody, to be discharged as to the information then under inquiry; but if, in the opinion of such Justice or Justices, such evidence is sufficient to put the accused party upon his trial for an indictable offence, or if the evidence given raise a strong or probable presumption of the guilt of such accused party, then such Justice or Justices shall, by his or their warrant, commit him to the common gaol or house of correction for the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place to which by law he may be committed, or, in the case of an indictable offence committed on the high seas, or on land beyond the seas, to the common gaol of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough, or place within which such Justice or Justices shall have jurisdiction, to be there safely kept until he shall be thence delivered by due course of law."

bind over the witnesses to appear at the trial, it would not relieve the Magistrate from the duty imposed upon him by sections 2. and 25. to commit the accused for trial. That the Court of Queen's Bench was the highest court of oyer and terminer for the whole of England, including of course the county of Middlesex, and that, although other courts of oyer and terminer had been established, the jurisdiction of the Queen's Bench had not been interfered with; and it was, therefore, still a court of oyer and terminer for the county of Middlesex. The Magistrate, however, declined to proceed to hear the evidence, and it was arranged that the summonses should stand adjourned till the 4th of May, in order that an application for a mandamus might be made to the Court of Queen's Bench.

J. J. Powell shewed cause.—The offences specified by the acts 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 12. and 42 Geo. 3. c. 85. are not indictable offences within the meaning of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 2, and therefore the Magistrate had no power in this case to take the evidence and bind over the prosecutor and witnesses. The words “inquired of, heard and determined” in the latter statute have been explained by Lord Wensleydale, in The King v. Ruck (3), where it was held that the words “dealt with” apply to Justices of the Peace; “inquired of” to the grand jury; “tried” to the petit jury, and “determined” to the Court. And these proceedings must take place in Middlesex. Now, the offences specified in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 2. are offences for which an indictment may be preferred in any place in England and Wales.

[BLACKBURN, J.—You propose to read the words “any place” as “every place.” The proceedings are to be in the Court of Queen's Bench, which does not necessarily sit in Middlesex.]

Still, the grand jury would have to be summoned from the county of Middlesex. Again, the act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. deals with the existing jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace, and was not intended to extend their powers. This is shewn by the preamble of the act. Now, section 20. merely enables the Justices to bind over the witnesses to appear at the next court of oyer and terminer. But it is submitted that it was not intended to include the Court of Queen's Bench in these general words. It is a well-known rule that the Crown is not bound in a statute, except by express words. The Court of Queen's Bench, it is true, is a court of oyer and terminer, but it is also a court of coronage, and it could hardly be contended that it was included by a general act relating to coroners. Where the Court of Queen's Bench is intended to be included it is specially mentioned, as in 59 Geo. 3. c. 69. s. 4, which enacts that offences committed in England may be tried at the King's Bench, in Westminster, or at the assizes or sessions of oyer and terminer. The Judges of this Court are Justices of the Peace, but the Court would not be affected by statutes relating to the sessions of the peace.

[LUSH, J.—The act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. is merely a regulating statute, but it is substituted for 7 Geo. 4. c. 64, which is in express terms a statute extending the power of Justices.]

Offences of such importance as the one in question were probably intended to be removed from the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace.—He referred to Stephen's Blackstone, vol. 4. pp. 441, 442.

Sir R. Collier (Fitzjames Stephen and J. H. Payne were with him) was not heard.

BLACKBURN, J.—We are all of opinion that in this case the rule ought to be made absolute in the terms in which it was obtained, and that the Magistrate must take the evidence of the witnesses produced against Mr. Eyre, and, if he thinks that upon the depositions there is a prima facie case, must bind the prosecutor and witnesses to give evidence and return the recognizances and depositions to the proper officer of this Court before or at the next sittings. The question turns entirely upon the jurisdiction of the Justices of the Peace. This jurisdiction was in the first instance limited to a particular district, that of the commission of the Justices, but it was afterwards extended. The first statutory provisions relating to the mode of taking the examination of witnesses before Justices are 1 & 2

(3) 1 Russ. C. & M. 827; s. c. Russellon Crimes, 4th edit., vol. 1, 757.

Ph. & M. c. 13. s. 4. and 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 10, which directed the Justices to certify the examinations to the next general gaol delivery to be holden within the limits of their commission. Then came the act 7 Geo. 4. c. 64, which by section 2. provided that the Justices should have power to bind the prosecutors by recognizances to appear at the next court of oyer and terminer &c., and that they should preserve the examinations and recognizances, and deliver or cause them to be delivered to the proper officer of the court in which the trial was to be, and section 3. contains similar provisions where the offence is not felony but misdemeanor or suspicion thereof. These provisions are practically re-enacted by the repealing statute, the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. Section 2. of this statute is as follows.—(The learned Judge read the section at length).—Now the first point taken by Mr. Powell is, that an offence which the statute orders to be tried in Middlesex is not an indictable offence committed on land beyond the seas for which an indictment may legally be preferred in any place within England and Wales according to 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 2. I cannot see the force of this objection. This is an offence for which an indictment may be preferred in the county of Middlesex, and why is it not an offence committed beyond the seas, for which an indictment may be preferred in some place in England? Then section 20. of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. is as follows.—(The learned Judge read the section).—And the next contention is, that the Court of Queen's Bench does not come within the definition "next court of oyer and terminer." The Court of Queen's Bench is a court of oyer and terminer, and if an indictment is found in this case, it must be tried before it as a court of oyer and terminer. Yet it is said that this case does not come within section 20. The reason suggested, as far as I can make out, is, that the Crown is not bound by a statute unless it is named, and therefore that the Court of Queen's Bench is not affected by provisions in which it is not mentioned. But I cannot think that this rule applies. The reason for going before a Magistrate and taking the depositions in the first instance, instead of preferring an indictment ex parte, behind the back of the person charged, are just the same where the case is directed to be tried in the Queen's Bench as in other cases. For the reasons which I have given, I think that the Magistrate is bound to hear the case, and consider whether there is a prima facie case against Mr. Eyre.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. The words of the act 42 Geo. 3. c. 85. s. 1. are, that the offence may be prosecuted or inquired of, and heard and determined in His Majesty's Court of King's Bench here in England, either upon an information exhibited by His Majesty's Attorney General, or upon an indictment found. Mr. Eyre, as I understand, is charged with offences specified in this statute. But it is said that although he may be tried for this offence in the Court of Queen's Bench as a court of oyer and terminer, yet he is not entitled to the advantages which the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. has introduced respecting the committal of prisoners. By section 2. of this statute, persons charged with offences committed on land beyond the seas, for which an indictment may be preferred in any place in England and Wales, may be summoned before any two Justices and dealt with according to law. Mr. Powell's contention is, that here the indictment could only be preferred before the grand jury in Middlesex, and therefore that the case is not within the meaning of the act. But I have very great difficulty in seeing that the act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. does not apply to all indictable offences of whatever description, and think that to hold otherwise would be to deprive the prisoner, as well as the prosecutor, of a benefit which the statute intended to confer upon him.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. The only question before us is, whether the Magistrate had jurisdiction to entertain this charge, the Magistrate acting for the county in which the person charged was at the time of the charge, and the offence being one which by the statute must be prosecuted, inquired of, heard and determined in this court. This question has been very properly referred to us by the Magistrate; but, after considering the terms of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 2, I have come to the conclusion that the Magistrate had jurisdiction to deal with this case. It would be, to my mind, extraordinary if this particular case were excluded from the application of the statute; and when I look at the section which is part of an act consolidating the former statutes upon the same subjects, I find that it was intended to include every description of offence committed on land beyond the seas for which an indictment may legally be preferred in any place within England or Wales. In the present case the offence is charged to have been committed beyond the seas, and is one for which an indictment may be preferred in the Court of Queen's Bench. Then we come to section 25. of the same act. This section enacts, that if the evidence given raises a strong or probable presumption of the guilt of the accused party, the Justice in the case of an indictable offence committed on the high seas or on land beyond the sea is to commit him to the common gaol of the county, &c., within which such Justice or Justices shall have jurisdiction. And section 20. embraces what is contained in the act 7 Geo. 4. and the two previous statutes, as to taking depositions and returning the recognizances. I have not the least difficulty in holding that the act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. intended to include proceedings such as these within its operation.

BLACKBURN, J. added: I wish to say that none of us entertains the least doubt but that the Magistrate was right in taking the opinion of this Court.

June 4. } ASHBY v. HARRIS.

Burial-Ground—Right to plant Flowers on private Graves—Metropolitan Intermment Acts.

A burial board established under the Metropolitan Intermment Acts granted to A. R. the right of making a private grave, and the exclusive right of burial therein, in a certain spot in their cemetery, to hold the same in perpetuity for the purpose of burial, and of erecting thereon a monument, with a proviso that if the monument with its appurtenances should not from time to time be kept in repair by the owner according to such rules, orders and regulations as had been, or should be from time to time, made by the burial board for the management and regulation of the cemetery and the vaults, graves and monuments therein, the grant should be void. A. R. buried her husband in this spot, erected a headstone and surrounded the plot with a curbstone. The board afterwards made a regulation that no person should be allowed to plant flowers, &c. on the graves, but that they themselves should alone do it, at certain prices they fixed, and they prevented A. R. from planting the said spot with flowers:—Held, that they had no right to prevent A. R. from so planting the said spot.

This was a case stated for the opinion of the Court under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. by two Justices of the county of Middlesex.

CASE.

At a petty sessions, held at Highgate, in the county of Middlesex, on the 10th day of February, 1868, before us the undersigned, two of Her Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said county, James Ashby, of Finchley, in the said county, an officer duly appointed by the Burial Board of the parish of St. Pancras, in the said county, hereinafter called the appellant, appeared before us the said Justices to answer to a complaint made by Elizabeth Harris, of the same place, hereinafter called the respondent, for that the said appellant did on the 25th of January last, at the said parish of Finchley, unlawfully assault and beat her the said respondent.

Upon the hearing of the said complaint, the following facts were proved or admitted: That the Burial Board of the Parish of St. Pancras had provided a burial-ground at Finchley aforesaid, under the provisions of the Burial Act (15 & 16 Vict. c. 85), and that the appellant is an officer appointed by the said board and a duly sworn constable. That the respondent is the wife of John Harris, a gardener resident at Finchley. That on the 17th of August, 1857, the Burial Board made a grant to Ann Robotham, of which the following is a copy :

"Interment of Joseph Robotham.

"The Burial Board of the Parish of St. Pancras, in the county of Middlesex, established under the act 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85.

"Number 128.

"By virtue of an act passed in the 16th and 17th years of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled 'An Act to amend the Laws concerning the Burial of the Dead in the Metropolis':

"We, the Burial Board of the Parish of St. Pancras aforesaid, being an incorporation incorporated by and under the said act, in consideration of the sum of 2*l.* 2*s.* to us in hand paid by Mrs. Ann Robotham, of No. 4, Queen's Terrace, St. Pancras, do hereby grant and convey unto the said Ann Robotham the right and privilege of constructing and making a private grave, and the exclusive rights of burial and interment therein when made, in all that piece of land six feet and six inches long, by two feet and six inches wide, situate and being in the second class Chapel ground of the St. Pancras Cemetery, situate in the parish of Finchley, in the county of Middlesex, distinguished by the number 10, in 12 K; to hold the same to the said Ann Robotham in perpetuity for the purpose of burial, and of erecting or placing therein a monument or stone, but if the same shall not be so erected or placed within twelve calendar months from the date hereof (unless with licence for further time obtained from the said burial board), or if such monument or stone, with the appurtenances, to be so erected or placed, shall not from time to time be kept in repair by the owner or owners for the time being according to such rules, orders and regulations as have been, or shall from time to time hereafter be, made by the said burial board for the management and regulation of the said cemetery, and the vaults, graves and monuments therein, this grant shall be void.

"Given under the common seal of the said burial board, this 27th day of August, 1857.

"Charles Green, (L.S.)
"Clerk to the Board."

That in accordance with this grant Mrs. Robotham caused her late husband to be buried in the said ground, and erected a headstone and a curb round the sides of the grave, leaving an open space at the top over the body without any stone or other covering. That John Harris, the respondent's husband, personally or by his agents, had been in the habit of planting the above-named open space with flowers from the year 1857 to the month of October, 1867, by the authority and at the charges of the said Mrs. Robotham. That on the 7th of June, 1867, the said burial board passed a resolution, of which the following is a copy:

"That the superintendent make a return of all the graves in the cemetery for which the owners pay to be planted with flowers, and that such owners be written to and informed that the board purpose taking the planting of such graves with flowers under their own direction; that for the future no other persons will be permitted to do so, and that all applications for and payments in respect of planting and keeping up such graves with flowers, &c. will have to be made to the clerk at the office, or to the superintendent of the cemetery."

That at the quarterly meeting, held in September, 1867, the recommendation of a committee "that so soon as the owners of graves are apprised that the board undertake the planting of graves themselves, the superintendent have authority to prevent other persons entering the cemetery for the purpose of interfering with such planting," was adopted by the board; and at a board, holden on the 17th of September, 1867, it was resolved, "that the clerk issue notices to the owners of private graves planted with flowers, &c., informing them of the intention of the board to undertake such planting themselves for the future." That accordingly, on the 1st of October, 1867, Mr. Charles Green sent a notice to Mrs. Robotham that the board had determined to undertake for the future all such planting and keeping up through their officers; and that from the date of the letter, no other persons than those appointed by the board would be permitted to enter the cemetery for such a purpose, and with such notice a list of prices fixed by the board to be charged for planting and keeping up graves was sent. That, in the month of January, 1868, the said John Harris obtained from the said Mrs. Robotham an authority in writing to plant the said grave. That on the 25th of January last the respondent, as her husband's agent and assistant, went with her son to the said burial-ground to the said grave for the purpose of planting the same, and was informed of the order of the burial board, and required to desist from planting the grave or otherwise interfering with it. That she persisted in commencing to dig the open space between the curb-stones and over the body for the purpose of sowing flower-seeds, and was forcibly prevented from continuing so to do by the appellant, who acted under the instructions given to him by the said burial board. And that for this assault she summoned him before us.

It was not contended on either side that the respondent was digging the grave in an improper manner, or that she was about to sow or plant objectionable seeds, or that the appellant used greater force than was necessary to remove her from the grave to prevent her planting the same; and both parties waived any objection which might (by the 46th section of the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. as to offences against the person) have been made to our hearing and deciding the case, on the assertion of a right by either side.

The respondent contended that she was justified and entitled to plant the grave under the authority of the said Mr. Robotham, by virtue of the grant made to her by the burial board, whereby the grantee is bound to keep the monument or stone, "with the appurtenances," in repair from time to time.

And the appellant contended that such keeping in repair, if the open space over the grave should be deemed an appurtenance, or the planting of the open space whether an appurtenance or not, was subject to such rules, orders and regulations as should have been or might from time to time be made by the said board; and that in accordance with such rules, &c. he had authority to prevent her so planting the said grave.

The following clauses of the statute 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85. were referred to at the hearing of the said summons, viz.,—

Section 33, at the end. The parishioners and inhabitants of such parish, or of each of such parishes, shall have the same rights of sepulture in such burial-ground as they respectively would have had in the burial-ground or burial-grounds in and for their respective parishes, subject, nevertheless, to the provisions herein contained.

Section 34. Any burial board, under such restrictions and conditions as they think proper, may sell the exclusive right of burial, either in perpetuity or for a limited period, in any part of any burial-ground provided by such board; and also the right of constructing any vault or place of burial, with the exclusive right of burial therein, in perpetuity or for a limited period; and also the right of erecting and placing any monument, grave-stone, tablet or monumental inscription in such burial-ground.

Section 38. The general management, regulation and control of the burial-grounds provided under this act shall, subject to the provisions of this act and the regulations to be made thereunder, be vested in and exercised by the respective burial boards providing the same. Provided that any question which shall arise touching the fitness of any monumental inscription placed in any part of the consecrated portion of such grounds shall be determined by the bishop of the diocese.

We, the said Justices, being of opinion that the respondent had a right to enter the burial-ground and plant the grave for the purpose of keeping the monument and its appurtenances in repair; and that the order of the board that such planting should be done by no other persons than those appointed by the board, at a rate of charges fixed by themselves, was unreasonable and beyond the powers conferred on them by the 38th section of the act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, hereinbefore referred to, convicted the appellant of the assault charged against him in the penalty of 1*s.* and 17*s.* costs.

Whereupon the appellant, being dissatisfied with our decision as erroneous in point of law, and having, pursuant to the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, applied to us to state and sign a case setting forth the facts and the grounds of our decision for the opinion of Her Majesty's Court of Common Pleas, we have, in compliance with such application, stated the same accordingly.

If this Honourable Court should be of opinion that the said burial board was duly authorized to make a rule, order or regulation, "that no person other than those appointed by the said board should be permitted to enter the cemetery for the purpose of planting the graves," then the conviction to be quashed, otherwise to stand of full effect.

J. J. Powell, for the appellant.—First, no right to plant flowers was conveyed; secondly, even if it were, it was to be subject to the regulations of the cemetery. By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85. s. 33, the burial board, "under such restrictions and conditions as they think proper, may sell the exclusive right of burial . . . in any part of any burial-ground provided by such board, and also the right of constructing any vault or place of burial with the exclusive right of burial therein, . . . and also the right of erecting . . . any monument, &c., in such burial-ground." The contract was meant to be limited to this, and only a right to bury and put up a monument was conveyed. Again, by section 38, "the general management, regulation and control of the burial-ground is to 'be vested in and exercised by the board.'" And clearly under this section there was power to make such an order as was made here.

Grantham, for the respondent.—Section 33 expressly says, that the board may impose conditions before they convey, and here they conveyed without any stipulation, and the regulation made afterwards was beyond their powers. They had no right to derogate from the grant they had made, and to do what might be a prevention of the planting altogether, as it would be, if they pleased to put a large charge on the performance of it.

[BOVILL, C.J. referred to Gibson's Codex, 453, as cited in 1 Burn's Justice, 272.]

Again, it may be said that this planting came within the provision as to repair, looking to the nature of the grave.

Powell, in reply.—The soil was not conveyed, but certain rights therein which did not include this power. As to what has been said about monuments in a church, a permission is necessary, and further it may be questionable whether it may not be retracted. The rights of a rector as to burial were much discussed in Bryan v. Whistler (1).

BOVILL, C.J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the Magistrates was correct. The board have power, under such restrictions as they think proper, to sell the exclusive right of burial in any part of the burial-ground, and also the right of constructing any vault or place of burial, with the exclusive right of burial therein, and also the right to erect a monument. They might, therefore, have imposed conditions, but they granted certain rights with very limited restrictions, none of which, in my opinion, prevent the planting of the grave. In order to decide this case we must look to the terms of the grant, and, on doing so, we find that it conveys the privilege of making a private grave and erecting a monumental stone, and provides that if the stone and its appurtenances are not repaired, according to the rules from time to time made for the management of the cemetery, the grant is to be void. This being the grant, a headstone was erected and a curb placed round the sides of the grave, leaving the open space over the body without any stone. Mrs. Robotham had authority to construct such a monument as was constructed, and as by the terms of the grant she was bound to keep it as constructed in repair, the question is, what is such repair? Leaving it untended, covered with weeds and neglected, could not be such repair; the degree of repair must depend on the thing to be repaired; this grave was of a particular description; and, in my opinion, except that she was to do nothing that was indecent or contrary to propriety, Mrs. Robotham was to be the judge of the repair necessary, and there was nothing to prevent her from planting the grave with flowers. If I had any doubt it would be, in great measure, removed by seeing what was usually done when the grant was made, and I should conclude from what is stated that then everybody did so plant if they pleased, and further, Mrs. Robotham exercised the privilege for ten years, which is strong to shew the meaning of the parties. Here there was a grant in perpetuity of this spot as a private grave; the board had no right to make a regulation to interfere with the rights conveyed; and Mrs. Robotham had the exclusive right to plant the grave.

WILLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question turns on the grant; and it appears to me that, in construing it, no regard is to be had to the words "according to such rules, orders and regulations as shall, from time to time, hereafter be made," because if force were given to them, the conveyance would be repugnant to them, and it would seem that the case fell within the well-known rule, and that these words were to be rejected for repugnancy. But, without going so far and avoiding this conclusion, the proper construction would be that the rules to be made are to be general rules for the management of the cemetery, such as rules as to the shutting of the gates at night, but not particular rules as to the rights of the person to whom the grant was made. As appears from Com. Dig., tit. 'Cemetery,' B, there are two sorts of rights of burial: first, the common right of every parishioner to be buried in the churchyard without the right to any particular place; secondly, the exclusive right to be buried in a particular spot, which, by the common law, with certain exceptions as to the right to land, could only be obtained by a faculty or by having an ancient house, a right which, as is shewn in Whistler v. Bryan (1), the rector himself could not grant. This second very exclusive kind of right is the right intended by the legislature to be given by the burial board. The effect of the grant was to appropriate a particular place and give exclusive right of burial exclusive of interference; and it seems to me that the case of a rector is not analogous, because the profits of the churchyard belong to him; whereas this is excluded by the character of the burial board, which is not entitled to have the cemetery for profit, but only for burial. The grant, also, is clear; the grantee might have covered the whole space with a monument; or, if she did not, might leave such a space as is now in question; and as she might repair the stone if it had covered the whole, so if it does not she may keep the rest in decent order. It is fairly within the words of the grant that she may plant this space decently and in the usual way. The practice is immemorial, and is consonant with the notions of our country, where persons have always been allowed to ornament the graves and have the right to protect them against wrongdoers. Thus (Com. Dig., tit. 'Cemetery,' C.), if "any one pull down a tombstone or monument put up in the church, the heir may have an action; and if any one deface the arms, pennons, &c., put up in a window or elsewhere in honour of his ancestor, though they be defaced by the parson, ordinary or churchwardens, as well as by a stranger." And in Spooner v. Brewster (2) it was held that, though the freehold of the churchyard is in the parson, trespass lies for the erector of a tombstone against a person who wrongfully removes it from the churchyard and erases the inscription. The proper conclusion is, that there was a grant of the exclusive right to do all such things as are decent in setting up a memorial.

BYLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. This was a populous parish; in 1855 a cemetery was provided, and though there is no evidence of what was done till 1857, there is abundant evidence of what was done after, and that it was the habit to plant the graves; so that, connecting this with the resolution, the practice is clear. As respects ordinary parishioners, they are entitled to the use of the land till the body is destroyed by decay; but this is a grant of a perpetual exclusive right. I think one great value relatives put on a right to plant flowers is, that they might plant them themselves; and as the usage existed when the grant was made, I think that the grant was made subject to it, and that the board cannot derogate from their grant.

1868. } THE QUEEN v. THE MAYOR,
April 22. } &c. OF OLDHAM.

Poor-Rate—Property of Municipal Corporation—Exemption of Corporate Property by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48. s. 1.

The exemption created by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48. s. 1. of the property of municipal corporations from liability to poor-rate, where this property is in a parish wholly within a borough, the poor of which are relieved by one entire rate, is not affected by the decision in Jones v. the Mersey Docks (1), nor by the Union Chargeability Act, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79.

A corporation not included in the Schedules A. and B. of the Municipal Corporations Act, 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76, is by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 79. s. 2. entitled to the benefit of the exemption in 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48. s. 1.

Upon appeal to the Quarter Sessions for Lancaster against a poor-rate, made by the overseers of the township of Oldham, the Sessions confirmed the rate, subject to the following

CASE.

A charter of incorporation was granted to the borough of Oldham in 1849, under the provisions of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76. By 13 & 14 Vict. c. xlii. this charter was confirmed.

The borough of Oldham is co-extensive with and includes the whole of the township of Oldham. Before the passing of the Union Chargeability Act, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. (2), an entire rate was made and levied for the relief of the poor of the township of Oldham upon the rateable property therein, but exclusive of all the property the subject of this case.

The township now contributes to the relief of the poor, as one of eight townships forming the Oldham Union, according to the rateable value of the property comprised therein, to a common fund for the relief and maintenance of the poor, whether in or out of the workhouse of such union, pursuant to the provisions of the last-mentioned act. The corporation of Oldham are possessed of and are the occupiers of the property set forth in the above-mentioned rate, which property is wholly situate within the borough and township of Oldham.

This property, which consists of water-works and mains, gasworks, meters and mains, police-stations, telegraph, baths and washhouse, farm-yard, fire-engine houses, a town-hall, market-house, cemetery, and other property, has not heretofore been rated to the relief of the poor.

The borough of Oldham is a borough coming within the proviso of the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48. s. 1. (3), and as the property lies in a township, which is situate wholly within the boundaries of the borough, in which the poor within the boundaries thereof as existing for municipal purposes were up to the passing of the act relieved by one entire poor-rate, the corporation claim to have their property still exempted from the

(3) By the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48. s. 1, after reciting that the municipal corporations of cities and boroughs named in the Schedules (A.) and (B.) annexed to the act, 6 Will. 4., to provide for the regulation of municipal corporations in England and Wales, have been held not to be liable by law to be rated to the relief of the poor in respect of any lands, tenements, and hereditaments, being the properties and in the occupation of such municipal corporations, by reason that the income arising therefrom is applicable to public purposes only; and that it is expedient that such municipal corporations should nevertheless in some cases be rateable and be rated to the relief of the poor in respect of such property, it is enacted, "That the said municipal corporations named in the said schedules shall from and after the passing of this act be rateable and be rated to the relief of the poor in respect of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, being the property and in the occupation of such municipal corporations, as if such lands, tenements, and hereditaments were not corporate property, any law, usage, or custom to the contrary notwithstanding; provided always, that where such property lies in any parish which is situate wholly within the boundaries and limits of a city or borough named in the said schedules and in which city or borough the poor are relieved by one entire poor-rate, or in which city or borough the poor within the boundaries or limits thereof as existing for municipal purposes at the time of the passing of the said act were then relieved by one entire poor-rate, the exemption of such property from rateability shall continue as if this act had not passed."

(1) 11 H.L. Cas. 443; s.c. 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 1.

(2) By 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. s. 1. so much of 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. as requires parishes in unions to defray the expenses of their own poor is repealed, and the expenses thenceforth incurred are to be charged to the common fund.

rate levied for the relief of the poor by virtue of the proviso in the same act, and notwithstanding the act 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79.

It is to be taken, for the purposes of this case, that the occupation of the before-mentioned property of the corporation, which is liable to be rated under 43 Eliz. c. 2. s. 1, is an occupation yielding a net annual value or clear rent over and above the probable average annual cost of repairs, insurances and other expenses necessary to maintain the property in a state to command such rent.

It is to be taken for the purposes of this case that the property is occupied and used for municipal purposes.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the appellants are liable to be rated for the relief of the poor in respect of the property comprised in the rate or assessment.

F. M. White, for the respondents.—The appellants will rely upon the exemption in 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48. s. 1, but it is submitted that the operation of this proviso was, so far as the exemption is concerned, simply to continue the law as if the act had not passed. This law has now been explained by the case of Jones v. the Mersey Docks (1), which decides that property like this, although occupied for public purposes, is rateable. The object of the act was to make property rateable, not to exempt it. The recital contains no express declaration of the law.

[HANNEN, J.—Suppose that the recital had been, “whereas it has been erroneously held,” &c., would that make any difference?]

Perhaps not; but the operation of the statute ought to be limited to its sole object, which was to impose a rate. The public policy is in favour of uniformity of decisions in the Poor Law.

[LUSH, J.—It seems to me that it is just as if the legislature had said, “We think it right that corporate property should in general be rateable, but we also think that, under certain circumstances, it ought not to be rateable.”]

Secondly, this case is not within the meaning of the proviso. Although Oldham is incorporated, it is not within either of the schedules of the Municipal Corporation Act, 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. Lastly, the law of rating is now changed by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. s. 1, and the proviso was not intended to apply to a case where several townships contribute to the union fund.

[MELLOR, J.—That section was not intended to affect any exemption.]

Quain (Kemplay and Edwards with him) contended that the respondents were prevented by the express words of the case from objecting that the borough of Oldham was not within the schedules of the Municipal Corporation Act; but the Court having refused to entertain this proposition, he pointed out that the act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 79. s. 2. (4) expressly extended the provisions of 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. to all future corporations.

MELLOR, J. (5).—We are all of opinion that this property was improperly rated, and that the order of Sessions must be quashed. The case is singular and somewhat instructive as to the way in which our legislature proceeds. We have first the act 4 & 5

(4) By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 79. ss. 1, 2, after reciting “that the acts 6 & 7 Will. 4. cc. 104, 105, 7 Will. 4. and 1 Vict. c. 78, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 28, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 28, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 89, or some of the provisions thereof respectively which might properly be made applicable as well to all the municipal corporations in England which have been erected since the passing of the act 6 Will. 4. for regulating municipal corporations in England, as to the municipal corporations specified in the schedules to that act, do not apply to such recently erected municipal corporations by reason of those acts or provisions being restricted in terms to the municipal corporations specified in those schedules: and that it is expedient that all acts relating generally to the municipal corporations in England specified in these schedules should apply as well to all municipal corporations in England erected after the passing of that act;” it is enacted, that “in every case in which an existing or future act passed after the act, 6 Will. 4. c. 76, for the regulation of municipal corporations, or any provision of any such act, applies generally to the municipal corporations specified in the schedules to that act, or applies generally to municipal corporations in England, every such act and every such provision shall (except only so far as by any act hereafter passed is otherwise expressly provided) extend and apply, not only to every municipal corporation in England specified in those schedules, but also to every municipal corporation in England erected after the passing of that act, 6 Will. 4. c. 76, and whether erected by charter under that act or otherwise.”

(3) Cockburn, C.J. was presiding at the trial of prisoners in the Central Criminal Court.

Vict., which was founded on the decisions of this Court, which held that municipal property was not rateable. The legislature, thinking that the state of things established by these decisions was not proper, proceeded to enact that in future municipal property should be rated, but exempted from what it proposed to enact as new law certain corporate property under certain conditions. The property in question complies with these conditions, and is therefore not liable to be rated. It has been said, however, that this act was passed by the legislature under a misconception as to the law, and that the proviso was not intended to alter the law as it existed at the time of the statute. But this cannot be the case, and it is impossible for us,—although we may very likely see that this act of parliament would never have passed if the late decision of the House of Lords had then been pronounced,—to set at naught the intention of the legislature by speculating upon what would have been done if they had known the law. When, however, we look at the proviso, we find that it is limited to parishes situate within certain specified boroughs in the schedules to the act 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76, and that the borough of Oldham is not within either of these schedules. The borough would therefore be in a different position from other municipal corporations; and in order to remedy this inconvenience an act of parliament, the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 79, was passed, which, in section 2, appears to have cured the objection. With reference to another point taken by Mr. White, the act 28 & 29 Vict. c. 89. does not appear to me to touch the question; for this act does not make property rateable which had not before been rated, but merely affects the machinery by which the rate is assessed.

LUSH, J.—I am also of opinion that the act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 79. brings the borough of Oldham within the classes specified in Schedules A. and B. to the Municipal Corporation Act. As to the proper construction of section 1. of that act, I cannot but regard the section as an expression of intention that under certain circumstances corporate property shall continue to be exempted from the poor-rate. There can be no doubt that the law as it was then supposed to be has been corrected by the decision in Jones v.

the Mersey Docks (1), but the legislature has declared that property such as this shall be exempted, and the reason is obvious, for what was paid in respect of this property as poor-rates would be refunded to the corporation in the shape of borough rates. As to what has been said concerning the act 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79, I think that there is nothing in it to qualify the effect of this proviso. It makes different parishes contribute for the benefit of the poor within the union to which they belong, but the liability to the rate itself remains unchanged.

Metropolis Management Acts (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. s. 105; 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102. s. 77.)—Provisions for Paving New Streets—Rateability of Church.

A church, together with the land appurtenant to it, is not rateable either as a house or land to the expenses of paving a new street, under the powers of the Metropolitan Management Acts, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. s. 105, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102. s. 77.

CASE stated for the opinion of this Court, according to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The appellant appeared before one of the Magistrates of the metropolitan district sitting in the police court for the district of St. Marylebone, on the 6th of April, 1867, to answer a summons obtained by the respondents charging him, as the owner of certain premises in Warrington Gardens, in Paddington, abutting upon a new street about to be paved by the respondents, with neglecting to pay the sum of 14l. 3s. 2d., his estimated share of the expenses of such paving.

It appeared from the vestry books that in February, 1867, a resolution was duly passed that Warrington Gardens be forthwith paved throughout the whole length of the carriage-way and footpaths, and that the estimated expenses, amounting to 83*l.* 9*s.* 4*d.*, be apportioned and charged upon the respective owners of the land and houses bounding, or abutting upon, or forming, the street. The appellant was the owner of one of those houses.

It appeared that there was a church, surrounded with land, opposite the row of houses mentioned in the resolution of the vestry, and abutting upon the road in question; and that no occupier or owner had been assessed in respect of this church and land, either as a house or as land; and it was objected by the appellant that the resolution of the vestry was not in accordance with the provisions of the act 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102. s. 77 (1), and that the owners or occupiers of the houses referred to in the resolution, the same being on one side of the street only, were improperly assessed with the whole amount of the estimated cost of repairing such road.

On the other hand, it was contended that it was not competent to question the legality of the resolution of the vestry in a proceeding under the above-mentioned act before one of the metropolitan Magistrates; and it was also contended that the church in question was neither house nor land abutting upon the new road within the meaning of the act, and that no owner or occupier of it could properly be assessed under the powers given by the act, and that the owners or occupiers of the houses, although they were situated on one side only of the road, were properly assessed with the whole amount of the estimated cost of repairing the road.

By a conveyance, dated March, 1856, and made by the then Bishop of London to the Commissioners for Building New Churches, the plot of land on which the church of St. Saviour now stands, and the marginal land adjoining, was given by the Bishop to the Commissioners and their successors, to be devoted, when consecrated, to ecclesiastical purposes for ever, by virtue of the acts of parliament therein mentioned.

On the 12th of April, 1856, the Bishop of Oxford, under a commission from the then Bishop of London, consecrated the church for the celebration of divine service.

The appellant contended that the owners of Warrington Gardens ought not to be liable for making and putting in repair the whole width of road between the plot of land already mentioned and the houses, because it did not appear that the marginal piece of land abutting on the roadway was included in the consecration, and therefore exempted from chargeability with a proportionate part of the expense of putting the roadway into repair.

The Magistrate ordered that the appellant should pay 14*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, his share of the expenses in question.

(1) By the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. s. 105, "In case the owners of the houses forming the greater part of any new street laid out or made or hereafter to be laid out or made, which is not paved to the satisfaction of the vestry or district board of the parish or district in which such street is situate, be desirous of having the same paved, as herein-after mentioned, or if such vestry or board deem it necessary or expedient that the same should be so paved, then and in either of such cases such vestry or board shall well and sufficiently pave the same, either throughout the whole breadth of the carriageway and footpaths thereof, or any part of such breadth, and from time to time keep such pavement in good and sufficient repair; and the owners of the houses forming such street shall, on demand, pay to such vestry or board the amount of the estimated expenses of providing and laying such pavement (such amount to be determined by the surveyor for the time being of the vestry or board)," &c.

By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102. s. 77, "Where any vestry or district board shall, under the powers given by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. s. 105, have paved or be about to pave any new street, the owners of the land bounding or abutting on such street shall be liable to contribute to the expenses or estimated expenses of paving the same, as well as the owners of houses therein, provided that it shall be lawful for the vestry or district board to charge the owners of land in a less proportion than the owners of house property, should they deem it just and expedient so to do; and any such costs or expenses, including the cost of paving at the points of intersection of streets, and all other incidental costs and charges, shall be apportioned by the vestry or board, and shall be recoverable either before the work shall be commenced, or during its progress, or after its completion; . . . and any such amount shall be recoverable from the present or any future owner of the premises either by action at law or in a summary manner before a Justice of the Peace, at the option of the vestry or board."

By section 112, "The expression 'new street' shall apply to and include all streets hereafter to be formed or laid out, and a part of any such street."

If the Court were of opinion that the resolution of the vestry directing that the whole amount of the cost of repairing the road should be assessed upon the owners and occupiers of the houses in question was bad, the order of the Magistrate was to be cancelled, but if otherwise, it was to remain in force.

Dowdewell (Macnamara with him), for the respondents.—The resolution of the vestry was fully warranted by the statutes in question.

[BLACKBURN, J.—There is no interpretation of the word “house” in the act.]

In stat. 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. s. 81. there are regulations as to erecting any house, which are quite inapplicable to a church. Then, with regard to the liability imposed upon the owner of lands, if it appeared that more land was attached to this church than was required for the purposes of mere decency, there might be some ground for the appellant's argument, but in the present case the marginal piece of land is a narrow fringe of ground which would pass under a conveyance of the church.—(He was then stopped.)

J. Brown (Patchett with him), for the appellant.—The site of the church and the land connected with it ought to have been charged with a share of the expenses of paving the street. By the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120. s. 162, which contains directions for levying rates for defraying the expenses of vestries and district boards, public buildings and void places, except churches and burial-grounds, are to retain their rateability. This exception would not have been required if the respondents are right.

[LUSH, J.—It was inserted to prevent any one supposing that it was intended to repeal the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 30, exempting churches and chapels from poor-rates.]

The word “house” cannot be limited to dwelling-houses, otherwise warehouses, stables, &c. would escape rateability. It would seem that a church might have been described as a house in the old indictments for burglary, upon the ground that it was domus mansionalis Dei—Russell on Crimes (3rd edit.), vol. 1, 826.

COCKBURN, C.J.—We think that the order was quite right. It is only necessary to say that a church is neither a “house” nor “land” within the meaning of the act.

BLACKBURN, J.—I would add, that I do not think that the Commissioners for Building Churches can be considered as the owners or occupiers intended by the legislature.

Local Act—Liability to pave Street—Owner of Ground adjoining Street—Cul-de-Sac.

By a local act the liability to pave and sewer any street within the borough of M. was cast on the owners of the houses and ground lying alongside or adjoining to such street, and in case of neglect power was given to the borough council to sewer and pave the street, and to charge the owners with their proportionate parts of the expenses thereof, according to the extent of their respective houses and grounds lying alongside or adjoining to the said street:—Held, that an owner of ground at the end of a street which was a cul-de-sac, and which ground was only separated from such street by a wall the property of such owner, is the owner of ground adjoining to the said street within the meaning of the act, and therefore liable to contribute his proportionate part of the expense of severing and paving such street.

CASE stated under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. for the opinion of this Court by the stipendiary Magistrate for the city of Manchester.

At a petty sessions for the city of Manchester, holden before the stipendiary Magistrate on the 3rd of July, 1866, William Chapman, the respondent, appeared (by his counsel) in obedience to a summons duly issued upon the complaint of the mayor, aldermen and citizens of the city of Manchester, the appellants, charging that the said W. Chapman, on the 4th of May, 1866, at the city aforesaid, on demand, then and there neglected and refused to pay and refund to the council of the said city the sum of 8*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*, the amount of the charges and expenses sustained, incurred and paid by the council of the said city in and incidental to the sewerage, levelling, flagging, paving and otherwise completing a certain street there situate, called Derby Place, under the provisions of a certain act, intituled, "The Manchester General Improvement Act, 1851" (14 & 15 Vict. c. cxix.), together with interest thereon, the said W. Chapman being the owner of houses lying alongside and adjoining the said street, and having neglected to sewer, level, flag, pave and complete the said street, as ordered so to do by writing under the hand of the town clerk of the said city, pursuant to the said act. And by the said summons the said W. Chapman was desired to shew cause why a distress for the said sum of 8*l.* 17*s.* 9*d.*, and interest thereon, should not be issued for recovery of the same.

It was proved to the satisfaction of the Magistrate that the council of the city of Manchester had, on the 2nd of December, 1863, duly ordered the said street, called Derby Place, which is described in the following plan, to be paved and sewerage, and that such order was duly published as required by the said act; and that the said W. Chapman was, at the date of the said order, and still is, the owner of the land at the end of Derby Place.

That the several owners liable, under the said statute to pave and sewer the said street (inclusive of the said W. Chapman, if he be held to be an owner liable in that behalf), made default in paving and sewerage the same in compliance with such order, and the street was thereupon duly paved and sewerage by and at the cost of the corporation; and that the share of the said W. Chapman of and in such cost (if he were liable to contribute at all, and if the principle of measurement adopted by the corporation for measuring along the sides and across the one end of the street be correct), has been correctly ascertained and apportioned by the corporation at the sum of 8*l.* 12*s.*, which sum, with interest thereon, at 5*l.* per cent., is the sum claimed by the corporation from the respondent.

It was further proved on the part of the corporation that the street was, on the 31st of August, 1865, declared by the said council a public highway in pursuance of the said act.

On the part of the respondent it was proved that the street in question was and is a cul-de-sac, the property of the respondent being at the end of it, and that before the erection of the houses in Derby Place the respondent built a substantial wall for the express purpose of fencing off his estate from the adjoining property; and subsequently Derby Place and other streets were laid out and built right up to the respondent's boundary wall; but it was admitted that the respondent could at any time, by removing such wall either wholly or partially, obtain access from his own estate to such street, and if he liked, continue the street; in which case he would be liable to sewer, flag, &c. such continuation.

It was contended before the Magistrate, on the part of the corporation, that under the 15th clause of the Manchester General Improvement Act, 1851 (1), the owners of houses and ground lying alongside and

(1) The following are the sections of 14 & 15 Vict. c. cxix., the Manchester General Improvement Act, 1851, which relate to this case:

Section 15. That if any street or part of a street (not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large) which now is or shall at any time hereafter be formed or set out within the borough, shall not be sufficiently sewerage and drained, levelled, flagged and paved, to the satisfaction of the council, it shall be lawful for the council, at any time, and from time to time, after the passing of this act, by any writing under the hand of the town clerk, to order that any such street or part thereof shall be freed from obstruction, and sewerage and drained, levelled, flagged and paved, or otherwise completed, in such manner and within such time as the council shall order and direct; and thereupon the respective owners of the houses and ground lying alongside or adjoining to the said street, notwithstanding any parts of such street may include, pass over, lie opposite or be adjacent to any cross or other street or any part thereof, shall, within such time and in such manner as shall be expressed in such order, at their respective charges and exadjoining to the street were liable to contribute to the cost of paving and sewerage in proportion to their frontage, even if such houses and ground were at the end of the street; and that the words "alongside or adjoining" were to be construed literally, and apply to all property which was in contact with such street; and that under the said act the obligation to pave and sewer a street was not cast upon the persons owning the soil of the street, but on the owners of the land adjoining thereto.

It was contended on the part of the said W. Chapman, that under the circumstances of the case he was not an owner of houses and ground lying alongside and adjoining the said street, as alleged in the said summons, within the true intent and meaning of the said statute, and that he was not liable to contribute to the expense of paving and sewerage Derby Place, aforesaid.

The Magistrate decided that the respondent was not, under the circumstances of the case, and upon the true construction of the statute, liable to contribute; and he dismissed the summons.

The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether upon the facts appearing in this case the Magistrate's decision was erroneous in point of law.

If the Court should be of opinion that he penances, remove all obstructions, and well and sufficiently sewer and drain, level, flag and pave, or otherwise complete such street respectively.

Section 17. That if any such owners shall neglect or omit to remove the obstructions, and sewer, drain, level, flag and pave, or otherwise complete such street or any part of any such street within such time and in such manner as expressed in the said order, it shall then be lawful for the council to remove all obstructions, and to sewer, drain, level, flag and pave, or otherwise to complete, as they shall think fit, the said street, or such part thereof as shall not have been done pursuant to the said order, and to charge such respective owners with their several proportionate parts of the charges and expenses thereof, or which are incidental thereto, according to the extent of their respective houses and grounds lying alongside or adjoining to the said street, such share and proportion to be ascertained and settled by or under the direction of the said council; and all the charges and expenses which the council shall thereby sustain, incur or pay, and shall so charge upon such owners respectively, shall, on demand, be forthwith paid and refunded to the council by such owners respectively, and, together with interest from and after the expiration of three calendar months from the date when the completion of the street shall was wrong, then the respondent was to pay to the said corporation the sum of 8*l.* 12*s.*, and interest after the rate of 5*l.* per cent. per annum from the 31st of August, 1865.

If the Court should be of opinion that he was right, the case was to be dismissed, and the corporation was to pay the respondent his costs of attending the hearing before the Magistrate, and of this case.

Mellish (R. G. Williams with him), for the appellants.—The question is whether land at the end of a cul-de-sac, bounded by a wall, is land adjoining a street such as that mentioned in the summons so as to render the owner of such land liable, under the Manchester Improvement Act (14 & 15 Vict. c. cxix.), to contribute to the expense of paving and sewerage such street. Section 15. of that act enacts that, after the Borough Council have ordered any street, not being a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, to be sewered, &c., and paved, "the respective owners of the houses and ground lying alongside or adjoining to the said street," are bound to sewer and pave such street according to such order. If they neglect to do so, then, by section 17, the council may sewer, &c., and pave the street, and charge such owners with their proportionate parts of the expenses, "according to the extent of their respective houses and grounds lying along-as hereinafter provided be certified by the council, shall be recoverable by action of debt in any court of competent jurisdiction.

Section 28. That if any street already made, or hereafter to be made, within the borough has already been, under any powers in that behalf, or shall at any time hereafter, together with the footways therein, be drained and paved, or put into good order to the satisfaction of the council, then and in such case, on the application of the persons being the owners of the lands lying alongside or contiguous or adjoining to such street, on both sides thereof, or being the owners of the greater part in extent of such lands, by writing under their hands made to the council, it shall be lawful for the council, by writing under the hand of the town clerk, to certify and declare the same to be a public highway, and after such declaration, the same shall be a public highway, and for ever afterwards repaired and repairable by the township or townships in which the same shall be situate, in such and the same manner as public streets and highways are repaired and repairable by law therein; and within two months next after the signing of every such certificate and declaration the same shall be transcribed and recorded amongst the proceedings of the council, and shall be deposited with the clerk of the peace.

side or adjoining to the said street." By the Public Health Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. s. 69), a similar liability is put on the "owners or occupiers of the premises fronting, adjoining or abutting upon" a street requiring to be sewered, &c.; and in The Queen v. the Newport Local Board of Health (2) it was held that the expense of sewerage and paving such street must be apportioned among the owners or occupiers of all premises fronting, adjoining or abutting upon the street, whether the premises have direct access to the street or not.

It matters not what benefit the respondent may derive from the sewerage or paving; it is sufficient that he comes within the act as owner of land adjoining to the street.—(He was then stopped by the Court.)

Thesiger, for the respondent.—It may be that the quantum of benefit is not the test of liability; but still it is manifest that the legislature intended that the persons only who were to benefit by the work were to contribute to the expenses; indeed, it would be most unjust if it were otherwise. In The Local Board of Health of Kingston-upon-Hull v. Jones (4), Alderson, B., in delivering the judgment of the Court, says: "Where a road has been made which is not repairable by the parish, it may become a public nuisance or injurious to the public health, because there is nobody bound to put it into a proper state; and the legislature thought it right that those who owned the property for the convenience of which the street is made should be at the expense of preventing it from being a mischief to the public at large." That is the principle which has guided the legislature in passing such acts of parliament. Here it cannot be said that the street is for the convenience of the respondent; he has nothing whatever to do with it, and it is entirely cut off from him by the wall which separates it from his property. This property of his cannot be said to be alongside or even adjoining the said street within the meaning of the statute. That act shews throughout that the terms "alongside" and "adjoining" are used as synonymous terms. In section 23. the words "adjoining to or abutting upon" are used; and in section 25. the word "adjoining" only is used; whilst sections 32. and 33. speak of owners of houses and ground "alongside" a street. The meaning, therefore, is to impose the liability on the person who is owner of a house or land alongside the street ordered to be paved, &c., which clearly is not the case of this respondent. The 28th section is important; that section provides for making the street a public highway, which the street in question has now been declared to be; but, under this 28th section, it is requisite to have the application for that purpose of the owners of, or of the greater part of, "the lands lying alongside, or continuous, or adjoining to such street on both sides thereof." That would not include the respondent, whose land and wall were at the end of the only two sides the street had. In fact, the respondent, without pulling down his wall, could derive no benefit whatever from the street.

R. G. Williams replied.

BOVILL, C.J.—Upon the best consideration of the act that I have been able to give, I have come to the conclusion that Mr. Chapman was the owner of ground adjoining the street within the meaning of the act; and therefore the decision of the Magistrate must be reversed. The 15th section imposes the duty of sewerage, levelling and paving the street upon "the respective owners of the houses and ground lying alongside or adjoining to the said street," and it seems to me that the words "adjoining to" are intentionally put in to meet the case of a cul-de-sac like the present. The fact of there being a wall dividing the land from the street does not affect the question, for the wall is on Mr. Chapman's property, and he is the owner of the ground on which it stands. As a general rule, we would not so construe the act as to apply it to a case in which no benefit could be derived from the works; but no injustice is really done here in putting the construction we have upon the act, for Mr. Chapman may at any time hereafter have the use of the street by opening a communication with it. The expenses are provided for by the 17th section; and by that section the share and proportion of the expenses are to be ascertained by the council and charged upon the owners according to the extent of their respective grounds lying adjoining to the said street. Reliance has been placed by the respondent on some other sections, and our attention was first called to the 23rd section; but I do not think that that varies our judgment on the 15th section. The language there is "ground adjoining to or abutting upon any street," and I see no material difference between that and the words in the 15th section, "ground lying alongside or adjoining to the said street." Next, the 28th section was brought to our notice, by which section provision is made for declaring a street a highway on the application of "persons being the owners of the lands lying alongside, or contiguous, or adjoining to such street, on both sides thereof, or being the owners of the greater part in extent of such lands." That may be to meet the case where the majority of the owners who apply are on one side only of such street; but, however that may be, it is sufficient that it is capable of a construction which does not conflict with the view I have taken of the 15th section. The 32nd and 33rd sections likewise do not affect the present question. Though not without some doubt, I have come to the conclusion that the construction to be put on the act is such as I have already mentioned; that Mr. Chapman is the owner of ground adjoining to the said street; and that he is therefore liable to contribute to the expense of sewerage and paving such street. My judgment, consequently, must be for the appellants.

BYLES, J.—I am of the same opinion. Mr. Chapman's ground is at the end of the street, and forms it into a cul-de-sac. At this end there is a wall; but Mr. Chapman is the owner of such wall, and he may pull it down at any time and so prolong the street, or he may open a gate in the wall and so obtain an entrance into the street. Suppose, instead of being a parallelogram, the street had been a square, it is plain that Mr. Chapman would have had to contribute to these expenses. The sewer is a permanent benefit which it is obvious he may at any time obtain the advantage of.

Colliery, Ventilation of—Space in which Ventilation is necessary—"Working Place"
—23 & 24 Vict. c. 151. s. 10.

By the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151. s. 10. rules 1 and 2,—which direct that "an adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced in all coal mines or collieries and ironstone mines, to dilute and render harmless noxious gases, to such an extent that the working-places of the pits, levels and workings of every such colliery and mine, and the travelling-roads to and from such working-places, shall, under ordinary circumstances, be in a fit state for working and passing therein," and that all entrances to any place not in actual course of working and extension, and suspected to contain dangerous gas of any kind, shall be properly fenced off so as to prevent access thereto,—it is meant, not only that the working-places and travelling-roads of the mine should be kept ventilated, but that all parts of the mine should be ventilated so as to render the working-places and travelling-roads safe.

In a colliery subject to the above rules there was a heading, the top or fore-end of which had not been worked for eighteen months; while this part of the heading was being put in repair, it became filled with explosive gas, in consequence of one of the workmen removing a door so as to divert the ventilation. Danger-signals were at once put up, so as to prevent access to that part of the heading filled with gas, and there was no intention to resume operations in it until it had been ventilated; but the door was not immediately replaced, from a fear that this would be dangerous while the men were in the pit. Three days afterwards, and before the ventilation was restored, an explosion took place in the end of the heading:—Held, that this part of the heading was a "working-place" within the meaning of the statute, so that there had been a breach of the rule requiring ventilation to be maintained.

At a Petty Sessions at Tredegar, in Monmouthshire, on the 22nd of September, 1865, an information was preferred by L. Brough (the appellant), under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151. ss. 10, 22 (1), charging the respondents, as the owners of a colliery called the Bedwelty Pit, with not causing an adequate amount of ventilation to be constantly produced in the colliery, to dilute and render harmless noxious gases, to such an extent that the working-places of the pits, levels and workings of the colliery and the travelling-roads to and from the working-places should, under ordinary circumstances, be in a fit state for working and passing therein.

At the hearing, on the 24th of October, the Magistrates dismissed the information, being of opinion that the top of Roberts's heading mentioned in the evidence was not, under the facts proved, "a working-place," on the 16th of June, 1865, within the meaning of the first general rule in the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151. s. 10, and the following CASE was stated for the opinion of the Court pursuant to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43:—

It was proved before the Magistrates that the defendants were the owners of the colliery called the Bedwelty Pit, in the county of Monmouth; and a plan of the workings in the colliery was proved before the Magistrates, which plan was to be taken as part of the case.

(The following plan will sufficiently elucidate the case.)

The ventilation of the colliery passed down the pit until it got into a heading called Jones's heading, and it proceeded along Jones's heading into the cross-heading called the Third Crossing in the plan, a door

All entrances to any place not in actual course of working and extension, and suspected to contain dangerous gas of any kind, shall be properly fenced off so as to prevent access thereto."

By section 22, "If any coal-mine, colliery, or ironstone-mine be worked, and, through the default of the owner or agent thereof, . . . the general rules, or the special rules for such coal-mine, colliery, or ironstone-mine, . . . the provisions of which ought to be observed by the owner and principal agent or viewer of such coal-mine, colliery, or ironstone-mine, be neglected or wilfully violated by any such owner, agent, or viewer, such person shall be liable to a penalty of not exceeding 20*l*."

in which, marked A, diverted the ventilation thence into and through the small cross-heading marked Small Cross-way in the plan, into the heading marked Roberts's Heading on the plan, and by means of a brattice (that is, a canvas partition), represented by a dotted line on the plan, it was conducted into the upper part or fore-end of Roberts's heading, and then round the brattice in the opposite direction, and along Roberts's heading to the up-cast shaft. The direction of the arrows on the plan shews the course of the ventilation.

This had been the mode of ventilating this part of the colliery for more than a year before Wednesday the 14th of June, 1865. The top or fore-end of Roberts's heading and the top or fore-end of Jones's heading were each in solid unworked coal, and the third crossing and the cross-hole were also driven in solid unworked coal, and the coal was entirely unworked and workable adjoining and around the fore-end of Roberts's heading and Jones's heading and the third crossing and the small cross-way.

The stalls on the left or west side of Jones's heading and other stalls in that heading and the fore-end of that heading were being worked on the 14th, 15th and 16th days of June, 1865, and had been continuously worked previous to those days.

The stalls on the right or east side of Roberts's heading and other stalls in that heading were being worked on the 14th, 15th and 16th days of June, 1865, and had been continuously worked previous to those days.

The driving on the fore-end of Roberts's heading and the working of coal therein had been temporarily discontinued for about eighteen months before the beginning of June, 1865. In the beginning of June, 1865, Mr. W. Beavan, the manager of the colliery, gave directions to put the fore-end of Roberts's heading above the third crossing into order and repair, and one Richard Jenkins was employed for five or six days before the 14th of June, 1865, working at the repairs of the fore-end of Roberts's heading above the third crossing, so as to resume operations therein, and the working of coal therefrom.

The third crossing and small cross-way were part of the air-way, conducting the ventilation from Jones's heading into the fore-end of Roberts's heading, as before mentioned.

The small cross-way was about three feet high, and four feet wide. In the beginning of June, 1865, the manager of the works gave directions to enlarge and convert the third crossing into a roadway for bringing the coal worked in the fore-end of Jones's heading into Roberts's heading, so that it might be taken down that heading to the level heading for conveyance to the surface.

David Jones and his son, a boy about thirteen years of age, were employed so to enlarge and convert the third crossing into a roadway, and they worked at such alteration until, on the 14th of June, they had completed it up to the door marked "A," which diverted the ventilation into the small cross-way and the fore-end of Roberts's heading. On the 14th of June David Jones mentioned to the foreman of the colliery, John Jehu, who is an under-agent, that he intended taking down the door, but he was told by Reynolds the overman not to do so, as it would withdraw the ventilation from the small cross-way and the fore-end of Roberts's heading, and would be dangerous. Notwithstanding these directions, David Jones took down the door on the morning of the 14th of June, 1865.

The consequence of the taking down of the door was that the ventilation would not pursue its course into the small cross-way and the fore-end of Roberts's heading, but would pass directly along the third crossing into Roberts's heading and down that heading towards the up-take pit.

Within half an hour after taking down the door and this interference with the course of ventilation, the fore-end of Roberts's heading would become filled with explosive gas and be highly dangerous, and in fact, shortly after the door had been so taken down, the foreman, John Jehu, found on examining the fore-end of Roberts's heading that it had become filled with explosive gas as the ventilation therein had ceased. Upon the door being so taken down it became impracticable for Thomas Jenkins to continue his operations in the fore-end of Roberts's heading in consequence of the ventilation there having ceased and explosive gas having accumulated therein, and he discontinued his work, but was to resume it as soon as the ventilation could be restored. On the foreman, John Jehu, finding on the morning of the 14th of June (which he did immediately it was done) that the door had been so taken down, he put up fences and warning signals across the small cross-way, just above or to the north of the point where the third crossing enters Roberts's heading, so as to prevent access either to the small cross-way or to the fore-end of Roberts's heading.

The Magistrates found that there was no intention to resume work in or allow any one to enter any part of the fore-end of Roberts's heading until the ventilation of it had been properly restored. Beavan, the colliery manager, was informed by Jenkins on the 14th of June, 1865, in answer to an inquiry in the street, why he was not at work, that Jones had taken down the door, and Beavan directed Jenkins to tell Jehu the foreman to replace the door immediately. This direction was given to Jehu, but he did not replace the door, alleging that it would be dangerous to do so till Saturday, when the men would be out of the colliery. On the morning of Thursday, the 15th of July, 1865, Beavan had a conversation with Jehu personally, and also with Reynolds, the overman of the colliery, as to replacing the door, but Beavan, Jehu and Reynolds all agreed that it would be dangerous to do so, from the quantity of gas accumulating in the fore-end of Roberts's heading, while the men were at work in the colliery, and that it would not be safe to do so until the following Saturday-night, when the men would be out of the colliery; and it was delayed accordingly. Jones and his son, on Wednesday the 14th, Thursday the 15th and Friday the 16th, until the explosion hereafter mentioned occurred, continued their work in the third crossing. The other workmen continued their operations on these days (until the explosion) in the lower or southern end of Roberts's heading and the stalls opening out of it, and in Jones's heading and the stalls leading out of it, and in the other parts of the colliery.

On Friday morning a violent explosion occurred in Roberts's heading, but how it occurred could not be ascertained. Jones, his son and several persons were killed, and several others injured. The foreman had, on the morning of the explosion before it occurred, been through the works to examine the condition of the ventilation, and he had that morning, pursuant to his duty, by pushing his lamp between the fencing, found that the fore-end of Roberts's heading was full with the accumulation of gas, as it was on Wednesday after taking down the door, and also on Thursday. The fencing was put up with a view to prevent access to the gas.

If upon the evidence the Court thought that in point of law there was no wilful violation of the 1st general rule on the 16th of June, 1865, and that under ordinary circumstances an adequate amount of ventilation was produced in the working-places of the colliery to dilute and render harmless noxious gases, and that the fore-end of Roberts's heading was on the day in question not a working-place within the meaning of the 1st general rule, the respondents ought not to have been convicted, and the information was properly dismissed; but if in the opinion of the Court it was otherwise, the respondents ought to have been convicted.

Manisty (H. Matthews with him), for the appellant.—The simple question is, whether the statute meant that the whole mine should be kept ventilated. It is true that the part of Roberts's heading where the gas collected had not been worked for some time when the workmen received orders to repair it, but the working had all along continued in the rest of the heading, which was immediately connected with the part which became dangerous.

[BLACKBURN, J.—The point appears to be whether the liability extends to the whole mine.]

The place where the explosion took place shews that the gas must have escaped from Roberts's heading. It is no defence for the owner to shew that communication with the part of the heading which had become unsafe was cut off. No time ought to have been lost in restoring ventilation while the men were in the mine.—(He was then stopped.)

Henry James, for the respondents.—In this case, it was impossible for the Magistrates to have convicted, as every precaution had been taken by the mine-owner. Rules 1. and 2. must be taken together. Shutting off the part affected by the gas was quite sufficient, as the poisonous gas does not travel into the rest of the mine, but remains stationary. There is no evidence that the gas ever escaped from Roberts's heading. If the respondents are liable at all, it is for a breach of rule 2. in not fencing off a place containing dangerous gas. Ventilation is only required to be maintained where the working is actually going on, and it was not meant that every crevice in the mine should be kept ventilated.

[BLACKBURN, J.—Why could not the respondents have put up an air-tight partition?]

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think that there is evidence enough before us to shew that the working-places of this mine were not sufficiently ventilated so as to be in a fit state for working and passing in them. I think that it was the intention of the legislature that so much of the mine should be ventilated as might operate on these places, in other words, that so much of the mine must be ventilated as is essential to the safety of those working in it. It was owing to defects in such ventilation that this accident occurred. The case must go back to the Justices to be reheard, with an intimation of the opinion of the Court that it is not enough to ventilate the working-places and travelling-roads of the mine, but that the first rule requires all the parts of the mine to be ventilated so as to render the working-places and travelling-roads safe.

BLACKBURN, J. and LUSH, J. concurred.
Case remitted.

1868. } THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES FOR June 12. } MARYLEBONE.

Special Constables—Order for Payment of Expenses out of County Rate—Special Session of Justices—"Division or Limits"—1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 41. ss. 1, 13.

Under the act for amending the laws relating to the appointment of special constables,—which, by section 13, enables the Justices of the Peace, acting for the division or limits within which such special constables shall have been called out to serve, at a special session to be held for that purpose, to order the expenses of such special constables, if the Justices so ordering are Justices for any county, riding or division having a separate commission of the peace, to be paid by the county treasurer out of the public money then in his hands,—the order for payment may be made by Justices at a special session in and for a petty sessional division, and need not be made at a special session of Justices acting for the whole county, riding, or division within which special constables are appointed.

Rule, calling upon certain Magistrates acting for the petty sessional division of Marylebone and their clerk, to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue to bring up an order made by the Magistrates, at a special session for the petty sessional division of Marylebone, on the 11th of May, 1868, in order that it might be quashed.

It appeared from the affidavits that in December, 1867, an information upon oath was laid before certain Justices of the Peace for the county of Middlesex, acting for the division of Marylebone, to the effect that there were reasonable grounds for apprehending that tumults, riots and felonies might take place in the parish of St. Marylebone, whereby it was necessary that special constables should be appointed for the better preservation of the peace, according to 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 41. (1).

(1) By 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 41, an act for amending the laws relative to the appointment of special constables, and for the better preservation of the peace, section 1, "In all cases where it shall be made to appear to any two or more Justices of the Peace of any county, riding or division, having a separate commission of the peace, or to any two or more Justices of the Peace, of any liberty, franchise, city or town in England or Wales, upon the oath of any credible witness, that any tumult, riot or felony has taken place, or may be reasonably apprehended in any parish, township or place, situate within the division or limits for which the said respective Justices usually act, and such Justices shall be of opinion that the ordinary officers appointed for preserving the peace are not sufficient for the preservation of the peace and for the protection of the inhabitants and the security of the property in such parish, township or place as aforesaid, then, and in every such case,

In consequence of this information certain persons were duly sworn in to act as special constables, and expenses amounting to 54*l*. 18*s*. 3*d*. were incurred in providing staves and other necessary articles for them, &c. An account of these expenses was laid before a special session of the Justices in and for the petty sessional division of Marylebone, and an order was made by them upon the treasurer of the county of Middlesex for the payment of the expenses so incurred.

A question was thereupon raised whether the order for these expenses should not have been made at a special session of Justices acting for the whole county or division within which special constables were appointed.

At the time of the passing of the act 1 & 2 Will. 4. the county of Middlesex was divided into six hundreds, and four extra-parochial places; of these the hundred of Ossulston was divided into five divisions. One of these divisions, the Westminster division, was conterminous with the liberty of Westminster, for which there was and still is a separate commission of the peace, which, however, does not exclude the jurisdiction of the Justices in the commission of the peace for the county. In the county of Middlesex there are two commissions of the peace, one for the county proper, the other for the city and liberty of Westminster. At the date of the act 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 41, separate sessions were held for the county and the liberty respectively, the former at Clerkenwell, the latter at the sessions house Westminster. In July, 1853, the county was divided into seventeen petty sessional divisions, by an order of sessions pursuant to 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55. s. 17. The Marylebone division was one of the new divisions constituted by this order.

Poland (Mellish with him) shewed cause.—The order in dispute was valid. The question turns upon the meaning of the words “division or limits,” in 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 41. ss. 1, 13. The word “division” appears to be used in two senses in section 1; first, as indicating a division having a separate commission of the peace, and secondly, a division for which Justices usually act, that is, a petty sessional division, such as Marylebone. The words “Justices of the Peace acting for the division or limits within which any such Justices, or any two or more Justices acting for the same division or limits, are hereby authorized to nominate and appoint, by precept in writing under their hands, so many as they shall think fit of the householders or other persons (not legally exempt from serving the office of constable), residing in such parish, township or place as aforesaid, or in the neighbourhood thereof, to act as special constables, for such time and in such manner as to the said Justices respectively shall seem fit and necessary for the preservation of the public peace, and for the protection of the inhabitants and the security of the property in such parish, township or place; and the Justices of the Peace who shall appoint any special constables by virtue of this act, or any one of them, or any other Justice of the Peace acting for the same division or limits, are and is hereby authorized to administer to every person so appointed the following oath,” &c.

By section 5, every special constable so appointed shall have the powers of a constable at common law, not only within the parish, &c. for which he shall have been appointed, but throughout the entire jurisdiction of the Justices appointing him.

By section 13, “The Justices of the Peace acting for the division or limits within which any such special constables shall have been called out to serve, at a special session to be held for that purpose, or the major part of the Justices at such special session, are hereby empowered to order from time to time such reasonable allowances for their trouble, loss of time and expenses, to be paid to such special constables who shall have so served or be then serving, as to the said Justices or such major part of them shall seem proper; and the said Justices or such major part of them may also order the payment of such expenses as may have been incurred in providing staves or other necessary articles for such special constables, and the said Justices so ordering, if Justices for any county, riding or division having a separate commission of the peace, or if Justices for any liberty, franchise, city or town, which shall be contributory to the public rate for any county, riding or division, shall make every order for the payment of such allowances and expenses upon the treasurer of such county, riding or division, who is hereby required to pay the same out of any public money which shall then be in his hands, and the said treasurer shall be allowed all such payments in his accounts; and where the Justices of the Peace assembled at such special session are Justices for any liberty, franchise, city or town which is not contributory to the public rate for any county, riding or division, but which raises a rate or other similar fund in the nature of a county rate, in every such case the said last-mentioned Justices shall make every order for the payment of such allowances and expenses as aforesaid upon the treasurer or other officer, having the collection or disbursement of such last-mentioned rate or fund, who shall forthwith pay every such order out of such rate or fund, and shall be allowed all such payments in his accounts.”

such special constables shall have been called out to serve, at a special session to be held for the purpose," in section 13. mean Justices acting for a petty sessional division; but the words "division having a separate commission of the peace," which occur later, mean, no doubt, divisions of a county. The order is to be made on the treasurer of the county having a separate commission of the peace. The act 9 Geo. 4. c. 43. enabling the Justices of a county, with a separate commission of the peace to form new divisions, within which special sessions should be held, did not apply to Middlesex. But this exception was removed by the act 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55. s. 17. The petty sessional divisions made in pursuance of this act are those within which the order may be made. It would be inconvenient to give notice to every Justice in the county on the occasion of considering the expenses of every district. The words "for which the Justices usually act," in section 1, are applicable only to a petty sessional division.

J. Brown and Channell, in support of the rule.—The order should have been made by a special session of Justices for the county. If a different construction be adopted it will cause great inconvenience by leading to unequal rates of allowance and remuneration in the different districts. In The Queen v. Hulton (2), where it was held that a similar order by the Justices of the borough of Manchester, which had a separate commission of the peace, and contributed to the county rate, was good, Coleridge, J. says, "The word 'division' in the 13th section, may not necessarily have the same meaning as in the 1st section." In that case the point here in question does not seem to have been decided, but appears to have been considered worthy of argument by the Court.

Per Curiam (3).—There can be no doubt but that the proper construction to be put on section 13. is, that the order for payment of the expenses is to be made by the Justices who acted for the petty sessional division in the appointment of special constables. This construction is borne out by the sense in which the word "division" is used in 9 Geo. 4. c. 43.

Public Health Act—Partial Adoption of the Act—Provisional Order varying the mode of Rating prescribed by the Act.

Section 10, of the Public Health Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, which enables the act to be applied to any city, town, borough, parish or place wherein there is no local act for cleansing, watching, &c., otherwise than for the profit of the proprietors and shareholders, and directs that the General Board of Health shall make a provisional order accordingly, with such provisions, regulations, conditions and restrictions with respect to the application and execution of the act or any part thereof, and with respect to any such local act, and the repeal, alteration, extension or future execution of the same, and in all respects whatsoever as they may think necessary,—does not authorize the board to make an order applying the Public Health Act, but excepting so much of section 88. as provides that railways, &c. shall be rated upon only one-fourth of their annual value; as the effect of such an order is not to apply the act or any part of it, but to make a new and substantially different enactment, materially altering the rights of parties in the district to which the act is applied.

This was a SPECIAL CASE stated for the opinion of the Court by consent of the parties, and by an order of Blackburn, J., under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 11.

The facts are so fully noticed in the judgment of the Court that it will be necessary only to state that a portion of the borough of Tynemouth, consisting of the township of North Shields and of parts of each of the three townships of Tynemouth, Preston and Chirton, were, before the making of the provisional order hereafter mentioned, under the management of Commissioners, constituted under 9 Geo. 4. c. xxxvii. for paving, lighting, watching, cleansing, regulating and improving the town of North Shields, in Northumberland. The appellants, in accordance with the mode of rating prescribed by sections 74, 75, and 80. of this act, were from time to time rated by the Commissioners upon the full improved yearly value of their lands and premises, including their railway, within the limits of the act. In 1849 the townships comprising the parliamentary borough of Tynemouth were formed into a municipal borough, called the borough of Tynemouth, by royal charter, granted in pursuance of the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76. Shortly after the incorporation of the borough the Commissioners under the local act, in pursuance of the powers created by section 75. of the Municipal Corporation Act, transferred by deed the powers vested in them to the corporation of Tynemouth,

In July, 1857, a provisional order, purporting to be an order under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1848 (1), was made by the General Board of Health, by which,—after reciting the local act and the transfer of its powers to the corporation, and that it appeared to the General Board to be expedient that the Public Health Act, except as thereafter mentioned, should be applied to the borough and its boundaries, so defined as aforesaid, and that provision should be made with respect to the local act and the partial repeal thereof,—it was ordered “that from and after the passing of any act of parliament confirming the order, the Public Health Act, 1848, and every part thereof, except the section numbered 50, and except so much of section 88. as provides that the occupier of any land used as arable, meadow or pasture ground only, &c., or as a railway, constructed under the powers of any act of parliament for public conveyance, shall be assessed in respect of the same in one-fourth part only of such net annual value thereof, should apply to and be in force within and throughout the entire area, places and parts of places comprised within the boundaries of the borough of Tynemouth so fixed as aforesaid, and that the corporate borough and places and parts of places should be and constitute one district for the purposes of the Public Health Act accordingly.” The order contained other provisions which

(1) By the Public Health Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. ss. 8, 9, provision is made for official inquiries as to the sewerage, &c. of cities, towns, boroughs, parishes, or places having a known or defined boundary.

By section 10.—“If, after such inquiry or further inquiry as aforesaid, it appear to the said General Board of Health to be expedient that this act or any part thereof should be applied to the city, town, borough, parish, or place with respect to which inquiry has been made, upon the petition of such inhabitants as aforesaid, and within the same boundaries as those of such city, town, borough, parish, or place, and within which there is no local act of parliament in force for paving, lighting (otherwise than for the profit of proprietors or shareholders), cleansing, watching, regulating, supplying with water, or improving such city, town, borough, parish, or place, or any part thereof, or in anywise relating to the purposes of this act, they shall report to Her Majesty accordingly; and at any time after presentation of such report it shall be lawful for Her Majesty, by and with the advice of her Privy Council, to order that this act or any part thereof shall be applied to and be put in full force and operation within such city, town, borough, parish, or place; and if after such inquiry or further inquiry as aforesaid it appear to the said general board to be expedient that this act or any part thereof should be put in force within boundaries not being the same as those of the city, town, borough, parish, or place from which the said petition proceeded, or within boundaries where no petition has been presented from such inhabitants as aforesaid, or within any city, town, borough, parish, or place in which any such local act of parliament as aforesaid is in force, they shall make a provisional order under their hands and seal of office accordingly, with such provisions, regulations, conditions, and restrictions with respect to the application and execution of the same, and in all respects whatsoever as they may think necessary under all the circumstances of the case.”

By section 88. “The said special and general district rates shall be made and levied upon the are sufficiently described in the judgment of the Court, and provided for the repeal of sections 74, 76. to 85. inclusive, all of the local act.

By the Public Health Supplemental Act, 1851, (No. 3.) it was enacted that the provisional order should, from and after the passing of that act, so far as such order was authorized by the Public Health Act, 1848, be absolute, and be as binding and of the like force and effect as if the provisions of the same had been expressly enacted in the supplemental act.

The question for the opinion of the Court was, whether the appellants could legally be rated or assessed to rates or assessments imposed by the respondents under their powers as the local board of health for Tynemouth, in respect of so much of their lands as were used only as a railway, exclusive of stations, dwelling-houses, warehouses, sheds and the other adjuncts of a railway, as distinguished from the railway itself, otherwise than in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the full net annual value thereof, so ascertained as aforesaid.

Manisty (Raymond with him), for the respondents, contended that as the rating powers of the local act made no distinction between railway and other property the provisional order might legally dispense with the reduced scale of rating prescribed occupier (except in the cases hereinafter provided) of all such kinds of property as by the laws in force for the time being are or may be assessable to any rate for the relief of the poor, and shall be assessed upon the full net annual value of such property ascertained by the rate (if any) for the relief of the poor made next before the making of the respective assessments under this act. . . . Provided also, that the occupier of any land used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands, market gardens, or nursery grounds, and the occupier of any land covered with water, or used only as a canal, or towing-path for the same, or as a railway, constructed under the powers of any act of parliament, for public conveyance, shall be assessed in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of such net annual value thereof."

By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98. ss. 55, 88. of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. are repealed, but the privilege in the mode of rating railway property is re-enacted.

by the Public Health Act. That this was the case was evident from the fact that the respondents might if they pleased have adopted the act excluding the whole of section 88. and retaining unimpaired the rating powers of the local act. They cited Clayton v. Fenwick (2).

Kemplay (Mellish with him) for the respondents, contended that a provisional order could not be made incorporating the Public Health Act in this partial manner. That the words "or any part thereof" in section 10. of the Public Health Act could not mean any part of any section, but must be held to mean that in case any of the provisions of the act were not applicable to a particular place, then the board might by their order extend to that place those provisions only which were applicable to the particular district.

Cour. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court (3) was delivered on the 3rd of July, by

LUSH, J. — The rate appealed against is assessed upon the full annual value of such part of the appellants' railway as lies in the township of Tynemouth, and upon two-thirds of the annual value of that part which lies in the township of Chirton (including in each case the stations, dwelling-houses, warehouses, sheds, and the other adjuncts of a railway), and the appellants contend that they are entitled to the benefit of the proviso to section 88. of the General Health Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), and to have so much of their road as consists merely of the railway assessed in one-fourth of the annual value notwithstanding that the provisional order declares that such proviso shall not apply to the borough of Tynemouth. The contention is that that part of the order is ultra vires. It is hardly necessary to say that if this part of the order be beyond the powers of the General Board of Health, it is not rendered valid by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 103, inasmuch as that statute only confirms the provisional order so far as it is authorized by the Public Health Act.

Before proceeding to consider the terms of the Public Health Act, which confer the authority on the board to make provisional orders, it is desirable to bring clearly to view the alterations which the provisional order proposes to effect. By section 74. of the local act (9 Geo. 4. c. xxxvii.), which, as appears from the third paragraph of the case, extended over the township of North Shields and part of each of the townships of Tynemouth, Chirton and Preston, the occupiers of all lands, &c. in North Shields, of all detached houses not in a street, and all gardens and lands for husbandry throughout the district, were liable to be assessed to an annual rate in any sum not exceeding 1s. 4d. in the pound, and the occupiers of all property other than the above (except schools, &c.), in any sum not exceeding 2s. in the pound. There is nothing in the act which required that the several properties should be rated in the proportions above indicated. It was only in the event of maximum rates being imposed that the property in North Shields, detached houses, gardens, &c., had any preference. Up to that point each might have been assessed at its full annual value.

The appellant railway, not being in North Shields, was, up to the passing of the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 103, rated at its full value. The provisional order (section 5.) repeals section 74. of the local act altogether, and this was clearly within the power of the board—11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. s. 10. and Turner v. the Mayor of Halifax (4). It also enlarged the area of the local act, and extended its unrepealed provisions over the whole municipal borough of Tynemouth, and this also was within the competence of the board. This is the extent to which it repeals, alters and extends the local act so far as concerns the question before us. And if it had then done no more than “apply” section 88. of the general act, the consequence would have been that the stations, dwelling houses, &c. would have been separately rateable at their full annual value; but the line of railway, with the sidings, turn-tables and so much of the platform as was to be considered as the side of the railway—see The South Wales Railway Company v. the Swansea Local Board of Health (5)—would have been rateable at only one-fourth of such value. But the order, while it “applies” section 88. to the borough, excepts so much of that section as thus favours railway and canal property; and by section 14. orders that “all houses, buildings, yards, gardens, lands, tenements and hereditaments in the township of North Shields, and all detached houses not forming part of a street, and all lands occupied solely by gardens or for the purpose of husbandry, shall be rated and assessed only upon two-thirds of the full net annual value, and re-enacts the exemption of charity and other lands which was contained in the local act, thus subjecting those parts of the line of railway which are not in the township of North Shields to a rating at full value, contrary to the terms of section 88. of the general act.

The authority of the board of health is given by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. s. 10, and it is in these terms: “If after such inquiry it shall appear to the said general board that this act or any part thereof should be ‘put in force’ within any city, town, borough or place in which any local act is in force, they shall make a provisional order accordingly, with such provisions, regulations, conditions and restrictions with respect to the application and execution of this act, or any part thereof, and with respect to such local act, and the repeal, alteration, extension or future execution of the same, and in all respects whatsoever as they may think necessary under all the circumstances of the case.” Is such a severing of the 88th section justified as a “putting in force,” or to use the term which is employed in the earlier part of the section as denoting the same thing, as “applying” a part of the act to this borough? We think not. Section 88. fixes the proportion in which certain descriptions of property shall contribute towards the expenses of the sanitary measures contemplated by the act, and, it must be supposed, according to the amount of benefit to be derived from these measures; and although the stipulation in favour of railways, canals, &c. is put in the form of a proviso, it is in substance an exception. The section says, in effect, “The occupiers of all property except canals, railways, arable, meadow and pasture ground, &c. shall be rated at full value, and the excepted properties at one-fourth of such value." To say that the excepted properties shall be rated at full value or at two-thirds their value is not to "apply" or "put in force" the act, or any part of the act, but to make a new and substantially different enactment, materially altering the rights of parties in the district to which the act is applied. It appears to us that the board have no more power to make this alteration in the act than they have to order that rates which the act says shall be paid by the occupier, shall not be paid by the occupier but by the owner. Is it then warranted by the general words which follow? What these words were intended to include is not clear. As observed by Mr. Justice Coleridge, in Clayton v. Fenwick (2), "they are so general that they must receive some limitation." Whatever they may have been intended to mean, it seems obvious that they did not mean to give such a power as this, for while the word "alteration" is inserted with reference to dealing with the local act, no such word is found with reference to the general act.

It was contended in the argument that the order construed as a whole amounted to no more in effect than the perpetuating section 74, and preserving the rights given by that section. We cannot accede to this view. If section 74. remained in force, no more than 2s. in the pound could have been assessed in one year on so much of the railway as lies within the area of that act, and for aught we know, the rates under the order may exceed this amount. Upon the different effect of the two sections, the 74th of the act and the 14th of the order, we have already observed. But even this argument applies only to North Shields. The substantial objection remains, that the properties beyond that limit which, by the general act are assessed at one-fourth, are by the order rateable at full value. For these reasons we are of opinion that the rates are bad, and must be amended.

ALE AND BEER HOUSE—licence to sell beer "not to be consumed on the premises": handing beer to customer through a window—An information was preferred against a licensed seller of beer by retail, not to be drunk on the premises, for selling beer on his premises contrary to the statutes 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 4. and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 13. It appeared that a constable tapped at a window of defendant's premises, which were about three yards from the highway, and upon its being opened by the man in charge of the house, asked him for a pint of beer. The beer was handed in a mug to the constable, who drank part of it, standing as close to the window as he could, and the remainder while sitting on the window-sill. The window was open all the time and the attendant present:—Held, that there was not sufficient evidence to justify the Magistrates in convicting the defendant. Deal v. Schofield, 15

ARREST—Unlawful apprehension. See Wounding.

BASTARDY—service of summons at last place of abode—On the 3rd of October E. F. applied for and obtained a summons against D, as the father of a bastard child of which she was then pregnant, and which was born on the 29th. On the 4th, the summons was left at a house in which D. had lived up to the 1st, upon which day he went away to go to America. He sailed on the 14th, and did not hear anything of the proceedings till about two months after arriving in America. On the 6th of December E. F. appeared in support of the summons, and, after hearing the case, the Justices made an order adjudicating D. to be the father of the child, and ordering him to pay money for its maintenance. The order recited that it was proved that the summons had been duly served, the same having been left at the last place of abode. D. having returned to England, the order was brought up by certiorari for the purpose of being quashed:—Held, that this Court could not interfere, there being nothing to shew that the order was illegal, although D. had not had any opportunity of objecting to its being made. R. v. Damarell, 21

— See Perjury.

BETTING HOUSES—construction of Act for Suppression of: what is an "office or place"—Upon a slip of land adjoining a race course, during the races, there was erected a temporary wooden structure, four feet high, without a roof. Over it a board was exhibited upon which was the name of the proprietor and betting lists containing the odds upon and against each horse which he was willing to bet. The structure had two frontages, and boards used as deaks fronting each way. At each deak a man sat with a book for the purpose of recording the bets made with persons outside. Persons betting deposited money and received a card containing the terms of the bet:—Held, that this was an "office or place" within the meaning of the Act for the Suppression of Betting Houses. Shaw v. Morley, 105

BOROUGH FUND. See Penalties.

BURIAL-GROUND—right to plant flowers on the graves—A burial board established under the Metropolitan Interment Acts granted to A. R. the right of making a private grave, and the exclusive right of burial therein, in a certain part of their cemetery, to hold the same in perpetuity for the purpose of burial and of erecting thereon a monument, with a proviso that if the monument with its appurtenances should not from time to time be kept in repair by the owner according to such rules, orders and regulations as had been or should be from time to time made by the burial board for the management and regulation of the cemetery and the vaults, graves and monuments therein, the grant should be void. A. R. buried her husband in this part of the cemetery, erected a headstone and surrounded the grave with a curbstone. The board afterwards made a regulation that no person should be allowed to plant flowers, &c. on the graves, but that they themselves should alone do it at certain prices which they fixed, and they prevented A. R. from planting the said grave with flowers:—Held, that they had no right to prevent A. R. from so planting the said grave. Ashby v. Harris, 164

By-Law—dwelling-house not to be erected without a back street or roadway: Local Government Act [—A local board of health, purporting to act under the Local Government Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98. s. 34),—which enables local boards to make by-laws with respect to the level, width and construction of new streets, with provisions for the sewerage thereof, and with respect to the drainage of buildings, to water-closets, privies, ashpits and cesspools in connexion with buildings,—made a by-law as follows: "No dwelling-house shall be hereafter erected, without having at the rear or side thereof a good and sufficient back street or roadway, at least twelve feet wide, communicating with some adjoining public street or highway, in such situation as shall be approved by the local board for the purpose of affording efficient means of access to the privy or ashpit belonging to such house; and every plan which shall be left at the office of the local board, in pursuance of the 64th by-law, shall show the position, width and direction of such roadway as intended to be made, and its mode of communication with adjoining streets or highways: provided always, that it shall be lawful for the local board, at their discretion, in special cases, to modify the requirement hereinbefore contained, and to dispense with strict compliance with the terms of this by-law on such conditions as they may deem fit and reasonable":—Held, that the by-law was unreasonable, and could not be enforced by the board, as it imposed a general and unnecessary restriction upon the building of all houses, instead of being limited to the particular nuisances which it was the object of the statute to prevent. Waite v. the Garton Local Board of Health, 19

COLLIERY—space in which ventilation is necessary [—By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 151. s. 10, rules 1 and 2,—which direct that "an adequate amount of ventilation shall be constantly produced in all coal-mines or collieries and ironstone-mines, to dilute and render harmless noxious gases, to such an extent that the working-places of the pits, levels and workings of every such colliery and mine, and the travelling-roads to and from such working-places, shall, under ordinary circumstances, be in a fit state for working and passing therein, and that all entrances to any place not in actual course of working and extension, and suspected to contain dangerous gas of any kind, shall be properly fenced off so as to prevent access thereto,—it is meant, not only that the working-places and travelling-roads of the mine should be kept ventilated, but that all parts of the mine should be ventilated so as to render the working-places and travelling-roads safe. Brough v. Homfray, 177

In a colliery subject to the above rules there was a heading, the top or fore-end of which had not been worked for eighteen months; while this part of the heading was being put in repair, it became filled with explosive gas, in consequence of one of the workmen removing a door so as to disturb the ventilation. Danger signals were at once put up, so as to prevent access to that part of the heading filled with gas, and there was no intention to resume operations on it until it had been ventilated; but the door was not immediately replaced, from a fear that this would be dangerous while the men were in the pit. Three days afterwards, and before the ventilation was restored, an explosion took place in the end of the heading:—Held, that this part of the heading was a "working-place" within the meaning of the statute, so that there had been a breach of the rule requiring ventilation to be maintained, Ibid.

CONFESSION. See Evidence.

COSTS—of prosecution of indictment for non-repair of highway. See Highway.

EMBEZZLEMENT—indictment for embezzling money not supported by proof of embezzlement of a cheque [—An indictment for embezzlement alleged the property embezzled to be money. The proof was that the prisoner had received a cheque, but no evidence was given that the cheque had ever been presented or cashed, nor did it appear that the maker had an account or balance at the bank on which it was drawn, but it was proved that he had received no notice of its dishonour:—Held, (Pigott, B. hesitante) that in the absence of any proof that the cheque had been converted into money, the allegation in the indictment was not sustained, and a conviction upon such indictment must be quashed. R. v. Keena, 43

EVIDENCE—admissibility of confession: inducement or threat [—One of a firm who employed the prisoner, having called him up into the private counting-house of the firm, in the presence of another of the firm and two officers of police, said, "I think it is right that I should tell you that, besides being in the presence of my brother and myself, you are in the presence of two officers of the police; and I should advise you that to any question that may be put to you you will answer truthfully, so that if you have committed a fault you may not add to it by stating what is untrue;" and having shewn a letter to him, which he denied to have written, added, "Take care; we know more than you think we know." The prisoner thereupon made a confession:—Held, that these words did not import an inducement or threat; and that evidence of the confession was admissible. R. v. Jarvis, 1

FACTORY—accident preventing the person injured from returning to work: notice by occupier—By the Factories Act (7 Vict. c. 15), s. 22, "If any accident shall occur in a factory which shall cause any bodily injury to any person employed therein, which shall have been of such a nature as to prevent the person so injured from returning to his work in the factory before nine of the clock of the following morning, the occupier of the factory, or in his absence his principal agent, shall within twenty-four hours of such absence send a notice thereof in writing to the surgeon appointed to grant certificates of age for the district in which the factory is situated," &c. A girl employed in a factory was tripped up by a rope placed in her way as a practical joke, and falling against some machinery not in motion, sprained her arm. She returned to the factory before nine o'clock on the following morning, having arranged that her mother should take her place as soon as possible, and came away after attempting to work for about an hour, using her knee and mouth instead of her injured arm:—Held, first, that the accident was one of which the occupier was bound to give notice according to the section above stated; secondly, that the girl was prevented from returning to her work within the meaning of the section, as it is necessary, in order to excuse the occupier from giving notice, that the person injured should return, not merely with the intention, but with the ability to resume work. Lakeman v. Stephenson, 57

FALSE PRETENCES—passing as good the note of a bank which had become bankrupt—An indictment charged the prisoner with obtaining money by falsely pretending that a five pound bank note was of the value of 5*l*. It appeared in evidence that the note was a five pound note of a bank which had been made bankrupt forty years before, and had not re-opened, and the prisoner knew this when he passed it. The bankruptcy proceedings were not produced, and there was no evidence as to what dividend, if any, had been paid:—Held, that the evidence was sufficient to justify the conviction of the prisoner. R. v. Dowey, 52

— See Larceny—R. v. M'Kale.

FISHERY. See Salmon Fishery Act.

FORGERY—engraving part of a bank note of a Scotch bank—To engrave upon a plate part of a note purporting to be a note of a Scotch banking company, is an offence within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 16, and such effect of the section is not prevented by section 55, which provides that nothing in the act contained shall extend to Scotland. R. v. Brackenridge, 86

GAMING—"Office or place." See Betting Houses.

HIGHWAY—conviction for driving on a footpath not by the side of a highway—Under the 72nd section of the General Highway Act, "If any person shall wilfully ride upon any footpath or causeway by the side of any road made or set apart for the use or accommodation of foot-passengers, or shall wilfully lead or drive any horse, ass, sheep, mule, swine or cattle, or carriage of any description, or any truck or sledge upon any such footpath or causeway," he shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40*s*. over and above the damages occasioned thereby:—Held, that this enactment does not apply to the case of a footpath simpliciter, but only to such a footpath as is by the side of a road made, &c. R. v. Pratt, 23 — indictment for non-repair: costs of prosecution: certiorari—Where an indictment for non-repair of a highway has been preferred by order of Justices under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 95, and has been removed by certiorari into the Court of Queen's Bench at the instance of defendants, the Judge who tries the indictment has no power, under that section, to direct that the costs of the prosecution shall be paid out of the rate. The costs in such a case are provided for by 5 W. & M. c. 11. The Queen v. Eardisland dissented from. R. v. Inhabitants of Ipton, 37

— animals lying about—By section 25. of the Highway Act, 1864, if any horse, mare or sheep is at any time found lying about a highway, the owner shall be liable to a penalty:—Held, that this liability may be incurred if sheep are allowed to lie about a highway, although they were under the control of a keeper at the time they were so found lying about. Lawrence v. King, 78

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES—warrant of distress for local rates: limitation of six months under Jervis's Act: power to state a case—A local act provided that if any person rated under its powers should for ten days after demand neglect to pay the rate, it should be lawful for any Justice of the Peace of the borough, by warrant under his hand and seal, to authorize the collector to levy the rate by distress and sale:—Held, that the issuing of a warrant under this act was not within the limitation of Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 48), s. 11, which enacts that, in the absence of special limitation, complaints under the act are to be made within six months from the time when the matter of complaint arose. Sweetman v. Guest, 59 of distress as above mentioned, the Justices may state a case for the opinion of the Court under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43. s. 2. Ibid.

— jurisdiction over offence committed out of Great Britain by officer of the government: power to bind over prosecutor and witnesses to appear in the Queen's Bench: court of oyer and terminer—By 11 & 12 Will. 3. c. 12. and 42 Geo. 3. c. 85, offences committed out of Great Britain by governors of colonies and officers of the government under colour of, or in exercise of, their offices, may be prosecuted or inquired of, heard and determined in Her Majesty's Court of Queen's Bench here in England, either upon information or indictment, and the offence may be laid to have been committed in Middlesex:—Held, that the power conferred upon Justices by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 2, 17, 20, of binding over the prosecutor and witnesses to prosecute or give evidence against any person charged with an indictable offence, committed on land beyond the sea, at the next court of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or superior court of a county palatine, or court of General or Quarter Sessions of the Peace, extends to cases where the offence is one of those specified in 42 Geo. 3. c. 85, and that the description "court of oyer and terminer," in 11 & 12 Vict. c. 82. s. 20, applies to the Court of Queen's Bench. R. v. Eyre, 159

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE. See Jurisdiction of Justices.

LARCENY—jurisdiction to try: constructive possession: receiving stolen property: aiding and abetting—A chattel was stolen in L, out of the county of M, and was consigned thence as a parcel by the thief in the ordinary course through a railway company, and was delivered by them to the receiver in the county of M. for the purpose of being sold and disposed of by him there, and there was no evidence of any possession by the thief in the county of M, unless either the possession by the railway company or of the receiver could be deemed his possession:—Held, that the thief retained control over the article in M, and was therefore in possession of it in M, and was liable to be tried in M. under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 114. R. v. Rogers, 83

Two prisoners were convicted under a count charging them with receiving goods knowing them to have been stolen, upon proof that they were present aiding and abetting a third receiver who was found in actual possession of the box containing the goods, but the two former never had manual possession of the box:—Held, that the conviction was right. Ibid.

— or obtaining money by false pretences: inchoate transaction—A. and B. went into a shop, and A. bought a pennyworth of sweets, and gave a florin in payment. The prosecutrix put the florin into the till and took out of the till one shilling and sixpence in silver, and fivepence in copper, and put the change on the counter. A. took up the change. B. said to A. that he need not have changed, and threw down a penny. A. took up the penny and then put down sixpence in silver and sixpence in copper, and asked the prosecutrix to give him a shilling in change. She took a shilling from the till and put it on the counter beside the sixpence in silver and sixpence in copper. A. then said to the prosecutrix that she might as well give him the florin and take it all. She took the florin from the till and put it on the counter, expecting she was to receive two shillings of the prisoner's money. The prisoner went away with the florin. The prosecutrix did not discover her mistake till she was putting the change into the till, but at the same moment B. distracted her attention by asking the price of some sweets:—Held, that the transaction was inchoate when the prosecutrix discovered her mistake, and that she never intended finally to part with her property in the florin till she received two shillings of the prisoner's money, and that the offence was larceny, and not obtaining money by false pretences, and that the conviction was right. R. v. M'Kale, 97

— finding lost property: no reasonable means of knowing the owner—The finder of a lost sovereign in the high road who, at the time of the finding, had no reasonable means of knowing who the owner was, but who at that time intended to appropriate it even if the owner should afterwards become known, and to whom the next day the owner was made known, when he refused to give it up, was held not guilty of larceny upon the authority of The Queen v. Thurborn. R. v. Glyde, 107

LIMITATION OF TIME. See Jurisdiction of Justices. Merchant Shipping Act.

LOCAL ACT—liability to expenses of paving street: owner of ground adjoining street: cul-de-sac—By a local act the liability to pave and sewer any street within the borough was cast upon the "owners of houses and ground lying alongside or adjoining to the said street," and in case of neglect power was given to the borough council to sewer and pave the street, and to charge the owners with their proportionate parts of the expenses thereof, according to the extent of their respective houses and grounds lying alongside or adjoining to the said street:—Held, that an owner of ground at the end of a street which was a cul-de-sac, and which ground was only separated from such street by a wall, the property of such owner, is the owner of ground adjoining to the said street within the meaning of the act, and therefore liable to contribute his proportionate part of the expense of sewerage and paving such street. The Mayor, Aldermen and Citizens of the City of Manchester, v. Chapman, 173

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT. See By-Law.

LUNACY—meaning of "unsound mind"—By the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100. s. 90, "every person who shall receive into an unlicensed house, not being a registered hospital nor an asylum, or take the care or charge of any person therein as a lunatic," without having such order and medical certificates as are mentioned in the section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. By section 114, "lunatic" is to mean every insane person and every person being an idiot or lunatic, or of unsound mind:—Held, that imbecility arising from natural causes, such as intemperance, or from the natural decay of the faculties through old age, would constitute the patient so affected a person of unsound mind within that section. R. v. Shaw, 112

— See Pauper Lunatic.

LUNATIC PRISONER—order of Secretary of State: removal to asylum: cost of maintenance: retrospective order: time for making order—H. L. was convicted of felony at the Lent Assizes for Wilts, 1864, and was sentenced to be imprisoned in the gaol at D. for twelve calendar months. While undergoing his sentence he became insane, in June, 1864, and was removed by an order of a Secretary of State to a lunatic asylum, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 54. On the 28th of March, 1867, two Justices of the county of Wilts, sitting in the borough of D, adjudicated the place of the last legal settlement of H. L. to be in the parish of B. in the union of B, and they ordered the guardians of the union to pay to the keeper of the gaol 5*l.* 15*s.* 3*d.*, for the reasonable charges of inquiring into the settlement, and of conveying him to the asylum, and to pay to the keeper of the asylum 11*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*, for the costs of maintenance from the 23rd of June, 1864, to the 25th of March, 1867, and the weekly sums which should from time to time be ordered for his maintenance:—Held, first, per totam Curiam, that the order was not bad by reason of its having been made after the expiration of the term of the sentence. Secondly, that the county Justices had jurisdiction to make it, although they were sitting in the borough which possessed an exclusive jurisdiction. Thirdly, Blackburn, J. dubitante, that the order was bad as to the 11*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*, on the ground that it was retrospective. Held, per Mellor, J., that it was not bad simply because it was retrospective, but because the keeper of the asylum ought to have applied for it in a more reasonable time, and that, after so great a lapse of time, the Justices ought not to have made it. Guardians of Bradford Union v. the Clerk of the Peace for Wilts, 129

MALICIOUS INJURY—*cutting trees with intent to steal: injury done exceeding in amount 5*l.—Upon an indictment for cutting eight trees with intent to steal, whereby an amount of injury was done to them exceeding 5*l.*, framed upon the latter part of section 32. of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, proof that the aggregate value of a number of trees cut at one time exceeded the amount of 5*l.* will satisfy the indictment, though no one tree was of the value of 5*l.* R. v. Shepherd, 45

s. 40, the prisoner was convicted upon evidence which shewed that the gelding had suffered a laceration of the roots of the tongue, which protruded, and a tearing of the mouth, which injuries might have been caused by a pull of the tongue by the hand; but there was no evidence to shew that any other instrument than the hand had been used:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence of a wounding; and the conviction was affirmed. R. v. Bullock, 47

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT—attempting to persuade a seaman not to join his ship: limitation of time for prosecution—The 267th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, makes it an offence to persuade or attempt to persuade a seaman to neglect to join his ship; and the 525th section, which limits the time for instituting proceedings, enacts, that "no conviction for any offence shall be made under this act in any summary proceeding instituted in the United Kingdom, unless such proceeding is commenced within six months after the commission of the offence; or if both or either of the parties to such proceeding happen during such time to be out of the United Kingdom, unless the same is commenced within two months after they both first happen to arrive, or to be at one time within the same":—Held, that if both parties, the seaman and the offender, remain in the United Kingdom, the proceeding against the offender must be commenced within six months after the commission of the offence; but that if one of them goes away within six months after the offence is committed, and afterwards returns, so that he and the other are in the United Kingdom at one time, a further period of two months is allowed within which the proceedings may be commenced. Austin v. Olsen, 84

Held, also, that the offence may have been committed although there was an informality in the engagement entered into by the seaman. Ibid.

METROPOLIS MANAGEMENT ACTS—laying out road for building: width of street—Respondent was owner of land lying between roads A. and B; he built houses along road A. with back gardens running down to road B, and he then took down the old fence of road B, and placed an oak fence with gates 3 feet back on his land:—Held, that he could not be compelled, under 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102. s. 98, to put back his fence to 20 feet from the centre of road B. The Metropolitan Board of Works v. Clever, 126

— non-rateability of church to expenses of paving new street—A church, together with the land appurtenant to it, is not rateable either as a house or land to the expenses of paving a new street, under the powers of the Metropolitan Management Acts, 18 & 19 Vic. c. 120. s. 105, and 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102. s. 77. Angell v. the Vestry of Paddington, 171

MISDEMEANOR—publication of obscene book with intent to expose errors of a religious sect: misdemeanor "proper to be prosecuted as such" under Lord Campbell's Act, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83—A society of persons called "The Protestant Electoral Union,"—whose objects were stated to be (amongst others) "to protest against those teachings and practices of the Romanist and Puseyite systems which are un-English, immoral and blasphemous," to "maintain the Protestantism of the Bible and the liberty of England," and "to promote the return to parliament of men who will assist them in these objects; and particularly will expose and defeat the deep-laid machinations of the Jesuits, and resist grants of public money for Romish purposes"—exposed for sale at their office a pamphlet entitled 'The Confessional Unmasked, shewing the depravity of the Romish priesthood, the iniquity of the confessional, and the questions put to females in confession.' This pamphlet consisted of extracts from the works of theologians on the doctrines and discipline of the Church of Rome, and particularly on the practice of auricular confession. On one side of the page were printed passages in the original Latin, correctly extracted from the works of these writers, and opposite each extract was placed a free translation of it into English. The pamphlet also contained a preface and notes, and comments condemnatory of the tenets and principles of the authors of the works from which the extracts were made. About one-half of the pamphlet related to casuistical and controversial questions which were not obscene, but the remainder of the pamphlet was obscene, relating to impure and filthy acts, words and ideas. A member of the society kept and sold these pamphlets with the purpose of promoting the objects of the society, and exposing what he deemed to be errors of the Church of Rome. Two Magistrates, purporting to act under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, ordered a number of these pamphlets while in his possession to be seized and destroyed:—Held, that, notwithstanding the object of the defendant was not to injure public morals, but to attack the religion and practice of the Roman Catholic Church, this did not justify his act nor prevent it from being a misdemeanor proper to be prosecuted, as the inevitable effect of the publication must be to injure public morality; and although he might have had another object in view, he must be taken to have intended what was the natural consequence of his act, and had therefore been guilty of an offence within the meaning of the statute. R. v. Hicklin, 89

NUISANCE—Nuisances Removal Act: order for abatement: nuisance caused by one landowner but arising on the premises of another: "person by whose act": tenants—By the Nuisances Removal Act (18 & 19 Vict. c. 121), s. 12, in any case where a nuisance (a term which includes ditches and drains injurious to health) is ascertained by the local authority to exist, they shall cause complaint thereof to be made before a Justice of the Peace, and the Justice shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance arises or is continued, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises to appear before any two Justices, who shall proceed to inquire into the complaint, and if it be proved to their satisfaction that the nuisance exists, shall make an order on such person, owner or occupier, for the abatement, discontinuance and prohibition of the nuisance. By section 13. the Justice may require the person upon whom the order is made to drain, empty, cleanse, fill up, amend or remove the injurious ditch, drain, &c. The occupiers of a brewery had for upwards of twenty years discharged the refuse from it into a barrel drain, which, after passing along a turnpike-road, entered land belonging to another proprietor. The proprietor of this land did not get rid of the refuse as his predecessors had done, and it became after it had reached his land a nuisance:—Held, that the occupier of the brewery was a person by whose act, default, permission or sufferance the nuisance was caused, and that an order of Justices directing him to abate the nuisance by cutting off all communication between the drains of his premises and the barrel drain was valid. Broton v. Bussell and Francomb v. Freeman, 65

The defendant, having obtained the necessary consent, made a drain leading from his own premises through adjoining land. This drain, which received the refuse from several houses and pigsties belonging to the defendant, and let to yearly tenants, polluted the water of neighbouring streams, and became a nuisance:—Held, that the defendant must be taken to be a person by whose act, &c., the nuisance was caused, and might be ordered to abate and discontinue the nuisance. Ibid.

OBSCENE BOOK. See Misdemeanor.

PARENT AND CHILD—indictment for neglect to provide food: averment of means—An indictment for neglecting to provide sufficient food and sustenance for a child of tender years, whereby the child became ill and enfeebled, averred that it was the duty of the prisoner to provide for, give and administer to the said child wholesome and sufficient meat, drink and clothing for the sustenance, &c. of the said child, and that he unlawfully, and contrary to his said duty in that behalf, did omit, neglect and refuse to provide for, &c., the child:—Held, by the majority of the Court, that the indictment sufficiently alleged the breach of duty, and that the prisoner had the ability to provide, but omitted to exercise it. R. v. Ryland, 10

PAUPER LUNATIC—appeal against order of adjudication of settlement and maintenance: party to appeal—By an order of Justices, dated the 29th of September, 1865, the last legal settlement of a pauper lunatic was adjudged to be in the parish of A, in the union of F, and the guardians of F. were ordered to pay certain costs of maintenance to the guardians of the Medway Union, who had obtained the order, and certain other costs to the treasurer of the asylum in which the lunatic was confined:—

Held, that the overseers of A. had, by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 108, a right to appeal against the order, and that there was nothing in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. to deprive them of such right. R. v. the Guardians of the Medway Union, 100

PAVING ACT. See Local Act.

PENALTIES—payment to treasurer of county or borough: borough without a separate Court of Quarter Sessions—By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 31, the amount of any penalty ordered to be paid by Justices according to the act is to be paid, in the absence of specific directions in the statute on which the information shall have been framed, to the treasurer of the county, riding, division, liberty, city, borough or place for which the Justices shall have acted. A borough formed part of the petty sessional division of the county in which it was situated, but had no separate Court of Quarter Sessions, the Justices for the county acting as Justices for the borough, concurrently with the mayor, according to the Municipal Corporation Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 57, and there was a treasurer of the borough:—Held, that the mayor, while acting as a Justice for the borough, was in the nature of a Justice for the county with powers limited to a special locality, and that penalties imposed by the borough Justices must, in the absence of directions in the penal statute, be paid to the county treasurer. The Mayor, &c. of Reigate v. Hunt, 70

PERJURY—secondary evidence of written document without notice to produce: indictment not notice—Upon an indictment for perjury in falsely swearing on a former trial that there was no draft of a statutory declaration, the materiality of the existence of such draft turned upon its contents and the fact of certain alterations having been made in it. Parol evidence was admitted, not only of the fact of the existence of the draft, but of its contents and of alterations made in it which were not in the declaration itself, without any notice to produce the draft having been given to the prisoner:—Held, that such parol evidence of the draft and its contents was inadmissible, and that the nature of the indictment was not such as of itself to operate as a notice to produce, and the conviction upon such indictment was quashed. R. v. Elworthy, 3

—evidence of proceedings before Justices on bastardy summons: information proved, but not summons—Upon an indictment for perjury committed at the hearing of an information in bastardy, which indictment alleged the application for a summons, the issuing thereof and the hearing upon it, proof of the information, of the appearance of the defendant, of the hearing, of evidence being given on both sides, and of no objection being made of the want of a summons, is sufficient to shew jurisdiction in the Justices who heard the information, without proof of the summons which issued upon that information; and a conviction for perjury upon the above indictment was upheld. R. v. Smith, 6

—evidence: materiality of statement on which perjury assigned—Upon an indictment for robbery committed on the 12th of April, between eight and ten o'clock at night, a witness for the prisoner swore, not only that the prisoner was at home at that time, but in answer to the Judge said, that the prisoner had lived in the same house for the two years previous, and that during the whole of that time he had not been absent from the same house for more than three nights together. The last two statements were proved to be false, as the prisoner, for a whole year of the period spoken to, had been in prison:—Held, that the evidence so last given was material to the inquiry, and the proper subject of assignments of perjury, inasmuch as those latter statements tended to render more probable the previous statement made, that the prisoner was at home on the night of the 18th of April. R. v. Tyson, 7

—description of Justices: variance: amendment: informal complaint before Justices: jurisdiction—Perjury was assigned to have been committed on the hearing of a complaint for trespass in pursuit of game alleged to have been committed in a close in the parish of T, in the borough of T, before certain Justices assigned to keep the peace in and for the county, and acting in and for the borough of T. in the said county. It appeared in evidence that the Justices were Justices for the borough of T. only, and were not Justices for the county. The indictment was amended at the trial by striking out the words "the said county," so as to make the averment be that they were Justices assigned to keep the peace in and for, and acting in and for, the borough of T. in the said county. The complaint alleged that the defendant was in the close for the purpose of destroying game, but omitted to allege that it was for the purpose of destroying game there:—Held, that the amendment was properly made as a variance in the description of a person described in the indictment under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 1, and that the complaint was sufficient in form to give the Justices jurisdiction to inquire into it, so as to make false evidence wilfully given on the hearing the subject of an assignment of perjury. R. v. Western, 81

POOR-RATE—exemption: rateability of Assize Courts beneficially occupied—By act of parliament the Justices of the county of L. were empowered to provide courts, Judges' lodgings, offices, &c., necessary and convenient for carrying on the civil and criminal business usually transacted at Courts of Assize. They were further empowered to permit the use of the buildings for any lawful purpose for such consideration as they might think proper, but so as not to interfere with the use of such buildings and premises for the purposes primarily contemplated. They did allow the corporation of M. to use part of the buildings for the city Quarter Sessions, and for the city Court of Record, and they received 900*l.* a year in respect of such use. This sum of 900*l.*, together with all sums received for the use of the buildings, was insufficient to defray the average annual expenses of maintenance and management:—Held, that the Justices were rateable to the poor-rate in respect to the part so let off to the corporation. The Justices of Lancashire v. the Overseers of Chetnam, 12

— exemption: Commissioners of Works and Public Buildings incorporated for constructing public local works: servants of the Crown: beneficial occupation—The Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods and Forests were, by act of parliament, incorporated for the purpose of making a bridge over the Thames, which had been recommended by the Commissioners for Improving the Metropolis, and the plans of which had been approved of by the Commissioners of the Treasury. Power was given to obtain an advance of money from the Consolidated Fund, such advance to be repaid out of the money collected by way of tolls which the corporation were authorized to take by means of toll-houses and collectors to be established on the bridge. These tolls were to be applied, first, in payment of all expenses of management and collection of the tolls; secondly, in maintaining the bridge; thirdly, in repayment of the money advanced; and the surplus, if any, was to form a fund for such metropolitan improvement as the legislature should determine. By a subsequent act this provision as to the surplus was repealed, and it was provided that when a sum of 80,000*l.* and interest had been paid off no toll should be demanded of foot-passengers. The bridge was built, and vested in the Commissioners, and the tolls taken exceeded the cost of maintaining the bridge. 13,500*l.* of the 80,000*l.* advanced had been repaid, and not more than 2,500*l.* towards the said sum of 13,500*l.* was received from the tolls and proceeds of the bridge. The Commissioners were assessed in a rate for the relief of the poor of the parish in which part of the bridge and of its approaches was situate:—Held, by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, affirming the decision of the Court below (page 25), that they were not liable, the only occupation being by the Crown or by the Commissioners, as servants of the Crown, acting for and on behalf of the Crown. R v. M'Cann, 123

— exemption of corporate property—The exemption created by 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48. s. 1. of the property of municipal corporations from liability to poor-rate, where this property is in a parish wholly within a borough, the poor of which are relieved by one entire rate, is not affected by the decision in Jones v. the Mersey Docks, nor by the Union Chargeability Act, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. R. v. the Mayor, &c. of Oldham, 169

A corporation not included in the Schedules A. and B. of the Municipal Corporation Act, is by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 79. s. 2. entitled to the benefit of the exemption in 4 & 5 Vict. c. 48. s. 1. Ibid.

— occupation of moorings in the River Thames

by owner of coal-hulk—The appellant was the owner of a coal-hulk, built for the purpose of being fastened to moorings, which the Thames Conservators undertook to fix in the bed of the river in order that she should be fastened thereto. The Conservators fixed the moorings permanently, and granted to the appellant "liberty and licence to fasten and henceforth keep fastened his coal-hulk or vessel called the Black Prince to the moorings placed by the said Conservators in the said river at Gravesend Reach, until either party shall have given to the other one calendar month's notice in writing to determine and put an end to this licence. In consideration whereof the said William Watkins agrees with the said Conservators to pay towards the expenses of the said Conservators of placing, maintaining and repairing the said moorings the annual sum of 30*l.*," &c. The appellant fastened his hulk to the moorings by means of chain cables from the stem, so that she would swing with the tide, and she remained so fastened for several years, although she might have been towed to any other part of the river. She was used as a store for coals for steam-ships in the river:—Held, that the appellant had no such occupation of the land or of the moorings as would make him liable to be assessed to the poor-rate. Watkins v. the Assessment Committee of the Gravesend and Milton Union, 73

— rateability of water conveyed by pipes for the purpose of working lead-mines: rateable value—The proprietors of a lead-mine obtained, in consideration of annual payments, the right of diverting a natural spring upon the land of an adjoining proprietor, and of conveying the water over the land of intervening proprietors to iron pipes laid down to near their own mine. This water was required for steam pumping-engines and other machinery used in working the mine:—Held, first, that there was sufficient evidence to shew that the mine owners were so far occupiers of the land covered by the pipes and watercourse as to be rateable in respect of it; secondly, that the rateable value of this land was not its ordinary value for agricultural purposes but the increased value which it had acquired from its use in working the mine, for that, although the mine itself was not rateable, the pipes and watercourse could in no respect be considered as part of it. The King v. the Overseers of Bilston explained. The Talargoch Mining Co. v. the Guardians of St. Asaph Union, 149

— rateability of owner instead of occupiers of lodgings in dwelling-house, under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. s. 7: borough vote—The appellant and five other persons each occupied a room in a six-roomed house in the parish of Sunderland-near-the-Sea, in the parliamentary borough of Sunderland; each had the exclusive possession of his own room, and used in common the street door, &c. The owner occupied no portion of the house. At the time of the passing of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. the owner was rated in respect of the whole house instead of the occupiers, by virtue of the Small Tenements Act (13 & 14 Vict. c. 99), the provisions of which were then in force in the parish; after the passing of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102, the churchwardens and overseers of the parish separately rated the six occupiers:—Held, that the rate was bad, and that the owner (not the occupiers) was rateable, under the exception which is contained in 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102. s. 7, and which provides that "where the dwelling-house or tenement shall be wholly let out in apartments or lodgings not separately rated the owner...shall be rated...to the poor-rate." Stamper v. Churchwardens, &c., of Sunderland, 137

POOR-RATE (continued)—hamlet detached from a township for ecclesiastical purposes, but remaining attached to it for civil purposes—There is no legal objection to the inference that a hamlet or township once extended into two parishes, and that it afterwards became annexed to the one parish for ecclesiastical purposes, and continued to form part of the other parish for civil purposes. R. v. Watson, 153

The hamlet of T. had for a hundred years past, and for anything that appeared to the contrary before that time, been rated to the poor and highway rates of the adjacent township of H, which maintained its own poor and highways separately, and together with another township formed the parish of H. On the other hand, the lands in T, from the earliest period, were titheable to the adjacent parish of K, as being situate in that parish, and the occupiers were rated to and paid church-rates in that parish, and also Easter and other ecclesiastical dues, and never paid tithes, &c. to H:—Held, that there was no ground for disturbing the long-established usage of rating T. to the poor-rates of H, as it was impossible to say that this usage could not have had a legal origin from the tithes having been severed from T. and conferred upon the parish of K, while T. itself was associated with H. as one township for rating purposes according to the act 13 Car. 2. c. 12. Ibid.

PRISON—Enlargement. See Quarter Sessions.

PUBLIC HEALTH ACT—partial adoption of the act: provisional order varying the mode of rating prescribed by the act—The Public Health Act, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. s. 10, which enables the act to be applied to any city, town, borough, parish or place wherein there is no local act for cleansing, watching, &c., otherwise than for the profit of the proprietors and shareholders, and directs that the General Board of Health shall make a provisional order accordingly, with such provisions, regulations, conditions and restrictions with respect to the application and execution of the act or any part thereof, and with respect to any such local act, and the repeal, alteration, extension or future execution of the same, and in all respects whatsoever as they may think necessary, does not authorize the board to make an order applying the Public Health Act, but excepting so much of section 88. as provides that railways, &c. shall be rated upon only one-fourth of their annual value; as the effect of such an order is not to apply the act or any part of it, but to make a new and substantially different enactment, materially altering the rights of parties in the district to which the act is applied. The North-Eastern Rail. Co. v. the Mayor, Aldermen, &c. of Tynemouth, 183

QUARTER SESSIONS—power of adjournment on question of alteration of prison: notice under Prisons Act, 1865—By 28 & 29 Vict. c. 126. s. 24, the consideration of a presentment of the necessity for the alteration or enlargement, or for the rebuilding of an existing prison, or for the building of a new prison, "shall not be entertained by the prison authority, unless not less than three weeks' previous notice has been given in some one or more public newspaper or newspapers circulating within the district of the prison authority, of their intention to take the same into consideration, at a time and place to be mentioned in such notice," &c. In the county of W. presentments had been made that the house of correction and the gaol in the county were insufficient, and that it was necessary that alterations should be made, or that a new gaol should be built for the county. Notice was duly given, as required by the above section, that at the Easter Sessions the presentments would be taken into consideration. That was done, and a committee of Justices was appointed to consider the question, to consult the Government, and to report at the Michaelmas Sessions in the same year. The proceedings were specially adjourned to the Michaelmas Sessions. The committee made their report, and the Justices at the Michaelmas Sessions made an order that the gaol should be altered and adapted, &c.:—Held, that, due notice having been given for the Easter Sessions, and the proceedings having been specially adjourned in order that the committee should consider and make a report, the Justices had jurisdiction to make the order, although no fresh notice had been given that the presentments would be taken into consideration at the Michaelmas Sessions. R. v. the Justices of Westmorland, 115

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS. See Larceny.

SALMON FISHERY ACT—instruments and devices for catching salmon: licence: evidence of intention—The bare use of the instruments and devices for catching salmon enumerated in section 36. of the Salmon Fishery Act, 1865, is sufficient to render an unlicensed person using them liable to the penalty therein mentioned, without evidence that they were used for the purpose of taking salmon. Lyne v. Leonard and Lyne v. Pennell, 55

SEAMAN—Enticing from service. See Merchant Shipping Act.

SERVICE—of summons in bastardy. See Bastardy.

SETTLEMENT BY PAYMENT OF TAXES—payment of property-tax—A pauper gains a settlement in the parish wherein he has been assessed to and paid property-tax, according to 5 & 6 Vict. c. 35, Schedule (A). The Churchwardens of St. George, Hanover Square, v. the Guardians of the Cambridge Union, 17

SPECIAL CONSTABLES—order for payment of expenses out of county rate: special Session of Justices—Under 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 41. (the act for amending the laws relating to the appointment of special constables), which, by section 13, enables the Justices of the Peace acting for the division or limits within which such special constables shall have been called out to serve, at a special session to be held for that purpose, to order the expenses of these constables, if the Justices so ordering are Justices for any county, riding or division, having a separate commission of the peace, to be paid by the county treasurer out of the public money then in his hands,—the order for payment may be made by Justices at a special session in and for a petty sessional division, and need not be made at a special session of Justices acting for the whole county, riding or division within which special constables are appointed. R. v. the Justices for Marylebone, 181

STREET—Paving, &c. See Local Act. Metropolitan Management Acts.

TOLL. See Turnpike.

TURNPIKE—exemption from toll: stores for the use of troops—The exemption from toll in the Turnpike Act, 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32, in favour of carts conveying stores belonging to Her Majesty, or for the use of Her Majesty's forces, applies where stores are being bona fide conveyed for the use of such forces, although at the time of claiming the exemption no property in such stores has passed to the Crown, and there has been no irrevocable appropriation of them for the use of such forces. Toomer v. Reeves, 49

— exemption from toll: curate: parochial duties—The curate of a parish was engaged by the rector of a neighbouring parish of C. to discharge his clerical duties during his temporary absence from illness. There was no licence from the bishop or other authority by which the curate was empowered to perform the duties. He rode through a turnpike-gate on his way to the parish church of C. to perform the ceremony of marriage:—Held, that he was not entitled to the exemption from toll given by 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32. to the curate of a parish on parochial duty within his parish. Brunskill v. Watson, 103

— exemption from toll of clergyman visiting sick parishioner—A clergyman driving out to visit a sick parishioner is exempted by 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 32. from paying toll in respect of his carriage and horse, although accompanied by his wife and family. Layard v. Ovey, 148

TURNPIKE-ROAD—cleansing and scouring water-courses—The duty of cleansing, scouring and keeping open ditches and watercourses for the keeping of turnpike-roads dry, is cast by section 113. of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. (the General Turnpike Act), not upon the occupiers of the adjoining lands, but upon the trustees themselves. Merivale v. the Trustees of the Exeter Turnpike-Roads, 40

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—scales "incorrect or otherwise unjust": adjustment not part of machine—A shopkeeper made use of a pair of scales which had a hollow brass ball hanging upon the weight-end of the beam. These balls were constructed with a neck which could be unscrewed, so as to allow shot to be placed in the interior, and, although hung by a stout brass wire hook upon the beam, were easily removable from it by merely lifting them off. When one of these balls had been removed and replaced, after the shot with which it was partly filled had been removed, it was found that the scale was unjust and against the purchaser:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the Magistrates might reasonably find that these scales were weighing-machines incorrect or otherwise unjust, within the meaning of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 63. s. 28. Carr v. Stringer, 120

— "Person by whose act," 65

— "Unsound mind," 112

WOUNDING—with intent to resist lawful apprehension: fresh pursuit—The prisoner was indicted for wounding W. with intent to resist his lawful apprehension. The prisoner was engaged in a disturbance in the street, when R, a police constable, interfered to prevent it. A struggle ensued between R. and the prisoner. R. retired, and the prisoner went into his father's house, where he lodged, and fastened up the house. After an interval of an hour R. returned with W. and two other constables to the house, which was then fastened and all quiet. The prisoner, from inside the house, refused to admit the constables, who spent ten minutes to a quarter of an hour trying to get in. They then sent for a sergeant of police, and in about another quarter of an hour he came, and they then burst open the door of the house. They found the prisoner on the top of the stairs with a bill-hook in his hand, which he used against the policemen to resist his apprehension, and with which in so doing he wounded W, one of the policemen:—Held, that the apprehension was not, lawful, as the first disturbance was at an end and there was no fear of its renewal; nor was there a fresh pursuit by the constables; and the conviction must be quashed. The Queen v. Walker followed. R. v. Marsden, 80

PROBATE. } In the goods of DAME A. M.

Will — Executor, Substitution—Failing Him.

The deceased by her will appointed as executors A, and failing him, B. By her first codicil she appointed C. in the place of B, and by a second codicil she cancelled the appointment of A, and in his room appointed D. D. declined to act alone, and renounced his right to probate:—Held, that C. was entitled to probate as the substituted executor on the failure of D.

Dame Anna Maria Colquhoun, of Bramblys, Basingstoke, in the county of Southampton, widow, died on the 20th of September, 1867. She duly executed a will and two codicils. The will was dated Thorncroft, Leatherhead, April 6th, 1858, and contained the following clauses relating to her executors: "I appoint as my executors in India, Russell Patinhall Colvin, and failing him Henry Blunt, of the firm of Messrs. Colvin, Cowie & Co. I appoint as my executors in England Bazett David Colvin, and failing him John Cowie, Esq., of the firm of Messrs. Crawford, Colvin & Co." The first codicil was dated Bramblys, Basingstoke, March 8th, 1864, and referred to the executors as follows: "My executors to indemnify themselves for all expenses, Binny Colvin, Esq., being appointed in the place of John Cowie, Esq., deceased; Bazett Wettenhall Colvin, Esq., or failing him, Eliot Colvin, Esq., in India, in place of Henry Blunt, Esq., deceased, and of Russell Colvin, Esq., leaving India." The second codicil was dated Bramblys, Basingstoke, September 2nd, 1867, and commenced, "Cancelling Mr. Bazett David Colvin, senior, office of executorship, and appointing in his room Clement Worsley Colvin, Esq. In India, now that Mr. Bazett David Colvin, junior, has gone to the office, he being on the spot becomes my natural executor for my Indian affairs. Bazett Wettenhall Colvin, Esq., or Eliot Colvin, Esq., therefore to be considered only provisional lest Bazett David Colvin, junior, should fail." It was objected in the registry that the words failing him were equivalent to "in case of his death," and that Mr. Binny Colvin was only appointed in substitution for Mr. Bazett Colvin, and in the one event, namely, that of his death; that as Mr. Bazett Colvin was still alive and his appointment as executor had been cancelled, the claim of Mr. Binny Colvin to act as executor could not be admitted.

Mr. Clement Colvin was willing to act jointly with Mr. Binny Colvin, but declined to act alone, and proposed to sign a renunciation of his right to take probate. It appeared by the affidavit of Mrs. Pitcairn, the sister of Lady Colquhoun, that, on the 31st of August last (two days before the second codicil was executed), the deceased said to her, "I am going to make my nephew Clement one of my executors, as I believe more than one is required. It will be good for him to learn something of business and to have some responsibility; but of course he will be quite second to my brother Binny. Binny will do everything about my affairs, but it will teach Clem. His uncle will make all necessary arrangements, and Clem. will have no charge on himself."

Dr. Middleton moved the Court to grant probate to Messrs. Clement and Binny Colvin as executors named in the will on the suggestion that, from the tenor of the will, coupled with the deceased's declarations before she executed the second codicil, in which Mr. Clement Colvin was appointed executor, it might be determined that the deceased meant to appoint two executors in case one should fail. Or if the Court could not grant it to both, it would to Mr. Binny Colvin alone, (on the renunciation of Mr. Clement Colvin as the substituted executor, in the event which had happened, namely, the refusal of Mr. Clement Colvin to act.—He referred to Swinburne on Wills, pt. 4. s. 19.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—I should have great difficulty in deciding that the testatrix had appointed both these gentlemen executors. That point, however, is not pressed, and I see no reason why Mr. Binny Colvin should not take the grant. The whole result to be deduced from the testamentary papers of the deceased is this, that she has appointed one absolute and one substituted executor. The Court is satisfied that under the circumstances stated in the case the substituted executor is let in. The probate, therefore, may issue to Mr. Binny Colvin on the renunciation of Mr. Clement Colvin being filed in the registry.

Married Woman—Foreign Settlement—Foreign Decree of Separation—English Will—Practice.

A Frenchman and an English woman, in anticipation of a marriage, which was afterwards celebrated between them in France, entered into a contract, one of the conditions of which was that the survivor should enjoy the usufruct of one-half of the goods of the pre-deceased. Subsequently a separation was decreed between the parties by the proper tribunal of the country of their then domicile. The wife, being resident in this country, executed a will in accordance with the law of this country, by which she disposed of the whole of her property. The husband was still living:—Held, that the Court could decree probate of such will, but limited to such property as the deceased had a right to dispose of.

The deceased, Sarah Anne d'Estève de Pradel, then Sarah Anne Shuter, was married, at Paris, in May, 1850, to Adelbert François Barthélemy d'Estève de Pradel. By a marriage contract, executed between the parties previous to such marriage, it was stipulated that there should be a separation of goods between them, and one of the conditions of the contract was, that the survivor should be entitled to enjoy for life the usufruct of one-half of the goods of the pre-deceased. On the 18th of August, 1854, the Civil Tribunal of the First Instance of the department of the Seine decreed a separation of body between M. and Madame de Pradel, and such decree was confirmed, on appeal, by the Imperial Court at Paris, on the 14th of June, 1855. Between 1854 and 1858 Madame de Pradel travelled about in France, Italy, England, and Australia. From 1858 until her death, which took place on the 15th of September, 1866, she resided with her mother in London. Under the will of her grandfather, John Shuter, Madame de Pradel was entitled to a legacy of 1,500*l.*, which the executors placed in the custody of the Court of Chancery, and since 1856 the interest of that legacy, by direction of the Court of Chancery, and notwithstanding the opposition of M. de Pradel, had been paid on the separate receipt of Madame de Pradel. By a will, dated the 14th of September, 1866, and executed in accordance with the law of England, Madame de Pradel, without referring therein to any power, disposed of the whole of her property, and appointed Charles Hill executor. The husband, M. de Pradel, is still alive.

M. Brouard, an avocat, and acquainted with the testamentary law of France, deposed, that by the law of France the effect of the decree of the 18th of August, 1854, was to enable Madame de Pradel to dispose, by will, of the entirety of her property, notwithstanding the terms of her marriage contract; and that a will executed in England, in accordance with the law of England, would be valid according to the law of France.

Dr. Swabey moved for probate to be granted to the executor.—Madame de Pradel had never lost her French domicile acquired by marriage; and in accordance with the law of that country she was entitled to dispose of the whole of her property notwithstanding the marriage contract.—He referred to Robins v. Dobbin (1).

SIR J. P. WILDE.—The deceased, under her marriage settlement, had clearly a right to dispose of one-half of her property, and she has executed a will in accordance with the law of this country. A question may arise by and by, whether, after the separation from her husband, she had a power to dispose of her whole estate. I shall not discuss that now; it may be argued some day before the Court of Chancery. I shall follow the principles laid down in Barnes v. Vincent (2), and confine myself to the question whether the will has been duly executed. That being so, I think probate should go limited to such property as she had power to dispose of. In the case of Levy v. Garland (3), a similar difficulty having arisen, Sir H. Jenner made such an order, saying it was the usual and most convenient mode, (in) order (to) give parties an opportunity to make their claim elsewhere.

Subpœna to bring in a Will—Non-Compliance—Attachment.

Where a subpœna has been personally served upon an individual to bring in a testamentary paper, and such individual fails to comply therewith, the Court will not at once order an attachment to issue against him, but will make a preliminary order that he shall attend in court to be examined in reference to his possession of such paper.

On the 18th of October, 1867, a subpœna issued from the registry of the Court of Probate under 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95. s. 23, calling upon Margaret Thornton, of Sunderland, in the county of Durham, within eight days, to bring into the principal registry of the Court of Probate the will of Jane Shotton, late of Sunderland, widow, who died on the 29th of September, 1861, such will being dated the 6th of September, 1861. This subpœna was founded on the affidavit of Robert Hutton Parkinson, who claimed to be the executor named in such will, and who stated it was in the possession or within the power or under the control of Margaret Thornton. The subpœna was personally served upon Margaret Thornton, but she failed to obey it. On the 9th of November a notice was given to her that on the 19th of November the Court would be moved to order an attachment to issue against her for non-compliance with the subpœna. As the will was not brought into the registry, and no appearance was entered for Margaret Thornton, Dr. Middleton applied to the Court that the attachment should issue.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—I shall do in this case as I have done in some previous ones. I do not think it right to order an attachment to issue in the first instance, as there Probate—Practice—Costs—Probate of Contents of destroyed Will—Destroyer, a Defendant, condemned in Costs, though he had not appeared.

On decreeing probate of the contents of a destroyed will, the Court condemned in costs a defendant who had destroyed the will, although he had not entered an appearance.

This was a suit for probate of the contents of the last will of J. Saunders, deceased.

The plaintiff propounded the will. The defendants, who were the testator's children and next-of-kin, had been cited, but had not appeared.

This cause was heard by Sir J. P. Wilde on the 26th of November, 1867. The due execution and contents of the will were proved, and it was further proved that it was read over after the funeral of the deceased, and that a daughter of the deceased, one of the defendants, seized it and threw it into the fire, and burnt it.

Sir J. P. Wilde pronounced for the will.

Dr. Tristram, on behalf of the plaintiff, asked that the daughter of the deceased, who had destroyed the will, should be condemned in costs:

Cur. adv. vult.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—The question reserved by the Court was, whether it had power to condemn the defendant who had destroyed the will in costs, although she had not appeared. In Foster v. Foster (1), a case similar to the present, Sir J. Nicholl decided that the Court had power to condemn the defendant in costs, although she had not appeared. Following that precedent, I shall condemn the defendant in costs.

Dissolution of Marriage—Queen's Proctor's Intervention—Collusion—Suppression of Material Facts—Costs—23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7.

A husband having obtained a decree nisi in a suit in which neither of the respondents appeared, the Queen's Proctor intervened, and (inter alia) charged collusion between the petitioner and the respondent, and that material facts had not been brought before the Court.—Held, by the Court, on reversing the decree and dismissing the petition, first, that the fact that the husband before and after the institution of the suit had had frequent interviews with his wife, and had then given her money, and urged her not to oppose the suit, established collusion; secondly, that the fact that the husband had been in the habit of going with his wife and the co-respondent to places of amusement, and of allowing her to dance frequently with the co-respondent there, and then leaving her in the care of the co-respondent, was conduct conducing to the adultery, and as such was a material fact which ought to have been brought before the Court.

A wife being entitled to alimony pendente lite, the voluntary gift of money by a husband to her during the progress of a suit by him for a divorce, does not per se prove collusion.

Where the Queen's Proctor intervenes and charges the suppression of material facts, without specifying such facts, the petitioner is entitled to particulars.

Where the Queen's Proctor intervenes and charges collusion, that material facts had not been brought before the Court, and that the petitioner had been guilty of adultery, and at the hearing established the first two charges and abandoned the last, the Court refused to condemn the petitioner in costs, on the ground that he had been put to great expense in preparing to defend the charge of adultery.

This was a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage. Neither of the respondents appeared.

On the 31st of July, 1866, the petition was heard by the Judge Ordinary, and a decree nisi was pronounced. The Queen's Proctor subsequently obtained leave to intervene, and filed pleas, in which he alleged—1. That the petitioner had been acting in collusion with the respondent for the purpose of obtaining a divorce contrary to the justice of the case. 2. That divers material facts respecting the conduct of the petitioner had not been brought before the Court. 3. That the petitioner had connived at the adultery of the respondent. 4. That the petitioner had himself been guilty of adultery.

The petitioner traversed these allegations.

The case was heard by the Judge Ordinary on the 21st and 22nd of November, 1867.

The Attorney General (Sir J. B. Karslake) and Haanen, for the Queen's Proctor.

—It appeared that the petitioner was a valet in the service of a Captain Gough, and that the respondent resided in the house of the co-respondent, who was a baker. All three were in the habit of going to places of amusement, where the respondent frequently danced with the co-respondent, and the petitioner had sometimes gone away late at night, leaving his wife in the care of the co-respondent, although he had been told by a friend, a policeman, that his conduct in doing so was imprudent. It also appeared that after he had ceased to cohabit with his wife, both before and after the institution of the suit, the petitioner had frequently seen her and had given her money; that he had advised her to take no notice of the petition, as it would be better for both the cheaper the divorce could be obtained; that he would be a friend to her afterwards, and that he would not injure the co-respondent. The charge of adultery against the petitioner was abandoned.

Dr. Spinks, for the petitioner.—The bare statement in the Queen's Proctor's second plea, that "material facts respecting the conduct of the petitioner had not been brought before the Court," is insufficient. The specific facts, upon the suppression of which the Queen's Proctor relies, should have been set out in the plea.

[The JUDGE ORDINARY.—If the petitioner says that he has been taken by surprise, the case may be adjourned.]

Dr. Spinks did not ask for an adjournment. He contended that the petitioner was entitled to the divorce. Connivance to be a bar must be a corrupt connivance—Phillips v. Phillips (1). Of that there is no evidence. As to the collusion, the gift of money to the respondent does not prove collusion. A wife is entitled to alimony pendente lite; and to save the expense of the proceedings for alimony, it is the constant practice for a husband, by the advice of counsel, to make a voluntary allowance to his wife pending a suit for divorce. With respect to the petitioner's advising the respondent not to defend the suit, that does not amount to collusion. There was no defence to the suit; and the petitioner, being a poor man, was only actuated by a desire to get the divorce as cheaply as he could.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—When the legislature passed the act under which this Court derives its authority, and for the first time put it in the power of an English Court to grant a dissolution of marriage, they surrounded the granting of that relief with a great many safeguards. There are sections in the act which provide that no man, whatever the conduct of his wife may have been, shall get a divorce if he has been guilty of connivance or condonation or collusion; and further, the legislature placed it in the discretion of the Court to refuse a divorce to a man whose wife has committed adultery if in the opinion of the Court he shall have been guilty of unreasonable delay in bringing his suit, of cruelty, of desertion of his wife, or of such wilful neglect and misconduct as conducted to her adultery. These are, no doubt, most salutary and important provisions. The great difficulty is to apply them, but the legislature has, so far as it could, thrown upon the Court the duty of inquiring into such charges when brought forward, and of being vigilant, so far as it can be vigilant, that those matters which are made bars to a divorce shall be investigated. By a subsequent act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7), for the furtherance of the ends to which I have alluded, the legislature enacted that "at any time during the progress of the cause or before the decree is made absolute any person may give information to Her Majesty's Proctor of any matter material to the due decision of the case, who may thereupon take such steps as the Attorney General may deem necessary or expedient; and if from any such information or otherwise the said Proctor shall suspect that any parties to the suit are or have been acting in collusion for the purpose of obtaining a divorce contrary to the justice of the case, he may, under the direction of the Attorney General, and by leave of the Court, intervene in the suit, alleging such case of collusion, and retain counsel and subpoena witnesses to prove it." These are shortly the provisions that the Court has to administer in the case now before it. The petitioner charged his wife with adultery; the petition and citation were served upon her; she entered no appearance. He then came into court with his witnesses, and proved to the satisfaction of the Court that his wife had committed adultery with the co-respondent. Information was conveyed to the Queen's Proctor (I do not consider it material to consider whence that information was derived) which induced him to think that the petitioner had been guilty of collusion with his wife in obtaining the divorce and of conduct which, if it did not amount to connivance, at any rate conduced to her adultery. The Queen's Proctor thereupon intervened and filed pleas. In those pleas he alleges, first, that the petitioner has been acting in collusion with the respondent for the purpose of obtaining a divorce contrary to the justice of the case; secondly, that divers material facts respecting the conduct of the petitioner have not been brought before the Court; thirdly, that the petitioner has connived at the adultery of the respondent; and, fourthly, that at divers times, while in the service of Captain Gough, the petitioner has himself been guilty of adultery. These were the four charges made against the petitioner, and the petitioner denied each of them. It is upon those charges that the Court has now to determine. What was the case which the petitioner did bring before the Court? He proved that his wife was living in the house of the co-respondent, and that notwithstanding his remonstrance she refused to leave it; that she went out to places of amusement with the co-respondent; and the Court was induced to believe that this going out with the co-respondent did not receive the sanction of the petitioner.

Now comes the case presented by the Queen's Proctor. I may say at once that I am entirely convinced that during the period Mrs. Barnes was living in Grimwade's house she did constantly go out with him; but I am also convinced that her husband as constantly accompanied them, that he was content to see her frequently dance with Grimwade, and that he went away at twelve o'clock at night leaving her still dancing with the co-respondent, and in his charge. It has been suggested that he had to leave in order to return to his master's house, and that that circumstance, as well as the manners of those in his position of life, should be considered. I think that that is true; but there cannot be a better test of what should be expected from a person in his circumstances than what took place between him and the policeman. The policeman on two occasions spoke to him about it. He said it was very curious the petitioner should go away leaving his wife dancing with the co-respondent, and the petitioner's answer was, "Oh! Charlie is a good fellow; he'll do no harm." It seems to me, therefore, that he did expose his wife to temptation with this man in a way which no husband should do, and that he was guilty of conduct conducing to her adultery. As to the plea of connivance, I may dismiss the matter by saying that although the petitioner was reckless in his conduct, still I do not think that the evidence comes up to the point of connivance. Then comes the question of collusion. It appears that after the petitioner had ceased to live with his wife, he saw her on several occasions, and gave her money. I do not think that the fact of a man giving money to his wife ought to be treated as a proof of collusion. She is entitled to support, and can come to the Court for that pur-prosecution, therefore, seems no inappropriate in the husband voluntarily making her a reasonable allowance, but the proper way in which it should be made is through her solicitor. But without straining the matter too far, or exercising too critical a judgment upon the feelings which prompted the husband to see his wife, if it stood alone I should not think that it was evidence on which to found collusion; but the evidence goes much further. Mrs. Bird, with whom the respondent lived, and who constantly went with her to see her husband, says: "I met Barnes one day as I was walking with her. He was on horseback. They spoke together about the divorce, and I heard him tell her not to take any notice. He said that he could get the divorce for 40*l.* if she would not oppose; that it would be better for both the cheaper, it could be done, and that he could be a friend to her hereafter"; and as to the co-respondent, "that he would not hurt a hair of Charlie Grimwade's head." It is impossible to read that evidence and not to believe that what the petitioner was doing was to endeavour to get the divorce as cheaply as possible. If it is not collusion, I do not know what is. On a subsequent occasion she received the petition and citation, and Mrs. Bird says: "We went to a public-house together, and the petitioner paid for our entertainment. Mrs. Barnes told him that she had received some papers, and asked what she should do. He told her they were of no consequence, and she might burn them; she was to keep quiet." It is obvious from that that he desired she should offer no opposition to the suit. It is said that she had no defence to offer. It is quite true that in respect of her adultery she had not; but if she had come into court, the manner in which she went out night after night with the co-respondent with the knowledge and consent of her husband would have been made known. I think that the charge as to divers material facts not having been brought before the Court has been proved. I think that the collusion has also been proved; and the result is, that the petition must be dismissed.

Dr. Spinks.—It should be remembered that a charge of adultery was also made, and that the petitioner came here to meet it.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—I should not be inclined to condemn the petitioner in costs. He came here with witnesses to meet the charge of adultery; and has already been put to great expense.

Petition dismissed. No order as to costs.

J—, v. J—

Nullity of Marriage—Impotency of Husband—Surgical Report inconclusive—Un-corroborated Statement of Wife.

In a suit of nullity by reason of the husband's impotency, the surgical report stated that the physical appearances of the wife were such that she might have had regular connexion with her husband during cohabitation. The wife, during the two years cohabitation, had not complained to her family on this matter, and had separated from her husband by reason of his alleged violence. The respondent affirmed on oath that the marriage had been consummated. The Court declined to pronounce the marriage invalid on the unsupported oath of the party seeking to be relieved from its obligations.

In this suit the petition was presented by the wife, and she prayed for a decree of nullity of marriage by reason of the impotency of the respondent. The respondent appeared, and traversed the allegation. The petition was disposed of in camera, before the Judge Ordinary, without a jury.

Dr. Spinks and Seale appeared for the petitioner

Dr. Swabey, for the respondent.

The JUDGE ORDINARY, (Dec. 10).—The petitioner in this case has accepted the burden of proving two propositions: first, that the marriage has never been consummated; and, secondly, that it has failed to be so, in consequence of the incurable incompetency of her husband. I am obliged to declare, that in my opinion she has established neither. In the first place, it is to be observed that her contention rests substantially upon her own oath alone. The physical appearances are, in the language of the medical witnesses, such that no opinion could be formed "whether for two years she had had ordinary connexion with her husband or not." And "that it might have been the case consistently with what was seen." Such evidence does not forward the petitioner's case. Indeed, it would perhaps be more fair to say that it assists the case of the respondent, who asserts on oath that these appearances were the result of ordinary connexion. For it can hardly be denied, as the evidence in cases of this description have constantly shewn, that in general or in the majority of cases virginity does present outward and physical signs and appearances by which it may be recognized and affirmed. Nothing therefore remains but the account given by the petitioner herself; and the question is, whether it is true. To pronounce a marriage invalid on the unsupported oath of the party who seeks to be relieved from its obligations is a serious matter, within the province of the Court, no doubt, but only to be done when the last trace of reasonable doubt as to the truth and bona fides of the case has been removed. If there be a direct conflict of testimony between the two parties who alone know the truth, as in this case, the difficulties are much increased. The scales being thus balanced by the direct testimony, the general circumstances of the case acquire additional weight, and the conduct and motives of the petitioner a larger significance. These general circumstances all tell against the petitioner. She saw her mother about every fortnight during the two years of her cohabitation, but she made no complaint. Yet she complained much of other matters, and was by no means satisfied with her husband's treatment. At the end of two years and a few months she left him; but the cause of her doing so was his alleged violence, for which she summoned him before the magistrates. At this period she had taken refuge with her mother, and plainly desired and intended not to return to cohabitation. But she was still silent as to that of which she now complains. Finally, the suggestion of the respondent's incompetency did not come from herself at all; but after she had been at home three weeks, her parents (so they say) heard some rumours which induced them to have the petitioner questioned, and the first statement of her present grievance was then made by the petitioner in answer to the interrogatories of her aunt. It is impossible not to entertain the suspicion that the desire to be set free from her husband proceeded from the same causes as had rendered her married life unhappy, and that the grievance she now asserts may have been simulated as the sole means of reaching her end. At any rate, these considerations make it difficult for the Court to arrive at the affirmative conclusion that the respondent is to be disbelieved and the petitioner's account to be accepted as true. It remains only to notice the suggestion that the respondent in conversation with a witness did in fact admit his incompetency. The result of the witness's testimony was that the respondent spoke of difficulties in the consummation of the marriage, attributed them to his wife, and (as the witness says) led him on the whole to imagine that connexion never took place. But the same witness admits that in the same conversation the respondent asserted his own competency in the most distinct terms, and he had a short time before distinctly denied his incompetency in his answer to this suit. The Court could hardly conclude from these statements, even if they had not been qualified and explained by the respondent as applying only to difficulties which existed at first, that the petitioner's account is true. The respondent must be dismissed from this suit.

Dissolution of Marriage.—Claim of Damages.—Appearance by Co-respondent, but no Answer.—Right of Co-respondent to cross-examine, and be heard as to Damages and Costs.

A co-respondent from whom damages are claimed, who has appeared but has not filed an answer, cannot at the hearing cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, nor address the jury upon the question of damages. He is, however, entitled to be heard upon the question of costs; and when the decree has been pronounced, he will, as to that question, be allowed to recall and cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, and also address the Court.

This was a petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage, claiming damages against the co-respondent. The respondent did not appear. The co-respondent appeared, but did not file an answer. The petition was now heard by the Judge Ordinary, and a jury was sworn to assess the damages.

Müller, for the petitioner.

A. Rogers, for the co-respondent, claimed to be allowed to cross-examine the witnesses called in support of the petition, and to address the jury on the question of damages.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—A co-respondent who has appeared, but has not filed an answer, may, no doubt, be heard on the question of costs, but has he ever been allowed to cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, and to address the jury on the question of damages?

I know of no authority in my favour; but the effect of the 33rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, is to place a co-respondent who has appeared, but has filed no answer to a petition claiming damages, in the same position as a defendant in an action for crim. con. who had allowed judgment to go by default, who would have been entitled to take part in the proceedings upon the assessment of damages. That section enacts, that a claim for damages "shall be heard and tried on the same principles, in the same manner, and subject to the same or the like rules and regulations, as actions for criminal conversation are now tried and decided in Courts of common law."

THE JUDGE ORDINARY. If that clause means that the procedure is to be precisely the same as in an action for crim. con., the proceedings of this Court have been irregular. No doubt, when judgment was allowed to go by default, in an action for crim. con., upon the assessment of damages before the sheriff the defendant was allowed to be heard and to call witnesses. But in this Court there is no such thing as a judgment by default. The mode of proceeding in it is different from that adopted in a Court of common law, viz. by declaration and plea. The system of this Court is to proceed by petition and answer, and the object of pleading in it is to give notice to the other side of the case that will have to be met. In no case has a co-respondent who has appeared, but has not filed an answer, been allowed to cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, or address the Court on the question of damages. The Court is always liberal in allowing a respondent to file an answer, even at the last moment, in order to give him an opportunity of being heard. Here, no application for leave to file an answer was made; and the petitioner had every reason to suppose that, in accordance with the practice of the Court, the case would be treated as an undefended one. I shall therefore not allow you to cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, or address the jury on the question of damages; but when the jury have assessed the damages, I will permit you to recall the witnesses and examine them upon the question of costs, and will hear anything you may have to say on that question.

The jury, having assessed the damages at 100*l.*, and a decree not having been pronounced,—

Rogers cross-examined one of the petitioner's witnesses, with the object of shewing that the co-respondent did not know that the respondent was a married woman. He also addressed the Court.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—I am satisfied that the co-respondent knew that the respondent was a married woman when he committed adultery with her. I therefore condemn him in costs.

1867.
Nov. 26;
Dec. 3, 10.

Matrimonial Suit—Alimony—Respondent and Co-Respondent living together.

If the husband can prove that his wife has sufficient means of support independent of him, even although they be derived from the co-respondent, she will not be entitled to an allotment of alimony.

The petitioner, William Madan, prayed for a dissolution of his marriage with the respondent Georgina Maria Madan, by reason of her adultery with the co-respondent, Oscar William de Thoren. A petition for alimony was filed by the respondent, to which the husband answered; and the last paragraph of his answer was to the following effect: "I have been informed and verily believe that the respondent Georgina Maria Madan since she left me has been continuously living with the co-respondent Oscar William de Thoren, and is at the present time still living with him in London, and is being supported by him."

Dr. Spinks (Sharpe with him) moved the Court to decree alimony to the respondent on the answers of the petitioner.

Bayford, for the petitioner, submitted that where the Court is satisfied that the respondent and co-respondent are still living together, it will not require the petitioner to contribute to the maintenance of the adulterous establishment. If the facts as stated are true, there is clearly no necessity to grant the wife alimony, and necessity is the only ground for the allotment of alimony—Coombs v. Coombs (1). No doubt the Ecclesiastical Courts always refused to enter on the question of the adultery charged in discussing the alimony; but the adulterous intercourse now going on between the respondent and co-respondent is not the adultery in issue in the cause; it is not the adultery charged in the petition. By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 24, in all cases in which the Court shall make any decree for alimony, it may direct the same to be paid either to the wife herself or to any trustee on her behalf to be approved by the Court, and may impose any terms or restrictions which to the Court may seem expedient. In this case the Court may order the alimony to be paid to a trustee, who shall satisfy himself (before he hands it over to the respondent) that she is not living with the co-respondent and is in actual want of it.

[The JUDGE ORDINARY.—I think a strong case is made out, and it is in accordance with common sense and justice. But the Court cannot delegate its functions to some one else; it must satisfy itself as to the conduct of the respondent. The broad principle that where the respondent and co-respondent are living together, the husband should not pay alimony is sound; but if there has been a constant practice not to take that matter into consideration, the Court will hardly make an alteration in it.]

Bayford referred to Crompton v. Crompton and Armstrong (2) and Goodheim v. Goodheim and Frankinson (3).

Dr. Spinks.—If the husband is allowed to swear that his wife is living with the co-respondent, the respondent will be compelled to make an affidavit as to whether she is so or not; but it is contrary to the policy of the law that she should answer yea or nay as to adultery. If she denies that she is so living, the husband will then go into evidence, and although he may not prove precisely the adultery in issue, it will be adultery of the same character.

[The JUDGE ORDINARY.—There would seem to be no occasion to go so far as that. The husband would allege that his wife is living in a particular house, and is amply provided for by some person, who may turn out to be the co-respondent. The wife could then make an affidavit that she was or was not living in such house.]

Dr. Spinks.—If she made such an affidavit, it could be used against her at the trial.

The JUDGE ORDINARY (Dec. 3).—I deferred my decision in this case in order that I might look at the original papers in Crampton v. Crampton and Armstrong. The question raised is, whether a wife who is living, or asserted to be living with the co-respondent, and who is alleged to be supported by him, can come here and ask for alimony. I thought, whatever may be said now on the point, that the Court was concluded by the previous decision; but on consulting the original answer, and reading again the report in Crampton v. Crampton and Armstrong, I am satisfied that that case does not touch on the question now under discussion. The question is, whether whilst a wife is living with another person, and has real means of support, the husband is bound to pay her alimony pending suit. On the one hand it was contended that the Court will only grant alimony when required for the necessary support of the wife, and on the other the case of Crampton v. Crampton and Armstrong was relied on. In that case, however, it was merely alleged by the husband that he had been informed and believed that the respondent and co-respondent were still living together as man and wife, and the Judge Ordinary held that such a statement was irrelevant and must be struck out. That decision did not touch the present question. The husband here says to his wife, "You do not require alimony, because you receive support from some one else, and need not recur to my purse." In Goodheim v. Goodheim and Frankinson, it was determined that where a wife is in actual possession of an income from whatever source, she is not entitled to alimony pendente lite. Without at present finally deciding this matter, I will allow the husband a week's further time to amend his answer. He must state some facts upon which he relies to shew that his wife does not require assistance; at present he states in general terms that the respondent is living with, and is supported by, the co-respondent. When the answer is amended, the wife will be entitled to meet it by affidavit.

The answer having been amended, the respondent filed an affidavit, in which she denied that she had lived with the co-respondent, or was then living with him, or that she had been or was supported by him, or that she had any other source of income whatever, except certain sums which she received from her solicitors, and which she undertook to repay from the alimony allotted for her maintenance. This statement was confirmed by the solicitors.

On the 10th of December, Bayford said after such an affidavit he could not press the objection any further.

HARKER v. HARKER.

Dissolution of Marriage—Alimony—Amendment of Petition—Practice.

The petitioner filed a petition for alimony, in which she set forth certain property which she asserted she held to her separate use, and the respondent answered the petition on oath. The Court subsequently permitted the petitioner to amend her petition for alimony, by adding thereto allegations of further income of the respondent, and a denial of a greater part of the income she had attributed to herself in her petition.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, the petitioner, Jane Harker, filed a petition for alimony, the two last paragraphs of which were to the following effect: "Fourthly, that the said John George Harker has a balance at his banker's of 500*l.*, and is also possessed of property, over and above the property hereinbefore mentioned, the nature and value of which is unknown to your petitioner. Fifthly, that your petitioner is in receipt of a net income of 31*l.* per annum, settled to her separate use." The respondent filed an answer to this petition on oath. Subsequently, notice was served upon the husband that it was intended to apply to the Court for liberty to amend the petition for alimony pendente lite filed on the 27th of November, 1867, by adding the following paragraphs: "That the above-named John George Harker derives a considerable income by an arrangement with his father, by which he has the investing of all his father's money, and the receiving of the interest, dividends and proceeds of his father's investments; and the collecting of the rents due from his father's property; and the retaining for his the respondent's own use of all annual income derived from his father's investments and property above five per cent., and on the original investments. That the said respondent is also possessed of property, namely, shares of or an interest in a ship or ships or the cargo thereof, and of a share or shares in a public company or companies, and of houses or lands,"—and also, by altering the fifth paragraph of the petition, by alleging that the said petitioner was in receipt of the net income of 31*l.* as therein mentioned, but that the same has long since been reduced to 8*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* per annum. In support of her application, the petitioner filed an affidavit, in which she stated that she is not, and has not been since the month of January, 1866, in receipt of a net income of 31*l.* per annum; that her only income is derived from money left to her by her brother before her marriage, which at one time produced 31*l.* per annum; but about the month of December, 1865, she was so ill that she thought she could not survive, and for that reason she made over such money to her sister absolutely, trusting to her to spend the same for the benefit of petitioner's child in case of her death, and that since that time the sister had spent for the petitioner and her child about 550*l.* out of such money, and that there now remains only 181*l.*, which produces an income of about 8*l.* 13*s.* 11*d.* per annum. The solicitor also stated that the sources of income of the respondent, proposed to be inserted, were unknown to him until after the husband had answered the petition.

Dr. Tristram moved in accordance with the notice.

Bayford, for the respondent, objected.—The petitioner does not give any sufficient reason why she made, in the first instance, an erroneous statement. To accede to the motion will be to make a serious increase of the costs.

The JUDGE ORDINARY said he must allow the amendment to be made, but he should further order that all the costs of the amendment shall be deducted from the sum which the husband would otherwise have to pay for his wife's general costs.

Administration with Will annexed—Legatee a Married Woman—Refusal of Husband—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73.

The deceased left her property to her sister, a married woman, for her sole use, and not to be liable to the control of any husband. She appointed no executor. The husband of the legatee refused, except on certain unreasonable terms, to consent to her taking administration or to join in the bond. The Court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73, decreed administration to the attorney of the legatee, without the sanction of the husband.

Anne Warren, late of Rackheath Park, in the county of Norfolk, died on the 22nd August, 1866, leaving her sister, Elizabeth Green, wife of John Green, her only next-of-kin. The deceased executed a will dated the 23rd of May, 1864, in which she did not appoint any executor, but bequeathed to her sister, "solely for her own private, sole and particular use, not to be in any way liable or subject to the influence, control or use of her present or any future husband, or to that of any other person than herself, the above-named Elizabeth Green," the sum of moneys and all the sums, whatever the amount thereof, now standing in the deceased's name, and being her property, in the Canterbury Savings Bank; also all the moneys, shares completed and incomplete, and whatsoever property she was possessed of in the Conservative Land Society, in Norfolk Street, Strand, London. Mrs. Green, since August, 1866, had, personally and by letter, many times applied to her husband, from whom she had lived separated fourteen years, to enter into the necessary bond to enable her to obtain administration of the effects of the deceased; but he had absolutely refused to do so, stating he wished to deprive her of the benefit of the moneys she was entitled to under her sister's will for her own private use, unless she consented to purchase his compliance by the payment to him of one-half of the property.

Dr. Tristram moved the Court, under these circumstances, to grant administration with the will annexed to Mr. John Callaway, as the attorney for Mrs. Green, the legatee in the will, and the only next-of-kin of the deceased.

SIR J. P. WILDE thought that was the proper course, and made the grant under the 73rd section of the Probate Act.

Testamentary Suit—Notice—Rules 5, 41.—Sufficiency.

In a testamentary suit the defendants, with their pleas, gave notice that they merely insisted upon the will being proved in solemn form of law, by the production of the attesting witnesses, and that if both such witnesses were produced, they only intended to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will. The plaintiff examined both the attesting witnesses:—Held, that under the rules a sufficient notice had been given, and that the defendants, one of whom was an executor under an earlier will of the deceased than the one propounded, were not liable to be condemned in costs.

In this case, the plaintiff, the Rev. Alfred Leeman, as executor, propounded the will of Henry William Tyler, of No. 11, Ellenborough Crescent, Weston-super-Mare, in the county of Somerset, gentleman, who died at Monmouth on the 16th of February, 1867, such will bearing date the 11th of January, 1867. The defendants, James Gilbert George and the Rev. Charles A'Deane Rosser, the former of whom was an executor, and the latter one of the residuary legatees named in the will of the deceased, bearing date the 1st of September, 1857, pleaded that the will propounded was not executed in accordance with the provisions of the statute, 1 Vict. c. 26, and that the deceased in the cause, at the time the said alleged will was executed, was not of sound mind, memory and understanding. With these pleas they gave the following notice: "Take notice, that the defendants merely insist upon the will being proved in solemn form of law, by the production of the attesting witnesses, and that if both such witnesses be produced, they only intend to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will. The 5th rule (Rules and Orders, 1862) is to the following effect: "Next-of-kin and others, who, previously to the passing of the said (Probate) Act, had a right to put executors or parties entitled to administration with will annexed, upon proof of a will in solemn form of law, shall continue to possess the same rights and privileges (1), and be subject to the same liabilities with respect to costs, as heretofore." And the 41st is, "In all cases the party opposing a will may, with his plea, give notice to the party setting up the will, that he merely insists upon the will being proved in solemn form of law, and only intends to cross-examine the witnesses produced in support of the will, and he shall thereupon be at liberty to do so, and shall be subject to the same liabilities in respect of costs as he would have been, under similar circumstances, according to the practice of the Prerogative Court.

At the hearing, the witnesses for the plaintiff, including both the attesting wit-

Jenner said (p. 848), "It cannot be denied that the general rule of the Court is, that a party propounding an instrument must produce all the attesting witnesses to that instrument; if not to examine them himself, still in order that they may be cross-examined by the other party." nesses, having been examined and cross-examined, the Court pronounced for the will.

Dr. Deane (Dr. Swabey with him) asked the Court to condemn the defendants in the costs. Mr. Rosser, being only a legatee under a previous will, could not, according to the practice, be protected by any notice.

[SIR J. P. WILDE.—Has your party been put to any extra costs by Mr. Rosser becoming a party to the suit?]

Dr. Deane could not say he had. He further contended that the notice given in this case was conditional and evasive, and did not satisfy rule 41.

Dr. Middleton (Bayford with him) called the Court's attention to rule 5. One of the privileges there mentioned was to examine all the attesting witnesses.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—I think the notice is sufficiently within the intention of rule 41, and protects the defendants. Otherwise, I should certainly have condemned them in costs, for I think they have taken advantage of some confusion in the recollection of one of the attesting witnesses to enter upon very unnecessary litigation.

PROBATE. }

Will—Seaman being at Sea—Ship permanently stationed in Port.

A mate, whilst on board Her Majesty's ship Excellent, which is permanently stationed in Portsmouth Harbour, and when under age, executed a will, of which probate was granted to one of the executors named in it. On an application to revoke the probate, the Court held that the deceased came under the exception contained in 1 Vict. c. 26. s. 11. as a seaman at sea, and, although a minor at the time, that he had legally executed a will.

ing on board Her Majesty's ship Excellent, executed a will, dated the 8th of December, 1849, by which he appointed Duncan Pringle Burnett and John Wynne executors. The deceased was born on the 30th of May, 1830, and was, therefore, in his twentieth year when he made his will. He died on the 9th of September, 1852, and probate of the will was granted to Mr. Burnett, by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury, on the 10th of March, 1857. The only property to which the deceased was entitled, beyond the pay due to him at the time of his death, was a reversionary interest under his father's and mother's settlement. By the will the whole property was left to the father, Robert M'Murdo; but on an arrangement being suggested for disposing of the reversionary interest, an objection was made by the executor under the will. Thereupon a citation was taken out, calling upon Mr. Burnett to bring in the probate of the will of the deceased, and shew cause why it should not be revoked, and the will declared null and void, by reason that the deceased was under age at the time it was executed. The probate was brought in, and Mr. Burnett did not oppose, but did not consent to its revocation. It was proved by affidavit that Her Majesty's ship Excellent is a gunnery ship, permanently stationed at Portsmouth, and that it has been permanently stationed there for twenty years and upwards.

A. E. Miller moved the Court to revoke the probate granted by the Prerogative Court in March, 1857. The deceased was not entitled to the privileges granted under 1 Vict. c. 26. s. 11. He was not, at the time he executed his will, a seaman at sea. There is a great distinction between a ship in commission and about to sail, and one which is permanently stationed in port, and which it is not intended shall at any time start on a voyage.—He referred to the cases In the goods of Lord Hugh Seymour (1), In the goods of E. J. Lay (2), In the goods of R. Hayes (3), In the goods of Admiral Austen (4), and In the goods of H. Corby (5).

- (5) 1 Eccl. & Adm. 292.

SIR J. P. WILDER.—I think I must refuse this application. The facts, as admitted, are as follows, namely, that the deceased, at the time the will was made, was a mate on board the Excellent; that the will was executed on board that ship; and that the Excellent was at that time laid up in Portsmouth Harbour, without any intention of going to sea. Was this man, then, a mariner at sea? I see a great distinction between this case and that of In the goods of Corby. There the vessel was lying in the harbour of Melbourne, and the man stated in a letter which it was proposed to prove as testamentary, that he was shipped on board such vessel. That might have meant nothing more than that he had signed ship's articles on a certain day, and had bound himself, when wanted, to serve as a seaman. In such a case a man could not be said to be at sea. Even if he had joined the ship, he had not commenced his service, or set sail on a voyage. There have been many other cases in which it was proved the man had joined the service, and had commenced a sea voyage, in the course of which he made a will, and such will has been held good, although not executed in accordance with the Wills Act. Such was the case of Lay, in which the ship was lying in the harbour of Buenos Ayres, whether to refit, or whether stationed there, or to obtain provisions, does not appear. In the other cases cited, In the goods of Admiral Austen, it appeared that the will was made when the Admiral was on an expedition up the river. Practically, in each the deceased was engaged in that maritime service into which he had entered. I now come to this case. It seems to me the case of Lay is a direct precedent, and that this will was well executed. It is impossible to draw a distinction between the Calliope, lying in the harbour of Buenos Ayres, and the Excellent, lying in Portsmouth Harbour, so far as probate under the statute is concerned. Although a seaman may not be out of his own country, he may be subject to the restraints of the service; and not being able to go on shore to obtain legal assistance, he may find some difficulty in properly executing his will.

PROBATE. }
1868. } In the goods of ANN CADGE.
Jan. 14. }

Will—Residuary Legatees—Interlineation—Presumption.

The deceased, at the time she executed her will, in the presence of witnesses, covered over the writing with a piece of paper, so that the witnesses could form no opinion whether certain interlineations appearing thereon were written at the time of execution. These interlineations in each case were required to complete the sentences to which they belonged, and did not appear, on inspection of the writing, to have been made at a different time from the body of the will:—Held, that the presumption that unattested additions have been made after execution, does not apply to such a case, and probate was decreed of the will, including the interlineations.

“What is left, my books, and furniture, and all other things,” are words sufficiently comprehensive to cover the general residue.

Ann Cadge, of Haslingfield, Cambridgeshire, widow, died on the 23rd of October, 1867, leaving a sister, Mary Barnes, her only next-of-kin, and three minor children of a brother, James Tuck, namely, Henry James Holden Tuck, Sarah Ann Tuck and Ann Maria Tuck, who, together with Mrs. Barnes, were entitled to the residue of her estate, if undisposed of by her will. She duly executed a will on the 11th of June, 1867, which was in her own handwriting, and on the face of it shewed that the deceased was an illiterate woman. No executor was named in the will. There were several single words interlined, which were required to complete the sentences to which they belonged. By the will, 700*l.* was given to the nephew, and 200*l.* to each of the nieces. The will concluded, “To my sister-in-law Sarah Tuck, widow of my late brother, I give my body linen (interlined) and wearing apparel. What is left, my books, and furniture, and all other things, I wish to be equally divided amongst the three children (interlined). If I am buried here or elsewhere, I wish to have a gravestone erected to my memory.” The signatures of the deceased and the witnesses were written on the second side of the sheet of paper.

At the top of the third side were the following words: "Two hundred pounds, placed with James Thorne, of the Westminster Brewery Company, at 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, I reserve for the present—I may want it myself."

The attesting witness, Margaret Smith, deposed, that at the time of the execution of the will, the testatrix had placed a sheet of paper over the upper part of the second and third sides of the said will, and that, consequently, she and her fellow witness are unable to state whether the interlineations appearing in the said will, or the words on the third side of the paper, were made, or either of them, as they now appear, previously to the execution of the will; that the said Ann Cadge was, up to the time of her death, and had been for many years, living with Sarah Tuck, the widow of her brother, and had expressed great affection for the three children of her brother; that the deponent had heard the testatrix say that the said children should have the principal part of her property, and that neither her sister nor her sister's children should have anything from her; that the testatrix had a sister, Mrs. Barnes, living in London, with whom she was not on friendly terms.

Dr. Middleton, for Mrs. Tuck, as guardian for the children.—Two questions arise: first, whether the words interlined can be admitted into the probate; and secondly, if so, whether the three children are constituted residuary legatees. The words interlined in each case are required to complete the sentence, so that the presumption applicable to unattested alterations, which suggest a change of mind, will not be made as regards such interlineations—In the goods of A. Swinden (1). Such a presumption, moreover, would be less strong where the writing was covered over so that the witnesses could not see it than where it was laid open before them and they saw no alteration or interlineation. As regards the second point, there was nothing in the will to raise a doubt that the words all other things were not intended to convey the general residue—In the goods of E. Smith (2).

(1) 2 Robert. 192.

(2) 3 Swa. & Tr. 561; a.c. 84 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Fr. M. & A. 15.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—I am satisfied that the testatrix has used words which dispose of the general residue of her estate. As regards the other point, there is a marked distinction, I consider, between an interlineation and an alteration. An interlineation is, in general, merely used to complete an imperfect sentence, whilst an alteration is a disposition differing from that first made by the deceased. In this will several single words are interlined, without which the sentences would be incomplete. "I leave to my sister-in-law . . . my body linen," for instance; and the bequest of the residue, "What is left, my books and furniture, and all other things, I wish to be equally divided." All these interlineations are made apparently with the same ink and at the same time as the body of the will. The question arises, is the Court at liberty, taking into consideration the nature of the interlineations, to presume that they were made before the execution of the will? It was decided in Cooper v. Bochett (3) that all unattested interlineations and alterations in the first instance must be presumed to have been made after execution; but I do not think I need draw that presumption in this case, and I am confirmed in my decision by what Dr. Lushington did in the case cited—In the goods of A. Swinden (1), in which he let in words which interfered with the grammatical structure of a paragraph in the will. There is also another case, Birch v. Birch (4), in which the will had originally been drawn with blanks, and in filling them up interlineations had become necessary. Sir H. J. Fust included them in the probate, although there was no evidence when they were made. It is obvious there must be a large class of cases in which interlineations were on the instrument at the time of its execution, and no positive evidence can be produced to prove it. Administration may issue with the will annexed, including the interlineations in the body of the will, but not the memorandum on the third side, to Mrs. Tuck as the guardian of the children, the residuary legatees named in the will.

Alimony Pendente Lite—Wife supporting herself—Refusal of Alimony.

Alimony pendente lite refused to a wife, who, for some time before the institution of the suit had been, and still was, supporting herself in service.

This was an application for an allotment of alimony pendente lite, in a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage.

The husband was a contractor in a small way of business, his net annual income being 225*l.* a year. The wife, for some time before the commencement of the suit, had been and still was living separate from her husband in service, and was in the receipt of 14*l.* a year as wages, in addition to her board and lodging.

Inderwick, for the wife, asked the Court to allot alimony pendente lite, at the rate of 45*l.* a year.

R. Prichard, contra, contended that, under the circumstances, alimony ought not to be allotted.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—I think that I ought not to order the payment of alimony. The Court is in the habit of allotting alimony pendente lite when the wife is under the necessity of living apart from her husband, and requires alimony for her support. In this case the parties have been long living separate; the wife is in service and is able to support herself, and if I were to allot to her alimony pendente lite, the result would be that, because there is a matrimonial dispute, and she has instituted a suit against her husband for relief, she would be placed in a better position than she was in before the suit was instituted. I shall therefore make no order.

The Court refused to carry out alterations, in a settlement, agreed upon between the parties, whose marriage had been dissolved, so as to extinguish the power of appointment given to the respondent by the settlement, or to affect the appointment of new trustees.

In this case a petition was filed by James Davies, praying for a dissolution of his marriage with Mary Davies by reason of her adultery with Dennis M'Carthy. A decree nisi was made on the 19th of January, 1866, which was afterwards made absolute. There were two children born of the marriage of the parties, Henry Hanbury Davies on the 28th of August, 1850, and Mary Annette Pakington Davies on the 10th of March, 1856. On the 19th of July, 1866, a petition as to settlements was filed, by which it appeared that by an indenture of settlement, bearing date the 7th of August, 1849, the petitioner transferred to trustees a sum of 6,700*l.* 3*l.* per cent. consols, now represented by a sum of 6,048*l.* 7*s.* invested in railway debentures, a sum of 1,000*l.* East India stock, and a further sum of 5,000*l.* secured by mortgage. That, on the part of the respondent, two sums of 1,000*l.* charged on the estate of her father and 2,905*l.* new 3*l.* per cents. were settled to come into the possession of the trustees only on the death of the father and mother of the respondent, the latter of whom is dead, but the former is still alive. That by the settlement the income of the three sums of 6,048*l.* 7*s.*, 1,000*l.* and 2,905*l.* new 3*l.* per cents. (on the death of the father) was secured to the separate use of the respondent during the joint lives of herself and the petitioner; and, in case the respondent survived the petitioner, the income of those three sums and of the other two, namely, 1,000*l.* East India stock and 5,000*l.* secured by mortgage, was to be paid to the respondent; but, as regards the two last funds, on certain conditions in case of re-marriage. The petitioner, during the joint lives of himself and the respondent, was to receive the income arising from 1,000*l.* East India stock and 5,000*l.* lent on mortgage, and if he survived the respondent the income arising from the whole trust fund. Under the trusts of the settlement, the children of the marriage (subject to the usual provisions as to full age and marriage) will become entitled to the said trust funds,—subject, however, to a joint power of appointment to be exercised by the petitioner and respondent during their joint lives; and in default of such appointment, subject to the appointment of the survivor. In case there should be no children of the marriage living on the death of the survivor, it was agreed that the sums settled on behalf of the respondent should go to her, her executors, administrators and assigns absolutely, or in case she died in the lifetime of the petitioner, as if she had died unmarried and intestate. That the said settlement contains the usual powers enabling the trustees thereof, with the consent in writing of the petitioner and the respondent, or the survivor, to advance certain portions for the children of the marriage; also enabling the trustees thereof, with the consent in writing of the petitioner and the respondent, or the survivor, to vary the investments of the funds of the said settlement; and also the usual power of appointing new trustees, to be exercised in the first instance by the petitioner and the respondent, or the survivor of them. The petition proposed that for the future the trustees should pay out of the income of the 6,048*l.* 7*s.* (however invested) the sum of 100*l.* to the respondent so long as she continued chaste and unmarried, and until she became entitled under the provisions of the settlement to the income derived from the moneys and funds settled in her behalf; and from that date they should pay to her 50*l.* per annum so long as she remains chaste and unmarried, the surplus of the income of the 6,048*l.* 7*s.*, to be disposed of as if the respondent were naturally dead; secondly, that the interest of the 1,000*l.* East India stock, and of the 5,000*l.* on mortgage, should be disposed of by the trustees as if the respondent were naturally dead; thirdly, that the power of appointment in favour of the children or child of the marriage, the power enabling the trustees to advance certain portions to such children, and the powers as to investments and of appointing new trustees contained in the settlement should be read and construed and exercised as if the respondent were naturally dead. In her answer to the petition, the respondent agreed to these terms, with the following alterations, which were afterwards approved by the petitioner: That, as regards one-half the trust funds brought into settlement by the respondent, she should have a power of appointment in favour of her children, to be exercised as if the petitioner were dead. That the respondent should have the sole power of appointing by deed or will such moiety to or amongst the children of the marriage as if the petitioner were dead. That the trustees should have no power to advance any portion of the funds brought into settlement by the respondent during her lifetime, without her consent in writing first had and obtained. That no variation should be made in the investment of the funds brought into the settlement by the respondent, or on her behalf, without her consent in writing; and, lastly, that the order to be made on the petition be subject to a condition that the petitioner do relinquish his contingent life interest on one moiety of the funds brought into settlement by the respondent, or on her behalf, subject to a proviso that in the event of the respondent's death in the lifetime of the petitioner, and of no child living to attain a vested interest in such moiety, the petitioner's life interest shall survive. The Registrar to whom the settlement had been referred having reported to the Court the agreement to which the parties had come, concluded his report as follows: "It is submitted for the consideration of the Court whether, under the provisions of the statute 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61. s. 5, the Court has authority to order that the power of appointment by the said indenture of settlement conferred upon the parties shall be extinguished, or that the trustees or trustee of the said indenture of settlement should make advances to or for any child, issue of the said marriage, out of the said trust funds, or be authorized to sell and re-invest, or otherwise deal with the same, without the consent in writing of the person or persons whose consent is by the said indenture required for that purpose, or that any person should be nominated and appointed to supply the place of a deceased, retiring or incapacitated trustee of the said indenture of settlement, otherwise than in the said indenture is contained."

Dr. Swabey, for the petitioner, asked the Court to confirm the agreement made between the parties. The 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61. s. 5. gave the Court ample authority to vary the settlements in any way, provided it were for the benefit of the children of the marriage or their parents.

Dr. Tristram, for the respondent, also pressed the Court to carry into effect the agreement.

[The JUDGE ORDINARY.—The Registrar has made such an elaborate report, that I am bound to consult with him, and have his reasons for it before I give a final decision.]

The JUDGE ORDINARY (Jan. 28).—I took time to consider how far a report of the Registrar in regard to the settlements made on the marriage of the petitioner and respondent in this case can be carried out. I have come to the conclusion that it may be so on all points, with two exceptions: First, it is proposed that the power of appointment given to the respondent by the settlement shall be interfered with. I think that that ought not to be. And, secondly, I think no alteration should be made in the manner prescribed in the settlement for the appointment of new trustees. I refer the report back to the same Registrar to make these alterations, and he will give notice to the parties to attend upon him, if they think proper to do so.

The formal minute is to the following effect:

"The Judge Ordinary having taken time to deliberate, confirmed the Registrar's report as to the application of the property in question, and the income arising therefrom; and the report generally, except that he refused to confirm the proposal that the respondent's power of appointment, in default of the children taking a vested interest, should be extinguished; and he further refused to make any order affecting the appointment of trustees, and directed that the costs of the respondent as to this inquiry and motion, should be paid by the petitioner.

Practice—Opponent of Will withdrawing from Suit—Permission to others to intervene in his Place—New Trial—Costs.

A will propounded by the executors was opposed by the plaintiff, one of the next-of-kin. The issues were tried by a jury and were found for the executors, and the will was pronounced for. After an order nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, had been granted, the plaintiff abandoned further opposition to the will. The Court, upon the application of two of the next-of-kin, who had been cited to see proceedings and had appeared, but had not pleaded, allowed them to plead and adopt the proceedings already had in the suit.

The order for a new trial was ultimately made absolute, the executors being allowed their costs up to that time out of the estate.

The defendants, as executors, propounded the will of Susannah Boulton, deceased. The plaintiff, Joseph Boulton, the eldest son of the deceased, pleaded, 1. Undue execution. 2. Incapacity. 3. Undue influence. 4. Fraud.

Sarah Kendall and Mary Richards, two married daughters of the deceased, who had been cited to see proceedings, appeared but did not plead. The issues were tried, in November, 1867, before Sir J. P. Wilde, by a common jury, and were all found in favour of the defendants, and the will was pronounced for.

On the 3rd of December, 1867, Sir J. P. Wilde granted an order nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of the evidence.

On the 10th of December, Searle, on behalf of the defendants, moved that the order nisi might be discharged, and the contentious proceedings discontinued. In support of the application an affidavit of the plaintiff was filed, in which he stated that he was satisfied with the verdict, and had instructed his solicitor to proceed no further in the matter.

Dr. Spinks (Waddy with him), on behalf of the two married daughters of the deceased, stated that they were desirous to proceed with the suit and contest the will.

An order was made by consent that Sarah Kendall, wife of Thomas Kendall, and Mary Richards, wife of Joseph Richards, two of the persons cited to see proceedings, and who had entered appearances, should be allowed to plead and adopt the proceedings already had in the suit, upon an appearance being first entered for the said Thomas Kendall and Joseph Richards.

Dr. Deane and Searle (Dec. 17) shewed cause against the order for a new trial.

Dr. Spinks and Waddy, contra.

SIR J. P. WILDE made the order absolute, and reserved the question of costs until after the new trial.

Searle, for the executors, asked that they might be allowed their costs up to the present time out of the estate.—The executors having obtained a verdict, they ought to be allowed to take their costs of the trial out of the estate. If they take them out of the estate without the authority of the Court, they will run the risk of having to refund them if they should fail to obtain a verdict at the second trial, and the will should be set aside.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—I think the application is a reasonable one. The executors may have their costs out of the estate up to the present time.

Will—Probate to Substituted Executor.

A testator appointed A, an officer in the Navy, his executor, "and in case of his absence on foreign duty," he appointed B. his executrix. When the testator died A. was in England, but shortly afterwards he went abroad on foreign service, and still remained abroad:—Held, that B. was entitled to probate as substituted executrix, the testator's intention being that she should act if A. were abroad when the necessity for proving the will arose.

A. Langford died on the 12th of September, 1865, leaving a will which contained this clause: "I hereby constitute and appoint my son-in-law, F. L. M. Bedwell (Paymaster in the Royal Navy) to be my executor, and in case of his absence on foreign duty, I appoint my wife Elizabeth Langford to be executrix to this my last will and testament." A codicil to the will contained this clause: "I appoint Mr. R. Mitford executor with my son-in-law F. L. M. Bedwell." When the testator died, F. L. M. Bedwell was at Portsmouth, and shortly afterwards he sailed on foreign service, and at the date of this application he was serving on board H.M. ship Nassau in the Straits of Magellan, and would probably remain abroad for four years.

R. Mitford, the executor named in the codicil, had renounced probate.

Dr. Deane moved the Court to decree probate of the will and codicil to be granted to Elizabeth Langford, as the executrix substituted in the will for F. L. M. Bedwell.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—I am of opinion that the intention of the testator was that Elizabeth Langford should be executrix in the event of Bedwell being absent on duty and unable to act when the necessity for proving the will arose. The grant may go as prayed.

Administration de Bonis Non—Joint Grant to Next-of-kin and another—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73.

A joint grant of administration to the person by law entitled to administration, and to another, is a grant to a person other than the one entitled within the meaning of section 73. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77.

A joint grant of administration de bonis non was made to the next-of-kin, and a person entitled in distribution under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, where the next-of-kin consented, and there were special circumstances rendering such a grant convenient.

R. H. Grundy died on the 18th of September, 1865, intestate, a bachelor, without parent, leaving him surviving J. C. Grundy and J. L. Grundy, his brothers and next-of-kin, and Lucy Grundy, the daughter of a deceased brother, the only persons entitled in distribution.

On the 9th of October, 1865, letters of administration of the effects of the deceased were granted to J. C. Grundy, who died on the 19th of May, 1867, leaving part of the estate, of the value of about 11,000*l.*, unadministered, and having paid part only of the share to which Lucy Grundy was entitled.

J. L. Grundy, who had resided in Australia for the last fourteen years, had returned to England recently on hearing of the death of J. C. Grundy. He was possessed of no property besides his interest in the estate of the deceased, and had no residence or place of business in England, and was unable to get sureties to the administration bond. He was willing that a joint grant of administration de bonis non should be made to him and to Lucy Grundy, who was fearful that, if the grant were made to him solely, she should have to institute an administration suit for the protection of her interest in the deceased's estate.

Dr. Spinks moved the Court to decree that letters of administration de bonis non of the effects of R. H. Grundy should be granted to J. L. Grundy and Lucy Grundy jointly. By the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, the Court is empowered, if it should appear to it necessary or convenient, by reason of special circumstances, to appoint some person to be the administrator of the personal estate of a deceased other than the person who, if the act had not passed, would by law have been entitled to a grant of administration. In the present case there are special circumstances which would justify the Court in making a joint grant, if the terms of the 73rd section admit of such a grant. If that act had not passed, J. L. Grundy, as the next-of-kin of the deceased, would, under the statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 5. s. 3 (1), have been solely entitled to the grant, and a joint grant to him and to Lucy Grundy would, therefore, be a grant to a person "other than the one who, if the act had not passed, would have been entitled." In the goods of Browning (2), at first sight, seems to be an authority against me. There, Sir C. Cresswell refused to make, under the 73rd section, a joint grant to the widow of the deceased and a person who was not next-of-kin, although all the persons interested in the estate consented. But he gave no reason for his refusal, and the case is distinguishable from the present by the circumstance that the application was for an original grant of administration; and Sir C. Cresswell may, therefore, have thought he was bound to the strict rule laid down by the statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 5.

[SIR J. P. WILDE.—Does not the Court of Probate make a grant of administration de bonis non upon the same principles as original grants?]

Yes. But the statute of 21 Hen. 8. c. 5. s. 3. has been discharged by the original grant of administration, and therefore does not preclude the Court from exercising the discretion given by the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77.

[SIR J. P. WILDE.—Is a joint grant of administration to a person solely entitled

(1) "In case any person shall die intestate, the Ordinary shall grant the administration of the goods of the deceased to the widow of the deceased, or to the next-of-kin, or to both, as by discretion of the same Ordinary shall be thought good."

and to another, a grant to a person other than the one entitled within the meaning of that section f]

I submit that it is.

SIR J. P. WILDE — I think that the Court, so far as is possible, ought to use the power conferred on it by the 73rd section of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, for the purpose of expediting and rendering as economical as possible the administration of the estates of persons who die intestate. In this case both the persons who are equally and solely interested in the unadministered estate of the deceased are willing that there should be a grant of administration to them jointly, and the only question is, whether the Court is, by the terms of the 73rd section, precluded from giving effect to so desirable and beneficial an arrangement, and is bound to follow the strict rule laid down by the statute 21 Hen. 8. c. 5. s. 3, viz., to grant administration to the next-of-kin only. I am of opinion that the terms of the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. are wide enough to admit of its application to the present case. The grant, therefore, may go as prayed under that section upon the consent of J. L. Grundy being brought into the registry.

Will—Realty—Appointment of Executor—Executor renouncing—Probate.

The Court will grant probate of a will which disposes of realty only if an executor be appointed therein, even although such executor renounces his rights under it.

The deceased, Elizabeth Jordan, duly executed her last will and testament, and therein appointed an executor, who formally renounced probate of the same. The will disposed of realty only.

Pritchard moved for administration with the will annexed to be granted to the next-of-kin.—The deceased having appointed an executor died testate, and probate will be granted of her will. The 79th section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, which enacts that where a person, appointed an executor, renounces, his rights as such shall wholly cease; and the representation of the testator and the administration of his effects shall devolve and be committed in like manner as if such person had not been appointed executor, was not intended to affect the question whether the deceased died testate or intestate, but to get rid of the necessity of citing the renouncing executor, if a second grant was required. — He referred to Williams on Executors, part 1, book 3, O'Dwyer v. Geare (1) and In the goods of Noddings (2).

SIR J. P. WILDE.—I think you are entitled to the grant. The general principle is laid down by Sir Edward Vaughan Williams in the following terms: "The bare nomination of an executor, without giving any legacy or appointing anything to be done by him, is sufficient to make it a will, and as a will it is to be proved." If the nomination of an executor in this case made a will which must be proved, the renunciation by the executor cannot prevail to alter the effect produced by his nominator. This view was affirmed by Sir C. Cresswell, in O'Dwyer v. Geare, in the following words: "I apprehend that what Dr. Wambey meant was, that the original appointment of executors would operate to prevent an intestacy as to any part of the property of the deceased; and that when they renounced, it did not so operate as to cause an intestacy. I agree to that." Under these circumstances, the party is entitled to a grant of administration with the will annexed.

Will—Appointment of Executors.

The deceased left in her will "one sovereign to the executor and witness of my will for their trouble, to see that everything is divided justly." No person was named as executor in the will; but opposite the names of the attesting witnesses, and beneath the signature of the deceased, were the words "witnesses and executors," which words were written by one of such witnesses by direction of the deceased previous to the execution of the will:—Held, that the deceased had failed to make a lawful appointment of executors.

Martha Woods, late of Guy's Cottage, Nelson Street, Southwark, died on the 13th of November, 1867, having executed a will on the 28th of October, 1867, by which she gave her property to her two sons, Henry Woods and John Woods. The will concluded as follows:

"I also leave the sum of one sovereign each to the executor and witness of my will for their trouble, to see that everything is divided justly between them (the sons).

"Signed by me this twenty-eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-seven.

"Witnesses and executors.	{	Albert Jackson Prestage, Guy's Cottage, Nelson Street, Bermondsey.
	{	Daniel Joseph Doherty,
		24, Little George Street, Bermondsey."

By the affidavit of Daniel Joseph Doherty, it appeared that, in the week previous to the execution of the will, the testatrix sent for him and informed him that she was having a will prepared, and wished him and Albert Jackson Prestage to be the executors thereof, to which the deponent assented; that on the day of and previous to the execution, the testatrix again informed the deponent that she wished him to be appointed one of the executors of her will with Albert Jackson Prestage; and that Mr. Prestage, before the execution of the will and at the request of the deceased, wrote the words "witnesses and executors" as they now appear in the margin of the will, and opposite to the signature of the witnesses; and that the testatrix intended such words to form part of her will.

Dr. Spinks applied that probate might be granted to Messrs. Prestage and Doherty as the executors according to the tenor of the will. Although the words beneath the signature of the deceased cannot be taken as part of the will, they may be read to explain an ambiguity arising in the will and the intention of the deceased.

SIR J. P. WILDE—I quite agree that if the testatrix had in the body of the will left money to the executors, and had then gone on to say that they would be the witnesses to her will, that would have afforded some certain indication that she intended that the office of executorship should be performed by those who afterwards turned out to be the witnesses of her will. She would have defined whom she meant in a way that the Court could have carried out her wishes. But I am afraid she has not gone so far as that. If she had said, "I leave one sovereign each to the executors and witnesses of my will," it might have been that the same person was executor and witness; but such is not her language. It is consistent with that, that the executor and witness were two different persons, and such a construction is confirmed by what follows; it is for their trouble, in the plural, not for his, which it would be if the two words "executor" and "witness" referred to the same person. The subsequent words would then apply to the executor only, and not to the witness. Under these circumstances, I cannot hold that the testatrix has appointed any executor. Underneath the signature of the testatrix is a passage which does not form part of the will itself, but in which the testatrix states whom she desired to appoint her executors. The Court can have no doubt that was her desire, but it cannot grant the application that probate shall issue to those persons.

PITT v. PITT.

Dissolution of Marriage—Adultery with Person unknown—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85.—Rules 4, 5 and 6.

A husband petitioning for a divorce must obtain leave to proceed without making a co-respondent, although the petition only charges adultery with a person unknown.

This was a petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage.

The respondent did not appear.

The petition alleged that the petitioner left England on the 17th of September, 1855, and did not return until the month of June, 1858; and that during his absence from England the respondent, at some place or places in England, committed adultery with some person or persons unknown to the petitioner; and that, on the 3rd of July, 1856, she gave birth to a child of which the petitioner was not the father.

Searle, for the petitioner, moved for direction as to the mode of trial.

[The JUDGE ORDINARY.—The petitioner has not made any person a co-respondent, and has not obtained from this Court leave to proceed without doing so.]

When, as in this case, the adulterer is unknown, it is not necessary to apply to the Court to dispense with a co-respondent.

[The JUDGE ORDINARY.—Hitherto it has been the practice to make such an application.]

No doubt; but I submit that such an application is unnecessary. The 28th section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. enacts that, "Upon any such petition presented by a husband, the petitioner shall make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent to the said petition, unless on special grounds, to be allowed by the Court, he shall be excused from so doing."

The word "alleged" implies that the adulterer is known. The section is therefore inapplicable to a case like the present where the adulterer is unknown, and the adultery is an inference from the birth of a child under such circumstances that the petitioner could not have begotten it. The decisions and practice of the Court are consistent with such a construction of the section. It has been held that every alleged adulterer must be made a co-respondent, and consequently if adultery be charged with A. and B, both A. and B. must be made co-respondents, unless upon application to the Court the petitioner is excused from making either or both a co-respondent. But it has never been considered necessary where a petition, as is often the case, charges adultery with A. and also with some person unknown; that an application must be made to the Court for leave to proceed without making the unknown person a co-respondent. If such an application is unnecessary when adultery is charged with an unknown person and also with one named, it cannot be necessary when adultery is charged only with an unknown person.—He referred to Codrington v. Codrington and Anderson (1) and Rules 4, 5. and 6.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—I think that where a petition alleges adultery, there is an "alleged adulterer" within the meaning of section 28. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, although the adulterer may be unknown, and therefore that an application must be made to the Court for leave to proceed without making a co-respondent.

Searle.—The petitioner is poor. Will you, to save the expense of a fresh application, grant him leave now to proceed without making a co-respondent? The affidavit in support of the petition states that the adulterer is unknown to the petitioner, and that is a fact to which he only can depose.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—The usual practice is not to dispense with a co-respondent upon the affidavit of the petitioner only. I do not intend to abandon that practice; but under the special circumstances of the case, I will now give the petitioner leave to proceed without making a co-respondent.

 March 3, 10. }

Dissolution of Marriage—Adultery with the Co-Respondent—Damages and Costs against the Co-Respondent—Co-Respondent Bankrupt—Attachment—Practice.

A decree having been made in a suit of dissolution of marriage, whereby the co-respondent was condemned in damages and costs, and an order issued that the damages should be paid into the registry within three weeks from the time such order was served upon him, before the expiration of that period, and before the costs had been taxed, the co-respondent, on his own petition, was adjudicated a bankrupt, and subsequently he obtained an order of discharge:—Held, that as both the damages and costs were debts which might have been proved under the bankruptcy, and are covered by the order of discharge, this Court could not allow an attachment to issue against the co-respondent for their non-payment.

In this case a petition had been filed by Henry Walter Wood, of Nottingham, architect, praying for a dissolution of his marriage with Frances Mary Wood, by reason of her adultery with the co-respondent George Eaton Stanger. The facts in issue were determined before the Judge Ordinary and a special jury on the 6th, 7th and 8th of March, 1867, when the jury found that the respondent and co-respondent had committed adultery together, and assessed the damages at 3,000*l.*, and the Judge Ordinary made a decree nisi dissolving the marriage, and condemned the co-respondent in the costs of the suit. The decree nisi was made absolute on the 5th of November, 1867. On the 12th of November, 1867, an order was made by the Judge Ordinary that the co-respondent should within three weeks from the service on him of such order pay into the registry of the court the sum of 3,000*l.*, the amount awarded as damages on the 8th day of March, 1867. This order was served upon the co-respondent on the 15th of November, 1867. On the 3rd of December, 1867, the co-respondent was adjudicated a bankrupt in the Court of Bankruptcy for the Birmingham district. On the 28th of January, 1868, the Judge Ordinary made an order that the co-respondent should within one week from the service thereof pay to the petitioner, or to Mr. Needham, his solicitor, the sum of 719*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.*, being the amount of the petitioner's costs as taxed, and the sum of 1*l.* 18*s.* 2*d.*, the costs incidental to such order. The order was served on the co-respondent on the 31st of January, 1868. On the 4th of February, 1868, the co-respondent obtained his final order of discharge in the Court of Bankruptcy. The order for the payment of the damages into the registry and for the costs not having been obeyed, on the 18th of February a motion was made for a rule nisi on Mr. Stanger to shew cause why a writ of attachment should not issue under the seal of the Court against him for disobedience to such orders, which had been duly served upon him.

Sargood and Searle, on behalf of the co-respondent, shewed cause. — Both the damages and costs were liabilities incurred previous to the adjudication of bankruptcy and were provable under such bankruptcy, and consequently the co-respondent, by his order of discharge, has obtained an acquittance from such liabilities. By the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. s. 149. a person entitled to enforce against a bankrupt payment of any money, costs or expenses by process of contempt issuing out of any court, shall be entitled to come in as a creditor under the bankruptcy and prove for the amount payable under the process, subject as to costs to proper taxation. By sections 161, 162. and 165, the order of discharge upon taking effect shall discharge the bankrupt from all debts, claims or demands provable under the bankruptcy, and from the effects of any process issuing out of any court for contempt of Court in the non-payment of money, or of costs or expenses; and if the bankrupt after the order of discharge be arrested or detained in custody for any such debt, claim, or demand, where judgment has been obtained before the order of discharge takes effect, he shall be released. If, therefore, the Court should order the attachment to issue, the co-respondent will be entitled to be discharged at once. The Court will refuse to make an order which must be inoperative, and to hold the co-respondent personally liable for the payment of costs and damages under circumstances in which the legislature intended he should be free from liability. Although the order for costs is dated subsequently to the adjudication in bankruptcy, the liability accrued at the time of trial, and was enforceable by process of contempt—12 & 13 Vict. c. 106. s. 181. They referred to Dickens v. Dickens (1), Ex parte Skinner (2), Ex parte Crabtree in re Taylor (3), Ex parte Griffiths in re Griffiths (4).

Dr. Spinks and C. Russell, for the petitioner.—The position of the petitioner as regards the damages is very peculiar. By the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 33, after the verdict, the Court shall have power to direct in what manner such damages shall be paid or applied; and to direct that the whole or any part thereof shall be settled for the benefit of the children, if any, of the marriage, or as a provision for the maintenance of the wife. Damages, therefore, are not a debt due to the petitioner—Narracott v. Narracott (5), Billingay v. Billingay (6); and he, not being a creditor, could not prove for such damages under the bankruptcy, and the setting out the amount of damages in the schedule as a debt, was a misdescription. As to the costs, they were payable a week after the service of the order, which was on the 31st day of January last. They were not, therefore, payable until the 7th of February, but the order of discharge was made on the 4th of February. The costs, therefore, are not covered by the order of discharge. As regards the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, it cannot apply to any judgment, decree or order from this Court, which was not in existence in 1849. They referred to Phillips v. Poland (7), and Lees v. Newton (8).

Sargood.—If the petitioner is not a person entitled to the damages, or one for whose benefit they will be paid, why does he make the present application?

[The JUDGE ORDINARY.—If the petitioner had proved for the damages as a debt, could he have received a dividend out of the estate?]

No. The official assignee would have taken care that the dividend was paid into the registry. The Court will never allow a dividend to be paid to one who is clearly only acting in a representative capacity. It is not inconsistent to say that a person is entitled to enforce payment of a debt by process of contempt, although if the debt be paid he may not receive it to his own use.

The JUDGE ORDINARY (March 10).—The question here raised is, whether the bankruptcy of the co-respondent has or has not had the effect of discharging him from the liability to pay the damages and costs awarded against him in this suit. The verdict passed on the 8th of March, 1867. But a verdict creates no debt. On the 5th of November, 1867, the decree nisi, which had been made on the 8th of March, 1867, was made absolute. By the terms of that decree, the co-respondent was condemned in the costs of the suit. On the 12th of November an order was made by this Court, on the application of the petitioner, that the co-respondent should within three weeks from the service of the order pay into the registry 3,000*l.*, the amount of the damages. This order was served on the 15th of November. On the 3rd of December the co-respondent was, on his own petition, adjudicated a bankrupt. It thus appears that at the time of the adjudication the co-respondent had been ordered to pay both damages and costs, though, as respects the damages, the furthest time allowed for their payment had not expired; and in respect of costs, no taxation had been had upon which any order to pay a definite sum could be made. It is beyond argument that those creditors only can prove under the bankruptcy who are creditors at the date of the adjudication. This has been already decided—Phillips v. Poland (7), and in other cases. Two points are made: first, that the petitioner was not a creditor on the 3rd of December; and next, he has never at any time been a creditor in respect of the damages. The 149th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, defines a creditor for this purpose as “a person entitled to enforce against the bankrupt payment of any money, costs or expenses by process of contempt." I am of opinion that the petitioner was on the 3rd of December a person so entitled, both as regards the damages and the costs, within the meaning of this section. And, first, as to the damages, this Court had, at his instance and application, ordered the co-respondent to pay them; and, although the Court had further indicated that they should be paid into court instead of into his own hand, the petitioner was still entitled to enforce the payment thereof by process of contempt. Indeed, this is the very right he is by the present motion attempting to exercise, and, but for the bankruptcy proceedings, would undoubtedly be entitled to enforce. The case of Lees v. Newton (8) has a direct bearing on this part of the case. It was there held that an order of the Court of Chancery to pay a sum of money into court created a debt, and that the bankrupt was, after his discharge, entitled to be set free from an attachment issued to enforce it. But it was argued, that the three weeks after the service of the order had not expired at the date of the adjudication, and consequently no process of contempt for disobedience of the order could have been issued at that date. This is true. But the language of the section points, I think, to the character of the obligation and the means by which it may be enforced, not to the time at which it must be discharged. Debitum in presenti, solvendum in futuro. The order of this Court to pay created, I conceive, a provable debt, and this debt stood in the same position with other ordinary debts existing at the date of the adjudication, and payable at a date subsequent, which, by the provisions of the Bankruptcy Acts, are provable with a rebate of interest if necessary. Next, as to the costs. The words at the close of the section 149. (24 & 25 Vict. c. 134), "subject to such ascertaining of the amount as may be properly had by taxation or otherwise," imply that the application of the section was not intended to be confined to the cases in which the costs had been taxed and a definite sum ordered to be paid before the adjudication. For these reasons, I think the damages and costs were provable debts. If so, no doubt the bankrupt's discharge covers them; and if so, it would be monstrous for this Court to issue an attachment to enforce their payment. It only remains to say one word on the practical effect of thus deciding. It is said that the bankruptcy has been resorted to on purpose to escape from the penalties of the bankrupt's misdeeds. This is very probable. But it must be borne in mind that the legislature has visited the offence of adultery with no penalty, not even a pecuniary one, that the damages recovered in a divorce suit are assessed as a money compensation to the petitioner, although by a singular anomaly the Court is afterwards empowered to divert the money, when recovered, into other channels. To whatever extent the offender is able to make this money payment, his pecuniary means ought not to be allowed to escape. But once grant that his means are insufficient, and it becomes contrary to the spirit both of the Divorce Acts and of the Bankruptcy Acts, that he should be subjected to an imprisonment, which may satisfy the purposes of punishment or retribution, but which is likely to extinguish rather than advance his means of paying the debt. The rule for an attachment must therefore be discharged, but without costs.

Feb. 4, 11, 18. } ANDERSON.

The Court has power, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 36, to order a party to the suit to file an affidavit setting out what letters written to or by the deceased, or by his direction, are in the custody or under the control of such party, even although the letters are not distinctly affirmed to have reference to the testamentary intentions of the deceased.

Discovery is a purpose auxiliary to the trial of a question of fact.

William Anderson, of Torquay, Devonshire, a general merchant, died on the 12th of November, 1867. The plaintiffs, William Hunt and William Gotbed, propounded a will of the deceased; and the defendant, John Anderson, the natural and lawful son of the deceased, pleaded that the will was not executed in accordance with the provisions of the statute 1 Vict. c. 26; that the deceased, at the time of the date of the will, was not of sound mind; and that it was obtained from the deceased by the undue influence and fraud of Hepzibah Clark and William Hunt and others acting with them. Notice having been given to the plaintiffs that the Court would be moved to order them to file a further affidavit as to scripts, and also an affidavit setting forth whether they have in their possession or under their control any letters written in the years 1865, 1866 and 1867, relating to the management of the affairs of the deceased in this cause, and to the exclusion of his son, the defendant, from any control over his affairs, and in the preparation and execution of the alleged will propounded by the plaintiffs, by Hepzibah Clark, in the name of the deceased, and signed by the deceased, to William Hunt, and any such letters written by the said Hepzibah Clark, in her own name, but purporting to act as agent of the deceased to William Hunt, and any such letters written by the said William Hunt, or by any person in his behalf, to the deceased and the said Hepzibah Clark, and any such letters which passed during the years 1865, 1866 and 1867, between the said William Hunt and William Gotbed, and the said Hepzibah Clark and William Gotbed; and also to shew cause why they should not further state whether any letters, such as are above described, and other scripts were found in the repositories of the deceased after his death, and whether any such letters and scripts as are above described have been destroyed since the death of the deceased, and if they have been destroyed why and by whose directions they were destroyed, and why they should not set out the substance and effect of such letters and scripts, if any, so destroyed; and, further, why the said plaintiffs should not produce to the said defendant, or file in the Registry for the inspection of the defendant, any such letters and scripts as are now in their possession or under their control. On the

The application was supported by an affidavit to the effect that in the years 1865, 1866 and up to the death of the deceased on the 12th of November, 1867, a constant correspondence was carried on between the said Hepzibah Clark, acting as agent and amanuensis of the said deceased, and the said William Hunt, and that a great number of letters were written by William Hunt, addressed to the said deceased, and were opened and read by Hepzibah Clark; and, further, that many, if not all, of such letters related to the preparation and execution of the will propounded. Also, that during the same period, a number of letters were written by Hepzibah Clark in her own name, but purporting to be written by her as agent of the said deceased, to the said William Hunt, and by the said William Hunt to Hepzibah Clark, as the agent of the deceased; that after the death of the deceased, certain envelopes of letters, the addresses on which were in the handwriting of William Hunt, were found, without the inclosures, in a bookcase in the dining-room of the deceased's house; that on Hepzibah Clark being asked where the inclosures were, she answered, "The letters are all safe." And on being further questioned why they had been removed, she declined to answer. On the other hand, the plaintiffs deposed that no letters from or to the deceased having reference to his testamentary affairs were in their possession.

Lopes (Feb. 18) shewed cause against the rule.—First, he contended, that even if the Court possessed the powers of a superior Court given by the Common Law Procedure Acts, it could not put in force the 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. s. 50. in this case, because the affidavits did not indicate with reasonable certainty what documents were referred to, or in whose custody they were supposed to be—Day's Common Law Procedure Acts, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125. s. 50, note; Bray v. Finch (1). Secondly, this Court was not in existence when the Common Law Procedure Acts passed, and cannot, therefore, be included in the term "superior courts" therein contained.

(1) 1 Hurl. & N. 468; s.c. 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 91.

[SIR J. P. WILDE.—The question is not whether this is a superior Court under the Common Law Procedure Acts, but whether the powers given by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 36, namely, that generally for all purposes of or auxiliary to the trial of questions of fact by a jury, before the Court itself, and also for all purposes in relation or consequential upon the direction of issues, the Court of Probate shall have the same jurisdiction, powers and authority in all respects as belong to any superior Court of common law, or to any Judge thereof, or to the High Court of Chancery, or any Judge thereof, for the like purposes, whether such powers enable the Court to grant this application. The question is, what construction should be put upon those words?]

Lopes contended that reading the 36th section with the 33rd and others, it was clearly intended to limit the exercise of those powers to the actual trial itself.—He referred to Fuller v. Ingram (2).

Dr. Spinks and Searle appeared for the defendants.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—I am satisfied this order ought to be made. I consider that if the Court of Chancery would hold that this is a matter in which an order for discovery ought to issue, it should be made by this Court. It is said that in the Common Law Courts, under the Common Law Procedure Acts, the matters stated in the affidavits would not justify such an order; but I intend to proceed under the 36th section of the original Probate Act. It is peculiar that until last summer no application should have been made to this Court to enforce discovery. At the death of the deceased all his papers necessarily fall into the hands of his executors or his next-of-kin, and, although on the trial of an issue in a testamentary suit it is of the highest importance that the party holding such papers should not keep them for his own exclusive use, no practice up to the present time has been introduced into this court to remedy the inconvenience. In the course of last summer an application for the discovery of documents and letters was made to me in the case of Peacock v. Lowe (3), but at that time the 36th section of the Probate Act was not brought to my attention, and I rejected the application. The parties were thereby sent to the Court of Chancery, and filed their bill, and they have remained in a court of equity ever since. Now another application is made to me, and the section of the Probate Act is before the Court. No doubt the words of the 36th section are very general, and therefore ambiguous: "Generally for all purposes of, or auxiliary to, the trial of questions of fact by a jury before the Court itself, the Court of Probate shall have the same jurisdiction, powers and authority in all respects as belong to any superior Court of Common Law or to any Judge thereof, or to the High Court of Chancery, or to any Judge thereof, for the like purposes." It is essential that all the necessary papers should be open to the inspection and for the use of both sides, and it is a denial of justice to compel one of the parties to go to another Court to obtain a discovery as to such papers. The Court will be indisposed to put a narrow construction on the words of the 36th section. They are wide enough, I think, to enable me to grant discovery, not only as to testamentary documents and other papers throwing light upon the testamentary intentions of the deceased, but also as to correspondence, letters written by and to the testator, which, as applicable to an issue of sanity, are of the highest importance to the suitors. I think they fall within the words of the section, and such discovery is auxiliary to the trial of the questions of fact in dispute; indeed, such questions often cannot be fairly tried without such discovery. The Court has a large latitude; it has not only the powers of a superior Court of Common Law, but also of the Court of Chancery. The correspondence asked for ought to be produced, or, if the plaintiffs have not got it, they must file an affidavit to that effect. I cannot, however, make any order on Miss Clark, but the plaintiffs in their affidavit must state whether or no such letters are in their custody or under their control.

ARCHER v. BURKE.

Testamentary Suit—Amendment of Declaration — Withdrawal of Defendant — Costs—Practice.

The plaintiff propounded the will of the deceased in a declaration in the ordinary form, and the defendant pleaded thereto. Subsequently the plaintiff brought in a special declaration in lieu of the first, and in such special declaration he alleged that the will had been executed under the circumstances, and with the formalities required by the law of the State of New York, America; that the deceased at the time was domiciled in that State; and that after his death the will received probate in the competent court of the State. The defendant pleaded to this declaration, and evidence was taken on both sides, under a requisition directed to the authorities of the State of New York. Afterwards the plaintiff applied to amend his special declaration by adding a clause that the deceased was a British subject, and had his domicil of origin in Ireland. The amendment having been made, the defendant withdrew from the suit:—Held, that as the plaintiff, in amending his special declaration, had relinquished the legal position intended to be maintained by it, the defendant was not liable for any costs incurred subsequently to the filing of such declaration.

Joseph Burke, late of the city of Brooklyn, in the county of Kings, in the State of New York, United States of America, died on the 10th of April, 1865. The plaintiff, Henry Anderson Archer, propounded a will of the deceased, dated the 24th of March, 1865, (of which he was named sole executor) in the ordinary form, but with a second paragraph to the effect that such will was duly executed, and is a good and valid will according to the law of the United States of North America, and that it was on the 20th of June, 1865, admitted to probate in the county of Kings aforesaid. The defendant, Henry Burke, the natural and lawful brother of the deceased, to this pleaded, first, that the will was not executed in accordance with the provisions of the 1 Vict. c. 26, and that the deceased on the day the will bears date was not of sound mind. To the first plea the plaintiff demurred, on the ground that the deceased at the time he executed his will, and from thenceforward to his death, was domiciled in the United States; and therefore the form of execution of his will would be governed by the law of the United States, and not by the 1 Vict. c. 26. On the second plea he took issue. On the 19th of December, 1865, the plaintiff applied for, and by consent of the defendant obtained leave to file a special declaration in lieu of the one above referred to. The special declaration, brought in on the 5th of January, 1866, was to the following effect:—Joseph Burke, of &c., made and executed his last will and testament according to the laws of the said State of New York, on the 24th of March, 1865, and therein appointed the said Henry Anderson Archer sole executor; that the said will, after having been reduced into writing, and read over to the said Joseph Burke, was signed at the foot or end thereof in the presence of two witnesses, to wit, who were both there present at the same time; and was also in their presence declared by the said Joseph Burke to be his last will and testament; that the said witnesses then severally, at the request of the said Joseph Burke, signed their names as witnesses at the end of the said will, in the presence of the said Joseph Burke, and that at the time of the execution of the said will the said Joseph Burke was over the age of twenty-one years, and was of sound mind and memory, and was not under any restraint. Secondly, that at the time of the execution of the said will, and also at the time of his death, the said Joseph Burke was legally domiciled in the said State of New York. Thirdly, that the said will was and is valid according to the law of the said State of New York. That after the death of the said Joseph Burke, the said Henry Anderson Archer proceeded to prove the said last will and testament in the Surrogate's Court held in and for the county of Kings, in the city of Brooklyn, in the said State of New York, being the competent Court having jurisdiction in that behalf. That the defendant, Henry Burke, was therein duly cited to appear and attend the probate of the said last will and testament; that the defendant did by his counsel so appear; and that on the 20th of June, 1865, the Judge or Surrogate of the said Court, having duly received the depositions, on oath, of witnesses produced to prove the said will, and being satisfied that the said will was and is genuine, did adjudge and decree that the said will was duly executed by the said Joseph Burke; that the said Joseph Burke deceased, at the time he executed the same, was in all respects competent to devise real estate, and not under restraint; that the said will is a valid will of real and personal estate, and that the proofs are sufficient; and the said Court did order that the said will pass on examination being recorded; and that letters testamentary issue to the executor in the said will mentioned on his taking the oath required by the statute. That the said Henry Anderson Archer, the said executor, having taken the said oath, letters testamentary were issued to him. That by the law of the said State of New York, the said decree or judgment of the said Judge or Surrogate was and is a final decree, unless the same shall have been appealed against within thirty days from the date thereof. That more than thirty days have elapsed since the said judgment or decree was pronounced, and that no appeal therefrom has been prosecuted by the said Henry Burke, or any other person. That by reason of the premises, the said judgment or decree touching the validity of the said last will and testament in writing, is binding and conclusive. The defendant to this declaration pleaded that the will propounded was not executed in accordance with the law of the State of New York; that the deceased was not of sound mind at the time it bears date; that he was not at that time or at the time of his death domiciled in the State of New York, and that the will was and is not valid according to the law of the State of New York; and he further traversed all the other facts set out in the declaration. On the 20th of March, 1866, the plaintiff obtained an order for a requisition to issue to the authorities at New York to take the evidence of the attesting witnesses to the will, and on the 13th of June, 1866, the time for the return of the requisition was enlarged, and a commission for the examination of witnesses in the State of Georgia, as also a supplemental commission for the examination of witnesses on behalf of the defendant at New York, were issued. On the 15th of January, 1867, by consent, an order was made that the evidence taken in the Court at New York should be read in this Court at the hearing of the cause, saving all just exceptions; and in Easter Term, 1867, the evidence under the requisition and commissions was returned into the probate registry from New York. On the 4th of February, 1868, application was made to the Court for permission to add at the end of the first paragraph of the declaration the following words: "That the said Joseph Burke was a British subject, and had his domicile of origin in Ireland"; the object being to bring the case within the operation of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114. The application was granted, on the payment of the costs of the amendment.

Dr. Swabey, for the defendant, said that, under the altered state of circumstances produced by the amendment of the declaration, his party wished that an order should be made for the discontinuance of the contentious proceedings. As the plaintiff would have saved all the costs incurred in taking evidence on the issues raised under his special declaration, if he had brought into action the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 114. in the first instance, he ought to pay all the costs of the defendant incurred after January, 1866, when such declaration was filed.

Dr. Spinks appeared for the plaintiff.

SIR J. P. WILDE (Feb. 24).—In this case I took time to consider the question of costs. The plaintiff propounded the will of Joseph Burke, who died domiciled in New York. In August, 1865, he filed a declaration, in which he set out that the will was executed in the presence of two witnesses, according to the requirements of the English law. Thereupon the defendant pleaded, and the plea was followed by a demurrer and replication. An order was subsequently made by consent, that the plaintiff should file another declaration. This declaration was special in form, propounding the will as an American will, and setting up a probate which had been granted in America. To this declaration also the defendant pleaded, and issue was joined, and the parties went into a mass of evidence in America. Afterwards the plaintiff again reverted to his original case, and obtained leave to amend his declaration by adding words to the effect that the deceased was a British subject, and had his domicile of origin in Ireland, and consequently the will is a valid will if executed in accordance with the provisions of the English law. Thereupon the defendant expressed a desire that the contentious proceedings shall be stopped. On the whole the result is, that a great deal of money has been most unnecessarily thrown away. The probate will be granted to the plaintiff; and as the defendant ought not to have contested the matter,—he, as it now appears, having no reasonable ground for doing so,—I shall condemn him in the costs of proving the will, save what I may call the American digression; in such costs, in fact, as, if the suit had gone on as first instituted, and the defendant had opposed, he ought to have paid. From the point of divergence, that is, from the time of filing the special declaration, the defendant will pay no costs. It may be that the will was a perfectly good will as propounded in the special declaration; and if the plaintiff had stood upon the evidence as taken on that declaration, and had not amended, he might have been entitled to his whole costs against the defendant; but as that issue was not tried out, neither party can have an order as to costs on that part of the case. So far as the evidence taken in America went to prove the due execution of the will, the plaintiff will have his costs in reference thereto. The costs given against the defendant are such as would have been incurred if the suit had gone on as originally instituted, the costs of proving the due execution of the will and of the capacity of the deceased.

The testator in his will left his property, after the payment of his debts and funeral expenses, to certain persons, and constituted and appointed A. and B. to be his trustees, with full power to dispose of all his property, and convert the same into money, to be deposited in government funds for the purposes above stated:—Held, that A. and B. were executors according to the tenor of the will.

Charles Chappell, late of Cowley Road, Surrey, died on the 12th of November, 1867. He executed a will, dated the 23rd of August, 1864, which contained the following clauses bearing upon the appointment of executors: "I give, devise and bequeath all my property as under, if it shall please God that the under-named persons outlive me; and then I do give them, after my funeral expenses are paid, together with all my just debts, the sums stated against each name. To Alfred Charles Sedgwick, &c. . . . The residue of my property that may belong to me, or that I may be entitled to, of whatever nature or kind, after the payment of the above-mentioned bequests, funeral expenses and just debts, I do give unto the two children of my brother Samuel Chappell; and I do hereby constitute and appoint Abiezer Harper, Esq., controller of the Custom Fund, and Charles Ellis, of 91, Lower Thames Street, London, wine-merchant, to be my trustees; and I do give unto my said trustees 50*l.* each, with full power to dispose of all property, houses, railway shares, money in the funds, private property of all descriptions, and convert the same into money, to be deposited in government funds for the purposes above stated."

THOMPSON v. THOMPSON AND JOHNSON.

Alimony—Husband a Master Mariner out of Employ.

On an application for alimony pendente lite on the husband's answers, from which it appeared that he was a master mariner and a part-owner in a sailing vessel, but that he had not had any employment for three months, the Court nevertheless allotted alimony on the average of his admitted earnings during the previous three years.

In this case the husband, Michael Thompson, of Liverpool, Lancashire, petitioned the Court for a dissolution of his marriage with the respondent, Annie Thompson, by reason of her adultery with James Johnson. The respondent, in her answer, denied the adultery, and pleaded condonation, connivance and cruelty against her husband. On the 1st of October, 1867, the respondent filed a petition for alimony, to which the husband answered, and by order of the Court subsequently filed, on the 11th of December, 1867, an additional answer. The petition stated that Michael Thompson has for the last seventeen years been, and now is, a master mariner, and from such business derives the net annual income of 144*l.*, or some other considerable amount, and he is half-owner of the barque Yumuri, of St. John's, New Brunswick. It also set out other property, of which, however, there was no proof before the Court. Mr. Thompson's answer, as amended, stated, "I say that when in employment I earn as a master mariner 144*l.* per annum, and no more; but I have been out of employment ever since the 25th of September last, and have no present prospect of obtaining any employment in consequence of the shipping trade being at the present time in a very depressed state. I am not half-owner of the said ship or barque Yumuri, but I own one-fourth part of the said vessel; and the market value of such fourth part at the present time is at most 500*l.*"

Bridgman, for the respondent, applied to the Court to allot alimony to her on the husband's answers.

Searle, for the husband.—On the answers the only property admitted is a share in a barque valued at 500*l.* The husband distinctly swears that he is out of employ, and making no money as a master mariner.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—I think in this case an order ought to be made allowing to the wife some alimony. The ground or principle on which the Court acts is to order such an income to be paid to the wife as it considers reasonable under the circumstances, taking into consideration the average earnings of the husband for the three previous years. It may occur that the actual source of income of a person in the past years may not be the source for the future, although he may derive a livelihood from similar sources,—as a medical man who may make a large professional income in the future, although perhaps not from the same patients from whom he derived his income previously. To apply this general principle to the present case: a master mariner may, perhaps, at the date of his answer, not have been in command of a vessel; but the Court will presume that, according to the ordinary course of events, he is now or will be shortly in a similar position. Looking at the amount of the emoluments for the three years last past admitted by the husband, and assuming that some such will be the amount for the future, I shall take his income at 160*l.* per annum, and allot to the wife one-fifth thereof, 32*l.* per annum.

HAWKE v. WEDDERBURN.

Administration—Creditor—Widow and Residuary Legatee—Insolvent Estate—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73.—Practice.

The Court will not grant administration with the will annexed to a creditor under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73. by reason of the insolvency of the estate of the deceased, if the widow and residuary legatee be willing to take it; much less will it do so if the insolvency is disputed.

John Hawke, of St. Alban's Road, Kensington, gentleman, died on the 21st of April, 1867, having executed a will bearing date the 20th of April, 1867, in which he named his wife, Ann Nichol Hawke, residuary legatee for life, but did not appoint an executor. On the 15th of June, 1867, a caveat was entered in the goods of the deceased by Charles Horsley, a creditor, and in September caveats were entered by four other creditors. One of these, Charles Adrian Wedderburn, applied for an administrator to be appointed pendente lite, and nominated for that purpose Henry Croysdill, of the Old Jewry, London, accountant. He filed affidavits to support this application, in which it was stated that the deceased had left debts due to him as an attorney, and also a policy upon his own life in the Imperial Life Assurance Company; that he had died insolvent, and that his property was lying unproductive. On the other hand, William Humphries, one of the trustees named in the deceased's will, swore that he was intimately acquainted with the deceased John Hawke and his affairs, that the deceased had left property sufficient to pay his creditors their debts in full, and that he as a creditor desired that the administration should be granted to the widow.

Interdict, for Mr. Wedderburn, moved that administration should be granted to Mr. Croysdill accordingly.

Patchett, for Mrs. Hawke.—As the deceased made a will and appointed his wife residuary legatee, who is quite willing to take administration, there is no pretence for the interference of the creditors. If properly administered, the estate is sufficient to pay all the debts.

Sir J. R. WILDE.—The question in this case is, whether the next-of-kin, or rather the widow, who is also the residuary legatee under the will of the deceased, is entitled to a grant of administration, notwithstanding certain persons come forward who say that they are creditors of the deceased, and that his estate is insolvent. It is said that the only question to be considered is, who has the interest? Wherever the interest is, to that person the Court will grant administration, and will even exclude the widow or legatee if they be shown clearly no longer to have an interest in the property. Before the Probate

Act passed, and before the 73rd section (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77.) was enacted, the Probate Court could not have listened to such an application. It was imperative that the grant should be made to the widow. No doubt the 73rd section includes in its wide application a power to pass over such a person, or even the executor, if for any reason he does not choose to act or is out of the way; but here the person who comes forward alleges no special circumstances, but merely that the estate is insolvent. It is very easy to show that the estate is apparently insolvent, and yet afterwards property may turn up which constitutes part of the estate, and the creditor would be entitled to receive it although his debt had been discharged. It is under any circumstances difficult to determine that an estate is insolvent; but here the fact is disputed; there are affidavits on both sides. Where the fact is disputed, I think it is clear that the Court should not pass over either a party entitled under the statute, or where there is a will the persons entitled under the will, even although the 73rd section may give it the power to do so. Although the creditor has an interest in the estate, his right to administration has never been dealt with in this Court on that ground. In Dabbs v. Chismas (1) Sir John Nicholl said, "A creditor cannot deny an interest or oppose a will, but a creditor in possession of an administration may do both," and Sir W. Wynne, in Elme v. De Costa said (2), "The right of a creditor is only this: he cannot be paid his debt till a representation to the deceased is made; he can then call on all who have a right to administer; before an administration is granted, if a will be produced, the creditor has no right to contradict or deny it; for if there is a will or the next-of-kin claims the administration then a person offers to make himself a representative, and the creditor gets all he has a right to. But when a creditor has obtained the administration the case is different;" and Sir Herbert Jenner, in Henzies v. Pulbrook (3), reviewed these cases, and agreed with them, and further said, "I apprehend that a creditor, except by the practice of the Court, has no right to the administration of the estate of a party deceased; he has no right by the statute; he is the appointee of the Court; and I do not know, if the circumstances showed that the creditor was not a proper person, that the Court might not appoint another person." Looking then at the principles long established in the Courts of Probate, and the fact that in this case it is doubtful whether the estate is insolvent or not, I shall grant administration to the widow; and as the application by the creditor is contrary to the practice of the Court, I shall condemn him in the costs.

(2) 1 Phill. 177.

(3) 2 Curt. 845.

MATRIMONIAL SUIT—DERING, vs. DERING AND BLAKELEY (The Queen's Proctor and others intervening). April 21, 1868.

Matrimonial Suit—Intervention of the Queen's Proctor—No Affidavits filed by Him—Pleas of Connivance, Collusion and Misconduct conducing to Adultery—Practice.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage by reason of the adultery of the respondent and co-respondent, a decree nisi was made. Subsequently certain parties intervened and filed affidavits, and two questions were directed to be tried by a special jury, namely, whether the petitioner had connived at the adultery of the respondent, and whether the decree nisi had been obtained by collusion. Afterwards the Queen's Proctor obtained leave to intervene, and, without filing affidavits, pleaded collusion, that material facts had not been brought to the knowledge of the Court, connivance, and misconduct which conduced to the adultery. Held, that when the Queen's Proctor has obtained leave to intervene, he may plead any material facts in addition to the plea of collusion; and that it is not necessary he should elect to proceed under the first or second part of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7, and vary his proceedings accordingly.

with Harriet Mary Dering, by reason of her adultery with Theophilus Alexander Blakeley. The petition was heard by the Judge Ordinary on the 21st of June, 1867, who pronounced a decree nisi. On the 1st and 2nd of November, 1867, appearances were entered for Mr. and Mrs. Capel, the father and mother of the respondent, and affidavits were filed on the part of the interveners, and also of the petitioner in reply. On the 14th of January, 1868, the Judge Ordinary directed that the questions of fact raised by such affidavits should be tried before the Court by a special jury. The questions as settled for the jury were: first, whether the petitioner was in any manner accessory to or connived at the adultery of the respondent with the co-respondent; secondly, whether the decree nisi obtained by the petitioner upon the 21st of June, 1867, was obtained by him by or in collusion with the respondent and co-respondent, or either of them. On the 17th of March, the Judge Ordinary gave permission to the Queen's Proctor to intervene in the cause, and directed him to file his plea within a week. The plea filed was to the following effect: first, that the parties to the said suit are and have been acting in collusion for the purpose of obtaining a decree contrary to the justice of the case; secondly, that before the commission of the acts of adultery alleged in the said petition, and after the said marriage of the said petitioner and respondent, the said respondent, Harriet Mary Dering, did, in the months of November and December, 1865, and in the months of January, February and March, 1866, at No. 1, Bolton Street, in the county of Middlesex, on divers occasions, habitually commit adultery with the said Theophilus Alexander Blakeley; thirdly, that before the commission of the acts of adultery alleged in the said petition, and after the said marriage of the said petitioner and respondent, the said respondent did, in the months of April and May, 1866, on board a certain yacht and at divers places in parts beyond the seas, on divers occasions, habitually commit adultery with the said Theophilus Alexander Blakeley; fourthly, that at the respective times of the filing of the said petition and the hearing of the said suit the said adultery above mentioned was known to the said petitioner; and was not brought before the Court; fifthly, that the said petitioner connived at the adultery alleged in the said petition and in this plea; sixthly, that the said petitioner was guilty of misconduct which conduced to the adultery alleged in the said petition and in this plea.

Horace Lloyd moved the Court to strike out of the plea filed by Her Majesty's Proctor the second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth paragraphs thereof, by reason that Her Majesty's Proctor, having elected to plead in his official capacity, and not to file affidavits as one of the general public, can only allege collusion against the parties to the suit to obtain a divorce contrary to the justice of the case.—He referred to Lautour v. Lautour (Her Majesty's Proctor intervening) (1), Masters v. Masters (Her Majesty's Proctor intervening) (2), Drummond v. Drummond (3).

W. G. Harrison, for the Queen's Proctor, opposed the motion.—If the argument on the other side be correct, the Queen's Proctor must carry on two distinct proceedings at the same time, by plea in reference to collusion and by affidavits in regard to the other matters material to be brought to the notice of the Court. At any rate, the question is not raised in the proper way. The plea should have been demurred to.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—The portion of the pleas objected to is that which alleges that certain matters were not brought to the notice of the Court at the hearing of the petition, and that the petitioner was guilty of misconduct which conduced to the adultery alleged in the petition. Under the first part of the 7th section of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, it is provided "that any person shall be at liberty, in such manner as the Court shall, by general or special order in that behalf, from time to time direct, to shew cause why the said decree should not be made absolute by reason of the same having been obtained by collusion, or by reason of material facts not brought before the Court." It is contended that in this case the Queen's Proctor is acting under this part of the section. I do not think it is quite certain that he is not acting under the other; but, assuming it to be so, that he is proceeding under this part, in what form ought he to bring before the Court the material facts therein referred to. The Court has made certain orders relating to this matter. The 68th and 69th are headed "Intervention of the Queen's Proctor"; the 70th and following, "Shewing Cause against a Decree." Under the latter, the party intervening is to enter an appearance and then file affidavits setting forth the facts on which he relies. But these cannot apply to the Queen's Proctor. If the Queen's Proctor is before the Court, having obtained leave to intervene, it cannot be necessary that he shall enter a second appearance. Having become a party to the suit on the score of collusion, and being desirous, in addition, to shew cause, by reason of material facts not having been brought to the notice of the Court, he has always done so in one and the same plea. As to what fell from Sir C. Cresswell in Drummond v. Drummond (3), even if it be taken that he had some doubt on his mind whether the Queen's Proctor had properly pleaded the adultery of the petitioner in that case, he unquestionably determined that, as the adultery had been pleaded and traversed, he must hear and dispose of the matter. The practice for the Queen's Proctor to plead not only collusion, but other matters has been followed ever since; and in the very case referred to, Lautour v. Lautour (1), that identical course was pursued. Indeed, if such matters were not pleaded, and at the hearing the facts came out, I should be bound to take notice of them. The 7th section continues as follows: "At any time during the progress of the cause, any person may give information to Her Majesty's Proctor of any matter material to the due decision of the case, who may thereupon take such steps as the Attorney General may deem necessary or expedient." It is evident, therefore, that the Queen's Proctor may, in that character and under the directions of the Attorney General, take cognizance of other matters than collusion; and it would be surely extremely inconvenient if the Court, having authority by special order to direct how the questions should be tried, should say that the Queen's Proctor, in order to prove collusion and adultery, must take two different proceedings; that if he would allege adultery, he must file affidavits, but, on the question of collusion, he must ask leave to intervene and plead under the directions of the Attorney General. I think the Court has power to allow the Queen's Proctor to bring all these matters before it in one plea; and in so deciding, I consider I act in conformity with the practice of the Court, and in accordance with the convenience of the suitors.

(1) 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Pr. M. & A. 89.

(2) 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Pr. M. & A. 7.

YEATMAN v. YEATMAN.

Desertion—Husband supporting Abandoned Wife—Cause of Desertion—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 26.

A husband who permanently puts an end to cohabitation with his wife against her consent is guilty of desertion, although he may continue to support her. The words "desertion without cause," in section 25 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, means "desertion without reasonable cause," and are equivalent to "desertion without reasonable excuse."

Simble—That conduct short of a matrimonial offence sufficient to found a decree of judicial separation, may be a sufficient cause to bar a deserted wife of all remedy for the desertion. Infirmary of temper on the part of a wife, unless shewn in some marked and intolerable excess, is not a reasonable cause for desertion.

This was a suit by a wife for a judicial separation, on the ground of desertion.

The respondent denied the desertion.

The cause was heard by the Judge Ordinary, without a jury.

Price and Staveley Hall, for the petitioner.

The respondent conducted his own case.

Cur. adv. vult.

The facts sufficiently appear in the judgment.

~~THE JUDGE ORDINARY.~~ ~~THIS IS A SUIT~~ promoted by the wife against the husband for a judicial separation, on the ground of his "desertion without cause for two years and upwards." Mr. Yeatman made the acquaintance of his wife shortly before December, 1852, when he induced her to elope with him from her relations to Gretna Green, where they were married. She was about eighteen years of age, a German by birth, but brought up in England by some German relations, with whom she was residing at the time the marriage was celebrated. This union afforded little happiness from the first. Mr. Yeatman complains of his wife's temper and conduct; she of his neglect and harshness; and in the result, after a cohabitation of something less than four years, Mr. Yeatman took her to Germany, avowedly for a stay of some weeks together; but after a few days he left her there with a relation, stating that he had to return to England on business. This was in the month of August, 1856. From that time to the present he has never cohabited with her, and this is the desertion of which his wife complains. It is plain on the testimony of both parties that Mrs. Yeatman did not acquiesce in this separation, and on many occasions entreated her husband to live with her. It is also plain that at the time when he thus left her Mr. Yeatman had made up his mind that he would not live with her any more. It was therefore a permanent abandonment of cohabitation on the husband's part, without and against the consent of his wife. But he continued to support her; and the first contention of Mr. Yeatman is that this circumstance is of paramount importance, and precludes his conduct from amounting to "desertion" within the meaning of section 26. of the Divorce Act. The word "desertion" is found several times in that act, sometimes coupled with the words "without cause," and sometimes with the words "without reasonable excuse." But in all parts of the act I think the word itself must be held to mean and define the same thing. It is true that in section 21, providing for the granting of orders protecting the wife's property, it is necessary to shew, in addition to "desertion," that "the wife is maintaining herself by her own industry or property." But this rather proves that the word "desertion" alone was intended to carry no such qualification with it than the reverse, and certainly does not aid the argument that in other parts of the act, where no such qualification is added, the word "desertion" must be construed to mean abandonment without pecuniary means. Nor could the Court, without express words for the purpose, so interpret the meaning of the legislature. A wife is entitled to her husband's society and the protection of his name and home in cohabitation. The permanent denial of these rights may be aggravated by leaving her destitute, or mitigated by a liberal provision for her support; but if the cohabitation is put an end to against the consent of the wife, and without the intention of renewing it, the matrimonial offence of desertion is in my judgment complete. The remaining question is whether Mr. Yeatman had "cause," which, I think, must mean "reasonable cause," for thus deserting his wife. Now, it must be borne in mind that, according to the matrimonial law of this country, which the Divorce Acts have not affected to touch on this head, nothing will justify a man in refusing to receive his wife except the commission of some distinct matrimonial offence, such as adultery or cruelty, upon which the Court could found a decree of judicial separation; and that in all other cases, no matter what her conduct, she can always obtain a decree enforcing cohabitation. Save then, in cases where some such a matrimonial offence has been committed, the law does not justify and support the husband in deserting, and living apart from his wife. And it may be considered hardly consistent with this to hold that any desertion can be "reasonable" which cannot be justified by proof of such offence, or, in other words, that the law should at the same time hold the desertion of the husband to have been reasonable, and yet, if asked by the wife, decree that her husband must take her back again. The inconsistency, however, is, perhaps, more apparent than real, for the legislature may have thought it right, in creating the new matrimonial offence of "desertion," to subject the remedy for it to the condition that the conduct of the party complaining should not have led to the result complained of; and if it should have done so, to deny all remedy for the desertion without affirming that the parties were legally justified in living apart. However this may be, the inconsistency, if it exists, is the work of the legislature as interpreted by the Full Court of Divorce. For in the case of Haswell v. Haswell (1) it was decided, that conduct falling short of a matrimonial offence sufficient to found a decree for judicial separation, was still sufficient cause to bar all remedy to a wife whom her husband had deserted. By this decision I am bound to shape my course. Assuming, then, this decision to be correct, it remains to be seen whether the "cause" alleged in this case was sufficient. The charges Mr. Yeatman brings against his wife as his reasons for deserting, her resolve themselves into an impeachment of her general conduct throughout the time that he lived with her. One charge, indeed, of a distinct and very different character from the rest he makes against her; but this she distinctly denies, and, upon consideration, I cannot hold that it is proved. I allude to the supposed admission by her that she had been unchaste before marriage. Passing then, to her general conduct, I find Mr. Yeatman complaining in the main of her violence to himself (this he afterwards explained to mean violence of temper), her insulting conduct to other people, her dirty habits, and her cruelty to her child. With regard to her violence of temper there seems to have been considerable ground for his complaint. She speaks in a letter of being "self-willed, wild and thoughtless"; and then, again, of her unhappy temper, which she excuses by adding, "but I was but a child and without experience." When asked to explain this she says in her evidence that her husband was neglectful and cruel, that he stayed away from home a great deal, and was out till twelve or one at night. "By this" she says, "my temper became irritated." As to insulting other people Mr. Yeatman does not detail any occasion so as to enable the Court to judge, and Dr. Arthur Farre, whom he names in connexion with this charge, was not called to corroborate him. As to her dirty habits, there is evidence from a woman with whom she lodged and the woman's servant in support of this charge; but the witnesses seemed to speak with a strong bias against her, and led the Court to believe that they were indulging in exaggeration. It is also to be remarked that Mrs. Yeatman has never been examined about this herself, no allusion being made to it in the long cross-examination which Mr. Yeatman himself administered. Lastly, as regards the cruelty to her child, it is admitted by Mr. Yeatman that she was extravagantly fond of it at times, and, although both he and the witnesses before alluded to speak of her beating it, Mr. Yeatman himself admits that the child exhibited no marks or bruises, and she most indignantly repudiates ever having struck it in her life. It is a most significant fact in considering the evidence on all these charges that no member of Mr. Yeatman's family, to many of whom she was known, was called to condemn Mrs. Yeatman's conduct. If her outbursts of temper had been habitually such that Mr. Yeatman could not have been expected to bear with them, his sister, with whom she stayed for some time in the year 1855, at Holbeach, would surely have experienced it. The same remark applies to her alleged want of cleanliness in her linen and dress. In like manner, though she lived at Dr. Dempsey's for above six months, and although many witnesses were produced as to her conduct while there (in the cross-suit which Mr. Yeatman instituted for divorce), no witness was called in this suit to prove either passionate temper or uncleanly habits while residing in Dr. Dempsey's establishment. Upon a review of the evidence, and the mutual conduct of both parties, the Court cannot find reasonable ground for the separation which Mr. Yeatman has presently forced upon his young wife. The difficulty of her temper and such of her habits as were distasteful to him might reasonably have been expected to disappear with judicious conduct on his part in the course of continued cohabitation. It would be of evil example if this Court should hold that mere frailty of temper, unless shown in some marked and intolerable excesses, was reasonable ground to justify a man in throwing a young wife upon the world without the protection of his home and society. A woman so placed is open to many temptations. If she fail to resist them, the husband, who has already quitted her, will not be slow to take advantage of her fall, making his own desertion a first step towards a claim for divorce. True, she may at once insist on returning to him and may obtain a decree obliging him, if within the jurisdiction of this Court, to receive her again and thus terminate the desertion. But angry feelings, the promptings of pride, or the advice of others may intervene. The wife may not be inclined to protect herself by forcing her society upon a husband bent upon casting her off, and if the result is criminality the original fault still lies at the husband's door. If submission is the part of the wife, protection is no less that of the husband; and he is bound to extend that protection to his wife, even against herself and her own impulses, so far as the fences, the restraints, and the inducements of conjugal cohabitation may serve to that end. It was with no other view than this, I conceive, that the legislature in section 30. of the act gave the Court power to withhold a divorce from the husband after the wife's adultery, if he should be shown to have wilfully separated from or deserted his wife without reasonable excuse. And whatever is held to constitute "desertion without reasonable excuse" for this purpose must, I think, be also held "desertion without cause" in the section upon which the present suit is founded. For this reason, then, if for no other, the "cause" should be grave and weighty which, in the judgment of the Court, should deprive a deserted wife of her remedy for that desertion, and her right to set it up as a bar to a divorce for adultery at her husband's suit. I am, therefore, of opinion that the offence of "desertion without cause for two years and upwards" is established. The remedy prescribed by the legislature is but a very imperfect one. Judicial separation will but give a legal sanction to the actual separation between these parties which has long existed. But it will effect two objects which I presume Mrs. Yeatman desires—an allowance from her husband regulated by this Court, and a decree affirming her husband's "desertion," which may protect her from being harassed by further proceedings at his hands. For he has already sued her no less than three times; first in the year 1858, for nullity of marriage on the ground that she was insane, and had been so during all the four years he had lived with her; next in 1862, for adultery with some person in Germany; and, lastly, in a cross suit commenced about the same time as the present, for adultery while at Dr. Dempsey's. To both these charges of adultery Mrs. Yeatman pleaded his desertion in addition to denying the adultery, but, the proof of adultery failing in both suits, no decree on the desertion has hitherto been made. She has now instituted a suit for the purpose of obtaining such a decree, and in my judgment she is entitled to it.

Testamentary Suit—Undue Influence.

A pressure of whatever character, whether it acts on the fears or the hopes of an individual, if so exerted as to overpower the volition, without convincing the judgment, is a species of restraint under which no valid will can be made.

John Hall, of Whitmoor House, near Nottingham, a farmer and tenant-right valuer, died on the 6th of April, 1867. The plaintiff, the widow of the deceased, propounded a will, bearing date the 21st of July, 1865, by which the whole property was left to her absolutely, and in which she was named sole executrix. The defendant, the brother of the deceased, filed one plea only,—that the execution of the alleged will was obtained by the undue influence of the plaintiff and others acting with her. On the 14th of June, 1865, the deceased, during his wife's absence from home, had executed a will by which he gave his house and household effects absolutely to his wife, two legacies of 200*l.* (one to his brother, the defendant), and the residue of his estate to trustees, to pay the income thereof to his wife for life, and one-third of the capital absolutely, and the remaining two-thirds on the wife's death to divide between the defendant and other relatives. The property was stated to be under 20,000*l.* The issue was tried before Sir J. P. Wilde and a special jury.

Dr. Spinks and Dr. Tristram, for the defendant.

SIR J. P. WILDE in summing up made amongst others the following observations: "To make a good will, a man must be a free agent. But all influences are not unlawful. Persuasion, appeals to the affections, or ties of kindred, to a sentiment of gratitude for past services, or pity for future destitution, or the like, these are all legitimate, and may be pressed on a testator. On the other hand, pressure of whatever character, whether acting on the fears or the hopes of an individual, if so exerted as to overpower the volition without convincing the judgment, is a species of restraint under which no valid will can be made. Importunity or threats such as the testator has not the courage to resist, moral command asserted and yielded for the sake of peace and quiet, or of escaping from distress of mind or social discomfort, these if carried to a degree on which the free play of the testator's judgment, discretion or wishes is overborne, will constitute undue influence, although no force is either used or threatened. In a word, a testator may be led, but not driven, and his will must be the offspring of his own volition, and not that of another."

The jury returned a verdict in favour of the defendant, and Sir J. P. Wilde pronounced against the will, and condemned the plaintiff in the defendant's costs.

MATRIMONIAL. }
1868. } CHURCHILL v. CHURCHILL
Jan. 25. } AND ABBOTT.

Practice—Misnomer of Respondent—Setting aside Proceedings for Irregularity.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage, after a decree nisi with costs against the co-respondent, an attachment for non-payment of those costs was granted. The citation and subsequent proceedings, in which the co-respondent was erroneously styled William Abbott, were served upon William Braine Abbot, who took no objection to the irregularity until the attachment was granted. He then applied to have it set aside:—Held, that as he had stood by during the progress of the suit and allowed judgment to go against him in a wrong name, the attachment must stand.

This was in substance an application to set aside a writ of attachment against the co-respondent, on the ground that in the writ and previous proceedings in the suit he had been styled William Abbott, whereas his real name was William Braine Abbot.

The petitioner had obtained a decree nisi for dissolution of his marriage on the ground of his wife's adultery, with costs against the co-respondent, and an order had been obtained for a writ of attachment against the co-respondent for non-payment of those costs.

In all the proceedings in the suit the co-respondent's name was stated to be William Abbott, and in that name they had been served upon William Braine Abbot.

On the 23rd of January Bayford, on behalf of William Braine Abbot, obtained an order that the writ of attachment should not issue until this day.

Day, on behalf of the petitioner, now asked for an order, that the attachment should issue. An affidavit of the solicitor's clerk, who had served the proceedings and notices on William Braine Abbot, stated that when served with the citation he said that he had been expecting it for some time, and should be glad when the case was over; that when applied to for the petitioner's costs, he said he should place the matter in the hands of his solicitor and that he had never denied that he was the right person.

Bayford, contra.—As the co-respondent has been served with process in a wrong name, he is entitled to have the proceedings, so far as they affect him, set aside.—He cited Foxwell v. Burrow (1), Johnson v. Richardson (2), Johnson v. Smallwood (3), Hinton v. Stevens (4), Griffin v. Gray (5), Cotton v. Cotton (6) and Kisch v. Kisch (7).

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—This is in substance an application to set aside an order that a writ of attachment should issue, on the ground that there is a mistake in the name of the person upon whom it is intended to be executed, the name in the writ being the same as the name which has appeared throughout the suit as that of the co-respondent. The Court would amend the proceedings by substituting the right name of the co-respondent, if the petitioner desired; but for obvious reasons he prefers to take the attachment with the name as it now stands. The question is, whether the Court ought to set aside the order for an attachment. I am clearly of opinion that it ought not. The days have gone by, I hope never to return, in which trumpery mistakes in the names of parties were held to invalidate the proceedings. But even then I believe it was never held that a man was entitled to stand by and allow proceedings to go on against him to judgment, and then to ask the Court to interfere on his behalf, on the ground that his name had been mis-spelt. Two classes of cases have been cited: one in which this Court has been asked to set right a blunder which has been made in the spelling of a name during the proceedings; the other in which Courts of common law have been asked to set aside proceedings in consequence of the mis-spelling of a name. But none of these cases are applicable to the present, for the reason that Mr. Abbot stood by throughout the proceedings as if

CRABB v. CRABB.

Dissolution of Marriage—Adultery—Desertion—Deed of Separation.

Where the parties have separated voluntarily under a deed of separation, such separation will not be converted into desertion merely because one of the parties does not fulfil all the terms of the bargain he entered into with the other on parting.

This was a suit for dissolution of marriage brought by the wife by reason of the adultery and desertion of her husband, the respondent. It was heard before the Judge Ordinary without a jury. The adultery was fully proved, but the Court took time to consider what effect a deed of separation entered into between the parties had upon the question of desertion.

Dr. Spinks and Dr. Tristram appeared for the petitioner.

Searle, for the respondent.

The JUDGE ORDINARY (March 17).—The broad question raised here is, whether a woman who has quitted her husband's house under a bargain to do so made by a deed of separation can be said to have been deserted without cause. The proposition hardly bears stating, unless indeed all separation, voluntary or involuntary, be desertion, the consent of the complaining party unimportant, and the person deserted not he who was left in the common home, but she who quitted it. It was, however, argued that the deed in this case would have been held invalid in a Court of equity because its provisions stripped the father of all control and supervision over his child. It is needless to inquire whether this is true or not, because, in this Court at least, it has always been held that such deeds are utterly inoperative to abrogate the duty of cohabitation involved in a contract of marriage; and if the mere fact that this deed was impotent to maintain and enforce the permanent separation of the parties be material to this question, that fact may be found in the first principles of the matrimonial law. For no doubt it would have been quite competent to either party the day after they had parted, in obedience to their mutual agreement, to come to this Court and obtain a decree for restitution of conjugal rights. This separation therefore was not only voluntary at first, but has practically continued to be so. Lastly, it was said that the husband did not fulfil his part of the bargain, and only paid the 100*l.* a year for six months. This, if a condition precedent to the covenant of the wife's trustees, that she should not attempt to enforce cohabitation in this Court, might in another Court be held to relieve them from that covenant. In a word, if the husband's side of the bargain was not adhered to, the wife might have been remitted to her original status, and set free from the prohibition of the deed against enforcing those rights which in this Court have never ceased to exist, and lie open to her assertion. But the husband's breach of his contract could not by relation back make the actual parting involuntary, which was in fact voluntary, though the wife was induced to acquiesce in reliance on the husband's promises. The separation, it must always be remembered, was an act done under the deed, and though the deed be void or its covenants afterwards broken, it would be most unjust to treat that act as if the deed had never existed. Nor can the failure of the deed be held so to re-act upon the separation, for which it provided, as to impress upon the separation a character entirely opposite to that which it bore at the time. If it could, it might as well be said that the wife had deserted her husband as that he had deserted her. But in all this I presume the absence of fraud. For if a man, determining to abandon his wife, were to set about it fraudulently by the shew of an agreement, which he never intended to fulfil, to induce or extort her consent to their mutual separation, covering his true purpose under delusive covenants, and seeking a shield for his design in a consent bought by treachery, the Court might well be asked to reject the false face of the transactions, and regard the real object that lay underneath. If I had been asked to decree a judicial separation, I would have done so, as the adultery was fully proved; but as I have not been so asked, I shall simply dismiss the petition.

Tapping moved the Court to order the issue in a suit for judicial separation to be tried by the Court.

Tristram, for the respondent, consented.

Tapping.—The Registrars have refused to receive the citation on the ground that it has not been served upon the respondent. It was thought unnecessary to serve it as the respondent's solicitor undertook to enter an appearance. An appearance has been entered and an answer has been filed.

Estoppel—Unsuccessful Suit for Judicial Separation on Ground of Cruelty—Subsequent Suit for Dissolution of Marriage on ground of Adultery coupled with same Cruelty.

A petitioner, whose petition for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, has been dismissed for defect of proof, is estopped from setting up the same charges of cruelty in a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty.

This was a suit, by a wife, for a dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery coupled with cruelty. The respondent filed an answer traversing the charges of adultery, and, as to the charges of cruelty, alleging that the petitioner, on the 12th of January, 1867, filed a petition against the respondent for a judicial separation on the ground of cruelty; that the allegations of cruelty in that petition were the same as those set out in the present petition; that the respondent filed an answer traversing those allegations, and that the issue so raised was tried by the Judge Ordinary without a jury; and that, after hearing the evidence of the petitioner, the respondent and other witnesses, the Judge Ordinary, by a decree of the 26th of November, 1867, found that the respondent had not been guilty of cruelty as alleged in the said petition, and dismissed the petition; that the respondent, therefore, was not bound to make any further answer to the allegations of cruelty contained in the present petition.

Demurrer.

Dr. Spinks and Dr. Swabey, in support of the demurrer.—The object of the present suit being different from that of the former suit, the doctrine of estoppel does not apply. The lis is not de eadem re. In Evans v. Evans (1), it was held, that the judgment of an Ecclesiastical Court refusing a divorce a mensa et thoro, for defect of proof of the adultery charged, was no bar to a suit in the Divorce Court for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the same adultery.—

They also cited Barrs v. Jackson (2) and The Duchess of Kingston's case (3).

Searle, contra, was not called upon to argue.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—I am clearly of opinion that the demurrer must not be allowed. This is simply an attempt to try over again the question of cruelty, with a fresh charge added. In the cases cited, the question was either to what extent one Court is to be bound by the judgment of another, or how far one Court is to give effect to a decision on certain facts pronounced in some other suit of a wholly different nature. In this case the questions of fact are precisely the same as those which were inquired into and determined in a previous suit in this Court. In both suits the husband is charged with the same matrimonial offence, cruelty. The issue raised on that question having been tried and found in favour of the husband, the wife now seeks to have it tried again, and it is argued that she is entitled to have the same charges tried again because she has tacked on to them a charge of adultery. I think that that cannot be allowed. According to the practice of every Court, after a matter has once been put in issue and there has been a finding or a verdict upon that issue, and a judgment upon such finding or verdict has been pronounced, such judgment is conclusive between the same parties on that issue. In all Courts it would be treated as an estoppel. There is abundant reason why, in this Court especially, the same question should not be tried over again. The expense of the trial falls upon the husband, and the Court ought not to allow a wife to persecute her husband, as she could if she were allowed to repeat charges which have once been found against her. The allegations of cruelty must be struck out of the petition. The petitioner may amend her prayer by praying for a judicial separation on the ground of adultery.

Practice — Power to Deal with Settlement, where no Issue Living—Locus Standi of Trustees on Petition for Alteration of Settlement.

Held, by the Judge Ordinary and Montague Smith, J., (Pigott, B. dissentiente) that the Court has no power to deal with marriage settlements under section 5. of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, where there has been issue of the marriage, unless a child be still living.

The trustees of a marriage settlement may be heard against, but not in favour of, an alteration of the settlement.

This was an appeal from an order of the Judge Ordinary, dismissing a petition presented under the 5th section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61 (1), praying for an order with reference to the application of the whole or a portion of the property settled on the marriage of the petitioner.

The question was, whether the Court has power to alter a marriage settlement in a case in which, though there has been issue of the marriage, such issue is dead.

The petition alleged a marriage in 1860; that there had been issue of the marriage one child, who died in 1864; that on the 13th of November, 1866, the marriage was dissolved on the ground of the wife's adultery, and that the respondent had since married the co-respondent; that before the marriage a settlement had been executed, the settled property consisting of several sums of money, the property of the wife, and a sum of 7,000*l.* covenanted by the petitioner's father to be paid to the trustees of the settlement after his death.

The appeal was heard on the 24th of April, 1868.

Dr. Swabey (E. Browning with him), for

(1) "The Court, after a final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage, may inquire into the existence of ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements made on the parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree, and may make such orders with reference to the application of the whole or a portion of the property settled, either for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their respective parents, as to the Court shall seem fit."

the petitioner.—The Judge Ordinary, on the authority of Thomas v. Thomas (2), held that, as there was no issue of the marriage living, he had no power to deal with the settlement. That case, however, is not a binding authority, for although the Full Court in it expressed their opinion that the Court has no power under section 5. of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61. to deal with marriage settlements where there has been no issue, it was not a direct decision upon an application under that section, and is therefore not a conclusive authority. The counsel for the applicant there suggested that it was doubtful whether the Court could deal with the settlement, and the Court, seeing the difficulty, simply suspended its decree, in order that an application for a permanent provision might be made. There was no solemn decision after argument. Assuming that the Court is not bound by that decision, I submit—1. That the Court has jurisdiction to deal with settlements, although there may have been no issue of the marriage. 2. Even if that is not so, it has such jurisdiction when there has been issue, although there may be none living when the application is made. 1. The 5th section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61. was probably passed in consequence of the decision in Norris v. Norris (3), that the Court, under section 45. of the Divorce Act, had no power to deal with marriage settlements. The section is a remedial provision, and should therefore be construed liberally. A priori, it is difficult to see upon what principle the power of the Court to alter settlements, and so deprive the guilty party of an interest conferred by the settlement, should be dependent upon the birth of issue. When there are children, the Court is not bound to consider the interest of the children only. It may make an order for the benefit of the parents only. Upon the true construction of the section, the words “their respective parents” seem to have been inadvertently inserted for “the parties to the marriage.” The section is clearly very loosely drawn, the word “respective” being insensible. In the former part of the clause, the Court is empowered to inquire into the existence of settlements “made on the parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree.” There is no condition annexed, provided there be issue of the marriage, and it is with reference to the settlement so described that the Court is to make orders. 2. Assuming that the Court has no power to deal with settlements when there has been no issue, it does not follow that it has not such power when there has been issue and such issue is dead. In Bird v. Bird (4) the Judge Ordinary held that he had no power in such a case. Where, however, the status of parentage has once existed, the parties to the marriage may be considered to be “parents” within the intention of the statute.

Dr. Tristram, for some of the trustees, was about to argue on the same side.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—We are all of opinion that the trustees cannot be heard. They might have a locus standi for the purpose of inducing the Court not to alter the settlement, but they cannot be allowed to argue that the settlement ought to be altered.

Dr. Deane and Inderwick, for the respondent, and Dr. Spinks and Searle, for Mr. Moore, one of the trustees of the settlement.—The intention of the legislature must be gathered from the words of the statute. The use of the word “parents” in the latter part of the section instead of the words used in the previous clause, “parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree,” shews that the intention was to limit the power of the Court to cases in which there were children of the marriage in existence. If there were no children living, there could be no parents. It is not unreasonable that the powers given to the Court should only be exercised when there are children living. The benefit of the children is the object of the section.—They also cited Bell v. Bell (5).

Dr. Swabey, in reply.—The benefit of the children is clearly not the sole object of the section. The Court may alter settlements for the benefit of the parents only.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J., after stating the facts, said: I am of opinion that the decision of the Judge Ordinary is right, and ought to be affirmed. The question turns on the proper construction of the 5th clause of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61.—viz., whether the appellant was a “parent” entitled to the benefit of the provision contained in that clause. The clause has already received judicial construction. The Full Court has decided that the clause gives no power to deal with settlements in cases where no child of the marriage has been born—Thomas v. Thomas (2); and the Judge Ordinary was of opinion in Bird v. Bird (4) that the reason of the judgment in Thomas v. Thomas (2) applied to a case in which there had been a child who had died before the dissolution of the marriage, and that he had no jurisdiction to make an order in such a case. These decisions, if they do not conclusively bind the Court, at least afford strong authority against the appellant’s construction, and I should not feel at liberty to dissent from them unless I had a clear opinion that they were wrong; but I own that my opinion is entirely in accordance with these decisions. The jurisdiction given by the legislature to this Court to interfere with the settlements made by the parties themselves in a case like the present is a strong power to confer. Such a jurisdiction did not previously belong to any Court,—see Hodgens v. Hodgens (6), and the same case before Sugden, L.C., in Ireland (7),—and the Court must be careful not to overstep the power created and conferred upon it by the legislature. It appears to me from the language used that the governing object of the legislature was to enable the Court to make a provision for the children of the marriage, and only as subsidiary to that object to make provision for their parents. The clause, after enabling the Court to inquire into the settlements, empowers it to make orders with reference to the application of the property settled “for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their respective parents.” It is plain that if there are no children of the marriage, there can be no parents, so that I cannot entertain a doubt that Thomas v. Thomas (2) was rightly decided. I think also there can be no parent within the meaning of these words unless there are living children of the marriage to be provided for. The language is, “children of the marriage or their parents.” Not only the words themselves, but the collocation of them, convey to my mind a clear indication that the legislature advisedly used the word “parents” in its ordinary sense, and did not intend this power to arise unless there were living children for whom provision might and ought to be made. If there are such children, then and then only the Court has power to make orders for them or their parents. It might in some case be prudent and convenient, where a home is broken up, that provision should be made for the children, not only directly, by giving a benefit to them, but also indirectly, by giving a benefit to their parents. If it had been intended to confer a power to make a provision for husbands and wives independently of the existence of children, I should have expected to find other and more apt words to express that intention. In the 45th clause of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, which enables the Court to deal with the property of a wife guilty of adultery, the words are “for the benefit of the innocent party and of the children of the marriage.” These words are well adapted to express the intention of the legislature, when it was meant to make provision for the husband independent of the children; and one would have expected to have found in the statute now in question language descriptive of the parties to the marriage, as such, if there had been an intention to alter settlements in their favour, apart from the existence of children. It is not within the province of the Court to consider whether it is fitting or not that the Court should have the power contended for by the appellant. The question is, whether the legislature has conferred it. I come to the conclusion that it has not, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

PIGOTT, B., after stating the facts of the case, said: The question before the Court is whether, on the true construction of the 5th section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, the Judge Ordinary, after the final decree dissolving the marriage, has any jurisdiction over this settled property. I am of opinion that he has. The question depends on the meaning of the legislature as it can be collected from the language employed. The enactment in question was passed by way of supplement to the provision in the first Divorce Act, section 45. That provision did not apply to settled property. But as to other than settled property it gave the Judge power in cases of divorce for the wife's adultery to deal with such property for the benefit of the innocent party (i. e. the husband) and of the children of the marriage, or either of them. So that if this property were not settled, there would be jurisdiction to act for the petitioner's benefit within that section. But it is necessary to resort to the 5th section of the 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, under which alone settled property can be dealt with. The section includes all cases where decrees for nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage have been pronounced; it gives the Court power to inquire into the existence of all settlements, whether ante-nuptial or post-nuptial, made on the parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree, and it then authorizes the Court "to make such orders with reference to the application of the whole or a portion of the property settled either for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their respective parents as to the Court shall seem fit." The whole difficulty turns on the meaning of the word "parents" as here used. Does it necessarily mean parents of a child or of children still living, or may it be read as descriptive of persons who have once acquired the status of parents by having had a child or children born of a marriage the subject of the decree? I think the language is quite capable of the latter meaning, and that the sentence may be read as if the words were "for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of the parents of such children—i. e. children of the marriage." This reading would not necessitate the continued existence of the children at the date of the decree, it does no violence to the language of the legislature, and in my judgment is in furtherance of the manifest intention to benefit the parties to the marriage as well as the children, and quite independently the one of the other. It may be difficult to account for the distinction in the section between cases where there are settlements but no children born of the marriage, and those where children are born. I do not consider myself at liberty to speculate on the cause of this distinction. It may be that it was unintentional, but it cannot be because the benefit of the children alone was considered of importance, as argued by Dr. Deane. Judging a priori, it might have been expected that the legislature would have given power to the Judge who dissolves a contract of marriage to deal also with those other contracts which were made as incidental to the marriage contract; and much more after the legislation of the 45th section might it be expected that in all cases, if in any, the settlements of the married parties should be dealt with. But be that as it may, I feel bound by the use of the word "parents" to hold that jurisdiction is not given where no child of the marriage has been born, and where, therefore, neither of the parties could in any sense or at any time be designated as "parents." But, on the other hand, I think the fullest meaning should be given to the actual language employed, and that I am not exceeding it in holding that it is here used relatively to the preceding words, "children of the marriage," and consequently that where the status of a parent has been once acquired with reference to that marriage the benefit of that status continues, so as to bring the person within the intention expressed in this section. The Judge Ordinary, in Bird v. Bird (4), thought and decided that this case must follow the decision in Thomas v. Thomas (2); but, for the reasons I have given, I feel bound to come to a different conclusion. The petitioner's position is somewhat analogous to that of a tenant by the courtesy which is not lost by the death of the issue. The reason and justice of the case seem to me to be in accordance with this view, and I think it highly desirable that the adulterous party to a marriage should be amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court to the fullest extent to which the legislature can be fairly taken to have expressed its intention to make him or her so liable.

(6) 4 Cl. & F. 323.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—I should have been glad if this Court could, consistently with the language of the statute, have come to the conclusion that the intention of the legislature in this matter was to confer power to deal with marriage settlements in all cases of divorce, whether there had been children or not. It is probable that such was the intention, but the statute under consideration, by describing the parties to the suit as "parents" in the operative part of the section, appears to me to preclude this Court from giving effect to that intention, if it existed. All orders of this Court to be made under the authority of this section must (so says the act) be "either for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their respective parents." The word "parents" cannot be applied to parties who have had no children without a violence to the language used so great as to exceed the limits of judicial exposition, and so decided the Full Court in the case of Thomas v. Thomas (2). All the members of the Court on this occasion concur in the propriety of that decision. But it is now argued that, although the legislature thus restricted the powers of this Court to cases in which children had been born of the marriage, yet that restriction is satisfied if a child has once existed: in other words, that the expression "children of the marriage and their parents" is applicable to children long since dead, of whom the parties to the suit may be properly called the "parents." There are some insuperable objections, I think, to this conclusion. First, the language is not appropriate to carry it. The word "parent" is a word of relation. It expresses the relation between father or mother and child, and it is therefore properly applicable so long, and so long only, as that relation exists. If there is no "child" there is no "parent." If there has been a child there have been "parents." With the death of the child the relation ceased, and the appellation of "parent," though it may, in the looseness of common talk, continue to be attributed to those who once stood in that relation, ceases to be properly applicable. The question is not widely different from that which might be raised on the use of the expressions "husband" and "wife," as to which I conceive that after the death of a wife a man can no longer properly be called husband, or vice versa; though in common parlance such terms might be, and are not unfrequently, used. But, secondly, the language runs "for the benefit of the children or their parents." The "parents" here spoken of are "parents" of the children in whose favour orders of the Court may be made, consequently of living children. The word "their" inseparably connects the word "parents" with such children. So far by way of verbal criticism. But there is a consideration which affects my mind much more strongly. I conceive that the Court should at least forbear to do violence, however slight, to the language of the legislature, if by so doing they induce an unreasonable conclusion. It seems to me that it would be to the last degree unreasonable to imagine that the legislature intended the marriage settlements in cases of divorce to be subject to the orders of this Court if the parties had ever had a child, but not so subject if the marriage had been childless. I can trace no connexion between the incident of a child having once existed and the propriety of interfering with the marriage settlements of a divorced couple after that child's death. If there are children living at the time of the divorce, it may be that the legislature, for their sake, has created a power of re-opening the settlements which it has thought right to deny to parties who are childless; and, once re-opened, it may have thought it right not to restrict the new destination of the settlement funds wholly to the children; but to give the Court a discretion in favour of their "parents." But when the children are dead, and no order can be made in their favour, they cease to afford a reason for dealing with settlements at all, and the case of the married parties becomes no different from what it would have been if a child had never existed. I have tried in vain to imagine or discover a possible hypothesis upon which such a distinction could have been intended, and the failure to find it is the main reason which influences my judgment to reject the distinction.

The Court declined to make any order as to costs, on the ground that the question was one fit to be argued, and the respondent was possessed of separate property.

B. renounced probate of the will of the deceased; C. at the time of her death was not in England.—Held, that D. was an executor according to the tenor of the will, but that power must be reserved to make a grant to C. in case he should return to this country.

Elizabeth Goodworth, of Hatfield, Yorkshire, widow, died on the 10th of January, 1867, having executed a will bearing date the 28th of November, 1848, a codicil, dated the 27th of November, 1866, and a second codicil, dated the 31st of December, 1866. By the will she left all money, goods, chattels, rights, credits and other personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever to her brother William Henry Goodworth, his executors, administrators and assigns, upon trust, to allow her sister Ann Maria to have and use her household furniture during her sister's life, and upon trust to convert the remainder of the personal estate into money, and after payment of her debts and personal expenses, to invest the proceeds in real or parliamentary securities, with power to vary the same, and to pay the interest, dividends and annual proceeds thereof to or permit the same to be received by her said sister Ann Maria during her natural life; and after her death to pay and divide the said trust-moneys, stocks, funds and securities, together with the proceeds of the furniture, unto and equally between the testatrix's nephews and nieces, the sons and daughters of her brothers John,

Samuel and William Henry, and of her sister Susannah Brownlow, who should be living at the time of the death of her sister Ann Maria, and she appointed her brother William Henry Goodworth executor. The first codicil was to the following effect: "I revoke that part of my will which gives and bequeaths all my money, securities for money, goods, chattels, rights, credits and other personal estate whatsoever and wheresoever unto my brother William Henry Goodworth, upon trust, and in lieu of whom I now hereby appoint my nephews Broughton Goodworth and Edward Portington Goodworth, eldest sons of my brothers Samuel and William Henry. Providing Edward Portington Goodworth should not be in England, Roger Portington Goodworth, his only brother, to act in his capacity. . . . I also revoke my appointment of my brother William Henry Goodworth as executor of my will, and in his place I hereby appoint my nephews Broughton Goodworth and Edward Portington Goodworth aforesaid my sole and only executors and administrators of this my will and codicil."

Broughton Goodworth, one of the executors substituted, renounced probate and administration with the will annexed. Edward Portington Goodworth was not in England at the time of the death of the testatrix, and has not been in England since, and is not expected to return for a considerable time.

C. A. Middleton moved the Court to grant probate to Roger Portington Goodworth as the executor substituted for Edward Portington Goodworth, in case Edward P. Goodworth were not in England at the time of the death of the testatrix.

SIR J. P. WILDE granted the motion, on the ground that Roger Portington Goodworth was executor according to the tenor of the will. Power to be reserved to make a similar grant to Edward Portington Goodworth if he should return to this country and apply for it.

Nullity of Marriage—Scotch Marriage—Belgian Marriage between same Parties—Dissolution of Belgian Marriage by Belgian Court—Subsequent Marriage in England by one of the Parties.

A, an Englishwoman, married in Scotland B, a domiciled Belgian. They took up their abode in Belgium, and there went through the ceremony of marriage according to the law of Belgium. The Belgian marriage was dissolved in Belgium on the ground of mutual consent. A, in the lifetime of B, afterwards married C in England:—Held, that as the Scotch marriage was valid by the law of England, and the Belgian marriage conferred no new status on the parties, A's marriage with C. was void.

This was a petition for a decree of nullity on the ground that when the marriage was solemnized the respondent was a married woman. The respondent did not appear. The petition was heard by the Judge Ordinary on the 29th of April, 1868.

Dr. Spinks and Houston, for the petitioner.—The facts were in substance as follows: The respondent, then Emily Burdett, a spinster, on the 31st of December, 1845, was married at Gretna Green to Eugène Adolphe Boutinez, a captain in the Belgian army. On the 24th of August, 1846, they were married in Belgium, in accordance with the Belgian law, and they lived together there for several years. In January, 1857, the Belgian marriage was dissolved by a Belgian Court, on the ground of mutual consent. The respondent, on the 26th of September, 1857, married the petitioner in London, and lived with him in England until 1862, when the petitioner first ascertained that the validity of his marriage was doubtful. Captain Boutinez was alive on the 26th of September, 1857. It was also proved that by the law of Belgium a marriage contracted with a woman who had obtained a sentence of divorce on the ground of mutual consent, within three years from the date of the sentence, is null and void.

Barrett, for the respondent. Cur. adv. vult.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—The petitioner in this suit was married to the respondent in London on the 26th of September, 1857. He has instituted these proceedings to annul that marriage, upon the ground, that the respondent was at the time of its celebration the wife of another man. A previous valid marriage between the respondent and Eugène Adolphe Boutinez was no doubt contracted at Gretna Green in Scotland on the 31st of December, 1845. And there is equally no doubt that Eugène Adolphe Boutinez was alive on the 26th of September, and still is so. The case of the petitioner would therefore seem to be established. But some farther matters have been very fittingly brought to the notice of the Court for discussion and consideration, though they do, not in my judgment, affect the petitioner's claim to a decree. It appears that the respondent and Monsieur Boutinez, after the Scotch marriage, went to reside in Belgium, where he had his domicile. And while there domiciled, for some reason not explained to the Court, the parties went through a second ceremony of marriage, conducted according to the law of that country, at Kain, in the kingdom of Belgium, on the 24th of August, 1846. The previous marriage in Scotland being in the eyes of the law of this country a valid and subsisting contract of matrimony, this second ceremony cannot be in this Court held to have created any new status in the parties. On the 9th of January, 1857, the Belgian Court having jurisdiction in such matters, declared that, "in the name of law there is dissolution of the marriage which took place on the 24th of August, 1846, at Kain," and this "on the mutual consent of the two parties." It does not appear from the evidence submitted to this Court that the Scotch marriage was in any way brought in question before the Belgian Court, or even known to that tribunal. Whether, if it had been brought forward and application made to dissolve it by mutual consent, the Belgian tribunal would have held itself competent to that act, this Court has no means of knowing. Had such a divorce been pronounced, it would have been necessary to consider how far the law of this country would adopt and act upon the dissolution of a valid Scotch marriage by a foreign Court, and that upon a ground unknown to the law of this country—the mutual consent of the parties. Other questions spoken to in the argument would also have required consideration. It would have been proper to consider the effect of those restrictions upon re-marriage which form part of the same law of divorce, by which the mutual consent of the parties sufficed to release them from their existing obligations. But it is quite needless to pursue these matters. The Scotch marriage has never been impugned; no decree of any Court has affected to vacate it, and the marriage which the respondent sought to contract with the petitioner in 1857 must therefore be pronounced null and void.

STACE v. STACE.

June 2.

Suit for Restitution—Answer—Facts not amounting to Legal Cruelty.

In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights the Court will not reject, on demurrer, an answer which contains only facts which apparently do not constitute a case of legal cruelty.

Matilda Stace, of 130, Leighton Road, Kentish Town, Middlesex, petitioned the Court to order her husband, Joseph Frank Stace, to take her home and render to her conjugal rights. The parties were married, on the 23rd of June, 1849, at St. John's Cathedral, Calcutta. The defendant filed an answer, in which he admitted he had refused to live with the petitioner, but that he had good and sufficient grounds for such refusal; namely, the circumstances thereinafter set forth. That the petitioner is a woman possessed of a most violent temper and a scandalous tongue; that on the 30th of October, 1861, the respondent, by reason of the constant virulence of the language and of the violence in the conduct of the said petitioner, and of the false charges she brought against him, was compelled to leave the house where they were living and to separate from her; and that, on the 6th of June, 1862, the respondent executed a deed of separation to which the petitioner was a party, whereby he consented to allow her 400*l.* per annum; and that the respondent faithfully performed all the agreement mentioned on his part in the said deed so long as it continued in operation; that the petitioner and the respondent lived separate from the said 3rd of October, 1861, until July, 1866. That on the 14th of July, 1866, the respondent, in compliance with the urgent and repeated entreaties of the petitioner, consented to and did permit her to return to cohabit with him, on her signing the following declaration, in the handwriting of Mr. Thomas Sharpe, but signed by her at the house and in the presence of Mr. Thomas Sharpe, the trustee of the separation deed:

"I, Matilda Stace, being under no compulsion, freely and willingly declare that I most sincerely regret and repent of my bad temper, conduct and accusations that caused my husband, Joseph Frank Stace, to leave me and his home in October, 1861, and since to live separated from me; and I do hereby promise and declare that no such temper or conduct shall ever be shown by me, nor any of the former or such like accusations be made by me against him; but that, if we can live together again, I will do all in my power to make him happy and in all respects conduct myself according to his wishes; and to this end I bind myself by a solemn promise made on oath, before the undersigned witness, on the 14th of July, 1866.

"Matilda Stace."

That within ten days of the said 14th of July, 1866, the said petitioner violated her said solemn declaration and undertaking, and commenced to conduct herself towards the respondent in a most outrageous manner, both in language used towards him and in her demeanour, and so at times continued to conduct herself from that date up to December, 1867. That, amongst other things, she has during such period been continually charging the respondent in the presence of their children, servants and others, with having had illicit connexion with the widow of his deceased brother, which is false, and also with taking liberties with respondent's and petitioner's daughter, Gertrude Stace; she has also insulted the respondent and his daughter at the dinner-table by other false charges. That his daughter, by reason of such language and false and scandalous charges which the petitioner was in the habit of making against her, was in July, 1867, driven from her home and elected to take a situation as governess in a ladies' school. That in March, 1867, the petitioner, without the respondent's knowledge or consent, removed their son Arthur Frank Stace from his home and placed him at a boarding-school. From the 17th of October, 1867, to the 4th of December, 1867, the petitioner refused to allow Sarah Dunkley, their only servant, and induced her to decline to wait upon the respondent, and encouraged her to behave insolently to the respondent and to address him in terms of insolence. That the petitioner on several occasions during part of the latter period removed, or caused to be removed, all the provisions from the pantry, so as to prevent the respondent from helping himself to his meals, and compelled him to go out and purchase bread for himself. In December, 1867, the petitioner had all the lights and fires in the house put out for the sole purpose of annoying the respondent; and on the 3rd of December, 1867, the respondent having re-lighted the kitchen gas the said servant put it out again; lastly, that on one occasion the petitioner had sent for a policeman for the sole object of bringing the respondent into discredit. That, by reason of the premises, the petitioner had forfeited any right to the relief she seeks from this Honourable Court; and, further, that she has been guilty of legal cruelty to the respondent by rendering further cohabitation with her intolerable, and, having regard to his health, unsafe. The answer prayed for a judicial separation. This answer was demurred to as not setting out a case of legal cruelty, misconduct less than cruelty, being no bar to a suit for restitution of conjugal rights.

Dr. Spinks and Seale, for the petitioner.

—It is not sufficient to allege cruelty; the facts stated must, if proved, amount to legal cruelty, which they do not in this case.

Dr. Tristram, for the respondent, contended that the answer ought to be considered a good and sufficient answer to the petition.—He referred to Barlee v. Barlee (1) and Molony v. Molony (2).

The JUDGE ORDINARY:—Even putting on one side the allegation contained in the last two lines of the answer, that there is an intolerable antipathy between these parties, I should not feel inclined to refuse to admit to proof a case, because the facts may not be strongly stated, unless, indeed, taken altogether, it could not amount to a legal defence. The acts charged have happened often enough to render cohabitation unsafe for health, and I am not prepared to tell the husband it is all his fault, that he ought not to have delicate nerves, and to send him back, in order that his wife may further operate upon him. The answer alleges violence of conduct, which is surely cruelty, violence of demeanour, constant charges of immoral conduct. It is impossible to say to what extent this has gone without first hearing the proof; and as the suit is carried on at the husband's cost, I see no reason for rejecting the answer. In a case decided in the Privy Council—Moore v. Moore (3)—it was held that, by way of defence, facts and circumstances may be admitted which would not be sufficient in an original suit for divorce.

MATRIMONIAL:—DERING, R. DERING AND BLAKELEY (The Queen's Proctor and others intervening), June 5, 6.

Matrimonial Suit—Decree Null—Intervention of Queen's Proctor and other Parties—Identical Pleas—Practice—Writ of Habeas Corpus—Conduct conducing to Adultery.

marriage, the Queen's Proctor and other parties intervened. The questions for the jury, raised by the latter, were collusion and connivance; by the former, collusion, connivance and misconduct which conduced to the adultery of the respondent:—Held, that although the counsel for the Queen's Proctor and the other interveners might respectively produce and examine witnesses, and cross-examine the witnesses produced by the petitioner, only one counsel could be heard in reply.

If an intimacy springs up between a married woman and a man of such a character as to be dangerous to her honour, and the husband knows so much of it as to perceive the danger, and yet purposely or recklessly disregards it, he is guilty of wilful misconduct which may conduce to adultery.

In this case Edward Cholmeley Dering petitioned for a dissolution of his marriage with Harriet Mary Dering, by reason of her adultery with Theophilus Alexander Blakeley. The petition was heard and a decree nisi made on the 21st of June, 1867. In November, 1867, appearances were entered for the father and mother of the respondent, and affidavits were filed on their behalf and on behalf of the petitioner. The questions of fact raised by the affidavits which were ordered to be tried before the Court and a special jury were, whether the petitioner was in any manner accessory or connived at the adultery of the respondent with the co-respondent, and whether the decree nisi obtained by the petitioner upon the 21st of June, 1867, was obtained by him by or in collusion with the respondent and co-respondent, or either of them. On the 17th of March, 1868, the Queen's Proctor obtained leave to intervene, and filed pleas, on which the following questions were raised for the jury: First, whether Harriet Mary Dering, the respondent, committed adultery with Theophilus Alexander Blakeley, the co-respondent, in the months of November and December, 1865, and in the months of January, February, March, April and May, 1866, at No. 1, Bolton Street, in the county of Middlesex, and on board a certain yacht in divers places in parts beyond the seas. Secondly, whether Edward Cholmeley Der-ing, the petitioner, was in any manner accessory to or connived at the adultery of the said Harriet Mary Dering with the said Theophilus Alexander Blakeley. Thirdly, whether the decree nisi obtained by the said Edward Cholmeley Dering, upon the 21st of June, 1867, was obtained by him by or in collusion with the said Harriet Mary Dering and the said Theophilus Alexander Blakeley. Fourthly, whether the said Edward Cholmeley Dering was guilty of misconduct which conduced to the adultery of the said Harriet Mary Dering.

The Attorney General (Sir J. B. Karlake), the Solicitor General (Sir B. Brett) and W. G. Harrison, for the Queen's Proctor.

Montagu Chambers and Hance, for the Honourable Mr. and Mrs. Capel, intervening.

Parry, Serj., at the commencement of the trial, objected to counsel being heard for both the parties intervening.

The Court declined to interfere at that stage, as both interveners ought, at any rate, to be allowed to examine and cross-examine the witnesses.

Witnesses were then produced and examined on behalf of the Queen's Proctor, and they were also examined by Montagu Chambers, but no witnesses were produced by the interveners, Mr. and Mrs. Capel. At the conclusion of the case of the Queen's Proctor, and on the announcement by Montagu Chambers that he did not intend to call any witnesses,

The JUDGE ORDINARY said—I have been considering the question which has been raised, as to the number of counsel I ought to hear in reply, and I have determined I can only hear one. The interests of the Queen's Proctor and the other interveners are identical; the same questions are submitted to the jury by both parties, and are supported by the evidence of the same witnesses. Mr. Chambers may cross-examine the witnesses produced by the petitioner, but I can only hear one reply on the whole case.

The JUDGE ORDINARY, in summing up, after referring to the first three questions to be determined by the jury, said—"The fourth question is, whether the petitioner has been guilty of misconduct which conduced to the adultery of the respondent." By the 31st section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, the Court is not bound to dissolve a marriage, even although the adultery of the wife be proved, if the husband shall have been guilty of such wilful neglect or misconduct as has conduced to the adultery. The responsibility, therefore, is thrown upon the Court to say, first, whether the petitioner has been guilty of wilful misconduct; and, secondly, whether it is such that the Court ought to refuse a decree. Although the Court has itself power to determine the first of these points, it prefers to have a decision at the hands of a jury. This is, I believe, the first case in which the facts and circumstances make it necessary to consider the meaning of the words of the 31st section. Whilst, on the one hand, a large and general latitude should be left to the jury in their application, on the other hand I am bound to put a construction on the section and to say, what, in my judgment, ought to be proved in order to make out a case of misconduct. If you will reflect, it will occur to you what a great variety there must be in such cases, and under what different conditions of things such a question may arise. Indeed, there is probably no case brought before this Court in which it might not be possible, after the whole matter is known, to point the finger at some particular parts of the case and say, What a pity it is the husband did not do so and so. If he had not been careless, if he had taken better care of his wife it would not have happened. No doubt when an intimacy springs up between a married woman and another man of a character not justified by the ordinary usages of society, the vigilance of the husband ought to be alarmed, and he should endeavour to repress such intimacy. Indeed, it is a duty which forms part of the obligation of married life. But is this obligation of vigilance, of being alive to the first steps of an intimacy which may lead to dishonour, to be subject to the penalty, if neglected, that the husband shall be tied to an adulterous woman for the rest of his life? That is a proposition of perilous latitude. He ought, no doubt, to fulfil that obligation; but is his neglect to fulfil it misconduct within the meaning of the legislature? I think not. I do not consider the mere fact of an omission here or there to do something which he might have done, or the mere doing something he ought not to have done, sufficient. Allowance must be made for different dispositions. Some men are vigilant and suspicious; others less observant, although not indifferent, and less likely to take notice of what is passing about them. One man may be so constituted that small matters draw his attention to them; another may be of an open, high-spirited and cheerful disposition, on whom all things sit lightly; such a man dismisses suspicion from his mind more readily. Carelessness, therefore, is not sufficient to constitute misconduct. If it were, very few men would pass through the ordeal safely. Before you arrive at the conclusion that the petitioner has been guilty of the misconduct intended by the statute, you must be thoroughly satisfied that the intimacy between these parties was of such a character as to be distinctly dangerous, and that the husband knew so much of it as to perceive the danger; yet either purposely or recklessly, disregarded it and forbore to interfere. I have only to add, that in speaking of what the husband knew, I mean what he actually knew or what he ought to have known, not what a more suspicious nature or a more active vigilance might have prompted him to discover, unless indeed he should have purposely closed his eyes, which would be wilful misconduct and something more. It is not necessary that a man should have intended wrong; but if he saw the danger, knew of an intimacy and allowed his wife to be exposed to the consequences, he is guilty of misconduct. But again, I must call your attention to the difference of dispositions; one man may see certain circumstances and say, "This will not do; shake it, from the same circumstances, may draw a different conclusion. There are, however, two difficulties in the way of your forming a correct judgment in this case. The first is, that on looking back to these transactions you do so knowing the event, whereas the person whose conduct you are inquiring into did not know and could not foresee the event. Further, you must bear in mind that, although many matters have been brought before you, tending to show that suspicion ought to have existed in the mind of Mr. Bering, there were probably many little things you do not know of, which tended to blind the husband and quiet his suspicions, such as the conversations between the husband and wife, the excuses she may have made, and other trifles which would give a colour to such matters, different from what they seem to have when viewed after the event. The other difficulty is raised by the law, which prevents the parties giving evidence in a suit of this kind. The two questions you must ask yourselves are, What did the husband know? and with that knowledge ought he to have perceived the danger his wife was in? Those who assert that the petitioner had knowledge of all that was going on between his wife and Captain Blakeley are bound to prove it. If, on the whole, the result does not satisfy your minds that the petitioner has been guilty of wilful misconduct, you will return a verdict in his favour.

The jury returned a verdict for the petitioner on all the points put to them, but added an observation that he had shewn a great want of caution.

Dissolution of Marriage—Petition dismissed by Reason of Petitioner's Adultery.

Second Petition presented—Petitioner's Adultery again alleged—Verdict of Jury in his Favour—Decree Nisi—Practice.

The petitioner applied to the Court for Decree to dissolve his marriage by reason of his wife's adultery with A. A. pleaded that the petitioner had himself been guilty of adultery with his wife's sister. The Court held that this charge was proved, and dismissed the petition. The petitioner again applied to the Court to dissolve the marriage by reason of his wife's adultery with B. and C. Neither the respondent nor either co-respondent filed answers to the petition. The Queen's Proctor intervened, and pleaded the former judgment, and also the adultery with the respondent's sister; the jury before whom the issue was tried found that the petitioner had not committed adultery with his wife's sister.—Held, that the former judgment must be received as conclusive evidence of the adultery of the petitioner; but that, under the special circumstances of the case, the Court was justified in the exercise of its discretion in making a decree nisi to dissolve the marriage.

George Norris Conradi, petitioned the Court to dissolve his marriage with the respondent Rebecca Conradi by reason of her adultery with Edward Worrall and James Way, and from the former he claimed 5*l.* damages. No answer was filed either by the respondent or co-respondents. The Queen's Proctor, on the 20th of February, 1867, intervened, and pleaded, amongst other things, that, in the month of October, 1865, the petitioner presented a petition to this honourable Court for a dissolution of his marriage with the said Rebecca Conradi, on the ground of her having committed adultery with one William Churchill Flashman; and the said petitioner made the said Flashman a co-respondent in the said suit; that the said Flashman pleaded, amongst other things, that the said petitioner had committed adultery with one Elizabeth Frost; that upon the trial of the said suit by the Judge Ordinary it was found and adjudged by him that the said petitioner had committed adultery with Elizabeth Frost, and the Judge Ordinary thereupon dismissed the petition. He then pleaded that, in the months of March and April, 1865, at Dover, being after his marriage with the respondent, the petitioner on divers occasions committed adultery with a sister of the said respondent. To this plea of the Queen's Proctor a demurrer and a joinder in demurrer were filed; but the demurrer was overruled by the Judge Ordinary (1). The petition was heard before the Judge Ordinary and a special jury, on the 27th of March, 1868, and the jury returned a verdict for the petitioner on the issues as to his wife's adultery and his own.

Dr. Spinks (Inderwick with him) moved the Court to make a decree nisi on the finding of the jury.

Sir J. B. Karlake (Attorney General) (W. G. Harrison with him), for the Queen's Proctor, opposed the motion. He contended that the former petition and the finding thereon estopped the petitioner from obtaining a decree nisi in the present suit; and secondly, that if he were not right on that point, the Court, in the exercise of its discretion under the 31st section of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, would not grant this motion. Although the statute requires that, in case the husband brings a suit against his wife for adultery, he shall, under ordinary circumstances, make a co-respondent, that is not essential; the Court may, by the 28th section, excuse his doing so. Practically, therefore, the suit is between the husband and wife as the real parties; the addition of a co-respondent is a mere matter of procedure which may be dispensed with. As, therefore, in a suit between the husband and wife judgment has been given by a competent Court on a material point,—namely, the question of the adultery of the petitioner with a particular individual—the same question cannot be raised a second time between the same parties. The petitioner was estopped from proceeding in the second suit. At any rate, inasmuch as a judgment is still standing against the petitioner, which found that he had been guilty of adultery, the Court in its discretion will not allow the marriage to be dissolved. He referred to The Duchess of Kingston's case (2).

Dr. Spinks.—I thought the question of estoppel had been disposed of when the demurrer was argued.

[THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—The Court was prevented from coming to any conclusion as to the estoppel on that occasion because the Queen's Proctor, having pleaded the judgment in the former suit, went on to allege that the petitioner had, in fact, committed adultery with the sister of the respondent. If he could have proved that, there would have been no necessity to have determined the question of estoppel.]

As regards the discretion which may be exercised by the Court, the 27th section of the Divorce Act enacts that it shall be lawful for any husband to present a petition to the said Court, praying that his marriage may be dissolved; and the 31st section, that, in case the Court is satisfied on the evidence, &c., it shall exercise a discretion. The husband cannot be barred of his remedy unless evidence is given on the petition itself that he has been guilty of adultery.

[THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—In this suit evidence was given that there had been a former petition, and the petitioner had been found guilty of adultery.]

But it was not conclusive, otherwise it would have been so ruled. If the former decree had dissolved the marriage, it would have affected the status of the parties, and would have been final; the judgment then given did not affect the status. It seems hard that where a judgment is given in favour of the husband, it may by the intervention of the Queen's Proctor before the decree absolute be questioned again and again, but not so when given against him.—He referred to Needham v. Bremner (3), Harding v. Harding and Lance (the Queen's Proctor intervening) (4), and Anichini v. Anichini (5).

[THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—I will take time to consider my decision. I have a strong impression that when once the petitioner has been found guilty of adultery, I must take that as an ultimate finding, and not allow the same question to be raised over and over again on fresh petitions, even after the witnesses are dead. If the Queen's Proctor had stopped on his first plea, that of the previous judgment, no difficulty could have arisen; but he tried the question of the petitioner's adultery a second time, and both the witnesses being dead who proved it in the first instance, and no evidence remaining but the Judge's notes of the former trial, which I believe were not admissible at all, the jury found against him, and hence the present discussion has arisen.]

The JUDGE ORDINARY (June 9).—The petitioner first applied to the Court for relief in the year 1865. He proved his wife's adultery without difficulty; for she had left him and taken to a life of prostitution. But the co-respondent in that suit charged the petitioner himself with adultery. This charge was sustained by the evidence of two witnesses, and the Court found the charge to have been proved. Thereupon the Court, by its final decree, adjudged the petitioner to have been guilty of adultery, and dismissed his petition. In July, 1866, the petitioner commenced his present suit against his wife, charging her with adultery with two other men. And again, owing to the life she was leading, he had no difficulty in establishing her guilt. The Queen's Proctor, however, intervened, and by his plea brought to the notice of the Court the fact that it had on the former occasion adjudged the petitioner himself guilty of adultery, and prayed that his present petition might therefore be dismissed. In addition to this, the Queen's Proctor offered to prove over again the very act of adultery which had been alleged and proved in the former suit. Upon this re-allegation of the adultery issue was taken and a trial had by a jury. Both the witnesses to the adultery were dead. The Judge's notes of their evidences were read to the jury de bene esse, subject to the determination of the Court as to their admissibility, and the jury held the adultery not proved. In the view I take of the case it will not be necessary to decide this point of evidence. I will only say that I know no authority or practice by which the Judge's notes on a former trial are admissible in evidence in another suit, if objected to. The question which arises in this state of things is, no doubt, a very important one. It is this: whether a husband who has obtained a decree against an adulterous wife upon himself found guilty of adultery, and on that ground by sentence of this Court been refused all remedy for his wife's incontinence, can upon proof of a fresh act of adultery by her insist upon a divorce, unless his own adultery is proved over again by evidence against him. In my judgment he has no such right. Everything turns upon the words of the 81st section (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85): "Provided always, the Court shall not be bound to pronounce such decree, if it shall find that the petitioner has during the marriage been guilty of adultery." If it shall find. Do these words necessarily mean find on fresh evidence, or is the Court at liberty to find the petitioner's adultery upon proof of a former decree pronounced by the same Court between the same husband and wife? I am of opinion that the Court is at liberty to regard the decree in the former suit, and upon reference to it, without further evidence, to find that the petitioner has been guilty of adultery. It is to be observed that the duties of this Court are not confined to the solution of such questions of fact or law as the parties to the suit may please from time to time in the course of the suit to submit to its decision. The general language of the act, notably that of section 29, as well as that of the section under consideration, appears to me to impose upon the Court a wider function. It is, in my judgment, immaterial upon whose allegation the adultery of the petitioner is brought to the notice of the Court, for if the fact of that adultery is established to the satisfaction of the Court upon legitimate evidence, the Court is bound to take notice of it. I am not, therefore, pressed by the argument that the adultery in the former suit was alleged by a co-respondent who is no party to this suit, whereas in this suit it is alleged by the Queen's Proctor. The only real question is, whether the Court can legitimately receive and act upon the decree in the former suit as evidence in this, and my judgment is that it can, for by whomsoever the petitioner's adultery was alleged in the former suit, that adultery was declared and adjudged to have been proved in a decree pronounced between the very parties who (so far as the question of divorce is concerned) are the sole parties to this suit. Nay, more; it was the very fact upon which that decree dismissing the petitioner's suit was founded. I know of no principle of evidence which should exclude such a decree. Thus far upon the strict and technical view of the matter. But it is impossible not to perceive that if the Court were not to decide in conformity with that view, one of the main objects of the legislature might be frustrated. If a man desirous of obtaining a divorce could insist upon having the question of his own adultery tried over and over again, as often as he pleased, he would be pretty sure to succeed at last. What with the oversight or indifference of opponents, the death of witnesses, failure of memory, loss of documents, and the inevitable obscurity which the lapse of time throws about past events, he would at last succeed in proving his wife's adultery without any proof made of his own. But again, who is to undertake the proof against him? A wife in such a case would be little likely (as in this case) to oppose him. The Queen's Proctor is authorized to intervene at the public expense for the express purpose of preventing such a man from obtaining a decree. Is he to incur that expense over and over again, as often as the petitioner pleases? Such considerations as these throw a further light on the intention of the statute and fortify the construction of the 31st section, which I have already declared. It only remains to advert to one other matter pressed in the argument. It was pointed out that the statute 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7. imposes no limit upon the number of occasions on which the Queen's Proctor might intervene before the decree absolute, and bring fresh facts before the Court to prove the petitioner's adultery; and it was urged that if the petitioner could thus, as it were, be put upon his trial several times for the same act of adultery, he ought in fairness to enjoy a similar latitude. But the position of the petitioner and that of the Queen's Proctor are in no respect alike. The Queen's Proctor is under the control first of the Attorney General, and then of the Court, and although the statute does not in terms prohibit him from interposing more than once between the petitioner and his decree, no instance or decision has yet shewn that he would be allowed vexatiously to re-open a question which had been once fairly tried. Assuming, then, that it is competent to the Court to act upon the decree in the former suit, the remaining question is, whether, in the very peculiar circumstances of this case, the Court should do so, and should under the authority of section 31. refuse to dissolve this marriage. That I am by no means satisfied it should. That which has happened in this case will not (if my decision on the main matter should be held correct) in any probability happen again. The question of the petitioner's adultery has, in fact, been twice tried, and with different results. The act of adultery, if committed, was an isolated one. It had no connexion whatever with the desertion by the respondent of her home, or with her abandoned life. In the doubt which the second inquiry has thrown upon the act of adultery itself, and in the circumstances which attended it, if committed, the Court may properly, I think, find grounds for according to the petitioner the relief he prays, and in that conviction I grant him a decree nisi.

HOLMES, by his Guardian,
v. SIMMONS, falsely called HOLMES.

Nullity of Marriage—Due Notice—Registration Acts, 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85. and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119.—No Person to consent.

Since the passing of the statute 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, all analogy between a marriage by banns and one by notice to the registrar, under the Registration Acts, has been effaced. The attempt at securing the consent of parents or friends to a marriage of the latter class by publicity has been relinquished, and the procurement of actual consent substituted in the same manner as has always been used in marriages by licence. The due notice therefore required by the statute is a notice conforming to the formalities by the statute provided, and will be sufficient, even although the contents thereof in respect of the christian names or residence and other details are not strictly true or accurate.

It is doubtful whether the marriage of a minor can be declared null and void by reason of undue publication of banns if there be no parent or guardian whose consent or dissent can be given to such marriage.

This was a suit instituted by the direction of Vice Chancellor Malins, to decide as to the validity of a marriage of Frederick Cyril Robins Holmes, a ward in Chancery, resident at the time at Kidlington, Oxfordshire, with Laura Emma Harris Simmons, spinster, which was celebrated in the registrar's office at Oxford on the 19th of November, 1866. The material parts of the petition were as follows: That previously to, and with a view to such celebration of marriage, on the 27th day of October, 1866, the said Frederick Cyril Robins Holmes, with the knowledge and at the instigation of the said Laura Emma Harris Simmons, falsely called Holmes, gave and subscribed the following notice at the registrar's office aforesaid: "To the Superintendent Registrar of the district of Oxford, in the counties of Oxford and Berks. I, the undersigned Frederick Holmes, hereby give you notice that a marriage is intended to be had without licence within three calendar months from the date hereof between me and the other party herein named and described, that is to say,

Name and Surname.	Condition.	Rank or Profession.	Age.	Dwelling Place.	Length of Residence.	Church or Building.	District or County where Parties respectively dwell.
Frederick Holmes.	Bachelor.	Gentleman.	19	Jericho, St. Thomas.	Seven days.	Registrar's Office.	Oxford, Oxfordshire.
Laura Simmons.	Spinster.	21	Holywell Street, Holywell.	More than a month.	Oxford, Oxfordshire."

That such notice was not a due notice for an intended marriage between the said Frederick Cyril Robins Holmes and the said Louisa Emma Harris Simmons according to the statute in such cases made and provided, and the certificate of such notice, bearing date the 19th of November, 1866, issued by the superintendent registrar of the district of Oxford aforesaid, was not duly issued. That on the 19th of November, 1866, at the time of the said marriage, the said Frederick Cyril Robins Holmes and the said Laura Emma Harris Simmons, or one of them, knew that the notice of the marriage they were about to and did celebrate was not a due notice according to the said statute in such case made and provided, and that it had been given in a form to conceal such marriage from the family of the said Frederick Cyril Robins Holmes, and to deceive them in relation thereto, and further, that the certificate of such notice which had been issued by the superintendent registrar of the district of Oxford was not duly issued. That no licence had been obtained for the celebration of such marriage from the superintendent registrar of any district. It concluded with a prayer that the Court would pronounce the marriage so had between the parties to be null and void.

An answer was filed by the respondent to the following effect: That the notice set out in the petition was not given or subscribed with the knowledge or at the instigation of the respondent as alleged. That the said notice was a due notice of the said intended marriage between the petitioner and the respondent, and that the said certificate was duly issued. That the respondent did not at the time of the said marriage know that the said notice was not (if indeed it were not) a due notice of the said intended marriage, or that it had been given in a form to conceal such marriage from the family of the petitioner, or that the said certificate was not duly issued.

The facts of the case are contained in the following evidence.

William Scroggs.—I am an auctioneer, living at Kidlington, Oxfordshire. I am the guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery for the petitioner. The petition for the purpose of making him and his brothers and sister wards of the Court of Chancery, was presented, on the 3rd of November, 1866. I was acquainted with Mrs. Mantell, the mother of the petitioner. Mr. Holmes, the father, died in September 1857 ; Mr. Mantell in August, 1863 ; Mrs. Mantell in August, 1866. The respondent was a nursery governess to the younger brothers and the sister of the petitioner. She was engaged in February, 1866, and continued after Mrs. Mantell's death. I then took the management at Hill House, where the children were. Their father was a medical man. Simmons continued to attend upon the children. Before the 19th of November, 1866, I spoke to them all, and told them that their affairs were in Chancery; nothing could be done but by order of the Court of Chancery. I did not say who was appointed guardian. Mr. Holmes's two brothers, the petitioner's uncles, declined to have anything to do with the matter. On the 19th of November, I went to Oxford to see the uncles, and asked them if they would not be guardians. I met the petitioner Simmons and her sister Emily at the station. We all got into the same carriage. The two ladies sat in front, I and the petitioner opposite to them. I asked where they were going. I am almost sure that it was the petitioner said that they were going shopping. Kidlington is five miles from Oxford. It is not in the Oxford district. The map produced marked Frederick Cyril Holmes belongs to the petitioner. It used to be hung up in one of the rooms. When I heard of the marriage, I saw the petitioner and the respondent together. I gave them a good set down. I said it was a scandalous act, as she had the children in her custody. On cross-examination, he said that the petitioner was generally called Fred, or out of the family, Mr. Frederick. He never heard the respondent called by any other name than Miss Simmons. He had signed cheques for Laura Simmons. The petitioner at the time of the marriage had no father, mother or guardian.

Mr. Holmes, the petitioner.—I shall be seventeen on the 27th of June next. I am now living in Herefordshire. I was at a school at Abingdon, but left in 1865. I remained at home from that time. I had two brothers and a sister. Laura Simmons came into my mother's service at the end of 1865. She had the sole charge of the younger children and of our linen. She used to put the lights out in the room in which I slept with my brothers. She used to kiss me in bed. An intimacy arose between us. My mother spoke to me about it. She was sure there was something wrong. I said, no. She said she hoped not. After my mother's death I and the respondent were thrown much together. The temptation was too strong. I asked her to become my wife in October. She consented. I wanted to know how it was to be done. She said an aunt of hers had been married in the registrar's office ; it could be done there. She told me she would go to Oxford, and try and get a licence. On her return she said that before I could get a licence I must swear that I had the consent of my guardian, which I could not do ; but that if I told the registrar, he would put up a notice in his office, and there was no chance that any one would see it. We had more than one conversation as to what was to be done. It was proposed that I should see the registrar ; that I should put my age at nineteen. She said her age was twenty-one. It was arranged between us that I should be said to reside at Jericho ; she at Holywell. She knew I had only just come from school. We thought that if Mr. Scroggs saw the names Frederick Holmes and Laura Simmons and the addresses we gave, he would not think of us. Some of my linen is marked F. C. R. H., some not. The whole thing was managed between us. I went to Oxford. I saw the registrar, and gave him the particulars as to age, &c. in order to get married. I wrote first only the initials of my Christian name, but afterwards, by the direction of the registrar, my full name. I gave the particulars I did in consequence of the agreement between me and the respondent. Mr. Scroggs told me I was a ward in Chancery in the respondent's presence. She was in the room at the time. On the 19th of November Mr. Scroggs was in the same carriage with us. He asked what we were going to Oxford for. I replied, Shopping. Laura Simmons probably heard me, because naturally she would be listening. On cross-examination he said, my mother did not say, "When I am dead and gone, you must look to Miss Simmons." We arranged that I should say that the respondent lived with her aunt at Holywell. I was almost certain that Mr. Scroggs and another would be my guardians. I have gone by all my three christian names. My ordinary name at Kidlington was Frederick. On a piece of music I gave to Miss Simmons in 1866, I signed my initials F. H.

The respondent on examination said : on the 17th of February, 1866, I went as a companion to Mrs. Mantell to Kidlington. I was usually called Laura only. The children called me Miss Simmons. Some time in October my husband spoke to me of marriage. He said we should be married in the registrar's office. He asked me to go and see the registrar. I had no idea what steps had to be taken. I came back and told him the registrar was not at home. He said I did not know anything; he should go himself. I did not ask for any reason why we were misdescribed as to our residences. He asked me my age. I said twenty-one. On the 19th of November Mr. Scroggs was in the carriage with us. The only conversation I overheard between Mr. Scroggs and the petitioner was about some wild fowl. On cross-examination, she said: I knew the petitioner had only just left school. I never asked him his age. After Mrs. Mantell's death the petitioner and myself became very affectionate to one another. I went to the registrar's office to see what was to be done. I never had had an aunt married in a registrar's office. I never said so to the petitioner. I had no conversation with him about Jericho and Holywell. I swear I never had. I sometimes wore a wedding-ring, sometimes I did not.

Coleridge, Dr. Middleton and McIntyre appeared for the petitioner.—The object of giving notice is publication. The question is, then, has such a publication taken place in this case as if the marriage had been by banns would have been a due publication? The omission of a part of the name of the petitioner, and the falsification of the residences of both parties, could only have been done with a fraudulent intention.

Denman and Lord, for the respondent.—Even if it be correct to say that the same principles apply as in the publication of banns, the evidence is not sufficient to invalidate the marriage. According to the principles laid down in cases of undue publication, there should be a fraudulent alteration of the name by which the party is usually known, which there has not been in this case. They further contended that the penalty in 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 42. was not intended to apply to a mere misstatement in the notice. By 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119. s. 19. it was recognized that there might be a valid marriage, although the particulars of the notice were false. The giving false information was to be punished in another way, by the penalties of perjury and the forfeiture of property.

[The JUDGE ORDINARY.—Before the Registration Acts were passed, all marriages could be celebrated only after due publication of banns or by licence. The Registration Acts substituted a new system in lieu of banns. By 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 42. if persons knowingly and wilfully intermarry without due notice to the registrar, or without certificate of notice duly issued, the marriage is null and void. By the 38th section, every person wilfully making a false declaration or signing a false notice shall suffer the penalty of perjury; and by the 43rd section, in such a case the offending party shall forfeit all interest in any property which would otherwise accrue to him by reason of the marriage. By the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, although by the 4th section a notice is still required, and by the 18th and 19th sections the penalties of perjury and forfeiture are repeated, nothing is enacted as to the invalidity of a marriage without due notice. The circumstance that the legislature has, by 1 Vict. c. 22. s. 34, provided that the giving of notice to the registrar and the issue of his certificate shall be used and stand instead of the publication of banns to all intents and purposes, is not sufficient to authorize the Court to apply the principles laid down as to due publication of banns to the notice to the registrar and his certificate thereon.]

Coleridge.—There is nothing in the 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119. to revoke the 42nd section of the 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85. The penalties of perjury and forfeiture were not to be in lieu of, but in addition to, that of nullity. The due notice under 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85. must be a true notice. As regards the circumstances that there was no father, mother or guardian of the petitioner to forbid the issue of the certificate, if Mr.

Scroggs had entered a caveat under section 13, the registrar would have suspended his certificate in order to examine into the matter, and in the mean time the Court of Chancery would have appointed a guardian. —The cases cited were Pouget v. Tomkins (1), Sullivan v. Sullivan (2), The King v. Billingham (3), The King v. the Inhabitants of Tibshelf (4), Tongue v. Tongue (5), Midgley v. Wood (6), Bevan v. M'Mahon (7), Hill v. Johnson (8).

The JUDGE ORDINARY (June 16).—This is a suit to annul a marriage between two parties, one of whom was a minor. The marriage took place at the registrar's office in Oxford, on the 19th of November, 1866, and the ground of nullity alleged is, that the parties wilfully intermarried without due notice having been given to the proper officer. A notice, regular in point of time, form and other legal requirements, was, in fact, given; but this notice is argued not to have been a due notice, because the names of the parties were not truly stated in full, and the statements as to age and residence were not true. No case has hitherto been decided on this subject; but it was contended that the cases of marriage by banns were analogous, and that the decisions in those cases as to what constituted a due publication of banns ought to guide the Court in determining what was a

(8) February, 1868. This case was decided in Hilary Term, when the Judge Ordinary gave judgment as follows: "This was a suit for nullity. The petitioner's case was, that the marriage was clandestine, and that with the view of keeping it secret, both parties agreed to a false publication of banns. The question is solely one of fact, whether both parties were cognizant of the suppression of the names, and agreed to it for the purpose of concealment. The husband said that they were, the wife that they were not. There are opposite evils to be avoided in dealing with suits of this character. On the one hand, there is the evil of a young man inducing a woman to surrender her virtue to him by means of a secret marriage, and then turning round when his purpose has been effected, and seeking to invalidate such marriage by reason of some technical defect. The Court ought to be careful that a case of that kind does not succeed, and should not without very due notice to the registrar. For the reasons I am about to give, I have come to a contrary conclusion. For the right understanding of the subject it is necessary to review the successive statutory provisions upon marriage by banns, and those also by which marriages at the registrar's office have been created and regulated. By the statute 26 Geo. 2. c. 33. all marriages by banns, if had without due publication of banns, were absolutely void. The Courts construed the provisions with great severity, holding that, without any fraudulent intention, the names published must be the true and full christian and surnames, or, at any rate, so nearly so as to render recognition easy. Upon this statute it was that the numerous decisions of Lord Stowell referred to in the argument took place. The statute 4 Geo. 4. c. 76. mitigated the rigour of previous provisions. It enacted that these marriages should only be void if parties knowingly and wilfully should intermarry without due publication of banns. It thus became necessary that both parties should be guilty of a wilful neglect to have the true names put forward. The statute further provided that, after the marriage had been once celebrated, no question should be raised as to whether the residence of the parties had been truly stated. The next statute, 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85, first introduced the system of marriages before a registrar. It did not alter clear evidence enable the young man's parents to annul the marriage on the mere ground of the omission of a name in the publication of the banns. On the other hand, there is another evil, which is also a considerable one, and that is, that a young man should fall into the hands of a woman in a different degree of life, and be induced to contract a clandestine marriage with her, taking means with her consent to prevent the knowledge of what is going on reaching his friends by a fraudulent change of names in the banns. In this case it is a matter of congratulation that the young woman had not surrendered herself by means of this marriage to the young man. It is admitted that they carried on an illicit intercourse before the marriage, and it is also clear from the correspondence that the respondent was desirous of keeping it secret. As to the actual question whether the wife knew that the husband's name was Johannes de Vere (it was published as John), the Court on the whole must give evidence to the oath of the husband, because two other witnesses were called, and their evidence flatly contradicted the evidence of the wife in several important particulars. The result is, the Court must pronounce the marriage null and void."

the above provisions as to marriages by banns. It provided that a previous notice should be given by persons about to marry to the registrar, and that such notice should be full, giving the names, condition and residence of the parties. The notice, when given, was to be entered in a book accessible to the public. Further, the notice was to be read three successive weeks at the board of guardians; and then the statute went on to say that, if any person should knowingly and wilfully intermarry without due notice to the superintendent registrar, or without a certificate of notice duly issued, the marriage of such persons should be null and void. In these proceedings it is easy to recognize an intended analogy to the method of proceeding by banns; and if these provisions had remained unchanged, there would be a strong ground to contend that the Courts ought to construe the word due in relation to the required notice in conformity with the decisions upon the meaning of that word when applied to the publication of banns. But a subsequent statute has made a great and, as it appears to me, an important change in the method of proceeding as to marriages before the registrar. The 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119. has done away with the system (probably found useless) of reading the notice to the board of guardians, and, in place of all such and similar contrivances for giving to parents a warning of the projected marriage of their minor children, it has provided that, under the pain and penalty of perjury, the party giving the notice should swear that he or she actually had the required consent. In this provision the legislature was only assimilating marriages by notice to marriages by licence. For, throughout the period embraced by all the foregoing statutes, marriages by the licence of the ecclesiastical authorities had been permitted; and to obtain such licences it was always necessary in the case of minors to swear that the consent of the parents had been obtained. In conformity with this system the act of 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85. empowered the registrar to grant similar licences upon a like oath of actual consent. Having thus provided for the consent of the parents under the penalties of perjury, both the statutes, that of 6 & 7 Will. 4. c. 85. and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, have distinctly enacted that, after the celebration of a marriage, no proof should be allowed of the absence of such consent. In respect, therefore, of consent of parents, I conceive that any analogy which existed between marriages by banns and marriages by notice to the registrar has been effaced, the attempt at securing that consent in the marriages of the latter class by publicity relinquished, and the procurement of actual consent substituted, in the same manner as has always been used in marriages by licence. There is no reason, therefore, why those decisions which have hitherto been applied to marriages by banns, and which have their foundation in the necessity for securing that publicity through which it is the object of banns to reach the parents' consent, should be applied to marriages in which that consent is otherwise attained—cessante ratione cessat et lex. I think, therefore, that the due notice required by the statute for the validity of a marriage such as that now in question is a notice conforming to the formalities by the statute provided, and that the words due notice will be satisfied though the contents of the notice in respect of the christian names or residence and other details are not strictly true or accurate. Whether a notice in a wholly false name (which must be done fraudulently) would be properly held a notice at all may possibly still be a question. It might suffice to stop here; but I think the parties are entitled to my judgment on the evidence which was laid before me. I arrive at the following conclusions of fact: first, that the christian names inserted in the notice were the names and the only names by which both parties were commonly and familiarly known by those amongst whom they lived. This was plain on the evidence on both sides. Next, that it is very doubtful whether there was any intention to deceive anybody by the use of these names; but if there was such an intention, it existed only on the part of the husband. Lastly, the wilful suppression of the remaining christian names of both parties, and the insertion of the false residences, was the act of the husband only, without the wife's concurrence. For there is no evidence which satisfies me that the wife's statement on this subject is not worthy of reliance. Everything which was done in the matter of the notice, including all inquiries made, was done by the husband alone. The attempt to shew that the wife had obtained knowledge of what was requisite and had tutored the husband as to the notice he should give with a view to concealment wholly failed. The wife swore that on her only visit to the registry the proper officer was absent, and she got no information from any one. If this was untrue, the officer who gave her any information might have contradicted her. If it was true, the husband, when he went to the registry and gave the notice, must in all probability, have acted without the wife's concurrence, for they were both ignorant before he went of the details that would be required, and would have hardly concurred in a common design to falsify them. If these conclusions are warranted by the evidence, the marriage would be valid though tested by the decisions applicable to marriages by banns. For the suppression of a dormant christian name was held, by Lord Stowell, in Pouget v. Tomkins (1), not to constitute an undue publication of banns; and even if it did, the concurrence of both parties in that suppression would be necessary to annul the marriage under the provisions of the statute. I must notice one further feature in this case before I conclude. At the time of the marriage, although the husband was a minor, there was no person in existence who had the legal right to assent to or dissent from its celebration. Suppose, then, it had been celebrated by banns, could the Court have held it invalid for want of the true names being published? I very much doubt it. It does not very distinctly appear whether, in all the cases in which the marriage of a minor has been held void, there has been a dissenting parent or guardian; but the reason of the thing would seem to demand that there should have been the absence of such consent. If this be not so, the further question might be asked, What if the parents had actually consented? Would the absence of such a publication of names as would be likely to give them notice of the intended marriage be sufficient to annul that marriage if they had all along been parties to it and given their consent? It is not necessary to decide this matter in the present case; it is enough to have glanced at it. If my previous conclusions are correct, this marriage was a valid one; and the Court so pronounces it.

Alimony—Wife Subpoenaing Husband in Support of Petition—Rule 86.

A wife may subpoena and examine her husband in support of her petition for alimony.

An answer having been filed to a petition for alimony pendente lite, an application was made under Rule 86. for an order that the husband should attend for the purpose of being examined. This application was refused. Notice was subsequently given that witnesses would be examined in support of the wife's petition, and the husband was subpoenaed as a witness on her behalf. On the motion for alimony, Searle, for the wife, called the husband as a witness.

G. Browne.—It is not competent for a wife to call her husband as a witness in support of her petition for alimony. If she can do so, Rule 86, which empowers the Court to order his attendance for the purpose of being examined, is unnecessary.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—If the husband is ordered to attend under Rule 86, his attendance is for the purpose of being cross-examined on his answer; but if he is subpoenaed by the wife, it is for the purpose of being examined, and she adopts him as her witness. As he is a competent witness on the question of alimony, the wife has clearly a right to subpoena him if she thinks fit to do so.

The husband was then sworn and examined.

Will—Evidence—Declarations by Testator—Revocation by later Will not forthcoming—Intestacy.

Verbal declarations or written statements made by a testator in and respecting the making of his will, preceding or accompanying acts done by him in relation thereto, are admissible in evidence in order to shew the quality and nature of such acts.

Deceased made a will in 1840, and in 1867, while on a visit to a friend, he employed himself much in writing, and stated he was writing out his will, and he gave his friend a paper-writing which, he said, was a copy of his will which he was going to execute. Shortly after he duly executed a will, which, however, could not be found. The paper-writing revoked all former wills:—Held, that the will of 1840 was revoked by a will made in 1867, which, not being forthcoming, must be presumed to be revoked by destruction, and an intestacy was decreed.

The plaintiff, Cuthbert William Johnson, propounded the will of the Rev. Charles Lyford, late of Albion Road, Queen's Road, Dalston, Middlesex, clerk, who died on or about the 29th of July, 1867. The will propounded bore date the 22nd of June, 1840, and in it the plaintiff was named executor.

The defendant, Henry Giles Lyford, pleaded that on the 3rd of January, 1863, the deceased duly executed another will, by which the will, dated the 22nd of June, 1840, was revoked. No trace of this last-executed will could be found, nor was there any evidence of its destruction. The earlier will was found sealed up amongst papers belonging to the deceased's mother, who died in 1866.

On the 3rd of January, 1863, Charles Lyford, who was at that time curate of St. Barnabas, Pimlico, was at the house of a Mr. Morey, a surgeon, and employed himself much in writing; he stated he was writing out his will, and that he intended to sign it in the presence of witnesses. Before leaving Mr. Morey's house he handed to him a paper, which he called a copy of his will, and said it had been written by himself at the same time and place as the will itself. According to this copy, he revoked all other wills by him at any time made, and appointed as executors and residuary legatees, James White Morey and his wife, Clara Morey. Subsequently, Mr. Morey received from the deceased the following letter:

"Saturday evening (the post-mark was the 5th of January, 1863).—My dear Morey. After leaving you I went to Masters, where I duly signed my will in the presence of Wakeling and Brown, who have also signed as witnesses. I have taken the liberty of putting yourself and wife in as my executors. You will, I hope, excuse this making use of you. In case of my death, the said will shall be found in a box in the cupboard, in my bedroom, which is nearest the window. If I move, I will try and recollect to let you know where the said document is to be found. Love to you both. In haste, yours affectionately, Charles Lyford."

There was evidence given that a will was executed by the deceased in January, 1863, but not as to its contents, unless the declaration and letter of the deceased were admissible.

Dr. Spinks and Dr. Swabey appeared for the plaintiff.

A. Staveley Hill and Searle, for the defendant.

The case was heard on the 17th of April, and on the 23rd of June—

SIR J. P. WILDE gave judgment as follows:—Charles Lyford made his will on the 22nd of June, 1840. About the month of January, 1863, he made another will. On the 29th of July, 1867, he died. After his death due search was made for the will of 1863, which, so far as the evidence goes, he had kept in his own possession, but it was not to be found. The question in this suit is, whether there is sufficient legal evidence as to the contents of this second will. It was proved by Mr. Morey that, on the 3rd of January, 1863, the testator was at his house; that he was writing a great deal; that Mr. Morey was in and out of the room; that the testator told him he was making his will; that he read the will aloud to him; that the testator handed Mr. Morey an envelope, which he said contained a copy of it, and which he wished Mr. Morey to take care of; and, finally, he left the house saying that he meant to execute the will on his way home that evening, at Mr. Masters's, the publisher. That he did execute a will at Mr. Masters's shop about that time was distinctly proved by the two witnesses to it, who were in Mr. Masters's employ; and if the Court is at liberty to receive in evidence the above verbal statements of the testator as to his will, and intention respecting the execution of it, there can be no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that the copy given to Mr. Morey contains the substance of the will which he executed at Mr. Masters's. But it was contended that these verbal statements of the testator were not admissible in evidence; and the case of Quick v. Quick (1) and some others were cited.

I am of opinion that the evidence was admissible. The verbal declarations or statements made by a testator in and about the making of his will, when accompanying acts done by him in relation to that subject fall within the well-known principles of the general law of evidence, and have always been admitted, although not made on oath. It would often be impracticable to judge of the quality and nature of the acts done, if the statements of the person doing them immediately preceding or accompanying those acts were excluded from view. Suppose the will, instead of being executed at Mr. Masters's house, had been executed in an adjoining room at Mr. Morey's, in the presence of witnesses, but in the absence of Mr. Morey himself. Could it be contended that the previous conversation with Mr. Morey could have been excluded? There would, no doubt, in such a case be no positive proof that the will of which the testator had been talking to Mr. Morey in one room was the same will that he executed before the other witnesses in the next room, but to exclude the evidence of what had taken place would be to preclude the Court from judging whether it was so or not. A further piece of evidence was tendered in the form of a letter written by the testator to Mr. Morey, a day or two after the 3rd of January, saying that he had made his will and appointed Mr. Morey executor, an office which he begged Mr. Morey to accept.

(1) 3 Swa. & Tr. 442; s. c. 33 Law J. Rep. (N. S.) Pr. M. & A. 146.

There is sufficient evidence, as I have already said, to establish the contents of the will without this letter, but if not, the letter was in my judgment also admissible, in so far, at any rate, as it related to the fact of the testator having appointed an executor, and the request that Mr. Morey would consent to fill that office; for this, too, was in the nature of an act done by the testator, and a declaration accompanying it. The Court, therefore, holds that the contents of the will of January, 1863, have been proved, and from these contents it appears that it revoked all former wills. The consequences of this state of things are most unsatisfactory, for as the will of 1863, which had revoked all former wills, was not to be found after the testator's death, the law presumes that it was itself also revoked by the testator. And the Court is constrained to pronounce for an intestacy. So long as the law thus permits wills solemnly executed to be revoked by the presumptions arising from their disappearance, and so long as the law forbears to prescribe any definite place of deposit for a man's will, the real and true intention of testators will be open to frustration by accident or design. It may have been so in this case, although there is no evidence to throw the slightest suspicion of misconduct upon anybody in relation to it. Still, such cases as this bring forcibly to light the jeopardy in which all wills stand which are not deposited where they are sure to be found, and safe from the possibility of foul play. There was no reason in this case to suppose that the deceased designed to alter or suppress the will of 1863, and, in all probability, it has failed to take effect through mere mischance, from which a more careful custody would have protected it. While the law remains in its present state as to revocation by destruction, the custody of a will is as important as its due execution, and no pains should be spared to secure it.

As the case stands, I must pronounce that the deceased died intestate.

On the application of Counsel, the Court ordered that the costs of both sides should be paid out of the deceased's estate.

1868. } (JOHNSON AND BILLS inter-July 7. } vening).

Testamentary Suit—Three Wills—Last Will propounded—Executor of First Will opposing—Practice.

The deceased left behind him three executed wills, each of which in fact revoked the previous one. The last will was propounded by the executors named in it against the next-of-kin. The executors of the first will obtained leave to intervene to propound their will, and to plead, as regarded the last will, that it was not duly executed, that the deceased was not of testamentary capacity at the time he signed it, and that it was obtained by undue influence and fraud :—Held, that the executors of the last will could not as such propound the second will as well as their own, merely to prove that it revoked the first will, and therefore deprived the executors of the first will of any interest in the estate of the deceased.

The plaintiffs Joseph Kingsworth Parton and William Page, as executors, propounded the will of the deceased, dated the 20th of March, 1867; the defendant Mary Ann Johnson, the niece and one of the next-of-kin of the deceased, pleaded that such will was not duly executed in accordance with the statute, and that on the day it bears date the deceased was not of sound mind, memory and understanding, and she gave notice under the 41st rule (Rules and Orders 1862) that she only intended to cross-examine the witnesses produced by the plaintiffs. A replication having been filed, on the 12th of May, 1868; the Court directed that the cause should be heard before itself without a jury. On the 2nd of June James Benstead Johnson and William Bills, as executors of a previous will of the deceased, dated the 18th of January, 1858, applied for and obtained leave to intervene and to propound the will under which they were appointed executors. On the 6th of June they filed and delivered to the plaintiffs and to the defendant a declaration propounding the will of the 18th of January, 1858, and on the same day pleas to the plaintiff's declaration denying the due execution of the will of the 20th of March, 1867, and the testamentary capacity of the deceased at that time, and alleging that it was obtained by undue influence and fraud. On the 18th of June, the plaintiffs, by an order on summons, obtained leave to plead to the declaration of the interveners that the will of the 18th of January, 1858, was revoked by the will of the 20th of March, 1867, but the Judge rejected the plaintiff's application for leave to plead in addition that the said will of the 18th of January, 1858, was not duly executed according to the statute, and that it was revoked by an intermediate will, dated the 25th of October, 1865. This will of October, 1865, had no revocatory clause, but was inconsistent in its provisions with the will of January, 1858. The sole executor and residuary legatee under it died in the lifetime of the deceased.

Bayford, on behalf of the plaintiffs, applied for leave to propound the will of the deceased, dated the 25th of October, 1865, or to plead such will to the declaration of the interveners, in addition to the pleas by them already pleaded, so that such will may be in issue in the suit.—Where parties intervene they must do so in reference to a particular testamentary paper, or generally on the question, what is the will of the deceased?—In the first case they must have an interest in the decision as to that particular document; but these interveners have not, for their interest was put an end to by the will of the 25th of October, 1865. If the general question is in issue, all the testamentary papers ought to be before the Court, but there is no one interested in propounding the will of October, 1865.

Searle appeared for the interveners.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—The plaintiffs cannot plead to the declaration of the interveners any other plea than they have done, because they have no interest in destroying or establishing the will of January, 1858, and for the same reason they cannot propound the will of October, 1865. The next-of-kin are the only persons interested to take such a course. I cannot allow another person having no interest to propound the will of October, 1865, because the next-of-kin do not think proper to do so. I must reject the motion.

Testamentary Suit—Reference of Proceeding to County Court—Jurisdiction of County Court—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 59. —21 & 22 Vict. c. 95. s. 10.

When contentious proceedings in a testamentary suit are referred by the Court of Probate to a county court, the Court of Probate has no further jurisdiction, except by way of appeal, over such proceedings.

Edward Macleur, the plaintiff, propounded the will of Mary Hewitt, of Birmingham, Warwickshire, widow, deceased, which was opposed by the defendant, John Macleur. The proceedings commenced in the Court of Probate, in London, but on its being proved to that Court that the personal estate did not amount to 200*l.*, the pleadings were transmitted to the Judge of the county court for Warwick, who, on the 9th of July, 1868, made a decree that the plaintiff was entitled to probate of the will of the deceased, and condemned the defendant in the costs.

Pritchard moved the Court of Probate to confirm such decree, and to order the defendant to pay the costs.

Searle, for the defendant, opposed the motion as unnecessary.—He cited Lealley v. Veryard (1).

SIR J. P. WILDE.—By the 59th section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, in any contentious matter arising out of an application for probate or administration, if it be shewn to the Court of Probate that the state of the property and place of abode of the deceased were such as to give contentious jurisdiction to the Judge of a county court, the Court of Probate may send the cause to such county court, and the Judge thereof shall proceed therein as if such application and cause had been made to and arisen in such Court in the first instance. Up to the time, therefore, that the Court made the order, which transferred this case to the county court of Warwick, it had complete jurisdiction over it, and if it had been asked to do so might have made an order in reference to the costs incurred in this Court; but from the time that the proceedings were removed from this Court it had no longer any jurisdiction or power to decree costs; that power was given to the county court, and if the Judge had thought proper he might have condemned the defendant to pay all the costs from the beginning of the contentious proceedings. This application must be rejected, with costs.

Will — Revocation by second Will — Revival of first Will by Codicil.

By the 1 Vict. c. 26. s. 22, in order that a codicil should revive a will which in any manner has been revoked, it must shew an intention to revive the same:—Held, that such intention will not be shewn by a mere reference to such will by date, but the codicil must contain express words referring to a will as revoked, and importing an intention to revive the same or a disposition of the testator's property inconsistent with any other intention, or some other expression conveying to the mind of the Court with reasonable certainty the existence of the intention in question.

John May, late of Twickenham, in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, deceased, died on the 2nd day of March, 1867. On the 11th of January, 1860, he executed a will, which had been prepared by his solicitors, Messrs. Farnell & Briggs. By this will he left the whole of his property for the benefit of his daughter and her children, and he appointed John Kebbell Gwyn, Francis Sherborn and William Withers trustees and executors. On the 18th of August, 1860, the deceased, being a widower, married again, and on the day of his marriage executed another will, in substance exactly similar to the previous one, and appointed the same executors. This will the deceased kept in his own possession. On the 5th of September, 1860, he called at the office of Messrs. Farnell & Brigg, in whose custody the will of the 11th of January, 1860, then was, and cancelled it by tearing off his signature, but in other respects that will remained uninjured during the deceased's lifetime. On the 3rd of July, 1861, the deceased executed a codicil, which commenced — "This is a codicil to the last will and testament of me, John May, of Twickenham, in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, and which will bears date the 11th of January, 1860." It then referred to the bequest of the residue of his freehold, copyhold and personal estate to his daughter for her absolute use and benefit, and charged it with an annuity of 52*l.* per annum to his wife Mary May for her life, and concluded "And I hereby in all other respects ratify and confirm my said will, and desire that this may be taken and deemed as part thereof." On the 6th of September, 1865, the deceased executed a second codicil, which began "Codicil to my last will and testament, made on the day of , 1860. I by this codicil direct my executors and trustees to pay unto my wife Mary May the sum of twenty guineas, amounting in addition to the sum I have named in the aforesaid will . . . I intend by this codicil and the aforesaid will that my wife shall enjoy the full benefit of the said bequests for the term of her natural life without let or hindrance, provided only that if my said wife Mary shall after my decease marry a second husband, then and in that case I direct that the whole of the benefit I have bequeathed to her shall revert back to my executors and trustees to be administered by them according to the tenor of the aforesaid will."

Dr. Tristram moved for probate of the will of the 18th of August, 1860, and of the two codicils, to be granted to the executors named in the will.—The will of January, 1860, was no longer a will in July, 1861, because it had been revoked by deceased's marriage, and had been subsequently cancelled by him by the tearing off of his signature. Hence an ambiguity arises on the wording of the first codicil, and the Court will admit evidence to shew that the testator intended that it should be a codicil to the will of the 18th of August, 1860, which was in fact the last will of the deceased at the time the codicil was executed.—He referred to Rogers v. Goodenough (1).

SIR J. P. WILDE.—The broad question in this and the two succeeding cases is, whether a will which has been revoked and another will substituted, has or has not been revived by the operation of a subsequent codicil. This is a question of construction, and one of some difficulty. The occurrence of no less than three difficulties within a short period in which the question has arisen makes it desirable to pass in review some of the decisions by which the judgment of the Court ought to be guided. The following appear to be the propositions established by previous authority.

Unless there be a latent ambiguity in the codicil, evidence of the testator's real meaning must be excluded. This is in obedience to the well-known common law doctrine with respect to written instruments, as was decided in Walpole v. Cholmondeley (2), which was acted upon in In the goods of Chapman (3). It may be proper on some future occasion to consider the doctrine upheld in courts of equity, where mistakes, if proved to demonstration to be so, have been rectified even in written documents. This subject is well discussed in Story's Equity Jurisprudence, ss. 156, 157.

The next proposition is this: that although evidence of the testator's intention is excluded, the Court ought always to receive such evidence of the surrounding circumstances as by placing it in the position of the testator will the better enable it to read the true sense of the words he has used. This is a doctrine constantly acted upon at common law in relation to written documents, and notably in cases of written guarantees. It is affirmed in the fifth proposition of Sir J. Wigram's excellent book on this subject.

Thirdly, it has been decided by no less than three very remarkable cases, that if the codicil refer to a will with the intention of reviving it, and it turns out that such will has been entirely burnt or destroyed by the testator animo revocandi, the codicil cannot effect the revival.

(1) 2 Swa. & Tr. 342; s. c. 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Pr. M. & A. 49.

(2) 7 Term Rep. 138.

The circumstances of these three cases, of course, varied; but in all three there were two wills, the later one revoking the former, and a subsequent codicil referring by date to the former will. They all had this further feature, that the first will was not only revoked but destroyed. The earliest was the case of Hale v. Tokerlove (4), decided by Dr. Lushington, in 1850. He held that the codicil would not in law revive the first will, because the will was "gone, destroyed animo revocandi" (p. 328); but that the second will was revoked by necessary implication, because a prior one was confirmed. The only paper entitled to probate he held to be the codicil. The next case was that of Newton v. Newton (5), determined in the Probate Court in Dublin, by Dr. Keatinge, in 1860. He held, like Dr. Lushington, that the codicil could not revive the first will, but that the second will was entitled to probate, as the intention to revoke the second was dependent upon the establishment of the first. His decision on this last head was reversed by the Court of Appeal (6) in 1861, and the testator declared to have died intestate. The last case was that of Rogers v. Goodenough (1), decided by Sir C. Cresswell, in 1862. He held, as in the other cases, that the codicil would not revive a will that had no existence; but that there being no words in the codicil expressing the intention to revoke the second will, and no disposition of property inconsistent with that will, there was no ground for affirming that in any of the modes pointed out by the statutes a revocation of the second will had been effected. And he granted probate of the second will and the codicil, as together containing the will of the deceased. This last case, it will be observed, is an authority for this further proposition that a codicil, which refers by date, and which the testator intended as a codicil to one will, may be entitled to probate with another will. Assuming then, upon these authorities, that a codicil may, by referring in adequate terms to a revoked will, revive that will if it be in existence, and that in ascertaining whether the testator intended such revival the Court is precluded, unless there is a latent ambiguity in the codicil, from receiving any evidence except what may suffice to place it in the position of the testator, the next question will be, what is the effect of the statute?

The words of section 22. (1 Vict. c. 26.) are "No will or codicil; or any part thereof, which shall be in any manner revoked, shall be revived otherwise than by the re-execution thereof, or by a codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, and shewing an intention to revive the same." What is the meaning of these last words? To appreciate them it is necessary to bear in mind the law as it stood when they were enacted. The theory of the law is, and always was, that a codicil forms part of a will, and consequently that to make a codicil to your will is first to affirm the existence of that will; and, secondly, republish it or re-affirm its validity. It was, therefore, before the act, an inference which the law drew from the making of the codicil, that the testator intended to re-affirm his will, and if the will had been revoked by re-affirming it to revive it. In brief, it would not be wrong to say that all codicils to wills were held (before the act passed) to revive the wills to which they were respectively codicils, if such wills had been previously revoked. As soon, therefore, as it could be ascertained that the codicil in question was a codicil to a particular revoked will, that will was revived. The difficulty with which the Courts in the contested cases had to grapple was to ascertain to which or what will the disputed paper was intended as a codicil.

Such being the state of the law before the Wills Act, I hesitate to accept the conclusion that the express words of the section meant to leave the matter in the same state in which it would have stood if they had never been introduced. If the merely declaring that a particular paper was to be taken as a codicil to a particular will was all that the legislature required, when it enacted that the codicil should shew an intention to revive a revoked will, the words shewing an intention to revive the same were quite useless, for every codicil to a revoked will, by power of being a codicil to such will, so shewed it. I therefore infer that the legislature meant that the intention of which it speaks should appear on the face of the codicil, either by express words referring to a will as revoked, and importing an intention to revive the same, or by a disposition of the testator's property inconsistent with any other intention, or by some other expression conveying to the mind of the Court with reasonable certainty the existence of the intention in question. In other words, I conceive that it was designed by the statute to do away with the revival of wills by mere implication.

(5) 5 Law Times, N.S. 218.

(6) 12 Ir. Chanc. Rep. 118.

It is proper here to take notice of the case of Payne and Meredith v. Frappes (7). In that case there would seem to have been little beyond the reference by date to shew the intention to revive a former will. But the Court did not lay down the proposition that the date alone was sufficient; on the contrary, the learned Judge said, "I must gather the intention from the codicil itself, and I must confess that, to my mind, the intention to revive the will of 1837 is clearly shewn; there is a specific reference to the will of 1837 by date, and I must say the testator has taken great pains to describe the instrument to which the paper of 1839 is described as a codicil" (p. 593). The decision proceeded upon the ground that the Judge was convinced of the testator's intention, not that he felt bound by the language of the codicil in the face of an opposite conviction. On the other hand, I am much fortified in the view I take of the statute by the remark made by Sir C. Crosswell in Marsh v. Marsh (8): "It may be assumed that a codicil to a will shews an intention that some will should be operative, and prima facie the last existing will, especially if that revoked all others, must be taken to be the will intended. . . . It appears to have been the object of the legislature to put an end equally to implied revocations and implied revivals." The due result of the documents in each case, and of such external facts as may be admitted in evidence, must of course be gathered from the language of the documents themselves read in the light of such facts. Some general views, however, present themselves, some general probabilities of intention attend all such cases as those now under judgment. It may in the outset, I think, be doubted whether any testator, who bore in mind that he had revoked his will, and substituted another for it, ever really sat down with the purpose of revoking his last will and reviving the former one, and set about the execution of that purpose by simply making a codicil referring by date to his first will without more. Would any lawyer advise such a course, or would any unskilled testator imagine he could achieve the end by such a method? The leading idea of revoking the one and reviving the other in its place would surely find expression by some form of words in a paper designed mainly for that object. On the other hand, I conceive that in the vast majority of cases, when a man declares his intention that a particular paper varying his previous dispositions shall be taken as a codicil to his last will and testament, he means that which really is his last will and testament, his then existing will, and the dispositions of his property then in force. In like manner, when he goes on to declare, in the common language of codicils, that in all other respects he ratifies and confirms his last will and testament, he really means to confirm that which exists, and not to bring to life a paper which has ceased to be testamentary, or revive dispositions which have no existence, and are therefore not, properly speaking, capable of being ratified. That these conclusions are just in the main is amply proved by the fact that when full light has been cast on the testator's real purpose by means of parol evidence, the reference to the earlier will has in most cases turned out to be nothing but a blunder. If experience had not shewn the fact, it would be almost incredible that mistakes should occur so constantly as they do in so simple a matter as reciting the true date of a will. And yet in many cases errors of this kind, can, if allowed to be proved, not only be proved, but proved to demonstration. The excluded evidence in Walpole v. Cholmondeley (2) proved the error that had been committed and the cause of it on testimony so clear and so free from suspicion as to remove the last trace of reasonable doubt. Sometimes the error arises from the attorney or clerk, who had laid his hand on the wrong paper; sometimes from the testator, who has kept his first will in his own possession, and forgotten his second, which he has left in the hands of his attorney; oftentimes from the employment of an attorney to draw the codicil, who has made an earlier will, and has been in ignorance that a subsequent will has been made. I am therefore of opinion that the Court ought to be slow to conclude that a testator has manifested in this indirect way a desire to revoke his last will, and that it should scrutinize narrowly the language of a codicil which is said to shew such an intention, lest in the desire to follow the testator's wishes too blindly, it sets them at naught altogether.

I proceed to the facts of this case. The testator made a will on the 11th of January, 1860. On the 18th of August he married, and on the same day, after his marriage, executed a fresh will, which in terms revoked the former one. On the 5th of September in the same year he took the trouble to cancel his first will by tearing off the signature. On the 3rd of July, 1861, he made a codicil, which he described as "a codicil to the last will and testament of me, John May," &c., and which will bears date the 11th of January, 1860. If parol evidence is admissible, it is plain that this reference to the earlier will was nothing but a mistake on the part of the attorney who drew it; but I do not think it is necessary to decide whether it is so or not, for I am unable to perceive any sufficient evidence on the face of the codicil itself that the testator entertained an intention to revive the former will. His marriage itself had revoked it. He had immediately after his marriage substituted another for it in almost the same identical terms, and to prevent all mistake he had taken the trouble to tear off the signature. It is plain that in September, 1860, when he thus acted, he considered the will of August to be the effective record of his testamentary dispositions, and I can conceive no motive which would render it probable, or hardly possible, that he should desire to revive the will of January. In a word, the codicil, read by the surrounding circumstances of the case, fails to shew the necessary intention.

The Court grants probate of the will of August, 1860, together with the codicil of July, 1861, and a further codicil of the 6th of September, 1865, as to which no question was made (9).

(9) In deciding this case the Court had also before it two other cases of a similar character; the particular decision in each of those was as follows:

In the goods of STEELE.

Dr. Deane and A. Staveley Hill appeared for the parties.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—The testator made a will of the 17th of January, 1866. On the 25th of October, 1866, he made a fresh will revoking the former. On the 12th of January, 1868, he made a codicil, which was declared to be a codicil "to his last will and testament, which will bears date the 16th of January last past," in other words the 16th of January, 1867. At the conclusion of the codicil he confirms "his said last will." Here is a latent ambiguity, and the Court may resort, if need be, to the affidavits filed. But I am of opinion that on the face of the documents themselves there is no intention shewn with anything like sufficient distinctness to revoke the testator's last will and revive the former one. It is true that the codicil speaks of the last will as containing a legacy to his nephew of 100*l.*, and that the legacy is to be found in the will of January, 1866, whereas in the last will the legacy is reduced to 50*l.* But that the memory of the testator, an old man past eighty, was at fault is clear by his widely incorrect reference to the date of his last will, and I see no reason why it should not have failed him in describing the amount of the legacy which he wished to revoke, though he bore in mind the object of his bounty. On the other hand, the will he speaks of is his last will, and there is no trace of a desire to depart from it to be found on the face of the codicil. I think therefore that the will of October, 1866, was never revoked, and that it is entitled to probate together with the codicil in question.

In the goods of WILSON.

Prichard appeared for the applicant.

SIR J. P. WILDE.—In this case the testator made his will on the 24th of September, 1858. On the 16th of July, 1861, he made a fresh will disposing of the whole of his property. The first will was found after his death with the signature torn off, and had been used by him as a draft for the second will. On the 20th of December, 1864, he made a codicil, which he declares to be a codicil to his last will and testament, dated the 24th of September, 1858. Notwithstanding the perfectly distinct reference to the date of his earlier will, it is plain to demonstration from the contents of the codicil itself that he was really referring to the will of 1861. He speaks of bequests which are to be found only there, and goes on to say that he has altered those bequests in his own hand on the face of his said will, and for greater certainty has mentioned the lines in which these alterations are to be found. These alterations, with numbers to the lines, are found in the will of 1861, and the Court has no hesitation in affirming that it was to that will he intended the codicil to apply. The Court grants probate of the will of July, 1861, with the codicil of December, 1864.

Suit for Restitution—Answer charging Adultery and praying for Judicial Separation—Abandonment of Prayer for Restitution at Trial—Evidence of Parties as to Adultery—14 & 15 Vict. c. 99. s. 4.

The answer to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights charged adultery, and prayed for a judicial separation.

At the trial, the petitioner abandoned his prayer for restitution, and offered no evidence:—Held, first, that such abandonment did not take away the respondent's right to go for a judicial separation.

Secondly, that the evidence of the parties was admissible upon the question of adultery, there being no "suit or proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery" within the meaning of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99. s. 4.

This was a petition by a husband for restitution of conjugal rights. The respondent had filed an answer charging the petitioner with adultery, and praying for a judicial separation. The petitioner traversed the charge of adultery, and the issue now came on for trial by a jury.

*Ballantine, Serj. (Day and H. James with him).—*The petitioner has determined to abandon his suit for restitution; the respondent therefore cannot give evidence upon the issue of adultery.

*Dr. Spinks (Searle and R. J. Shee with him), contra.—*The petition cannot be abandoned without the respondent's consent. She wishes the cause to proceed.

The JUDGE ORDINARY refused to allow the petition to be abandoned without the respondent's consent.

The petitioner not tendering any evidence, the respondent was called as a witness in support of the charge of adultery.

*Day.—*The respondent is not a competent witness. The petition for restitution having been abandoned, the only question before the Court is the respondent's prayer for a judicial separation on the ground of adultery. That is "a proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery" within the meaning of the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99. s. 4, and the evidence of the parties is therefore inadmissible—Burroughs v. Burroughs (1).

*Dr. Spinks, contra.—*The evidence of parties is only excluded where there is a suit or proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery. Here the suit instituted was for restitution of conjugal rights.

Searle (on the same side).—Burroughs v. Burroughs (1) is an authority in favour of the admissibility of the respondent's evidence, as an answer to the suit for restitution and for the purpose of getting the petition dismissed. Whether the Court can upon her evidence decree a judicial separation is another question.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—I wish that I could decide the question upon any reasonable ground. I should like to have some reasonable ground for holding that a husband or wife may be examined upon the question of adultery in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights, whilst their evidence upon the same question is excluded in a suit which happens to have been instituted on the ground of adultery. I cannot see the slightest distinction between the two cases. The reasons for and against allowing the parties to a suit to be examined in respect of their alleged adultery are well known; but it is impossible to suggest a reason why the admission or rejection of their evidence should depend upon the form of the suit. It is conceded that if the petitioner had proceeded to-day in the ordinary way, had proved the marriage and asked for a decree of restitution, the respondent would have been a competent witness upon the question of adultery. It is said, however, that a different state of things has arisen in consequence of the petitioner abandoning his prayer for restitution. But the suit remains the same. The Court has refused to allow him to withdraw his petition, and the suit is, in my opinion, not affected by the circumstance that he does not mean to ask for a decree. I have nothing to guide me but the act of parliament, and there is nothing in the act which excludes the evidence of parties in such a case as this. The exclusion is confined to cases in which there is a suit or proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, and this suit was not instituted in consequence of adultery. It is true that the wife, in her answer, seeks for relief on the ground of her husband's adultery, but that does not prevent the suit being originally one for restitution of conjugal rights, because, as the record stands, the petitioner is entitled to claim restitution if the adultery should not be proved. With respect to Burroughs v. Burroughs (1), what Mr. Searle says is true, but the question is a very important one, and I shall take a note of the objection, so that the matter may be brought before the full Court. For the purposes of to-day, I shall admit the evidence.

The respondent was then examined. The jury found that the petitioner had been guilty of adultery.

The JUDGE ORDINARY suspended the decree.

On the 2nd of June, Hawkins (Day and H. James with him) moved for a rule nisi for a new trial, on the ground of the improper reception of the respondent's evidence.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—The question is an important one, and ought to be submitted to the full Court. I shall therefore refuse to grant a rule, so that you may appeal.

The petitioner appealed, but the appeal was subsequently abandoned.

Dissolution of Marriage on Ground of Adultery—Answer praying for Judicial Separation on Ground of Cruelty—Evidence of Parties on Issue of Cruelty—29 Vict. c. 32. s. 2.

The 2nd section of 29 Vict. c. 32, which empowers the Court to grant a judicial separation when prayed in an answer to a suit for dissolution of marriage, has not altered the law of evidence. Where, therefore, an answer to a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery charges cruelty, and prays for a judicial separation, the evidence of the parties upon the question of cruelty is inadmissible.

This was a petition by a husband, for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, claiming damages. The respondent and co-respondent denied the adultery; and the respondent charged the petitioner with cruelty, and prayed for a judicial separation.

The issues came on now for trial by a jury.

Parry, Serj. (Searle and L. Smith with him), for the respondent, tendered her as a witness to prove the charge of cruelty.—In Whittal v. Whittal and Hunt (1) it was held that, in a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, a respondent, who in her answer charges the petitioner with cruelty and desertion, is not a competent witness on the issues of cruelty and desertion. The 2nd section of 29 Vict. c. 32. empowers the Court to grant relief upon a prayer contained in an answer; and the effect of that section is to place a respondent, who prays for relief in her answer, in the same position as if she were a petitioner. She is, therefore, a competent witness.

Digby Seymour, Dr. Spinks and Inderwick, for the petitioner.

Thomas, for the respondent.

The JUDGE ORDINARY.—The 2nd section of 29 Vict. c. 32. has made no alteration in the law of evidence. The evidence of parties is therefore still excluded upon the charges of cruelty and desertion, when those charges are contained in an answer to a suit instituted on the ground of adultery. The respondent's evidence is inadmissible.

June 22.

Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858—Appeal—Practice.

It is not competent to a Court of appeal to consider whether or not the jury have arrived at a proper conclusion upon a question of fact submitted to them.

Where a decree contains nothing more by way of recital than the findings of the jury, the only duty of the Court of appeal, when this decree is brought before it, is to ascertain whether the verdict has been properly applied.

This was a petition of appeal, complaining of that part of a decree of the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes dated the 13th of June, 1866, which declared that one Olive Serres was not the legitimate daughter of Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland, and that there was no valid marriage between the said Duke and one Olive Wilmot, who was alleged to have been the mother of the same Olive Serres.

In 1861, and under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858, the appellant had obtained a decree establishing the marriage of her parents Thomas Serres and Olive his wife on the 1st of September, 1791, and that she, the appellant, was the legitimate issue of such marriage.

In 1866 the appellant endeavoured, under the same act, to obtain a decree establishing a marriage which she said had been celebrated between one Olive Wilmot and Henry Frederick, Duke of Cumberland; and that her, the appellant's, mother, Olive Serres, was the legitimate issue of such marriage.

At the trial, a vast number of documents, in the nature of certificates, had been put in, which, if proved to be genuine, would have abundantly evidenced the marriage sought to be established. But the jury, without discriminating which, if any, of these documents were genuine, and without distinctly declaring that, in their opinion, the whole were false, rejected the evidence as spurious. And on their finding the Court gave judgment against the appellant.

This case is reported fully in 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Pr. M. & A. 6.

From this decree the appellant now appealed to this House, alleging, as reasons only to the effect, that the verdict of the jury was wrong.

The appellant appeared in person, and was about to read from a paper her reasons for being dissatisfied with the decree appealed from; when

The Attorney General (Sir J. Karslake) made the preliminary objection that the appeal raised no question as to the validity of the decree; that the decree was, upon the face of it, perfectly correct; and that no fault was found with it in point of form; that the decree was founded upon a verdict to which no objection had ever been made by bill of exceptions, or upon a motion for a new trial, or by having the finding of the jury turned into a special verdict or a special case; and that therefore there was nothing before the House of which their Lordships could take cognizance. And he read the 55th and 56th sections of the act 21 & 22 Vict. c. 93, and the 7th section of the act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, as to the right of appeal conferred by those acts (The Legitimacy Declaration Act, 1858); and he cited Fernie v. Young (1).

Mrs. Ryves, the appellant, had no suitable answer to make to this objection, and the House, without calling on the Solicitor General (Sir C. J. Selwyn), Dr. Travers Twiss, Hannen or R. Bourke (who were with the Attorney General), dismissed the appeal.

Dr. W. Smith, who appeared for the son of the appellant, who had been joined as a respondent, asked to be heard on the question; but Mrs. Ryves, the appellant, rejected his assistance, and the House refused to hear him unless as counsel for the appellant herself.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a case in which I think your Lordships will feel very great regret that the appellant has not put herself in the hands of some legal adviser, because I think, if that had been done, even at the risk of a certain amount of expense, a very much greater amount of expense would have been avoided, which she has been obliged to incur in order to bring before your Lordships an appeal as to which, the moment it is opened, an objection arises which, as it appears to me, it is perfectly impossible to surmount.

Now, this appeal, when it comes to be looked at, is simply and merely an appeal on a matter of fact which has already been submitted to and been pronounced upon by the verdict of a jury. The reasons stated in the case of the appellant are eight in number; every one of them are directed to shew that the verdict of the jury upon the questions submitted to them was an erroneous verdict. The proceedings under the Legitimacy Declaration Act were for the purpose of having it declared that the pedigree of the present appellant was of the character which she has, in her petition, described. Those proceedings immediately raised a number of questions of fact, and those questions of fact were properly brought to issue and laid before a jury for their determination. And I apprehend, beyond all doubt, that when the verdict of a jury, obtained in that way, is followed by a decree such as was made in the present instance, a decree containing nothing more by way of recital than the finding of the jury in such a case, the finding of the jury takes the place of the whole evidence which has been tendered in the case; and when the decree is brought before your Lordships, your Lordships have no duty beyond this, to ascertain whether, the jury having found the verdict which they have found, that verdict has been properly applied by the decree which the Court has added to the verdict.

If any objection had existed on the ground of the rejection of evidence or the improper reception of evidence, the act of parliament provides a mode by which that objection might be insisted upon. A bill of exceptions might have been tendered; or even, without tendering a bill of exceptions, an application might have been made in the Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes for a new trial. So that, either by a bill of exceptions or by a motion for a new trial, any question upon the admission or rejection of evidence might have been raised. And the case might, at all events by a bill of exceptions, have been brought before your Lordships for decision. But no course of that kind was adopted. The verdict of the jury having been obtained, it was submitted to without any motion for a new trial; and your Lordships, as I have already said, are now asked to do that which must oblige you either to consider whether the jury arrived at a proper determination, or whether, having arrived at that determination, the Court has properly applied the verdict in the decree which it has made. As to the first of these courses, it is a duty which it is not open to your Lordships to discharge. As to the second, namely, the form of the decree, no suggestion has been made at the bar, or in the case of the appellant, that, the verdict of the jury standing, the decree is an improper decree. Therefore, without detaining you further, but simply reminding you of these general principles, and of the manner in which this House in a very recent case found itself obliged to apply them,—in the case of Fernie v. Young (1), which was referred to at the bar,—I fear that no other course is open to your Lordships (I say I fear because I regret the great expense which has been unnecessarily incurred) except to dismiss this appeal with costs.

LORD CRANWORTH.—I concur entirely in what has fallen from my noble and learned friend, and the only observation I would make is this: it was suggested at the bar that this was a technicality, as it was called, with which the appellant was not conversant. I cannot admit it to be a technicality at all. It is of the very essence of justice. The question submitted to the Court below was, Aye or no, was this lady in a certain position and status in point of relationship and descent? That question was, according to the course of law, submitted to the proper tribunal. The proper tribunal has found that she had not that status which she insisted upon; and that having been so found, she, without having complained at all of the conclusion at which that tribunal arrived, comes here and complains of what the Court has done in consequence of that finding of the jury. That is not in any legitimate sense a technical objection. It goes to the very root and substance of the case. I therefore concur in the course recommended by my learned and noble friend.

LORD CHELMSFORD and LORD COLONSAY concurred.

The LORD CHANCELLOR.—I would only add to what I took the liberty of saying to your Lordships, and in affirmance of what my noble and learned friend has just observed as to the statement that this is a technical objection, that I can conceive no greater scandal to the administration of justice than it would have been if the law had turned out to be, that, a question of fact having been submitted to a jury, who had before them the witnesses and the power of observing their demeanour and the conduct of the trial generally, it were now competent to your Lordships to re-open that question, and to consider whether the jury have, or have not, arrived at a proper conclusion.

Decree (so far as appealed from) affirmed; and appeal dismissed with costs.

MILFORD v. MILFORD.

Divorce on Petition of Wife—Cruelty—Judicial Separation.

The essential feature of cruelty (such as, when coupled with adultery, will entitle a wife to a divorce) is, that there must be actual violence of such a character as to endanger personal health or safety, or there must be a reasonable apprehension of it.

This was an appeal from the decree and order of the Judge Ordinary made in December, 1866. The case is reported in 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 30.

The husband had been guilty of adultery of the most profligate character. The wife in 1866 presented her petition for a dissolution of the marriage, setting forth several distinct acts of adultery and also a general allegation of cruelty on the part of the husband, as by his violent conduct and by his threats to strike his wife; and there was a pretence that he had attempted to smother her. The Judge Ordinary had held, that though the adultery was of a gross and profligate character there had not been cruelty of such a character as the act of parliament contemplated as ground, when coupled with adultery, for a divorce, and his Lordship only decreed a judicial separation.

Mrs. Milford appealed.

The Attorney General and Dr. Spinks, for the appellant.—There was no question as to the respondent's profligacy. The nature of the acts of adultery, and the frequency of them, were such as to amount to legal cruelty. Besides, there were several acts of actual cruelty, and for these the remonstrances of his wife on account of his adultery afforded no justification. If the conduct of a man is habitually savage and profligate, and breaks out in certain instances, he may at any moment go further, and there is no necessity for the wife actually to wait till she suffers some specific injury. There was undoubted injury to her health. In Curtis v. Curtis (1), Lord Stowell, referring to Evans v. Evans, defines cruelty to be "the reasonable apprehension of injury to person or health." There is no necessity to wait till the violence has resulted in actual injury. As to the question raised as to condonation by reason of the wife's delay in coming forward, there was no forgiveness or condonation. She simply kept his ill-conduct in the background. Even if there had been condonation, condonation is only a conditional pardon dependent on the future observance of the duties of marriage life, a condition which the respondent had broken.

Coleridge, Kingdon and Searle, for the respondent, were not called on.

The LORD CHANCELLOR said, that matters raising questions of cruelty depended, as to their nature and character, entirely on the surrounding circumstances, and of these there were in this case no full description. Neither was any clear proof of malice furnished. Of the acts themselves, some were apparently trivial: one was an attempt at a blow when the husband was starting on a journey; another was the throwing a brush. As to the allegation that he threatened to dash his wife's brains out with a poker, and that he attempted to smother her with a pillow, these alleged acts did not seem to have occasioned the wife any present apprehension for her personal safety, for she continued to cohabit with him after each affair for more than two years. And as to the pillow, the lady did not seem to have had any difficulty in removing it from her mouth. The decree and order of the Judge Ordinary were correct.

Decree affirmed, and petition of appeal dismissed, with costs.

LEMPRIERE v. LEMPRIERE AND ROEBEL.

Judicial Separation—Adultery of Wife—Conduct of Petitioner conducing to the Adultery—Par Delictum—Practice.

The adultery of the respondent having been proved, and also cruelty and misconduct on the part of the petitioner which conduced to such adultery, the Court refused to allow a prayer for judicial separation to be substituted for that for dissolution of marriage, in order that the evidence of the misconduct of the petitioner should be expunged.

It is doubtful whether the principles of compensatio criminis and par delictum, as laid down in the Ecclesiastical Courts, are any longer applicable to matrimonial suits under the Divorce Acts, by which greater restrictions have been placed on the relief to be granted in such cases.

This was a petition by the husband, praying for a dissolution of his marriage with the respondent, by reason of her adultery with the co-respondent. The respondent pleaded adultery by the husband and cruelty. By leave of the Court she filed a cross-petition, in which the same charges were made against him. The petitions were heard before the Judge Ordinary without a jury.

Dr. Tristram appeared for the petitioner. Kenealy and Pater, for the respondent.

The JUDGE ORDINARY (July 14).—On the trial of this cause it was intimated by the Court that the adultery of the respondent was established. It was also established on evidence in the suit, independently of the cross-petition which the Court permitted the respondent to file, that the petitioner had for many years treated his wife with great barbarity. He was an habitual drunkard, and had savagely beaten his wife on numerous occasions. She had continually sought the protection of the law, and he had been many times before the magistrates. Finally he was sentenced to one month's imprisonment for an assault upon her, and on regaining his liberty he went to Birmingham instead of seeking his wife, and lived a considerable time apart from her. After a time, and as I believe after the adulterous intercourse with the co-respondent had commenced, she went to Birmingham for a fortnight, during which she cohabited with her husband. But her object in thus returning to him was to see her children, and I do not believe she intended to condone the past. On this state of the facts it is plain that the petition for dissolution of marriage must fail, for the husband has been guilty of misconduct which conduced, and in my judgment very largely conduced, to his wife's adultery. Indeed, it is scarcely too much to say, that his treatment of his wife drove her into cohabitation with another man. But it is contended that although the petitioner thus fails under the provisions of the Divorce Act, the Court ought to allow him to amend his petition in order to convert it into a petition for judicial separation; and then it is said that his cruelty and misconduct will be no answer to the wife's adultery, and he would be entitled to a decree. It seems to me it would be a great injustice if he could thus obtain a decree against his wife in respect of the adultery which he so largely aided to bring about, and I shall therefore give him no aid in doing so. A similar application was made in Boreham v. Boreham (1), and refused by the Court. Whenever the question here mooted arises in a suit properly instituted for judicial separation, it is desirable that it should be gravely considered whether, since the Divorce Act, a husband guilty of cruelty or desertion can sue for a judicial separation on the ground of his wife's adultery; still more, whether he can do so in case his own cruelty or desertion has, in the judgment of the Court, led to the adultery of which he complains. I am aware that in the Ecclesiastical Courts there is more than one decision that by way of compensatio criminis cruelty is no answer to adultery. At the same time there are passages to be found, in one judgment at least, which tend to make it doubtful whether such a rule would be applied where the cruelty preceded and brought about the adultery. "There may by possibility be cases where cruelty on the part of the husband may directly lead up to the wife's adultery; I say nothing upon such a case." This is the language of Dr. Lushington in Dillon v. Dillon (2). But the Divorce Acts made a great change in the law of the Ecclesiastical Courts by constituting desertion a matrimonial offence, and by giving the larger remedy of dissolution of marriage for the wife's adultery. It will be proper to consider how far these changes and the general restrictions made under which relief is given by those acts in cases of divorce do or do not multiply the restrictions within which judicial separation should be granted beyond those which were recognized in the Ecclesiastical Courts in suits for divorce a mensa et thoro. And the more so because this doctrine of compensatio criminis is not a wholly satisfactory one or capable of being logically adopted as a guide in granting or refusing relief. It is said that the cruelty of the husband will not justify the adultery of the wife, but so neither will his own adultery, and yet the latter has ever been held to be a bar. Again, what is par delictum? What standard has the Court for the measure of matrimonial offences, except the punishment with which they are visited, or the relief to which they give a title? In a suit for divorce a mensa et thoro, adultery and cruelty stood upon a level in those respects, and in a suit for judicial separation they do so now. There is much to consider under these and some other heads, whenever the question arises. In the present case both the petitions must be dismissed, the wife to have her costs of establishing the cruelty.

Rule 50, (Rules and Orders, 1862,) which directs that no person who renounces probate or administration in one character shall be permitted to take representation to the deceased in another, does not apply to the husband of a residuary legatee who signs a renunciation, executed by his wife, merely to signify his assent to her act. As a creditor he may take administration notwithstanding his signature to such a document.

Thomas Biggs, late of 17, Upper St. James Street, Brighton, Sussex, corn-merchant, died on the 2nd of April, 1868, having executed a will, dated the 30th of March, 1868, in which he named Thomas Cutten and William Coppard executors, and divided the residue of his personal estate equally amongst his brothers and sisters living at his decease. The deceased's estate being insolvent, the executors and residuary legatees declined to act, and by instruments under their hands and seals renounced probate of the will of the deceased and of administration with such will annexed. The renunciation was signed by the three husbands. Richard Caffyn having applied to the district registry, at Lewes, for administration with the will annexed, as a creditor, an objection was raised in the principal registry that he came under the 50th rule (1862), which is to the following effect: "No person who renounces probate of a will or letters of administration of the personal estate and effects of a deceased person in one character is to be allowed to take a representation to the same deceased in another character."

Dr. Middleton moved that administration should issue to Mr. Caffyn. Rule 50. is not applicable. Mr. Caffyn has renounced no right to which he is himself entitled; he has merely consented that his wife should renounce her right to administer the deceased's effects.

SIR J. P. WILDE was of opinion that that was the proper interpretation of the renunciation, and granted administration to Mr. Caffyn.

Nullity of Marriage—Whether Marriage Void or Voidable for Impotence.

The impotence of one of the parties to a marriage does not render the marriage void but only voidable. The validity of such a marriage can only be questioned in the lifetime of both of the parties and by the party who suffers an injury from it:—Held, accordingly, that the next-of-kin of a deceased married woman could not oppose the grant of administration to her husband on the ground of his impotence.

The plaintiff applied for a grant of administration of the effects of his deceased wife.

The defendants, who were the next-of-kin of the deceased, opposed the grant, and filed an act on petition, in which they alleged that the deceased had been married to the plaintiff on the 8th of June, 1854, and that the marriage was null and void by reason of the impotence of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff filed an answer denying that the marriage was null and void.

The case was argued, before Sir J. P. Wilde, on the 16th of June, 1868.

T. Jones and Dr. Swabey, for the respondents.—The impotence of one of the parties to a marriage renders the marriage void. Physical ability to consummate the marriage is a condition precedent to its validity. one of the parties; and that, too, as a collateral matter arising in the Probate Court. I will deal with this last difficulty first. It may be safely asserted that a question of impotency as a ground of nullity has never yet been raised in the temporal courts of this country. The various restrictions on marriage, such as a prior existing marriage, insanity, illegality under the Royal Marriage Act, and, since Lord Lyndhurst's Act, consanguinity or affinity. All these matters when they arise incidentally in the temporal courts have in modern times been there dealt with for the purposes of the suit in which they may have arisen. In older times all questions of marriage were relegated to the ecclesiastical authorities. Upon the old plea of ne unques acropiè in the action for dower the validity of the controverted marriage used always to be determinable by the bishop's certificate. The gradual declension of spiritual authority in matters temporal has brought it about that all questions as to the intrinsic validity of a marriage, if arising collaterally in a suit instituted for other objects, are determined in any of the temporal courts in which they may chance to arise; though, at the same time, a suit for the purpose of obtaining a definitive decree, declaring a marriage void, which should be universally binding, and which should ascertain and determine the status of the parties once for all, has from all time up to the present been maintainable in the ecclesiastical courts or Divorce Court alone. How, then, it may be asked, does it happen that the particular ground of nullity which is raised incidentally in this suit, has not followed the fate of all other grounds of nullity, and become cognizable in the temporal courts? The answer is, that impotence does not render a marriage "void," but only "voidable." And this brings me to the second objection, viz., that this matter can only be discussed and adjudicated in the lifetime of both parties. The distinction between "void" and "voidable" is not a mere refinement, but expresses a real difference in substance. This real distinction is well known and perfectly recognized at common law with regard to many contracts, in respect of which it is held that the injured party may treat the contract as void or not at his option. This is notably the case in some instances of fraud, and it is this option to hold to the contract or cancel it which is the distinguishing feature of a contract "voidable as compared with a contract intrinsically void." Questions of this kind arise most commonly where the rights of third parties have become involved. Now, it is obvious enough that this matter of impotence is one which ought to be raised only by the party who suffers an injury from it, and who elects to make it a ground for asking that the contract of marriage should be cancelled. For although it has been said that the procreation of children is one main object of marriage, yet it cannot be doubted that marriages between persons so advanced in years as effectually and certainly to defeat that object are perfectly legal and binding. The truth is, consensus, non concubitus, facit matrimonium. In the case of all incapacities to marriage in which society has an interest and which rests on grounds of public policy, it would be wrong and illogical that validity or invalidity should rest upon the option of the parties. And in all such cases, as I have already shewn, the marriage is absolutely "void," and not "voidable" only. But impotency has always hitherto been considered in the ecclesiastical courts (and since their abolition in the Divorce and Matrimonial Court) as a matter of personal complaint only. I do not find the principle of the Court's interference to cancel such a marriage anywhere distinctly set forth. Its original exercise was, it is likely enough, mixed up with the interests of those who asserted it. But I conceive that it has a sound basis of justice in the consideration that the party complaining was (though perhaps unintentionally) deceived in the contract, and ought not to be bound by it. But, whatever the ground, it has been and is always dealt with as a matter of personal complaint and grievance; and that it has been so dealt with is apparent from the fact that the Courts have been in the habit of requiring many conditions to be fulfilled before they would grant relief, all of which are inconsistent with the notion that the marriage is absolutely void. Thus the party complaining must be sincere in the ground upon which he is asking relief; there must be no unreasonable delay, and the defect must be incurable. I will only stop to point out that a contrary system would give rise to some almost intolerable results. The question whether two persons are married or not may arise on a great variety of occasions and be raised by third persons, as creditors or otherwise. Now, if the parties themselves, in a case of impotency, are content with consortium vitæ, and prefer to maintain the bond of matrimony intact, would it not be almost intolerable that a third person should have the right to insist upon an inquiry into the nature of their cohabitation and the revelation of their physical defects? With these observations I will quit the subject. It has been endeavoured in the above remarks to vindicate the propriety of confining the question of impotence as a ground for nullity of marriage to a suit brought by one of the parties to the marriage and in the Matrimonial Court. Whether I am justified or not in these views, this much is clear, that the practice of the Courts, both temporal and spiritual, from all time has been inconsistent with the attempt now made, and it is not supported by a single authority. The Court, therefore, pronounces the contention of the defendant to have wholly failed. It overrules the act on petition, and grants administration to the plaintiff with costs.

TO THE SUBJECTS OF CASES IN THE COURT OF PROBATE,

AND

THE COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1867, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1868.

ADMINISTRATION — with will annexed: legatee a married woman: refusal of husband: attorney]

—The deceased left her property to her sister, a married woman, for her sole use, and not to be liable to the control of any husband. She appointed no executor. The husband of the legatee refused, except on certain unreasonable terms, to consent to her taking administration or to join in the bond. The Court, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73, decreed administration to the attorney of the legatee, without the sanction of the husband. In the goods of Warren, 12

— with will annexed: to creditor or to widow and residuary legatee] — The Court will not grant administration with the will annexed to a creditor under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73. by reason of the insolvency of the estate of the deceased, if the widow and residuary legatee be willing to take it; much less will it do so if the insolvency is disputed. Hawke v. Wedderburn, 33

— de bonis non: joint grant to next-of-kin and another] — A joint grant of administration to the person by law entitled to administration, and to another, is a grant to a person other than the one entitled within the meaning of section 73. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. In the goods of Grundy, 21
A joint grant of administration de bonis non was made to the next-of-kin, and a person entitled in distribution; under the 73rd section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, where the next-of-kin consented, and there were special circumstances rendering such a grant convenient. Ibid.

— residuary legatee a married woman: renunciation with consent of husband: husband a creditor] — Rule 50. (Rules and Orders, 1862), which directs that no person who renounces probate or administration in one character shall be permitted to take representation to the deceased in another, does not apply to the husband of a residuary legatee who signs a renunciation, executed by his wife, merely to signify his assent to her act. As a creditor he may take administration notwithstanding his signature to such a document. In the goods of Biggs, 79

ADULTERY — wilful misconduct conducing to adultery] — If an intimacy springs up between a married woman and a man of such a character as to be dangerous to her honour, and the husband knows so much of it as to perceive the danger, and yet purposely or recklessly disregards it, he is guilty of wilful misconduct which may conduce to adultery. Dering v. Dering, 52

ALIMONY — pendente lite: respondent and co-respondent living together] — Where the wife has sufficient means of support independent of the husband, even although they be derived from the co-respondent, she will not be entitled to an allotment of alimony. Madan v. Madan, 10

— pendente lite: husband a master mariner out of employ] — On an application for alimony pendente lite on the husband's answers, from which it appeared that he was a master mariner and a part-owner in a sailing-vessel, but that he had not had any employment for three months, the Court nevertheless allotted alimony on the average of his admitted earnings during the previous three years. Thompson v. Thompson, 33

— amendment of petition] — Where the petitioner filed a petition for alimony, in which she set forth certain property which she asserted she held to her separate use, and the respondent answered the petition on oath, the Court permitted the petitioner to amend her petition for alimony, by adding thereto allegations of further income of the respondent, and a denial of a greater part of the income she had attributed to herself in her petition. Harker v. Harker, 11

— pendente lite: wife supporting herself] — Alimony pendente lite refused to a wife, who, for some time before the institution of the suit, had been and still was supporting herself in service. George v. George, 17

— wife subpenning husband] — A wife may subpoena and examine her husband in support of her petition for alimony. Anderson v. Anderson, 64

AMENDMENT — of petition. See Alimony.

APPEAL — practice on appeal] — It is not competent to a Court of appeal to consider whether or not the jury have arrived at a proper conclusion upon a question of fact submitted to them. Ryves v. the Attorney General (H.L.), 75

Any objection to the verdict, on the ground of the rejection or improper reception of evidence, must be raised by bill of exceptions or by motion for new trial. Ibid.

Where a decree contains nothing more by way of recital than the findings of the jury, the only duty of the Court of appeal, when this decree is brought before it, is to ascertain whether the verdict has been properly applied. Ibid.

ATTACHMENT—against bankrupt co-respondent for damages and costs—A decree having been made in a suit of dissolution of marriage, whereby the co-respondent was condemned in damages and costs, and an order issued that the damages should be paid into the registry within three weeks from the time such order was served upon him, and before the expiration of that period, and before the costs had been taxed, the co-respondent, on his own petition, was adjudicated a bankrupt, and subsequently he obtained an order of discharge:—Held, that as both the damages and costs were debts which might have been proved under the bankruptcy, and are covered by the order of discharge, this Court could not allow an attachment to issue against the co-respondent for their non-payment. Wood v. Wood, 25 — for non-compliance with subpoena. See Subpoena. Practice.

BANKRUPTCY—Co-respondent. See Attachment.

COLLUSION. See Adultery. Practice.

CO-RESPONDENT. See Attachment. Practice.

Costs—amendment of declaration and withdrawal of defendant in testamentary suit—The plaintiff propounded the will of the deceased in a declaration in the ordinary form, and the defendant pleaded thereto. Subsequently the plaintiff brought in a special declaration in lieu of the first, and in such special declaration he alleged that the will had been executed under the circumstances and with the formalities required by the law of the State of New York, America; that the deceased at the time was domiciled in that State; and that after his death the will received probate in the competent Court of the State. The defendant pleaded to this declaration, and evidence was taken on both sides, under a requisition directed to the authorities of the State of New York. Afterwards the plaintiff applied to amend his special declaration by adding a clause that the deceased was a British subject, and had his domicile of origin in Ireland. The amendment having been made, the defendant withdrew from the suit:—Held, that as the plaintiff, in amending his special declaration, had relinquished the legal position intended to be maintained by it, the defendant was not liable for any costs incurred subsequently to the filing of such declaration. Archer v. Burke, 30

— contents of destroyed will: costs against destroyer—In decreeing probate of the contents of a destroyed will, the Court condemned in costs a defendant who had destroyed the will, although he had not entered an appearance. King v. Gillard, 4

— testamentary suit: notice under Rules—In a testamentary suit defendants, with their pleas, gave notice that they merely insisted upon the will being proved in solemn form of law, by the production of the attesting witnesses, and that if both such witnesses were produced, they only intended to cross-examine the witnesses in support of the will. The plaintiff examined both the attesting witnesses:—Held, that under the rules a sufficient notice had been given, and that defendants, one of whom was an executor under an earlier will of the deceased than the one propounded, were not liable to be condemned in costs. Leeman v. George, 13

COUNTY COURT—Reference of proceedings to. See Testamentary Suit.

CRUELTY—what amounts to—The essential feature of cruelty (such as, when coupled with adultery, will entitle a wife to a divorce) is, that there must be actual violence of such a character as to endanger personal health or safety, or there must be a reasonable apprehension of it. Milford v. Milford (H.L.), 77

DAMAGES AND COSTS. See Practice.

DESERTION—husband supporting deserted wife: cause of desertion—A husband who permanently puts an end to co-habitation with his wife against her consent is guilty of desertion, although he may continue to support her. The words "desertion without cause," in section 25. of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, mean "desertion without reasonable cause," and are equivalent to "desertion without reasonable excuse." Yeatman v. Yeatman, 37
Semle—That conduct short of a matrimonial offence sufficient to found a decree of judicial separation, may be a sufficient cause to bar a deserted wife of all remedy for the desertion. Ibid.

Infirmity of temper on the part of a wife, unless shewn in some marked and intolerable excesses, is not a reasonable cause for desertion. Ibid.

— deed of separation—Where the parties have separated voluntarily under a deed of separation, such separation will not be converted into a desertion merely because one of the parties does not fulfil all the terms of the bargain he entered into with the other on parting. Crabb v. Crabb, 42

DISCOVERY—in testamentary suit: purposes auxiliary to the trial of a question of fact—The Court has power, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 36, to order a party to the suit to file an affidavit setting out what letters written to or by the deceased, or by his direction, are in the custody or under the control of such party, even although the letters are not distinctly affirmed to have reference to the testamentary intentions of the deceased. Discovery is a purpose auxiliary to the trial of a question of fact. Hunt v. Anderson, 27

DISSOLUTION OF MARRIAGE—Intervention of Queen's Proctor. See Practice.

— See Adultery. Estoppel.

ESTOPPEL—unsuccessful suit for judicial separation on ground of cruelty—A petitioner, whose petition for judicial separation, on the ground of cruelty, has been dismissed for defect of proof, is estopped from setting up the same charges of cruelty in a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery and cruelty. Finney v. Finney, 43

— estoppel by petition dismissed by reason of petitioner's adultery—The petitioner applied to the Court of Divorce to dissolve his marriage by reason of his wife's adultery with A. A. pleaded that the petitioner had himself been guilty of adultery with his wife's sister. The Court held that this charge was proved, and dismissed the petition. The petitioner again applied to the Court to dissolve the marriage by reason of his wife's adultery with B. and C. Neither the respondent nor either co-respondent filed answers to the petition. The Queen's Proctor intervened and pleaded the former judgment, and also the adultery with the respondent's sister; the jury before whom the issue was tried found that the petitioner had not committed adultery with his wife's sister:—Held, that the former judgment must be received as conclusive evidence of the adultery of the petitioner; but that, under the special circumstances of the case, the Court was justified in the exercise of its discretion in making a decree nisi to dissolve the marriage. Conradi v. Conradi, 55

EVIDENCE—of parties on issue of cruelty—The 2nd section of 29 Vict. c. 32, which empowers the Court to grant a judicial separation when prayed in an answer to a suit for dissolution of marriage, has not altered the law of evidence. Where, therefore, an answer to a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery charges cruelty, and prays for a judicial separation, the evidence of the parties upon the question of cruelty is inadmissible. Bland v. Bland, 74

— Declarations by testator. See Will.

EXECUTOR—according to the tenor: appointments—Testator in his will left his property, after payment of his debts and funeral expenses, to certain persons, and constituted and appointed A. and B. to be his trustees, with full power to dispose of all his property, and convert the same into money, to be deposited in government funds for the purposes above stated:—Held, that A. and B. were executors according to the tenor of the will. In the goods of Chappell, 32

— according to the tenor—Testatrix by her will appointed A. trustee, with power to convert the residue of her estate into money, and after payment of her debts and personal expenses, to dispose of the property in accordance with the directions given in such will, and she also appointed him executor. By a codicil she revoked that part of her will which gave the property in trust to A, and in lieu of him appointed her nephews B. and C, and providing

C. should not be in England his brother D, to act in his capacity. She also revoked the appointment of A. as executor, and in his place appointed B. and C. B. renounced probate of the will of the deceased; C. at the time of her death was not in England:—Held, that D. was an executor according to the tenor of the will, but that power must be reserved to make a grant to C. in case he should return to this country. In the goods of Goodworth, 49

— substituted executor—The deceased by her will appointed as executors A, and failing him, B. By her first codicil she appointed C. in the place of B, and by a second codicil she cancelled the appointment of A, and in his room appointed D. D. declined to act alone, and renounced his right to probate:—Held, that C. was entitled to probate as the substituted executor on the failure of D. In the goods of Colquhoun, 1

— substituted executor—Testator appointed A, an officer in the Navy, his executor, "and in case of his absence on foreign duty," he appointed B. his executrix. When the testator died A. was in England, but shortly afterwards he went abroad on foreign service, and still remained abroad:—Held, that B. was entitled to probate as substituted executrix, testator's intention being that she should act if A. were abroad when the necessity for proving the will arose. In the goods of Langford, 20

— appointment of executors—The deceased left in her will "one sovereign to the executor and witness of my will for their trouble, to see that everything is divided justly." No person was named as executor in the will; but opposite the names of the attesting witnesses, and beneath the signature of the deceased, were the words "witnesses and executors," which words were written by one of such witnesses by direction of the deceased previous to the execution of the will:—Held, that the deceased had failed to make a lawful appointment of executors. In the goods of Woods, 23

— See Will.

INTERVENTION OF QUEEN'S PROCTOR. See Practice.

JUDICIAL SEPARATION—conduct of petitioner conducing to the adultery: par delictum: practice

—The adultery of the respondent having been proved, and also cruelty and misconduct on the part of the petitioner which conduced to such adultery, the Court refused to allow a prayer for judicial separation to be substituted for that for dissolution of marriage, in order that the evidence of the misconduct of the petitioner should be expunged. Lempriere v. Lempriere, 78

It is doubtful whether the principles of compensatio criminis and par delictum, as laid down in the Ecclesiastical Courts, are any longer applicable to matrimonial suits under the Divorce Acts, by which greater restrictions have been placed on the relief to be granted in such cases. Ibid.

JURISDICTION—after reference to County Court. See Testamentary Suit.

NULLITY OF MARRIAGE—impotency of husband: surgical report inconclusive: uncorroborated statement of wife—In a suit of nullity by reason of the husband's impotency, the surgical report stated that the physical appearances of the wife were such that she might have had regular connexion with her husband during cohabitation. The wife, during the two years' cohabitation, had not complained to her family on this matter, and had separated from her husband by reason of his alleged violence. The respondent affirmed on oath that the marriage had been consummated. The Court declined to pronounce the marriage invalid on the unsupported oath of the party seeking to be relieved from its obligations. U—, falsely called J—, v. J—, 7

— Scotch and Belgian marriage between same parties: dissolution of Belgian marriage by Belgian Court, and subsequent marriage in England by one of the parties—A, an Englishwoman, married in Scotland B, a domiciled Belgian. They took up their abode in Belgium, and there went through the ceremony of marriage according to the law of Belgium. The Belgian marriage was dissolved in Belgium on the ground of mutual consent. A, in the lifetime of B, afterwards married C. in England:—Held, that as the Scotch marriage was valid by the law of England, and the Belgian marriage conferred no new status on the parties, A.'s marriage with C. was void. Birt v. Boutinez, 50

— due notice under Registration Acts: no person to consent—Since the passing of 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, all analogy between a marriage by banns and one by notice to the registrar, under the Registration Acts, has been effaced. The attempt at securing the consent of parents or friends to a marriage of the latter class by publicity has been relinquished, and the procurement of actual consent substituted in the same manner as has always been used in marriages by licence. The due notice, therefore, required by the statute is a notice conforming to the formalities by the statute provided, and will be sufficient, even although the contents thereof in respect of the christian names or residence and other details are not strictly true or accurate. Holmes v. Simmons, 58

It is doubtful whether the marriage of a minor can be declared null and void by reason of undue publication of banns if there be no parent or guardian whose consent or dissent can be given to such marriage. Ibid.

— whether marriage void or voidable for impotence—The impotence of one of the parties to a marriage does not render the marriage void, but only voidable. The validity of such a marriage can only be questioned in the lifetime of both of the parties and by the party; therefore, the next-of-kin of a deceased married woman cannot oppose the grant of administration to her husband on the ground of his impotence. P. v. S., 80

PRACTICE—misnomer of respondent: irregularity—In a suit for dissolution of marriage, after a decree nisi, with costs against the co-respondent, an attachment for non-payment of those costs was granted. The citation and subsequent proceedings, in which the co-respondent was erroneously styled William Abbott, were served upon William Brains Abbot, who took no objection to the irregularity until the attachment was granted. He then applied to have it set aside:—Held, that as he had stood by during the progress of the suit and allowed judgment to go against him in a wrong name, the attachment must stand. Churchill v. Churchill, 41

— opponent withdrawing from suit: permission to others to intervene in his place: costs—A will propounded by the executors was opposed by the plaintiff, one of the next-of-kin. The issues were tried by a jury, and were found for the executors, and the will was pronounced for. After an order nisi for a new trial, on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, had been granted, the plaintiff abandoned further opposition to the will. The Court, upon the application of two of the next-of-kin, who had been cited to see proceedings and had appeared, but had not pleaded, allowed them to plead and adopt the proceedings already had in the suit. The order for a new trial was ultimately made absolute, the executors being allowed their costs up to that time out of the estate. Boulton v. Boulton (Kendall intervening), 19

— service of citation—An undertaking by the respondent's solicitor to appear is not sufficient. The citation must be served upon the respondent. De Nicerville v. De Nicerville, 43

— suit for dissolution: Queen's Proctor's intervention: collusion: suppression of material facts: particulars: costs—A husband having obtained a decree nisi in a suit in which neither of the respondents appeared, the Queen's Proctor intervened and (inter alia) charged collusion between the petitioner and the respondent, and that material facts had not been brought before the Court:—Held, by the Court, on reversing the decree and dismissing the petition, first, that the fact that the husband before and after the institution of the suit had had frequent interviews with his wife, and had then given her money, and urged her not to oppose the suit, established collusion; secondly, that the fact that the husband had been in the habit of going with his wife and the co-respondent to places of amusement, and of allowing her to dance frequently with the co-respondent there, and then leaving her in the care of the co-respondent, was conduct conducing to the adultery, and as such was a material fact which ought to have been brought before the Court. Barnes v. Barnes, 4

A wife being entitled to alimony pendente lite, the voluntary gift of money by a husband to her during the progress of a suit by him for a divorce, does not per se prove collusion. Ibid.

Where the Queen's Proctor intervenes and charges the suppression of material facts, without specifying such facts, the petitioner is entitled to particulars. Ibid.

Where the Queen's Proctor intervened and charged collusion, that material facts had not been brought before the Court, and that the petitioner had been guilty of adultery, and at the hearing established the first two charges and abandoned the last, the Court refused to condemn the petitioner in costs, on the ground that he had been put to great expense in preparing to defend the charge of adultery. Ibid.

— intervention of Queen's Proctor and other parties: witnesses: identical pleas—The petitioner, in a matrimonial suit, having obtained a decree nisi to dissolve his marriage, the Queen's Proctor and other parties intervened. The questions for the jury, raised by the latter, were collusion and connivance; by the former, collusion, connivance and misconduct which conduced to the adultery of the respondent:—Held, that although the counsel for the Queen's Proctor and the other interveners might respectively produce and examine witnesses, and cross-examine the witnesses produced by the petitioner, only one counsel could be heard in reply. Dering v. Dering, 53

— right of co-respondent who has not answered to cross-examine and be heard—A co-respondent from whom damages are claimed, who has appeared, but has not filed an answer, cannot at the hearing cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, nor address the jury upon the question of damages. He is, however, entitled to be heard upon the question of costs; and when the decree has been pronounced, he will, as to that question, be allowed to recall and cross-examine the petitioner's witnesses, and also address the Court. Lyne v. Lyne, 9

— leave to be excused from making a co-respondent—A husband petitioning for a divorce must obtain leave to proceed without making a co-respondent, although the petition only charges adultery with a person unknown. Pitt v. Pitt, 24

— intervention of Queen's proctor: no affidavits filed by him: pleas of connivance, collusion and misconduct conducing to adultery—In a suit for dissolution of marriage by reason of the adultery of the respondent and co-respondent, a decree nisi was made. Subsequently certain parties intervened and filed affidavits, and two questions were directed to be tried by a special jury, namely, whether the petitioner had connived at the adultery of the respondent, and whether the decree nisi had been obtained by collusion. Afterwards the Queen's Proctor obtained leave to intervene, and, without filing affidavits, pleaded collusion, that material facts had not been brought to the knowledge of the Court, connivance and misconduct which conduced to the adultery:—Held, that when the Queen's Proctor has obtained leave to intervene, he may plead any material facts in addition to the plea of collusion; and that it is not necessary he should elect to proceed under the first or second part of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7, and vary his proceedings accordingly. Dering v. Dering, 35

— See Appeal. Testamentary Suit.

PROBATE—will of married woman: foreign settlement: foreign decree of separation—A Frenchman and an Englishwoman, in anticipation of a marriage, which was afterwards celebrated between them in France, entered into a contract, one of the conditions of which was that the survivor should enjoy the usufruct of one-half of the goods of the pre-deceased. Subsequently a separation was decreed between the parties by the proper tribunal of the country of their then domicile. The wife, being resident in this country, executed a will in accordance with the law of this country, by which she disposed of the whole of her property. The husband was still living:—Held, that the Court could decree probate of such will, but limited to such property as the deceased had a right to dispose of. In the goods of D'Estève de Pradel, 2

— of will: of realty: appointment of executor who has renounced—The Court will grant probate of a will which disposes of realty only if an executor be appointed therein, even although such executor renounces his rights under it. In the goods of Jordan, 22

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS—answer by facts not amounting to legal cruelty—In a suit for restitution of conjugal rights the Court will not reject, on demurrer, an answer which contains only facts which apparently do not constitute a case of legal cruelty. Stace v. Stace, 51

— answer charging adultery and praying judicial separation: abandonment of prayer for restitution at trial: evidence of parties as to adultery—The answer to a petition for restitution of conjugal rights charged adultery, and prayed for a judicial separation. At the trial, the petitioner abandoned his prayer of restitution, and offered no evidence:—Held, first, that such abandonment did not take away the respondent's rights to go for a judicial separation. Secondly, that the evidence of the parties was admissible upon the question of adultery, there being no "suit or proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery" within the meaning of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99. s. 4. Blackborne v. Blackborne, 73

REVOCATION. See Will.

SEPARATION—Deed of. See Desertion.

SETTLEMENT—alterations: power of appointment: new trustees—The Court refused to carry out alterations in the settlement agreed upon between the parties, whose marriage had been dissolved, so as to extinguish the power of appointment given to the respondent by the settlement, or to affect the appointment of new trustees. Davies v. Davies, 17

SETTLEMENT (continued)—power to deal with, where no issue living: locus standi of trustees—The Court has no power to deal with marriage settlements under section 5. of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, where there has been issue of the marriage, unless a child be still living. So held by the Judge Ordinary, and Montague Smith, J., Pigott, B. dissenting. Corrance v. Corrance, 44

The trustee of a marriage settlement may be heard against, but not in favour of, an alteration in the settlement. Ibid.

SUBPENA—to bring in a will: non-compliance—Where a subpoena has been personally served upon an individual to bring in a testamentary paper, and such individual fails to comply therewith, the Court will not at once order an attachment to issue against him, but will make a preliminary order that he shall attend in court to be examined in reference to his possession of such paper. Parkinson v. Thornton, 3

TESTAMENTARY SUIT—three wills: last will propounded: executor of first will opposing: practice—The deceased left behind him three executed wills, each of which in fact revoked the previous one. The last will was propounded by the executors named in it against the next of kin. The executors of the first will obtained leave to intervene to propound their will, and to plead, as regarded the last will, that it was not duly executed, that the deceased was not of testamentary capacity at the time he signed it, and that it was obtained by undue influence and fraud:—Held, that the executors of the last will could not as such propound the second will as well as their own, merely to prove that it revoked the first will, and therefore deprived the executors of the first will of any interest in the estate of the deceased. Parton v. Johnson, 67

—reference of proceeding to County Court and jurisdiction of that Court—When contentious proceedings in a testamentary suit are referred by the Court of Probate to a county court, the Court of Probate has no further jurisdiction, except by way of appeal, over such proceedings. Macleur v. Macleur, 68

WILL—residuary legatees: presumption as to interlineation—Deceased, at the time she executed her will, in the presence of witnesses, covered over the writing with a piece of paper, so that the witnesses could form no opinion whether certain interlineations appearing thereon were written at the time of execution. These interlineations in each case were required to complete the sentences to which they belonged, and did not appear, on inspection of the writing, to have been made at a different time from the body of the will:—Held, that the presumption that unattested additions have been made after execution, does not apply to such a case, and probate was decreed of the will, including the interlineations. In the goods of Cadge, 15

—seaman being at sea: ship permanently stationed in port—A mate, whilst on board Her Majesty's ship Excellent, which is permanently stationed in Portsmouth harbour, and when under age, executed a will, of which probate was granted to one of the executors named in it. (On an application to revoke the probate, the Court held that the deceased came under the exception contained in 1 Vict. c. 26. s. 11. as a seaman at sea, and, although a minor at the time, that he had legally executed a will. In the goods of M'Murdo, 14

—undue influence—A pressure of whatever character, whether it acts on the fears or the hopes of an individual, if so exerted as to overpower the volition, without convincing the judgment, is a species of restraint under which no valid will can be made. Hall v. Hall, 40

—evidence: declarations by testator: revocation by later will not forthcoming: intestacy—Verbal declarations or written statements made by a testator in and respecting the making of his will, preceding or accompanying acts done by him in relation thereto, are admissible in evidence in order to shew the quality and nature of such acts. Johnson v. Lyford, 65

Deceased made a will in 1840, and in 1867, while on a visit to a friend, he employed himself much in writing, and stated he was writing out his will, and he gave his friend a paper-writing which, he said, was a copy of his will which he was going to execute. Shortly after he duly executed a will, which, however, could not be found. The paper-writing revoked all former wills:—Held, that the will of 1840 was revoked by a will made in 1867, which, not being forthcoming, must be presumed to be revoked by destruction, and an intestacy was decreed. Ibid.

—revocation of second will and revival of first will by codicil—By 1 Vict. c. 26. s. 52, in order that a codicil should revive a will which in any manner has been revoked, it must shew an intention to revive the same:—Held, that such intention will not be shewn by a mere reference to such will by date, but the codicil must contain express words referring to a will as revoked, and importing an intention to revive the same or a disposition of the testator's property inconsistent with any other intention, or some other expression conveying to the mind of the Court with reasonable certainty the existence of the intention in question. In the goods of May, 63

Collision — Damage — River Scheldt — Compulsory Pilotage—Law applicable.

The owners of a Norwegian vessel having sued, in the High Court of Admiralty, a British vessel for damage done by collision, are entitled as to compulsory pilotage to rely upon the law of Belgium, within whose territorial waters the collision took place.

The petition of the plaintiff in this cause set forth that the Norwegian barque Napoleon, of the burden of 740 tons, while riding at anchor in Flushing Roads, in the month of January of this year, was run into by the British steam-ship Halley, and thereby suffered considerable damage. In the 11th article of the answer the defendants, the owners of the Halley, stated that "by the Belgian or Dutch laws, which prevail in and over the river Scheldt, and to which the said river is subject, from the place where the river pilot came on board the Halley, and thence up to and beyond the place of the aforesaid collision, it was compulsory on the said steamer to take on board and to be navigated under the directions and in charge of a pilot, duly appointed or licensed according to the said laws; and that it was by virtue of such laws that the Halley was compelled to take on board and to be given in charge, and until the time of the said collision as aforesaid to remain in charge of, and did take on board, and was given in charge, and up to the time of the said collision remained in charge of the said river pilot, who was duly appointed or licensed according to the said laws, and whom the defendants or their agents did not select, and had no power of selecting;" and that the collision was caused by the negligence, default, or want of skill of such pilot. To this defence the owners of the Napoleon replied as follows: That "by the Belgian or Dutch laws in force at the time and place of the said collision, the owners of a ship which has done damage to another ship by collision are liable to pay and to make good to the owners of such lastly-mentioned ship all losses occasioned to them by reason of such collision, notwithstanding that the ship which has done such damage was, at the time of the doing thereof, being navigated under the direction and in charge of a pilot duly appointed or licensed according to the said laws, and notwithstanding that such damage was solely occasioned by the negligence, default, or want of skill of such pilot, without any contributory negligence on the part of the master or crew of such lastly-mentioned ship, and notwithstanding that it was, at the time and place of the collision, by the said laws compulsory on such lastly-mentioned ship to be navigated under the direction and in charge of such pilot; and that the defendants, the owners of the Halley, are by virtue of the said laws liable to pay and make good to the plaintiffs all losses occasioned to them by the said collision, even if the statements contained in the 11th article of the said answer be true."

Mr. Brett and Mr. V. Lushington, on behalf of the defendants, moved the Court to reject the reply.—This case must be decided according to the lex fori. The plaintiffs, who have commenced the proceedings, have thereby elected the tribunal before which the case is to be tried, and cannot complain if the law of that tribunal is administered. It is contrary to the common law of this country that a master is responsible for the acts of a servant whom he is bound to employ; and as to the compulsion, the Belgian and English law correspond. The present question relates to the remedy, and not to the right of the party suing, and the cases shew that in such instances the lex fori, and not the lex loci commissi delicti, should prevail.

Mr. Manisty and Mr. E. C. Clarkson appeared on behalf of the plaintiffs.—The plaintiffs have suffered an injury from the acts of those on board the defendants' vessel, and it is for the defendants to shew that they are not responsible. The rule as to exemption from the consequences of compulsory pilotage is one arising from the construction of English statutes, and in its effects occasions so much hardship to an innocent sufferer that it should not be extended by implication. This Court, which administers the law of nations, will apply to the present case the general maritime law, which would compel the wrongdoer to make complete restitution. The present question relates to the right of the plaintiffs to indemnity, and not to the remedy, i. e. the mode in which that right is to be enforced; and this contention is fully borne out by the reported cases. The defendants themselves if they invoke the Belgian law must be bound by it altogether, and cannot ignore the fact that by Belgian law it is also provided that though the owners of vessels are bound to employ a pilot, they must nevertheless be responsible for his acts.

The cases cited are fully referred to in the judgment.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—One of the functions, and not the least important, of the High Court of Admiralty is to administer international justice in maritime suits between foreigners who resort to its jurisdiction, or, as in the present instance, between the foreigner and the British subject. The prize jurisdiction of this Court administers the jus inter gentes, or public international law, and what is called the instance jurisdiction administers the jus gentium, or private international law. The rules of pleading, and the general mode of investigating and trying the merits of such cases when they come before it, are therefore simple, free from technicality, and calculated to do substantial justice. In this Court, as Sir J. Nicholl observes in The Girolamo (1), "the law maritime according to the law of nations is to be administered"; and again he says (p. 189), it "is governed by the rules" (he is not speaking of the Prize Court) "of international law." To the same effect is The Zollverein (2), where Dr. Lushington, in the case of a collision between a British and foreign vessel, says, "The case must be decided by the law maritime, by those rules of navigation which usually prevail among nations navigating the seas where the collision takes place." And in The Golubchick (3) he says, "Upon general principles, I apprehend that this Court, administering, as it does, a part of the maritime law of the world, would have a right to interpose in cases of the present description." If, therefore, this collision had taken place upon the high seas, it must, upon general principles, have been adjudicated according to the Lex Maris.

The claim of the petitioner in this case is founded, according to the Norman language of our common law, upon a tort committed by the defendant; according to the language of jurisprudence, familiar to this Court, upon an obligatio ex maleficio, or as it is more generally, though perhaps less accurately, termed, an obligatio ex delicto, incurred by the defendant. "Res sic habet," Donellus says, "ut omne delictum est maleficium, ita non ex quovis delicto nascatur obligatio sed solum ex maleficio"—Donellus, l. xv. c. 23. In the case before me this tort was committed, or this obligatio was incurred, in the territory of a foreign state. I think it expedient, therefore, to dwell for a moment on the peculiar character of this obligatio, with the reasoning upon which my judgment is in some measure connected.

According to the Roman law, which on this subject has been generally adopted by continental Europe, the facts which give rise to a legal obligation are said to be four—contractus, quasi contractus, maleficium, quasi maleficium. The two former create an obligation with the consent of the obliged person (obligatus); the two latter without his consent. It is with the third alone with which we are at present concerned, namely, obligatio ex maleficio, or delicto, for it is not necessary to consider the distinction between this and the obligatio ex quasi delicto.

"Delictum," Donellus says, with his usual accuracy and perspicuity, "id est factum id, quo nocetur alteri, jure ita coercetur, ut acriat alteri quod abstulit. Ex tali culpa" (that is maleficio)—l. xii. c. 11. Grotius says, "Obligatio naturaliter oritur, si damnum datum est, nempe ut id resarciatur"—De Jure Belli et Pacis, l. ii. c. xvii. s. 1. This is, in truth, the language of natural justice. The form of remedy under the Roman law was supplied by the Lex Aquilia. The passage in the Digest upon this very subject of collision at sea contains (as so many other passages in that repertory of jurisprudence do) the written equity which the reason of the thing requires: "Si navis tua impacta in meam scapham, damnum mihi dedit, quaesitum est, quae actio mihi competeret? Et ait Proculus, si in potestate meorum fuit, ne id acciderit, et culpa eorum factum sit, lege Aquilia cum nautis agendum: quia parvi refert, navem immitendo, aut serraculum ad navem ducendo, an tua manu damnum dederis; quia omnibus his modis per te damno adficior: sed si fune rupto, aut, cum a nullo regeretur navis incurrisset, cum domino agendum non esse"—Dig. l. ix. tit. ii. 29, 2. According to the principles of natural justice, the wrong-doer to this Norwegian vessel is bound to replace her owner in the position in which he was before the wrong was done; the owner is entitled to what civilians call a restitutio in integrum.

I gladly avail myself of Dr. Lushington's language in this matter, in a case in which he distinguishes (speaking of the duty of the Registrar and merchants, as referees of the High Court of Admiralty) between cases of collision and cases of insurance. "One," he says—The Gazelle (4), "of the principal and most important objections to the report under consideration is this, that the registrar and merchants, in fixing the amount to be paid for repairs, and the supply of new articles in lieu of those which have been damaged or destroyed, have deducted one-third from the full amount which such repairs and new articles would cost. This deduction, it is said, has been made in consideration of new materials being substituted for old, and is justified upon the principle of a rule which is alleged to be invariably adopted in cases of insurance. The first question, then, which I have to consider is, the applicability of the rule in question to a case of the present description; and this question, it is obvious, involves a principle of considerable importance, not only as regards the decision in this particular case, but as establishing a rule for assessing the damages in all other similar cases. Now, in my apprehension, a material distinction exists between cases of insurance and cases of damage by collision, and for the following reasons." And then the learned Judge explains the nature of an insurance contract; and he continues, "With regard to cases of collision, it is to be observed that they stand upon a totally different footing. The claim of the suffering party who has sustained the damage arises not ex contractu, but ex delicto of the party by whom the damage has been done; and the measure of the indemnification is not limited by the terms of any contract, but is co-extensive with the amount of the damage. The right against the wrong-doer is for a restitutio in integrum, and this restitution he is bound to make, without calling upon the party injured to assist him in any way whatever. If the settlement of the indemnification be attended with any difficulty (and in those cases difficulties must and will frequently occur), the party in fault must bear the inconvenience. He has no right to fix this inconvenience upon the injured party, and if that party derives incidentally a greater benefit than mere indemnification, it arises only from the impossibility of otherwise effecting such indemnification, without exposing him to some loss or burden which the law will not place upon him."

Again, in the case of The Amalia (5), the same learned Judge says, "The principle of limited liability" (and in this case it is contended that the liability of the British owner is taken away altogether) "is that full indemnity, the natural rights of justice, shall be abridged for political reasons." This is a subject to which I must again advert in another part of my judgment. At present it is enough to say that the dictates of natural justice appear to be in favour of the petition of the Norwegian vessel in this case, which prays this Court to cause the British vessel, the wrong-doer, to make that reparation for wrong done to her which the lex loci delicti commissi, had the suit been brought in a Belgian court, would have enforced.

It is, however, contended on behalf of the British vessel that this Court cannot apply such law to this case; that it must, partially at least (the importance of this qualification will be presently seen), disregard the law of the place in which the wrong was done, and apply that of the place in which the action for redress is brought; that, in other words, the lex fori, and not the lex loci delicti commissi, governs this case. If this be so, the foreign owner will obtain no compensation for the wrong done to his vessel by the British ship, the owner of which will practically escape altogether unscathed. It is not, therefore, too much to say that the arguments and the precedents which are brought forward in favour of such a result must be narrowly examined and carefully scanned. It certainly may be that the hands of the Court are tied by municipal law, and prevented from administering the relief which, upon general grounds, it must desire to administer to the petitioner in this case.

The contention on the part of the British owner is, that the lex fori must govern this case, not because that law is made binding on the Court, as in the case of The Amalia (5), by a British statute, but because it is made binding on the Court by an established principle of law, which is to be collected from judicial decisions and the dicta of accredited writers. It is contended, then, that this question belongs to the domain of the lex fori, inasmuch as it is a question relating to the remedy, and not to the right, of the party suing. It becomes important to see what authority, in principle or precedent, there is for this proposition. It is well settled by decisions of the tribunals of this country that all which relates to the form of the remedy, and the mode of enforcing it, all that relates to the conduct of the suit in court, the rules of evidence and to procedure, shall be governed by the lex fori. Indeed, it is a well-established rule of international comity, as old, certainly, as the time of Bartolus, that "de his quæ pertinent ad litis ordinationem inspicitur locus judicii." But to the further proposition, namely, that the nature and character of the remedy itself—for instance, the measure of civil damages for a breach of contract, or for the non-fulfilment of any legal obligation—is to be regulated by that law, I cannot assent. I am not aware of any direct authority for it; certainly it cannot, in my opinion, be maintained upon principle; and so far as the analogy of the obligation arising from contract applies to this case of obligatio ex delicto, the judicial precedents which I have been able to find are adverse to this proposition.

Mr. Justice Washington, in a judgment delivered in the District Court of Pennsylvania, observes, "The rate of damages to be recovered for a breach of contract is a part of the right to which the injured party is entitled, and it is totally distinct from the remedy provided for enforcing it.

(5) 1 Bro. & Lush. 152.

In the former case the lex loci, where the contract was made or broken, is to prevail; and in the latter, the lex loci of the forum, where the remedy is provided" (6). The same learned Judge, in an earlier and very singular case (7), laid down the same principle. It was an action in the Pennsylvanian court on a note given in Guadaloupe, where a particular custom prevails in relation to the payment of such notes in sugar. Mr. Justice Washington said, "The laws of the country where this contract was made must govern. These notes were payable in Guadaloupe, in sugar, at a valuation. The defendant having sued here cannot complain if his situation is not made worse than it would have been in Guadaloupe. But as, according to our forms of proceeding (and as to them the laws of our country must govern), a judgment cannot be rendered for sugar, the value in money must be given, which, in effect, is the precise sum stated in the note." Mr. Justice Story refers to these and to other American, as well as some English, cases in the following paragraph: "Analogous to the rule respecting interest would seem to be the rule of damages in cases of contract, where damages are to be recovered for a breach thereof ex mora, or where the right to damages arises ex delicto, from some wrong or injury done to personal property. Thus, if a ship should be illegally or tortiously converted in the East Indies by a party, the interest there will be allowed by way of damages in a suit against him. So the rate of damages on a dishonoured bill of exchange will be according to the lex loci contractus of the particular party. So, if a bill of exchange be made in one state and indorsed in another state, and again indorsed by a second indorser in a third state, the rate of damages upon the dishonour of the bill will be against each party according to the law of the place where his own contract had its origin, either by making or by indorsing the bill. So, if a note made in a foreign country is for the payment of a certain sum in sugar, and by the custom of that place the like notes are payable in sugar at a valuation, the law of the place is to govern in assessing the damages for a breach thereof" — Story's Conflict of Laws, c. viii. s. 307.

In the case of The Zollverein Dr. Lushington observed, "The principle which governs all these questions of jurisdiction and remedies is admirably stated by Mr. Justice Story (Conflict of Laws, c. xiv. s. 556), 'In regard to the rights and merits involved in actions, the law of the place where they originated is to be followed; but the forms of remedies'" (it is important to observe these words), "'and the order of judicial proceedings are to be according to the law of the place where the action is instituted, without any regard to the domicile of the parties, the origin of the right, or the country of the act.'" And in another part of his judgment he says, "Generally, when a collision takes place between a British and foreign vessel on the high seas, what law shall a Court of Admiralty follow? As regards the foreign ship, for her owner cannot be supposed to know or to be bound by the municipal law of the country, the case must be decided by the law maritime, by those rules of navigation which usually prevail among nations navigating the seas where the collision takes place; if the foreigner comes before the tribunals of this country, the remedy and form of proceeding must be according to the lex fori." It is to be observed here that the learned Judge is reported as having used the expressions "the remedy and form of proceeding must be according to the lex fori," but I think that if these words be correctly reported, there must be an unintentional error in the language of the learned Judge, who must have meant to say, "the form of remedy and of proceeding," an alteration which brings these words and the judgment in harmony with the previous citation from Story, on which, indeed, it was mainly founded.

I must not, however, pass by two judgments of my immediate predecessor in this chair, to which I drew the attention of counsel, because they may be fairly cited by the defendants as favourable to the position for which they contend. They are, in fact, the converse of the present case. In them the Judge decided that the lex fori, where more favourable to the foreign suitor than the lex loci contractus, should be administered. In the case of The Milford (8), the question as to the application of section 191. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, to the suit of a foreign master against the freight for wages arose, and the Court observed as follows:—"There are no negative words which tend to shew that the Court should not apply section 191. to foreign masters and seamen. As there are no such words, is it consistent with justice that the Court should hold its hand in all these matters, and say that as to foreign masters it will impose a restriction not in the statute? I think I am bound to apply the remedy given by the statute." In the case of The Jonathan Goodhue (9), Dr. Lushington remarked, "When this case was first brought before the Court, it was said that the American law would exclude the master from the benefit of the statute; that it was a legal incident of the contract that the master should have no lien on either ship or freight for wages or advances. But, pending that question, the Court decided in the case of The Milford that the remedy must follow the lex fori, and that a foreign master was entitled to the same remedy against ship and freight as a British master. I adhere to that judgment, though I repeat what I then said, that it was a case of great doubt and difficulty."

I must say that the reasoning of the learned Judge which led to the decisions in these cases was never satisfactory to my mind, and I am glad to learn that in a more recent case, mentioned to me by Mr. Clarkson, the learned Judge expressed himself willing to reconsider the principle of these decisions. It is to be observed also that they rested in great measure upon the construction of a British statute, and in the present case we have no statute to consider.

With respect to the application of the lex fori to this case, an observation of some importance arises out of the special character of the law itself. The lex fori in this instance is founded, as Lord Stowell observed in The Carl Johann (10), upon considerations of domestic policy. The English legislature has thought it expedient that only certain persons, under certain restrictions, shall be allowed to act as pilots in certain British waters, and that it shall be compulsory upon all masters of ships to place the navigation of their vessel while passing through these waters under the control of one of these licensed pilots. And the common law of England has ruled that in such cases the natural responsibility of the owner of the vessel for injuries done to the property or persons of others by the unskilful navigation of that vessel shall cease and be transferred to the pilot. This law holds that the responsibility of the owner for the acts of his servant is founded upon the presumption that the owner chooses his servant and gives him orders which he is bound to obey, and that the acts of the servant, so far as the interests of third parties are concerned, must always be considered as the acts of the owner. No such presumptions, it is said, exist in the case of compulsory pilotage, in which the state forces its own servant upon the owner, and indeed to some extent reverses the usual order of things on board ship by rendering it incumbent on the master to obey the orders of the pilot. But the considerations of domestic policy which have created this peculiar law are not founded on principles of universal law or natural justice. They are considerations of British policy, which apply to British waters and territory, but not to the Flushing Roads in which this collision took place. In the earlier part of this judgment, I said that natural justice appeared to favour the admission of the plaintiff's reply in this case. To say to the innocent owner of a ship which has been damaged, perhaps destroyed, by unskilful navigation,—"You cannot recover any damages from me, because I had a pilot on board, and I obeyed his orders; you may bring your action against the pilot, from whom you cannot obtain any substantial redress,"—to say this is surely not to speak the language of natural justice. Should the innocent sufferer reply,—"That, if the state chooses to compel you to employ an officer of its own, it is no reason why a third person, no party to this arrangement, should suffer a grievous wrong without redress. It may be a reason why you should have an action against the pilot, or why the state should combine with the measure for your exemption from a natural liability, some measure for the reparation of the innocent sufferer; but this is a matter with which he is not concerned. He has a right to compensation,"—this would be a reply entitled to a hearing surely in any Court desirous to adjudicate upon the case according to the ordinary principles of justice.

Lord Stowell's mind, furnished as it was with the principles of jurisprudence, naturally rejected the argument for the immunity of the wrong-doing vessel. In the case of The Neptune the Second (11), he said: "It is acknowledged in this case that the damage was done by the ship proceeded against; but it has been set up, in the way of excuse, that she was at the time under the care of a regular pilot, and was acting in obedience to his directions; and it has been contended in the argument that the pilot alone is answerable for any damage that may have been sustained in consequence of the mismanagement of the vessel. If the position could be maintained, that the mere fact of having a pilot on board, and acting in obedience to his directions, would discharge the owners from responsibility, I am of opinion that they would stand excused in the present case; for I think it is sufficiently established in proof that the master acted throughout in conformity to the directions of the pilot. But this, I conceive" (says this great master of jurisprudence), "is not the true rule of law. The parties who suffer are entitled to have their remedy against the vessel that occasioned the damage, and are not under the necessity of looking to the pilot, from whom redress is not always to be had, for compensation. The owners are responsible to the injured party for the acts of the pilot, and they must be left to recover the amount as well as they can against him. It cannot be maintained that the circumstances of having a pilot on board and acting in conformity to his direction can operate as a discharge of the responsibility of the owners."

I will frankly say that it appears to me difficult to reconcile the claims of natural justice with the law which exempts the owner, who has a licensed pilot on board, from all liability for the injuries done by the bad navigation of his ship to the property of an innocent owner. Obbligatio is

(according to the admirable definition in the Institutes) "vinculum juris quo necessitate astringimur alicujus rei solvendæ"; it is "lien de droit," as the French say. No one acquainted with the working of this law, which exempts the wrong-doing vessel from liability in this court, can be ignorant that it is fruitful in injustice. The master is tempted to abstain from all control over his vessel, lest he should afford grounds for the argument that by interference with the pilot he has deprived himself of the legal immunity which he would otherwise enjoy. And it is obvious that great inducements may be offered to the pilot to shield the incapacity or mismanagement of the master and his officers by taking all the blame upon himself. It is true that by so doing he may subject himself to censures and punishment from the Trinity House; and certainly, in cases where the evidence clearly established very gross negligence or want of skill on his part, such would be the result; but the greater number of cases are not of this extreme description. It is impossible to doubt that an owner who, as in a recent case before me, would, but for the fact of having a licensed pilot on board, have been compelled to pay perhaps 25,000*l.* in respect of the ship which he had sunk, lies under a very strong temptation to take whatever measures may be necessary for obtaining the two necessary statements of the pilot; namely, first, that he alone had the management of the vessel; and secondly, that his orders were obeyed: the two stereotyped questions necessarily and invariably put to the pilot by those who conduct the defence of the wrong-doing vessel.

Again, I cannot help thinking that the doctrine, so clearly explained by Lord Cranworth in Reedie v. the London and North-Western Railway Company (12) of the owner being responsible only for the acts of his own servant, has been somewhat strained in its application to the case of the licensed pilot. I do not quite understand why, because the State insists upon all persons who exercise the office of pilot within certain districts being duly educated for the purpose, and having a certificate of their fitness, that the master shall, within these districts, take care of these persons on board to superintend the steering of the vessel, the usual relation of owner and servant is to be entirely at an end; and still less do I see why the sufferer is to be deprived of all practical redress for injuries inflicted upon him by the ship which such a pilot navigates. If compulsory pilotage be at all expedient, a question open to very considerable doubt, it seems to me more just that the master of the wrong-doing ship should be left to his action against the pilot who has badly navigated her, than that the owner of the injured ship should be placed in that predicament. I incline to the opinion that the Belgian law, as it appears in these pleadings, is more consonant with natural justice than our own on this subject. Be this, however, as it may, it has not been argued that the Belgian law is inadmissible here, because it is at variance with natural justice; and if such an argument had been advanced, I should have expressed my dissent from it.

Having regard, then, to the fact that the lex fori is founded upon special considerations of public policy applicable only to British territory, and that the admission of the foreign law, the lex loci delicti commissi, to govern this case, is not prevented by reason of its repugnance to natural justice or to public policy, if the question before me were as to the law which ought to govern the fulfilment of the obligation arising out of an ordinary contract made in Belgian territories, it could not, I think, be successfully contended that I ought to apply the English law to such a case.

To such a contract I might apply the principle of Lord Stowell's judgment in Dalrymple v. Dalrymple (13), and adopting with a slight alteration his very words, say, this contract, being established in an English Court, must be adjudicated according to the principle of English law. But the only principle applicable to such a case by the law of England is, that the character of this obligation (Lord Stowell says the validity of Miss Gordon's marriage rights) must be tried according to the law of the country in which it had its origin. Having furnished this principle, the law of England withdraws altogether, and leaves the legal question to the exclusive judgment of the law of Belgium. The question, however, arises as to whether, because in this case the obligation to pay damages arises, not, as in a case of contract, out of the free will of the obligor, but out of the order of the law consequent upon the wrongful act of the obligor, the application of the principle ought to be different. Does it affect the principle upon which justice ought to be administered, that the obligation arises out of a delictum, and not out of a contractus? The authority of Savigny, which it was truly said would have great weight with me, is cited in favour of the application of the lex fori in such a case—Savigny, Systéme des R. R. viii., pp. 208, 278. The opinion of this most learned and admirable writer is, that the law which prevails in the place in which a contract was intended to be fulfilled ought to be administered by the forum before which the fulfilment is sought to be enforced. He places the exceptions to this rule under two categories; it is only with the first that we are now concerned. Under this category of exceptions he ranges all cases in which the lex loci or the lex loci solutionis comes into conflict with what he calls a positive stringent law of the forum. Having laid down this principle, he proceeds to place the obligatio ex delicto under it. The passages in which he does so are perhaps the least satisfactory in his work, and this particular branch of his subject is but cursorily treated. I think, however, that under this category of a positive stringent law, he did not intend to include such a law as the English law with respect to pilots and the irresponsibility of masters. He is not to be understood as saying that a lex fori which is founded exclusively on local considerations should be applied to the transactions of a foreigner happening in a place to which these local considerations do not apply. But if he is to be so understood, if his proposition be unqualified and universal, it is opposed to the opinion of a great, I believe the greater, number of German jurists. Dr. Bar, the assessor to the Royal Court of Hanover, a jurist of eminence, expressing his dissent from the opinion of Savigny, lays down the contrary doctrine, and refers in a note to the opinion of many of his brother jurists, who are of the same opinion—

Bar, Das Internationale Privat und Strafrecht, Hanover, 1862, pp. 66, 317, 437, 477. To these may be added John Voet, who says, "Ita quoque delinquens videtur tacite per delictum, velut contractum involuntarium sese obligasse ad talem poenæ modum qualis præstitutus est per legem loci in quo delictum perpetravit"—L. 48, t. 19, xi.

It is well remarked by Savigny, that in applying the principles with respect to the enforcement of the obligations which arise ex contractu to the obligations which arise ex delicto, some difficulty is caused by the peculiar character of the latter obligation, inasmuch as the enforcement of it borders very closely upon the administration of criminal law. Now, it is a maxim of private international law, not indeed universally recognized, but I think firmly incorporated into the jurisprudence of this country, that the Court of one State cannot be required to administer the criminal law of another. It is with the view of getting rid of any embarrassments created by this difficulty between the civil obligation and the punishment of the criminal offence, that eminent jurists have generally adopted the following distinction, which appears to me just and sound. The obligatio ex delicto may be followed by two distinct consequences: to make compensation in civil damages for the injury inflicted, and the liability to undergo a punishment, such as a penal fine or imprisonment, whether at the instance of the person injured or by the intervention of a public officer of the State. "Eodem delicto et civilis persecutio ad poenam privatum et judicium publicum esse possit" John Voet (L. 47, t. 1, i.) says; and Donellus distinguishes between the civil action "de privato damno et pecunia quam inde debitam actor prosecutur," and "quatenus de his agitur criminaliter ad poenam et vindictam criminis"—Comment. de Jure Civili, L. xvii. c. 16. To the same effect is the passage in the Institutes, L. 4. t. 4. It is with the former consequence alone of the delictum that the forum of a foreign State can be properly concerned.

It is said that the case of The Amalia decided in this Court, and afterwards adjudicated upon by the Privy Council, renders it incumbent upon me to apply the lex fori to the present case. The Amalia was a cause in which the owners of a British steam-ship, the Amalia, petitioned this Court for the purpose of obtaining a declaration of the limitation of their liability under section 54. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), in respect of a collision which had taken place between that vessel and a Belgian steam-vessel, the Marie de Brabant, in consequence of which the Marie de Brabant with her cargo was sunk and lost; and several of the crew drowned. The collision in question happened on the 15th of May, 1863, in the Mediterranean Sea. When this case was before this Court, Dr. Lushington observed, "The principle of limited liability is, that full indemnity, the natural right of justice, shall be abridged for political reasons." And further on he observes, "I have always recognized the full force of this objection, that the British parliament has no proper authority to legislate for foreigners out of its jurisdiction. Now, fully recognizing the force of this objection, I do not think it is removed by the ingenious suggestion that limited liability is a part of the lex fori." And here I may ask, if the limitation of liability be not part of the lex fori, why should the exemption from all liability belong to that category? And Dr. Lushington then decided that the construction of the 54th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 63), which contained the words "the owners of any ship, whether British or foreign, shall not," &c., related equally to British and foreign vessels, and that to the latter, in a British court, as well as the former, must be applied the doctrine of limited liability. The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council upheld this decision. Lord Chelmsford, who delivered the judgment of their Lordships, observed, "The appellants say that the moment a collision occurs there is a lien upon the vessel which is in fault, and, supposing the vessel injured to be a foreign one, that the foreigner immediately acquires this lien to the extent of the damage, and cannot be deprived of it by the municipal law of this country. But suppose the foreigner, instead of proceeding in rem against the vessel, chooses to bring an action for damages in a court of law against the owners of the vessel occasioning the injury, the argument arising out of the acquired lien would be at once swept away, and the rights and liabilities of the parties be determined by the law which the Court would be bound to administer. And it may be asked, what breach of international law or interference with the natural rights of foreigners is produced by the legislature saying that all suitors having recourse to our Courts to obtain damages for an injury from a person not himself actually in fault, but being responsible for the acts of his servant, shall recover only to the value of the thing by which the loss or damage was occasioned, estimated in a particular manner. It is to be observed that, under this view of the 54th section, the foreigner will be entitled to the benefit of the act, as well as the British owner of a ship occasioning damage, and he will, therefore, not be exposed to a more extensive liability than the British subject" (14).

It is not necessary for me to make any remark upon the reasoning by which their Lordships arrived at this conclusion. I may be permitted to observe, however, that the limitation of the owner's liability to the whole value of the vessel which did the damage, stands upon a very different footing, with respect to the claims of natural justice, from the total exemption of the owner from all liability whatever for the act of his vessel. However this may be, the judgment in The Amalia does not appear to me to govern this case. The res decisa in The Amalia was that the 54th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1862, must be holden by a British Court of Justice to apply to a foreign as well as a British vessel, although the collision had taken place between them upon the high seas. It was a decision upon the words of that statute, and so far it is binding upon this Court. In no other way am I able to reconcile their Lordships' judgment in this case with the principles of their previous decision in the case of the Bold Buccleuch, Harmer v. Bell (15). In that case Lord Chief Justice Jervis, delivering the opinion of their Lordships, says as to the character of the lien which binds the wrong-doing vessel from the moment that the collision has taken place. "Having its origin in this rule of the Civil law, a maritime lien is well defined by Lord Tenterden to mean a claim or privilege upon a thing to be carried into effect by legal process; and Mr. Justice Story (16) explains that process to be a proceeding in rem, and adds that wherever a lien or claim is given upon the thing, the Admiralty enforces it by a proceeding in rem, and indeed is the only Court competent to enforce it. A maritime lien is the foundation of the proceeding in rem, a process to make perfect a right inchoate from the moment the lien attaches; and whilst it must be admitted that where such a lien exists a proceeding in rem may be had, it will be found to be equally true that in all cases where a proceeding in rem is the proper course, there a maritime lien exists, which gives a privilege or claim upon the thing to be carried into effect by legal process. This claim or privilege travels with the thing, into whosoever possession it may come. It is inchoate from the moment the claim or privilege attaches, and when carried into effect by legal process, by a proceeding in rem, relates back to the period when it first attached. This simple rule, which in our opinion must govern this case, and which is deduced from the Civil law, cannot be better illustrated than by reference to the circumstances of The Aline (17), referred to in the argument, and decided in conformity with this rule, though apparently upon other grounds. In that case, there was a bottomry bond before and after the collision, and the Court held that the claim for damage in a proceeding in rem must be preferred to the first bondholder, but was not entitled against the second bondholder to the increased value of the vessel by reason of repairs effected at his cost. The interest of the first bondholder taking effect from the period when his lien attached, he was, so to speak, a part owner in interest at the date of the collision, and the ship in which he and others were interested was liable to its value at that date for the injury done, without reference to his claim. So by the collision the interest of the claimant attached, and dating from that event, the ship in which he was interested having been repaired, was put in bottomry by the master acting for all parties, and he could be bound by that transaction. This rule, which is simple and intelligible, is, in our opinion, applicable in all cases." The decision in The Amalia therefore does not, in my opinion, govern the case now before me.

In the case of Smith and others v. Condry (18), to which I was referred by Mr. Clarkson, two ships belonging to subjects of the United States in North America came into collision in the port of Liverpool. The action was brought in the Circuit Court for the district of Columbia, and came up by writ of error to the Supreme Court. Mr. Chief Justice Taney, in delivering the opinion of the Court, observed as follows: "Upon the evidence above stated, the defendant asked the Court to instruct the jury that under the statutes of Great Britain of the 37 Geo. 3. c. 78, 52 Geo. 3. c. 39. and 6 Geo. 4. c. 125, the defendant was not responsible for any damage occasioned by the default, negligence or unskilfulness of the pilot. The Court gave this instruction, and that is the subject of the first exception. The collision having taken place in the port of Liverpool, the rights of the parties depend upon the provisions of the British statutes then in force; and if doubts exist as to their true construction, we must of course adopt that which is sanctioned by their own Courts" (19). This decision of the Supreme Court of the United States of North America seems to go the whole length of the way which the Norwegian plaintiff desires me to travel, for it is in fact a decision that the Court before which a plaintiff sues for the enforcement of the damages growing out of an obligatio ex delicto ought to measure those damages by the law which bound the obligor and the obligee at the time when the factum obligans (as civilians speak) took place, or, in other words, when the delictum was committed.

Lastly, I must observe upon not the least remarkable feature in the present proceeding, namely, that the defendant is the first to invoke in his own favour the law of Belgium. He pleads that by that law, applicable to this case, the taking of a pilot on board was compulsory, and there his citation from the Belgian law ceases. The plaintiff, not unnaturally, pleads in his turn the other part of the Belgian law, which is to the effect that the compulsory taking on board of a pilot does not release the master from his liability under the general law for all damages occasioned by the unskilful navigation of his vessel. The defendant contends that the plaintiff has no right to finish the citation, so to speak, which he the defendant has begun, from the Belgian law; that I must only look at that portion of it which he has selected as being in his favour, and which, as such, he is pleased to lay before me; that it is my duty not to apply either the general Lex Maris, mentioned at the beginning of this judgment, or the whole Belgian law, which combines the obligation to take a pilot with the continuing responsibility of the owner; but to take the former part of that law which relates to the obligation to take a pilot, and add to it the English law which exempts the owner from responsibility. This is the tessellated piece of jurisprudence which I am told the law requires to be applied to the case before me. I hope there is no law or legal rule in this country which would compel me to do an act of, what seems to me, such manifest injustice; as at present advised I know of none.

Upon the whole, after an anxious and, I trust, careful consideration of the principles of law applicable to this case, and of the authorities and arguments which have been laid before me, I am of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to plead that the law of Belgium, within whose territorial waters his vessel received damage from the vessel of the defendant, renders the owner of the latter vessel, although compelled to take a pilot on board, liable to make reparation for the wrong which she has done. The question is one of grave importance, and submitted in this country for the first time unhappily to my decision. I am glad to remember that, if I have erred, my error will be corrected by the Court of Appeal, and I will readily accord to the defendant, if he desire it, the permission to appeal, which the statute requires, from this decision upon the admissibility of the plaintiff's plea.

Jurisdiction—Disbursements by Mate.

The High Court of Admiralty has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon a mate's claim for wages paid to the crew, and necessary disbursements made by him in foreign ports.

This vessel, against which several other suits had been instituted, had been sold, and the proceeds, which were insufficient to meet all claims against the ship, were in court.

On the 11th of July, in this year, the vessel then being under arrest, to satisfy the before-mentioned claims, a suit was instituted on behalf of Manuel Storca-y-orta, a Spaniard, who claimed the sum of 76*l.* 18*s.* for wages as chief mate of the Victoria, and also a large sum, amounting together to 84*l.* 5*s.*, for wages paid to the crew, and for necessary disbursements in foreign ports. The plaintiff stated in his petition, that the disbursements were made at the request of Carlos Layer, the owner of the vessel, on whose behalf and at whose request he received and paid moneys.

Mr. C. P. Butt now moved the Court to reject the petition.—The 10th section (1) of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, only gives the Court jurisdiction over a master's claim for disbursements, and not for money paid by a mate. The petition was framed to bring the claim under the 4th section (2) of the act, for building, equipping and repairing; and even if the claim could be brought under this section, the plaintiff having only paid the money, and not being himself the material man, could not sue. It clearly appeared from the facts that the plaintiff was the agent of the owner, who did not appear in the original suit, and who was trying by this method to possess himself of a large sum of money.

Mr. Bruce, for the plaintiff.—The Court has jurisdiction over a claim for equipment. Money advanced for wages constitutes a claim for wages, and money advanced for equipment constitutes a claim for equipment. The following were cited in the argument—The Alexander (3), The Gosfabrick (4), The Admiralty Court Act, 1861, ss. 4. and 10.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE was of opinion that the High Court of Admiralty had no jurisdiction in this case under either the 4th or 10th sections of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, and he directed the petition to be reformed by striking out every claim but the one for the plaintiff's own wages.

(2) 24 Vict. c. 10, s. 4.—"The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim for the building, equipping, or repairing of any ship, if at the time of the institution of the cause to the latter, at the entrance of the Queen's Channel, on the 14th of December last. It appeared that the Retriever had been towing a ship called the Hannibal towards Liverpool, when a collision took place between the Hannibal and the Queen, the result of which was that the Queen was greatly damaged; and that the Retriever thereupon having towed the Hannibal clear of the Queen, proceeded to the assistance of the Queen, and after considerable difficulty brought her to Liverpool and placed her safely alongside the Prince's landing-stage. It was also alleged for the Retriever that but for her timely assistance in towing the Hannibal away, the Queen would have been sunk by the Hannibal, and but for her help after the Hannibal was towed clear, the Queen would inevitably have gone ashore on some of the banks by which she was surrounded, to the certain destruction of herself and all on board; and that no other steamer able to render assistance was near.

Mr. Brett and Mr. V. Lushington appeared for the Retriever.

Dr. Deane and Mr. Butt, for the Queen.

SIR R. PHILLMORE.—The Court has already pronounced the Queen to blame for the collision with the Hannibal, and it appears that the Retriever, which at the time of the collision was towing the Hannibal, afterwards came to the assistance of the Queen, and towed her into Liverpool, a distance of about eleven miles from the scene of the collision. For these latter services the Retriever now claims salvage remuneration. The Trinity Masters were of opinion that the Queen, her cargo and crew, were in some, but not great, danger. It occurred to me, however, that, before determining whether any and what salvage was due to the Retriever, there arose a question whether, under the provisions contained in 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63. (1), the rendering of salvage in this instance had not been taken out of the category of a voluntary service, and become the mere discharge of a positive duty cast by the statute upon the salvor, for the neglect of which he would have been punishable; and as the interpretation of this clause had not been the subject of any judicial decision, I deferred my judgment. The clause was, as is well known, introduced into the statute by Lord Kingsdown, in consequence of some case which came within his cognizance while sitting in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and in which, after a collision, one ship had sailed away and left the other to perish. The clear object of the clause is to visit with deserved penalty and punishment such a transgressor; and it could not have been the intention of the framer of the clause to prevent a vessel which had been an innocent sufferer from obtaining a salvage reward in this Court, to which, upon the ordinary principles of law, it would have been entitled. In this case the tug itself did not come into collision, but the ship which it towed; and it has been argued that the case of a towing ship is a casus omissus from the statute; but I am not of that opinion, and I think the Retriever is entitled to salvage remuneration.

Jurisdiction—Personal Damage—Award of Arbitrator and subsequent Suit.

The High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain an action and to assess damages in respect of personal injuries done by a ship.

*A claim for personal injury done by a ship was referred to an arbitrator, with a condition reserving the claimant's rights and remedies in case the award should not be performed. The arbitrator awarded 410*l.* which had not been paid:—Held, that under the circumstances the claimant had not barred himself of his right to sue in the Admiralty Court.*

This was a cause to recover compensation for personal injury, and was instituted by Ellis Jevons, a marine diver, against the vessel Sylph and Alexander Shand, the mortgagee.

The plaintiff was a marine diver residing at Liverpool, and in the exercise of his calling was, on or about the 29th of October, 1866, engaged in diving in the river Mersey, a little to the south of the great landing-stage, for the purpose of reporting upon the state and condition of a ship which had been sunk there, and a boat was anchored and the plaintiff attached thereto by means of ropes, and supplied with air by a tube passing between him and the boat. Whilst the plaintiff was so engaged the vessel Sylph, which was then employed as a ferry-boat between the great landing-stage and New Ferry, and was proceeding from the stage to New Ferry, was so negligently managed that she came into contact with the plaintiff, and the ropes whereby the plaintiff was attached to the boat; and the paddle-wheel or vessel caught the ropes, and the plaintiff was carried round by the paddle-wheel and much injured, and is likely never to recover the proper use of his left arm or to be able to follow his calling of a marine diver.

The plaintiff's claim in respect of the injury was referred to an arbitrator, who on the 15th of January last awarded a sum of 410*l.* as the proper compensation for his injuries, which the defendant has never paid; and by the agreement of reference, all the rights and remedies of the plaintiff were expressly reserved in case the award of the arbitrator should not be performed. The plaintiff therefore prayed the Court to order that the sum of 410*l.*, or such other sum as to the said Judge may seem proper, be paid to the plaintiff, or, if necessary to refer the damage to the registrar and merchants, and to condemn the defendants and their bail therein, and in the costs of the suit.

Mr. C. P. Butt, on behalf of the defendant, moved the Court to reject the petition, and in effect to dismiss the claim: first, upon the general ground of want of jurisdiction; secondly, on the particular ground that the plaintiff had, by submitting his case to arbitration, abandoned his right to institute any suit or bring any action upon the same subject in any Court.

Mr. V. Lushington, and Mr. R. G. Williams, for the plaintiff, contended that, though there was no direct precedent in favour of the plaintiff, yet, both upon general principles and especially upon the authority of the 7th section of the Admiralty Court Jurisdiction Act, the High Court of Admiralty had power and ought to entertain the case; and that as to the arbitration, the agreement especially reserved to the plaintiff the right of resorting to a Court of justice in the event of the award of the arbitrator being unexecuted by the defendant.

The cases cited in the argument are fully referred to in the judgment.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE (after stating the facts, said)—That this Court had originally jurisdiction in such a case as the present, I have no doubt whatever. It is given by the terms of the patent under which I hold my office, and it is clear from the old authorities upon the subject that the Court had jurisdiction over all torts and injuries done within the ebb and flow of the tide as well as upon the high seas. The whole law upon the subject is collected in the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Story in the case of De Lovio v. Boit (1), and this judgment in truth exhausts all the learning upon the subject. The exercise of jurisdiction in this case is also supported among other authorities by that of the Black Book of the Admiralty, to which Lord Stowell on various occasions referred as a repertory of the common law and customs of the sea and of the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court.

There is no doubt that in and before the reign of Edward the Third the plaintiff would have had his remedy here for this tort, but this original power has been curtailed in various respects by statute law and by prohibitions by which at one time the jealousy of the common law Courts thwarted and confined the jurisdiction of a Court whose proceedings were founded upon the Civil law. The statute of 3 Ric. 2. c. 5, which is generally referred to as the first restraining statute, enacts that the admirals and their deputies shall not meddle henceforth of anything done within the realm, but only of a thing done upon the sea, according as it has been duly used in the time of Edward the Third. The 2 Hen. 4. c. 11. confirms the statute of Richard by the addition of penalties and other means.

It was upon the construction of these statutes that the common law Courts endeavoured to abridge the jurisdiction of this Court as to various subjects over which the patent of the Judge still gives him authority, especially with regard to contracts made at sea.

The Admiralty Court in the United States has recovered jurisdiction on this and on other subjects, which it is perhaps not now competent to this Court to entertain.

This Court has always had a jurisdiction over personal injuries committed on the high seas, and has entertained actions in personam against captains of merchant vessels for inflicting, while on the high seas, excessive punishment upon seamen. In The Agincourt (2) Lord Stowell condemned the captain of an East Indiaman in 100*l.* damages with costs. In The Louther Castle (3) he entertained a similar action, but held the charge against the captain not proved. In The Ruckers (4) Lord Stowell went a step further, and allowed a civil suit by a passenger against a master for ill treatment on the high seas. Reports of cases were then of recent date (both of the Admiralty and Ecclesiastical Courts), but the registrar, on searching the records back to 1730, found many instances of such suits. These were cases of action against the person; the present is a suit in rem. They were cases also in which the tort was committed on the high seas, and not, like the present, in the body of a county. No prohibition upon this matter has ever been issued to this Court, and I am sure it would not be the disposition of Courts of common law, in these days, to grant prohibitions as they were formerly granted, out of mere jealousy of the jurisdiction of this Court, especially since this Court has been created, by recent statute, a Court of Record; still, having regard solely to the old law of this Court, I should have hesitated to entertain this suit; but the jurisdiction of this Court has been of late years much extended. By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65. s. 6, it is provided that "The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction to decide all claims and demands whatsoever, in the nature of salvage for services rendered to or damage received by any ship or sea-going vessel; or in the nature of towage, or for necessities supplied to any foreign ship, or sea-going vessel, and to enforce the payment thereof, whether such ship or vessel may have been within the body of a county or upon the high seas, at the time when the services were rendered, or damage received, or necessities furnished, in respect of which such claim is made." And by the Admiralty Court Act (24 Vict. c. 10. s. 7), it is enacted that the "High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim for damage done by any ship."

In the case of The Diana (5) Dr. Lushington said (p. 540), that the object of this act, as stated in the title and preamble, is "to extend the jurisdiction" of the Court. The 7th section, which deals with the subject of damage, does not particularize any circumstances which the jurisdiction of the Court is to extend, but gives the Court jurisdiction in the widest and most general terms. In the previous case of The Malvina (6) he had holden that the utmost jurisdiction is given to the Court in cases of collision, and that the 7th section of the Admiralty Court Act extended to the body of a county; and in the case of The Uhla—with a manuscript report of which Mr. Browning, the reporter of this Court, has furnished me (7)—the Court allowed the Falmouth Dock Company to institute a cause of damage against a ship for injury done to a breakwater (7th June, 1867).

Looking to these decisions, to the very wide language of the latter statute, and to the exercise of jurisdiction by Lord Stowell in like cases over torts committed on the high seas, I think I cannot refuse the plaintiff permission to institute this suit, unless he has by the agreement to submit to arbitration debarred himself from the power of resorting to this Court. I have looked into the cases cited on this subject—Gascoyne v. Edwards (8) and others, but

(7) The following case was decided by the late Judge, the Right Hon. Dr. Lushington, on the 7th of June last.—

June 7. } THE UHLA.

Claim by a Dock Company in respect of injury done to their breakwater by a ship.

This was a cause of damage instituted by the Falmouth Docks Company against the brig Uhla. The petition stated that the Uhla, having put into the port of Falmouth on the 12th of March, came to an anchor there in the outer harbour, and so remained till the 17th, when, under the influence of a heavy gale, she dragged her anchor and her master and crew having abandoned her drove with great violence against the breakwater, and remained beating against it for about two hours, in consequence of which the breakwater was greatly damaged.

Mr. E. C. Clarkson, for the defendants, moved the Court to reject the petition, by reason that the Court had no jurisdiction—The Robert Pow (1).

Mr. V. Lushington, in support of the petition.

DR. LUSHINGTON.—The true question is as to the construction of the 7th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861. I take it to mean every case of damage done by any ship; there is neither limitation nor restriction expressed in the act. The case of The Robert Pow is distinguishable from this in that it was not a case of collision at all. I am of opinion that the petition must be admitted.

The cause was then heard, and the Uhla was found to blame for the collision.

if I understand rightly the fifth article of the petition, they do not govern this case. I have borne in mind also the other objections which were stated by the counsel for the plaintiff; among them, that arbitration could not be put higher than a judgment; and the case of Nelson v. Couch (9) was cited, establishing the principle that a judgment in another Court upon the question of personal damages would not prevent proceedings in rem in the Court of Admiralty. With respect to the argument that this Court is without the proper machinery to estimate personal damages, I have already adverted to the cases in which damages have been awarded for personal torts; and it is therefore clear that as an incident to this jurisdiction the Court must be able to exercise the power of assessment. Moreover, it has done so already in the case of The Rouen, the owners of which were condemned to pay damages to the personal representatives of the deceased—see Taylor v. Dewar (10); and I do not see why this Court, with the assistance of the registrar, and, if necessary, other competent persons, should be unable to do justice in the matter.

I certainly did not understand why the plaintiff had, by pleading the circumstances as to the arbitration, forestalled the possible defence of the defendant, and answered by anticipation an objection which it was for the defendant to raise. I was informed, however, that this was the result of some arrangement between the parties to bring all the facts connected with the case before the Court in the first instance; and as I have been desired to express, and have expressed, my opinion upon the effect of these details, I shall not direct them to be struck out, though this manner of pleading is open to objection, and must not be repeated in any other case.

Petition admitted.

*Jurisdiction of the Admiralty Court—— Foreign Ship — Wages — "Admiralty Court Act, 1861" (24 Vict. c. 10), s. 10. —
 Construction—Admiralty Rules, 1859, Rule 10.—Foreign Consul—Protest—Costs.*

Section 10. of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, enacts that "the High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim by a seaman of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship, whether the same be due under a special contract or otherwise, and also over any claim by the master of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship, and for disbursements made by him on account of the ship."

The Admiralty Rules, 1859, provide, by rule 10, that "in a wages cause against a foreign vessel, notice of the institution of the cause shall be given to the consul of the State to which the vessel belongs, if there be one resident in London":—Held, that the object of this section was to extend the jurisdiction which the Court had in the ordinary case of wages to the case of wages under a special contract, and of disbursements on account of the ship.

Held also, that the High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction, under section 10. of the above statute, to entertain a suit for wages against a foreign ship, the words of the act being "any" ship; but that the Court ought not to exercise jurisdiction without first giving notice to the consul of the nation to which such ship belongs.

The protest of a foreign consul does not ipso facto operate as a bar to the prosecution of the suit; but the Court ought to determine according to its discretion, judicially exercised, whether, having regard to the reasons advanced by the consul, and the answers offered on behalf of a claimant, it is fit and proper that the suit should proceed or be stayed.

* Present, the Right Hon. the Master of the Rolls (Lord Romilly), Sir J. W. Colville, Sir E. V.
 Williams and Sir R. T. Kindersley.

The appellant (a British subject) having shipped on board a Portuguese ship as mate, and having signed an agreement to be bound by the law of Portugal, which required him to submit all differences between the master and seamen to the Portuguese consul, arrested the ship, and instituted a suit against the owners in the High Court of Admiralty in England for wages, whereupon the Portuguese consul entered a protest against the proceedings:—Held (affirming the judgment of the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty), that the suit ought to be dismissed and the ship released; but without costs.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty of England, Sir R. Phillimore.

In the month of May, 1867, the Portuguese vessel Nina was at Havana, destined to proceed thence to Greenock, in North Britain, with a cargo of sugar.

The Nina belonged to the port of Macao, a Portuguese settlement, governed by Portuguese law; and the respondent, Jaime Sabino Rangel, of Macao, shipowner, was the sole registered owner of the Nina.

Whilst the Nina was at Havana, her then master, Francisco Dias Perez d'Almeida, engaged a crew, among whom was the appellant. The whole crew, including the appellant, were engaged by a written instrument, called a matricula or roll, made in conformity with the law of Portugal.

By this matricula or roll the appellant submitted himself to the provisions of the Portuguese Commercial Code, by which code it is provided that any dispute arising between the master of any Portuguese ship and any mate or seaman of such ship, shall be decided by the Portuguese consul in or near the port in which the vessel may chance to be.

The appellant served on board the Nina on her said voyage to Greenock as piloto or mate, and upon the 8th of August, 1867, he left the service of the Nina, having been two months and twenty days on board her.

The appellant, after he left the Nina, caused her to be arrested at the port of Cardiff, and instituted the present suit for wages and disbursements.

The appellant did not before instituting proceedings in the Court of Admiralty in England take any means to have his claim settled by the Portuguese consul.

The respondent had always been willing that the claim should be so settled.

Notice of the suit was given to the Portuguese Consul-General in London who thereupon intervened, and protested against the suit proceeding.

The Judge of the Admiralty Court, after hearing the case, ordered the Nina to be released from arrest, and condemned the appellant in damages and costs.

The following are the material parts of the judgment of the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty:

"In this case the Nina, a Portuguese vessel, was arrested on the 21st of October in this year, by warrant from this Court, at the instance of Charles La Blache, who, in the affidavit which, according to the practice of this Court, precedes the issue of the warrant, described himself as 'master mariner, late chief officer and navigator on board the Portuguese vessel Nina, now lying in the port of Cardiff.' The plaintiff filed his petition on the 2nd of November, 1867, in this Court, in which he stated that he was a British subject; that on the 2nd of March last, by arrangement with Captain Almeida, the owner of the Portuguese vessel the Nina, then at Havana, he shipped on board the Nina, under a charter for a voyage to the Clyde and port or ports in the United Kingdom; from thence to Hong Kong and Macao, there to load coolies for Havana, where the voyage was to terminate. In his petition he says that he so shipped as chief officer and commander, at the rate of 18*l.* a month, with a bonus of 10*s.* a head on all coolies to be shipped at Macao, and with liberty to take with him his wife, child and servant the entire voyage at the ship's expense. He states that the agreement, under which he shipped, was made before the Consul-General of Portugal at Havana; that he has performed his duty under the agreement in all respects; and the sixth paragraph contains the averment that 'the plaintiff, whilst in command of the ship, made divers disbursements on account of the ship.' He then avers that he has been wrongfully dismissed, and concludes as follows: 'By reason of the premises a large sum is due to the plaintiff for wages, disbursements and compensation.'

"A long and full answer was put in on behalf of the owner and master, of which the most material points are,—that the plaintiff shipped as a mate on board the Nina, that he is so described in the matricula or roll of that ship, that he entered into a special agreement to be bound by the commercial law of Portugal as to all disputes or questions which might arise between him and the captain; that, according to that law, no mate could take proceedings in a court of justice against the captain, without previously submitting the case to the arbitration of the Portuguese consul; and that he had not done so, though the consul was perfectly ready and willing to entertain the question. Here I may observe that the matricula itself, entirely bears out the averments contained in the affidavit. There is a heading, 'Special Obligations,' and the seventh of the special obligations is this: 'He must submit to everything foreseen and contained in the Codigo Commercial (Portuguese Commercial Code).' The roll is headed, 'Portuguese Consulate-General, in the archipelago of the Spanish Antilles, with residence at Havana. Articles and names of the crew of the Portuguese ship Nina, captain Almeida, and of which is owner Jaime Sabino Rangel, proceeding on a voyage to Greenock, with passport from Macao, &c. At the office of the Consul-General of the Portuguese nation, in the archipelago of the Spanish Antilles, in Havana, was matriculated and registered the crew of the Portuguese ship Nina, of which is captain Almeida, whose signature herein I certify as true, and who declared this to be the true and original register of said vessel.'

"The affidavit goes on to state, moreover, that the present plaintiff arrested this ship in Scotland, which arrest, owing to his non-appearance in support of it, had been dismissed, with costs.

"All these averments are sustained by ample documentary evidence, and by a very important affidavit of the Portuguese consul in London, which I will read.

"The affidavit is that of J. Francisco Ignacio Vanzellar. He says,

'I am Consul-General in London of His Most Faithful Majesty the King of Portugal.

The above-named vessel Nina, proceeded against in this cause, is a Portuguese ship belonging to the port of Macao, of which Jaime Sabino Rangel is the duly registered owner. The island of Macao is a Portuguese settlement, and is governed by Portuguese law. I have inspected the certificate of the matricula and roll under which the Nina was sailing when she arrived at Greenock in the month of June, 1867, and I say that such matricula or roll purports to have been duly executed as required by Portuguese law, before Fernando de Gaver e Tiscar, the Consul-General of His Most Faithful Majesty the King of Portugal at Havana. I say that by the law of Portugal the masters of all Portuguese vessels are required, before taking any officer or seaman to sea in a Portuguese vessel, to enter into a matricula or roll, setting forth the voyage upon which the ship is about to sail, and that the officers and seamen about to proceed in her have agreed to serve for that voyage, and such matricula or roll is, by Portuguese law, the only mode in which a binding engagement can be entered into between the master of a Portuguese ship and his officers and seamen; and the matricula or roll when entered is signed by the master, officers and seamen. The matricula or roll under which the Nina so arrived at Greenock purports to have been entered into for a voyage from Havana to Greenock only, and for no other voyage. The plaintiff in this action, Charles La Blache, has by the said matricula or roll, submitted himself to the provisions of the Codigo Commercial of Portugal, by which the said Charles La Blache is restricted from taking any proceeding against the Nina or her master, and is required to submit any dispute or disputes that might be existing between them, either to the Portuguese vice-consul at Glasgow or to myself. The said Charles La Blache has not, as I am informed and believe, submitted or attempted to submit any dispute or disputes existing between him and the master of the Nina to the Portuguese vice-consul at Glasgow, and the said Charles La Blache has not submitted or attempted to submit any such dispute to me, which I would have readily entertained had the said Charles La Blache so done. The said Charles La Blache, being subject to the provisions of the Codigo Commercial, and not having taken the proper measures thereby adopted to settle his dispute with the master of the Nina, I respectfully submit that it is not within the jurisdiction of this Honourable Court to entertain the claim of the said Charles La Blache; and as the commercial representative of His Majesty the King of Portugal, I consider it to be my duty to respectfully and formally protest against the exercise of the jurisdiction of this Honourable Court in or about the dispute existing between the said Charles La Blache and the master of the Portuguese ship Nina.

"In these circumstances, an application was made to me on behalf of the master and owner of the vessel to release this foreign ship from arrest, and to enable her to proceed on her voyage according to her charter-party, and to condemn the claimant in costs and damages. I thought the prima facie evidence of the abuse of the process of this Court, and of the gross injury done thereby to a foreign subject by the detention of his vessel in this country, warranted me in calling upon the claimant in a summary manner to shew cause why the prayer of the foreign owner should not be granted. The matter came on for discussion in court. The counsel for the claimant prayed for further time to consider the statements and affidavits, and to reply to them, and I gave him time for that purpose.

When the case was called on, an affidavit by the claimant was brought into court, of which it has been truly said that every averment contained in it, whether true or not, referred to matters which had been in the knowledge of the person making it when the suit was first instituted. It is difficult to believe that its late introduction in court on the morning of the hearing was unconnected with purposes of delay. I allowed it, however, to be read and commented upon, and have taken it into consideration in the judgment which I am about to give. It is chiefly remarkable for the entirely new version of the case set up by the plaintiff. He now says that the ship was a Peruvian, and not a Portuguese ship, and attempts to set up a verbal agreement which is to supersede the written agreement, or the matricula which he admits that he signed. He does not deny that he arrested the ship under process of the Scotch Court.

on the 5th of September, or that the suit was dismissed with costs against him. He represents that his wife's health compelled him to leave Scotland, that he had no notice of the proceedings in the Scotch court; in fact, that that Court acted with flagrant injustice towards him. He does not, however, deny, in this affidavit, that the document which he signed did contain an express undertaking that he would submit himself to the Portuguese law. A suggestion was, indeed, made by counsel that the copy matricula is the only document before the Court without signature; but it is not denied that the original is, according to the law of Portugal, in the custody of the Portuguese consul at Havana, and, as I have said, that it contains the signature of this person.

"One word as to the last device—for so I must designate it—of the plaintiff; a device not thought of when he was before the Scotch Court; namely, that the vessel is a Peruvian vessel. I cannot but think that this total variation from the original statement to be found in every document before the Court, and in every averment hitherto made by the plaintiff—viz., that this vessel, sailing under a Portuguese flag, and hitherto described as a Portuguese vessel, is a Peruvian vessel—that this total variation arises out of a desire to take the case out of the application of a principle which has hitherto governed this Court in the matter of suits for wages by foreign seamen. Be my suggestion, however, right or wrong, I am satisfied that I ought not to allow the plaintiff so entirely to alter the grounds upon which his claim was instituted, or so to change the position on the strength of which he obtained the warrant of this Court.

"It has been most strenuously urged upon me by counsel for the plaintiff that I am nevertheless bound to entertain this suit, and to allow the plaintiff to continue the arrest upon this foreign vessel, which is thereby deprived of fulfilling the obligations of her charter-party. It is not quite, but very nearly maintained that I have really no discretion to exercise in this matter. The attention of counsel was drawn to the various well-known cases which established the proposition that when a seaman sues a foreign ship in this Court for wages, the Court usually requires the consent of the foreign consul before it entertains the suit; and the 10th Rule of Court, framed in 1859, expressly provides that—'in a wages cause against a foreign vessel, notice of the institution of the cause shall be given to the consul of the State to which the vessel belongs, if there be one resident in London, and a copy of the notice shall be annexed to the affidavit.' The authority of these cases, and the rule founded on them, were said to be obsolete; indeed, never to have been founded on strict law, and at all events to be entirely abrogated by the 10th section of stat. 24 Vict. c. 10.—the act which enlarges the jurisdiction of this Court. I find no words in that section which limit the discretion hitherto claimed and exercised by this Court. I know no rule of law applicable to the construction of statutes, which, in the absence of express words, would give such effect to the section. It is to be observed, also, that the case of the Franz et Elise (1) has been decided according to the old practice, subsequently to the passing of this statute, and also that a similar argument, used I believe by myself, arose out of section 191. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and was expressly overruled by the Judge in March, 1861. I hold, therefore, that I have the same discretion as my predecessor in this chair possessed, in suits of this description. I am sure that it is most expedient, upon grounds of international comity, that the Court should possess this discretion. It is no unfrequent cause of complaint on the part of foreign States that the law of England does not in general accord, in British ports, to foreign consuls, that reasonable authority in mercantile transactions between the seamen and masters of their own ships which is almost invariably accorded to foreign consuls by the law of other States. I am desirous, however, of not being misunderstood. I do not say that this Court will never entertain a suit of this kind without the sanction of the foreign consul. Each case may depend upon its own circumstances, and I entirely agree with the opinion expressed on this question by Dr. Lushington, in The Golubchick (2). But I do say that I will not entertain this suit, in which the plaintiff has shipped on board a Portuguese vessel, with a Portuguese flag and papers, as mate, and has deliberately bound himself by a written instrument, duly entered into before a Portuguese consul, to conform to the law of Portugal, which requires him to submit to the arbitration of the Portuguese consul, who is here ready and willing to discharge his duties. I do say I will not entertain this suit contrary to the protest of the Portuguese consul, at the instance of a plaintiff who, from his first affidavit, which led the warrant, to his last affidavit, filed the other day, has continually varied all the material statements of his case, and who has already been condemned in a Scotch court in costs and damages for the arrest of this very vessel. I agree with Mr. Lushington that a more regular course of proceeding should have been adopted to bring this question before the Court, and I shall expect the more regular course to be adopted in other cases of the kind. But having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this case, which I have stated, I will not be deterred by any technical reasons from doing justice now in this matter. I think the process of the Court was abused originally, in the arrest of this foreign ship, and I decree that she be forthwith released, and I condemn the plaintiff in costs and damages incident to these proceedings."

(1) 1 Maritime Cases, 157.

(2) 1 W. Robin, 143

Dr. Deane and Mr. Lushington, for the appellant.—The jurisdiction of the learned Judge of the Admiralty Court is absolute. He has no discretion in the matter. He is bound to entertain the suit. The language of "The Admiralty Court Act, 1861," is very comprehensive. Section 10. provides, "The High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim by a seaman of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship." The words are "any ship"; such words must include a foreign ship; the learned Judge has therefore no discretion in the matter; he is bound to hear the cause. But even if he had a discretion, it is a discretion to be judicially exercised, having regard to all the circumstances of the case. But it is said that the Admiralty Rules, 1859, by rule 10, which requires notice to be given to the consul of a foreign State when a suit is commenced against a foreign ship, deprive the Admiralty Court of jurisdiction if the consul of the State to which the ship belongs sees fit to enter a protest against the proceedings; but the Admiralty Act, by section 10, which gives the Admiralty Court jurisdiction in the case of any ship, in effect abolished the practice established by the Admiralty Rules of 1859. It is said that a seaman of a foreign ship cannot sue for wages without the consent of the consul of the State to which the ship belongs. But in a cause of collision or bottomry the practice does not prevail. Is there then any peculiarity in a suit for wages which requires the sanction of the representative of the State to which the vessel belongs? Besides, the decree of the Court below was of a most sweeping description. The learned Judge says, I have jurisdiction, but I have also an arbitrary discretion in the matter to entertain the suit or to refuse to entertain the suit, and I exercise my discretion by dismissing the claimant's suit, and with costs. Such a doctrine of discretion is altogether without authority or precedent. If the learned Judge of the Admiralty Court had a discretion in the matter, it must be a discretion to be exercised judicially according to some fixed principle. The question in fact is, can the consul or other representative of a foreign State exercise a restraint on the Courts of this country? The maxim which governs such a question should be actor sequitur forum rei.—They referred to The Golubchick (2).

The Queen's Advocate (Sir Travers Twiss) and Mr. Clarkson, for the respondent.—The whole question turns on the construction to be put on the 10th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, taken together with the Admiralty Rules, 1859. The section gives the Admiralty Court jurisdiction "over any claim by a seaman of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship." The Admiralty rule provides "that in a wages cause against a foreign vessel, notice of the institution of the cause shall be given to the consul of the State to which the vessel belongs." Beyond all question, the learned Judge had jurisdiction in the cause if he saw fit to exercise it; but the Admiralty Act, 1861, taken together with the Admiralty Rules, 1859, clearly shews that the Judge has a discretion in the matter, to be exercised no doubt judicially, but nevertheless a discretion, under all the circumstances of the case, to entertain the suit. It is for the Judge to determine whether to hear the cause or not, after considering all that may be said by the representative of the foreign State and by the plaintiff in the Admiralty Court. It is said that to require the consent of the consul of a foreign State to proceedings in the Courts in this country, or, in other words, to allow such foreign representative to put a veto on the proceedings of our Courts, is an extravagant proposition; but when duly considered, this is not unreasonable. A foreign ship is part of the foreign State to which she belongs, and it may well be that no proceeding in rem ought to be taken against such foreign ship, she being in the estimation of law, a part of the dominion of a foreign State. The seaman may proceed under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, ss. 188, 190, which provides a remedy other than a proceeding against the ship. It is, after all, a question where such an inquiry can most conveniently take place, whether before the High Court of Admiralty or before the consul of the foreign State; and in the present case the appellant has signed a formal instrument consenting to refer disputes to the consul of the State to which the ship belonged.—They referred to The Admiralty Court Act, 1861, The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, The Herzogin Marie (3), The Franz et Elise (1), Lloyd v. Guibart (4), The Milford (5), The Octavie (6), The Courtney (7), The Harriet (8) and Damon v. White (9).

Dr. Deane, in reply.

Their LORDSHIPS intimated that they should humbly submit to Her Majesty that the judgment of the High Court of Admiralty should be affirmed; but declined to make any order as to costs.

LORD ROMILLY—In this case their Lordships, to avoid delay, intimated, on the 20th of December, the nature of the report and recommendation they had agreed humbly to submit to Her Majesty; and Her Majesty was pleased, by her Order in Council of the same date, to approve of that report, and to direct that the same be carried into execution. Their Lordships will now proceed to state more fully the reasons of that decision, which could not be stated at their last sitting before the adjournment of the Committee.

This is an appeal from the Court of Admiralty, which dismissed the respondent from this cause and all further observance of justice therein, and condemned the plaintiff in the costs and damages consequent on the arrest of the vessel Nina, and also condemned him in the costs of the cause, and decreed the vessel to be released. The vessel is a Portuguese vessel; the appellant is a British subject.

In April, 1867, the appellant commenced his services on board the Nina, then lying at Havana. He signed the articles in the common form which was supplied to him, a certified copy of which is in evidence. On arrival at Greenock, he alleges that he was, by D'Almeida, the nominal captain, turned out of the vessel without payment of what was due to him for wages and disbursements on account of the ship; upon which he arrested her in Scotland; but not prosecuting the case with sufficient diligence in Scotland, the suit was dismissed and the ship released. The Nina then came to Cardiff, where the appellant again arrested the ship and instituted this suit in the Admiralty Court for wages and disbursements.

In accordance with the 10th of the Rules of the Admiralty Court, published in 1859, notice of the suit was given to the Portuguese consul residing in this country, whereupon the consul sent in a protest which, as far as is material, is as follows—[His Lordship read parts of the protest].—In this state of things, several questions arise: First, whether the Court of Admiralty has any jurisdiction at all in the case of a claim for wages by seamen for service on board of a foreign vessel. Secondly, If it has such jurisdiction, whether, before exercising it, the Court is bound to send notice of the case to the consul of the State to which the vessel belongs. Thirdly, If the foreign consul intervenes and protests, whether such protest operates ipso facto as an absolute bar to the prosecution of the suit, or whether the Judge is to take into consideration the grounds and reasons advanced by the consul, and to determine according to his discretion whether, having regard to those grounds and reasons, it is fit and proper that the suit should proceed or be stayed. Fourthly, Whether the grounds and reasons put forward in the protest of the Portuguese consul in the present case are sufficient to satisfy the Court that the suit ought to be stayed.

Their Lordships at the conclusion of their judgment, stated that they should humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm so much of the decree in the Court below which dismissed the respondent from the suit ; but their Lordships declined to make any order as to costs.

On the first question, no doubt whatever is entertained by their Lordships. From the time of Lord Stowell down to the present, the Court of Admiralty has always asserted and exercised this jurisdiction. And if there remained any doubt on the subject, the 10th section of the 24 Vict. c. 10. expressly gives jurisdiction to the Court of Admiralty in the case of any ship, which, as the context and the rest of the act plainly shew, means the ship of any nation.

Nor have their Lordships any more doubt upon the second question. It has been argued at the bar that the 10th section of the 24 Vict. c. 10, before referred to, has the effect of abolishing the practice enjoined by the 10th of the Rules of the Admiralty Court of 1859, before referred to, of sending notice to the consul of the nation to which the foreign ship belongs. To this argument their Lordships cannot accede. If it had been intended by the legislature to abolish the practice, that 10th rule, which, it is to be observed, has the force of statute, would have been expressly referred to by the act, and repealed. This is not done. The 10th section of the act is perfectly consistent with the rule. The only object of that section was to extend the jurisdiction which the Court already had in the ordinary case of wages, to the cases of wages under special contract, and of disbursements on account of the ship.

With respect to the third question, their Lordships are of opinion that the protest of the foreign consul does not, ipso facto, operate as a bar to the prosecution of the suit. The foreign consul has not the power to put a veto on the exercise of its jurisdiction by the Court of Admiralty. It is well observed by Dr. Lushington, in the case of the Golubchick, that the jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty cannot depend upon the will of a foreign consul ; that as he cannot confer the jurisdiction, so he cannot take it away. If the consul protests, but advances no reason, the suit will proceed. If he advances reasons for staying the suit, the plaintiff must be at liberty to dispute the facts and answer the reasons put forward by the consul ; and then the Judge of the Court of Admiralty is to exercise his discretion, and determine whether, having regard to those reasons, with the answers thereto, it is fit and proper that the suit should proceed or be stayed. By discretion, is meant, to use the words of Lord Eldon (9), not an arbitrary, capricious discretion, but one that is regulated upon grounds that will make it judicial. That the exercise of this jurisdiction by the Court of Admiralty lies in the discretion of the Court in the sense before stated, is established by a long line of authorities, from the time of Lord Stowell down to the present. They are all one way, and they are, in the opinion of their Lordships, conclusive on this subject. And their Lordships concur in the decision of the late learned Judge of the Court of Admiralty in the case of the Octavie (6), that this discretion is not taken away by the 10th section of the Admiralty Jurisdiction Act already referred to.

Upon the first three questions, then, their Lordships are of opinion that in the case of a suit for wages by seamen for service on board of a foreign vessel, the Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction ; but it will not exercise it without first giving notice to the consul of the nation to which the foreign vessel belongs ; and that if the foreign consul, by protest, objects to the prosecution of the suit, the Court will determine, according to its discretion, judicially exercised, whether, having regard to the reasons advanced by the consul, and the answers to them offered on the part of the plaintiff, it is fit and proper that the suit should proceed or be stayed. Their Lordships are further of opinion that it makes no difference that the plaintiff is a British subject. It is the nationality of the vessel, and not the nationality of the individual seaman suing for his wages, that must regulate the course of procedure.

With respect to the fourth question, which is, whether the facts and reasons adduced by the foreign consul are established, and if so, whether they are sufficient to induce the Court to stay the further prosecution of this suit, their Lordships think that they are so. The plaintiff does not deny that the roll or matricula which he signed was in the usual form, and that it contained the usual printed conditions which now appear on the certified copy produced in court. By these he agrees to be bound by the Portuguese law; the consul asserts the law to be, that in case of difference between the seamen and the captain, the case shall be determined by the Portuguese consul residing in the country where the ship is arrested. The consequence is, that he is the judge to determine the contest between the appellant and respondent, and he is ready and willing to hear and dispose of the case. No evidence is given to contest the accuracy of this statement, and, this being so, their Lordships are of opinion that the appellant has agreed to refer such matters to the decision of the Portuguese consul resident here, and that this constitutes a sufficient ground to induce the learned Judge of the Court of Admiralty to come to the conclusion that, in the proper exercise of his discretion, this suit should not be proceeded with. It must be a very strong case in which their Lordships would be disposed to overrule the discretion of any Judge which had been bona fide exercised on judicial principles, and they are of opinion that the decision of the learned Judge is correct in dismissing the cause and releasing the vessel; but the decree in the Court below proceeds to award costs and damages to the respondent against the appellant. Their Lordships are unable to discover on what principle this can be rested. The question in the Court below, and now before their Lordships, is not whether the appellant was right in his suit, for the suit has not properly come to any hearing on the merits. The evidence necessary for arriving at a decision on the merits has not been produced. The only question properly before the Court below was, whether the suit instituted by the appellant should be allowed to proceed or not: in other words, whether the facts and reasons set forth by the Portuguese consul were sufficient to induce the Court to refuse to allow the suit to proceed; and these facts and reasons were the only matters which could be properly contested in the Court below. The learned Judge arrived at the conclusion, as their Lordships think, correctly, that the suit should not proceed; but that very circumstance made it impossible for the Court to come to a safe and satisfactory conclusion as to what would have been the result if the suit had been allowed to proceed, the proofs on both sides given in the usual manner and the cause heard on the merits.

Their Lordships, therefore, are unable to concur with the learned Judge of the Court of Admiralty in that portion of his decree which fixes the appellant (the plaintiff below) with the payment of costs and damages, and have therefore humbly reported to her Majesty that the decree of the Court of Admiralty be varied by striking out of it so much as relates to such costs and damages.

The decree runs thus: Her Majesty dismisses the defendant from this cause and all further observance of justice therein, and decrees the said vessel to be released; but their Lordships do not think fit to make any order as to costs, either in the Court below, or in the appeal to her Majesty in Council.

Admiralty—Collision—Sailing Ship—Steamer, Duty of—Admiralty Court—Pleadings.

In a cause of collision between a sailing ship and a steamer, although the sailing ship may be found to have been guilty of misconduct, or not to have observed the sailing regulations, yet the steamer will be held culpable if it appears that it was in her power to have avoided the collision.

It is the duty of a steamer where there is risk of collision, whatever may be the conduct of the sailing vessel, to do everything in her power that can be done consistently with her own safety in order to avoid a collision.

Where a steamer is charged for omitting to do something which she ought to have done, there must be clear proof, first, that the thing omitted to be done was clearly within the power of the steamer; secondly, that, if done, it would in all probability have prevented the collision; and, thirdly, that it was an act which would have occurred to any officer of competent skill and experience in command of the steamer.

The party against whom a judgment is given in the Admiralty Court is entitled to know from the complaint of his adversary what is the default imputed to him, in order that he may have an opportunity of meeting the case by his defence.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Admiralty of England.

The decree was made in cross-causes of damage instituted on behalf of the owners of the two ships, the City of Antwerp and the Friedrich, to recover damages occasioned by a collision in the Irish Channel on the morning of the 28th of March, 1867.

The City of Antwerp was a screw steamship, of 1,625 tons register, belonging to the port of Liverpool, and on a voyage to New York.

The Friedrich was a sailing vessel, of 937 tons register, belonging to the port of New York, laden with a cargo of corn, cotton and other merchandise, and bound for the port of Liverpool.

On behalf of the appellant, it was alleged that the City of Antwerp was in the Irish Channel about twenty miles from Tuskar, steering south-west-half-west. That the night was fine, with a fresh breeze from the west by north, and that the steamer was making about eleven knots an hour. That the regulation lights were properly fixed and burning brightly, and a good look-out was being kept on board. That the ship Friedrich was seen ahead, and slightly on the port bow of their vessel, distant about a mile and a half. That no lights of the Friedrich were then visible. That the Friedrich was observed and was shortly made out to be a vessel on an opposite course to that of the steamer, and with the wind free. That the helm of the City of Antwerp was thereupon put a-port, and then hard a-port. That if the Friedrich had kept her course, the two vessels would have passed port side to port side at a considerable distance apart, but the Friedrich put her helm a-starboard, and came rapidly round under her starboard helm, ran stem-on at great speed into the City of Antwerp's port main-rigging, doing much damage. As the two vessels approached each other, the Friedrich's starboard light—a dim green light—was seen. That at the time of collision the City of Antwerp had paid off between five and six points under her port helm, and the Friedrich must have come round about the same number of points under her starboard helm.

On behalf of the respondents, it was alleged that the Friedrich prosecuted her voyage in St. George's Channel, and was steering her channel course, north-east, and making about nine knots an hour. That the night was fine. That there was a fresh breeze from about west-north-west. That the Friedrich had her coloured regulation lights duly exhibited and burning brightly, and that a good and careful look-out was being kept on board. That a sail was reported ahead, which was ascertained to be a small schooner on the same course as the Friedrich, at a considerable distance and about half a point on her port bow. The Friedrich thereupon continued her course till she neared the schooner, and then ported about one point, so as to pass her with safety about half a cable's length to leeward of her. That before the Friedrich had passed the schooner the look-out of the Friedrich reported a light ahead, which proved to be the masthead light of the City of Antwerp; that the port light of the said steam-ship was at the same time visible about a point on the port bow of the Friedrich and apparently at a considerable distance. That after clearing the schooner the Friedrich was brought to her proper channel course, north-east. That the City of Antwerp was at such time about a point and a half on the lee bow of the Friedrich, distant between a quarter and half a mile, having meanwhile shut out her port light and opened her starboard light, as if intending to pass to leeward of both the schooner and the Friedrich. That the latter was accordingly luffed up about half a point; but almost immediately afterwards the steam-ship altered her course, and, shutting in her starboard light, again shewed her port light on the starboard bow of the Friedrich, causing immediate danger of collision, whereupon the helm of the Friedrich was put hard down, in order to bring her sails aback so as to lessen the mischief if possible; notwithstanding which the steam-ship ran across the bows of the Friedrich, catching that ship's jibboom with her port main-rigging, and with her port side catching the stem of the Friedrich, tore it open from the wood ends of her starboard bow, causing a dreadful leak, in consequence of which the Friedrich, in spite of every effort that could be made to save her, foundered in about three hours with everything on board her.

The learned Judge of the Admiralty Court, being assisted by two of the elder brethren of the Trinity Corporation, and having heard counsel on both sides, pronounced that the collision in question was occasioned by the fault or default of the master and crew of the vessel City of Antwerp, and by the fault or default of the master and crew of the vessel Friedrich; that the damage arising therefrom ought to be borne equally by the owner of the vessel City of Antwerp and by the owners of the vessel Friedrich, and for a moiety only of the damage proceeded for; and he condemned the defendants and their bail in the moiety of the damage.

The Solicitor General (Sir Baliol Brett), Mr. Milward and Mr. Butt, for the appellant.

The Attorney General (Sir J. B. Karslake) and the Queen's Advocate (Sir Travers Twiss), for the respondents.

LORD WESTBURY delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—This case comes before their Lordships in a peculiar form, —a collision having occurred in the Irish Channel between a Bremen sailing-ship of large tonnage and one of the Liverpool American steamers, the result of which was the total loss of the ship and her cargo, and some damage to the steamer. Cross-suits were instituted in the Court of Admiralty by the owners of the steamer and by the owners of the sailing-vessel, which came on to be heard before the Judge of the Admiralty Court, assisted by two of the elder brethren of the Trinity House, who gave judgment that both vessels were to blame, and that the damage sustained ought to be equally divided between them. The result is, that the owners of the steamer will have to pay a very considerable sum of money, amounting probably to 20,000*l.*, as one moiety of the value of the Friedrich and her cargo. The sentence therefore is, in effect, a severe judgment against the owners of the steam-ship. The case made on behalf of the Friedrich in her petition is distinctly stated, and if it had been believed by the Court below, it would have been impossible to hold that the Friedrich was to blame; but, as it was rejected by the Court below, and the Friedrich has not appealed from the decision declaring that she was in the wrong, it is res judicata that the case made by her petition is not substantiated, and that her allegations are not entitled to credit.

We begin, therefore, with this admitted fact, and we have only to inquire whether the steamship is or is not to be held to have been in the wrong also. There is no statement in the petition of the Friedrich of any ground or reason why, supposing the Friedrich to have acted wrongly, the City of Antwerp ought to be held to have been in the wrong also; and, unfortunately, we are not told in the judgment upon what ground the Court, after having rejected the case of the Friedrich, held that the Antwerp ought to be condemned to pay this large sum of money.

It is undoubtedly true, in cases of collision between a sailing-ship and a steamer, that, although the sailing-ship may be found to have been guilty of misconduct, or not to have observed the sailing regulations, yet the steamer will be held culpable if it appears that it was in her power to have avoided the collision. It cannot be too much insisted on that it is the duty of a steamer, where there is risk of collision, whatever may be the conduct of the sailing-vessel, to do every thing in her power that can be done consistently with her own safety, in order to avoid collision. But, according to the settled rules for the administration of justice, the party against whom judgment is given is entitled to know from the complaint of his adversary what is the default or misconduct imputed to him, that he may have an opportunity of meeting the case by his defence, and also by his evidence. And it is difficult to suppose a greater case of hardship than that a defendant, after having met and disproved the case made by the plaintiff, should yet have judgment pronounced against him upon some ground of complaint which was neither pleaded by his adversary, nor stated in argument during the discussion of the cause, and not even disclosed in the judgment of the Court. But, inasmuch as this has been done, it is our duty to examine with great care the facts of the case, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the conclusion is just that the steamer, if she had done something which it was plainly in her power to do, might have prevented the collision which occurred.

Taking the undisputed facts of the case, it appears that the Friedrich, at about half-past two o'clock in the morning of the 28th of March last, was shaping her course to Liverpool up St. George's Channel, with her head to the north-east. There was a fresh breeze from the west-north-west, and the Friedrich therefore was running free. The weather was fine, and the night clear. About half-past two in the morning she first sighted the steamer, which had left Liverpool and was on her way to Queens-town, her course being south-west-half-west. The Friedrich was making about nine knots an hour, and the steamer about eleven knots. Taking, therefore, the combined speed of the two vessels, they would pass over a nautical mile in three minutes. Between the Friedrich and the steamer there was a schooner steering the same course as the Friedrich, and which, according to the evidence of the Friedrich, was, when she first sighted the steamer, about 600 yards distant lying on the same course, but a little to windward. When the Friedrich first saw the lights of the steamer, she made out the white light and the red light; and it is the case of both vessels that, when first seen by each other, each vessel was about a point or a point and a half on the port side of the other. The Friedrich, being a better sailer, forereached the schooner, passing her on the (schooner's) starboard side, and for that purpose ported about one point. She then luffed up, so as to regain her former course, and laid her head again to the north-east. Her witnesses say that from the time she ported to run to leeward of the schooner and the time of luffing about eight minutes elapsed, and the Friedrich is then described as afterwards sailing on her original course for about a minute longer before she again observed the lights of the steamer.

These circumstances are material as tending to shew two things: First, that there was a very imperfect look-out on the part of the Friedrich; secondly, that she had got very near the steamer indeed before, as she alleges, she observed the green light of the steamer. The evidence of the second mate of the Friedrich is, that he suddenly saw the green light of the steamer, and that the latter vessel was then only a quarter of a mile distant from the Friedrich, on the starboard-bow. The mate says that he then luffed, and put his vessel under a starboard-helm, until she rounded to about five points from her original course, and her head was brought north-by-west. But it is clear, upon the evidence, that the steamer never was on the starboard-bow of the Friedrich, and such must have been the opinion of the Court below, for otherwise it would have been impossible to hold that the Friedrich acted wrongly. With the exception of the fact of the position of the steamer, there is an agreement between the witnesses on both sides as to the distance between the steamer and the Friedrich at the time when the latter began to starboard her helm; for the captain of the steamer says that the Friedrich was distant about a quarter of a mile from the steamer at the time when the Friedrich began to round to under her starboard-helm. The material inquiry then arises whether, in this state of things, it being clear that the steamer was on the port side of the ship, anything was done by the steamer that ought not to have been done, or whether anything was omitted to be done that ought to have been done, and which, if omitted or done, would have prevented the collision. It appears that the steamer made out the Friedrich as soon as she passed the schooner, and that she ported her helm whilst the ship was at least a mile distant, and afterwards, as the Friedrich approached nearer, put her helm hard aport, and that the steamer had, before the collision, gone off under her port-helm five points to the westward; but that the Friedrich rounding to very quickly, under her starboard-helm, brought her head within six points of the head of the steamer. In this state of things, the captain of the Friedrich, for the first time, came on deck from below, and his evidence is material. He tells us that, on his coming on deck, he found the bow of his vessel only half a ship's length from the steamer, and that collision was inevitable; in fact, he states that the collision actually took place within four or five seconds after he came on deck. He describes the steamer as lying, at the time when he came on deck, across the bow of the Friedrich, about half a length on one side and half a length on the other side of the bow, so that the stem of the Friedrich was pointing at the midships of the steamer, and that the Friedrich was still luffing, but her sails had begun to shake in the wind. Now, this position of the two ships must have been produced either by the steamer running down from the starboard side of the Friedrich, close under her bows, or by the Friedrich rounding to, under a starboard-helm, until she brought her stem within a few yards of the steamer's midships on the port side. We are of opinion that the latter was clearly the case, and that the steamer being on the port side of the Friedrich, could not have anticipated or avoided, more than she did, this unexpected, sudden and erroneous proceeding on the part of the ship. We are pressed by the counsel of the Friedrich to hold that, when the steamer first observed the Friedrich coming round under a starboard-helm, it was the duty of the steamer, by stopping and reversing her engines, to have gone astern out of the way of the Friedrich, and that she did wrong in going ahead. But there is no witness who gives evidence to any such effect, and even if we were to conclude that the stopping, reversing and getting sternway on so large a steamer as the Antwerp, would not have occupied more than three minutes, yet it seems plain from the evidence, and particularly from the testimony of the captain of the Friedrich himself, that such an attempt would not have prevented the collision. In fact, the act done by the captain of the Friedrich, the instant he came on deck, confirms the conclusion, that the best course for the Antwerp to pursue was to go ahead as rapidly as she could; for the course taken by the captain was to put down his helm as hard as possible, in order to throw his sails aback, so that he might avoid striking the Antwerp a direct blow with the stem of his vessel, and might weaken the collision by striking her with his starboard-bow; and this he appears to have effected, for it is clear, upon the evidence, that the direction of the blow was from aft to forward on the side of the steamer. It was impossible for the captain of the steamer, when he first observed that the Friedrich was luffing, to know or suppose that she would do anything so unnecessary and foolish as to round to five points under a starboard-helm. She might have luffed one or even two points without danger, and if she had then steadied and kept on her course, she would have passed clear of the steamer; but the evil arose from the Friedrich rounding to five points under a starboard-helm, very quickly, which, as she was so very near the steamer, gave no time for any other course to be adopted than that which was adopted, and which the Liverpool pilot on board, though not in charge of the steamer, and who is a disinterested and competent witness, states was the only possible thing to be done.

When a steamer is condemned for having omitted to do something which she ought to have done, it seems just to require clear proof of three things,—first, that the thing omitted to be done was clearly within the power of the steamer to do; secondly, that if done, it would, in all probability, have prevented collision; and, thirdly, that it was an act which would have occurred to any officer of competent skill and experience in command of the steamer. These conditions do not appear to their Lordships to be fulfilled by those who impute fault to the steamer in this case, and, in fact, all the trustworthy evidence in the cause leads to a contrary conclusion. Our opinion, therefore, is, after the most careful examination of the case, that the collision was due to the want of a proper look-out on the part of the Friedrich; inasmuch as after passing the schooner, the young man, who was the second mate of the Friedrich, and was the officer of the watch on board her, appears not to have observed the lights of the steamer until he was not more than five hundred yards distant from her, and that then, in the anxiety and confusion of the moment, he gave the order to starboard instead of keeping on his course, which, if he had done, would have avoided collision, inasmuch as the steamer had, by keeping her helm hard aport, gone off six points to the westward of the course she was pursuing at the time when she first sighted the sailing-vessel. At that time the course of the Friedrich was north-east, and the course of the steamer being on the port-bow of the Friedrich, was south-west-half-west; but at the time of the collision the steamer's head was lying west-north-west.

Their Lordships do not find it either stated or proved upon the pleadings or the evidence, that anything was done which ought not to have been done by the steamer, or that anything was omitted to have been done by her which it was possible to do, and which, if done, would have prevented the collision. They cannot, therefore, concur with the conclusion of the Court below, and they will feel it their duty humbly to advise Her Majesty that the decree of the Court of Admiralty ought to be reversed.

THE DARING.

Wages—Bottomry on Ship, Freight and Cargo—Master Part-owner—Consignees of Cargo—Priority.

Bottomry bond on ship, freight and cargo. Proceeds of ship and freight insufficient:—Held, that though the master bound himself by the bond, and was also a part-owner of the vessel, the owners of part of the cargo cannot oppose his right to be paid his wages and disbursements in priority to the bondholder.

In a suit against a vessel for master's wages the Court cannot entertain a counter-claim on behalf of owners of part of the cargo pledged by bottomry by the master.

This was a suit brought by the master of the Daring to recover the sum of 866*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* for his wages and board-wages as master, and for disbursements made by him while in charge of the Daring.

On the 10th of May, 1866, the plaintiff took command of the Daring, then lying in the port of Valparaiso, partly laden with a cargo of guano, and bound on a voyage to Talcahuano to complete her cargo, and thence to a port in the United Kingdom for orders. The Daring arrived at Talcahuano on the 17th of June, 1866, from which place, after completing her cargo, she sailed for the United Kingdom on the 2nd of August following. The Daring met with bad weather and sprung a leak, in consequence of which the plaintiff was forced to put into Coronel Bay, where she came to anchor, where certain repairs were effected under survey, and some of the cargo was sold, and the Daring continued her voyage on the 25th of August, 1866. On the 26th and 27th of the said month of August the Daring met with a succession of gales, and again sprung a leak, which rendered it impossible for her to proceed further on her voyage, and she accordingly bore up for Talcahuano, and subsequently for Valparaiso, where she underwent a thorough repair, and the plaintiff, having neither funds nor credit at Valparaiso, was compelled to give a bottomry bond on the ship, her cargo and freight, for the sum of 7,807*l.* 1*s.* 2*d.* The vessel again left for the United Kingdom on the 24th of March, 1867, after having been obliged to put into the Island of Quira Quina, and afterwards to Port Stanley, in the Falkland Islands, and to jettison part of her cargo. On the 13th of July, 1867, the Daring arrived at Queens-town, and thence proceeded to London.

The plaintiff was also a part owner of the vessel, and had bound himself personally by the bond, and the proceeds of ship and freight were insufficient to discharge it.

The defendants, Messrs. Antony Gibbs & Co., were consignees of part, and representatives of the owners of another part of the cargo; and on their behalf it was contended that the money mentioned in the bond was borrowed on behalf of the plaintiff and the other owners of ship, and not on account of the owners of cargo, or on account of general average. That any sum which the owners of cargo may be compelled to pay in respect of the bond will be a debt due to them, the defendants, and recoverable by them by law from the plaintiff. And that the plaintiff, being part-owner as aforesaid, is not entitled to sue the ship or freight as master for his wages or disbursements, without submitting to an account between himself and his co-owners; and therefore that neither the wages nor the disbursements of the plaintiff should be pronounced for against the ship, or proceeds thereof, and freight, in prejudice to the interests of the aforesaid owners of cargo. The Court was prayed to stay all proceedings in this suit until the bottomry suit was determined.

Mr. E. C. Clarkson, for the plaintiff.—The defendants do not say that they have any defence against the ship and cargo, or that they have any claim against the master; but that at some future time they shall have certain rights against the plaintiff as part-owner. The action is not at all against the defendants, but by the plaintiff as master against the respondent. As regards the fund in court, the defendants are as any other creditor, and all they have is a mere right of action against joint owners for an indemnity. A co-owner is not bound by this bond; neither is the master as co-owner. The defendants' claim is only one for general average, and they have no right against the respondent.

Mr. V. Lushington, for the defendants.

—The owners of cargo have a right of action against the fund amongst other things for breach of contract.

Clarkson, in reply.

The following were referred to in the argument and judgment: The Mary Ann (1), The Edward Oliver (2), The Cargo ex Galam (3), The Union (4), The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 191, The Glentanner (5), Duncan v. Benson (6), Averall v. Way (7).

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—There are several propositions of law and practice which I must consider as binding upon this case: First, that the master has a maritime lien in rem—that is, on ship and freight—for his wages and disbursements. Secondly, that this lien is liable to be postponed to that of the bottomry bondholder in cases where the master has, by the terms of the bottomry bond, bound himself, as well as ship and freight, for the payment of the bond, but that this rule does not extend to cases in which the bondholder would not be prejudiced by the master being paid before him. On this principle, in The Edward Oliver (2), where the master gave a bond which bound himself, ship, freight and cargo, and where the ship and freight proved insufficient to satisfy the claims of the master and bondholder, the proceeds of the ship and freight were ordered to be first applied in payment of the master's claim, the bondholder having a security by reason of the liability of the cargo for the full payment of his bond, and the Court holding that the owner of the cargo could not invoke a rule made for the protection of the bondholder. Practically, in that case, the cargo contributed, though indirectly, to pay the wages of the master. The contention of the defendants is, not that they have any specific lien against this ship and freight, nor against the proceeds in court, which represent the ship and freight. They do not claim to institute an action against the plaintiff in his capacity of master, but they maintain that they expect to succeed in an action for general average brought in another Court against the plaintiff personally, and that, having so succeeded, they will make an application to this Court to apply, in some way, these proceeds in satisfaction of their claim, the amount of which, it is to be observed, is at present unascertained. But the action in this Court at present is not against the defendants personally, but against the res, and therefore what authority has this Court to refuse to entertain the action? It is prayed that proceedings may be stayed until the bottomry suit is determined; and if I could see any way of doing complete justice in the whole matter arising out of the several claims of the master, the bottomry bondholder and the owners of the ship and the cargo, I should be disposed to grant this prayer. But I am afraid I have no such power. Suppose that proceedings were stayed, and eventually the bottomry bond was ordered to be paid out of the cargo, such a result would give the owners no claim upon the funds now in court unless I have power to entertain a suit for general average. The Cargo ex Galam (3) is cited as proving that I may entertain such a suit; but in that case the question of general average was forced upon the Court by the peculiar circumstances, for the master had a common law lien on the cargo which was in his possession, and which the order of the Court had compelled him to bring into court. Moreover, in that case the Court had all the owners of the cargo before it; in this case, I have only some of the owners before me, and it has not been suggested that I have power to compel the absent owners to appear, or to enforce the proper contributions. The case of The Union (4) certainly establishes that, where the owner of the cargo has an interest in the administration of the fund in court, he is entitled to appear and contest the mariners' claim for wages; but the same case decided that the claim of the seamen was superior to the claim of the bondholder, and therefore to the claim of the owner of the cargo, who derives through the bond; and when the circumstances of that case are considered, it will appear that they were especially favourable to the equitable claims of the owner of the cargo. Having arrived at the conclusion that I have no authority in this case to entertain a suit for general average it remains to consider whether the 191st section of the Merchant Shipping Act gives any persona standi, in this suit of the master for wages, to the owner of the cargo. I am of opinion that this section relates to claims between the master and the owners of the ship, or persons claiming under them, and does not contemplate the adjustment of counter-claims against the master as part-owner of the ship; and this section is, therefore, I think, inapplicable to this case. Claim of the plaintiff pronounced for, with costs out of the proceeds in court.

Salvage—Alleged Misconduct of Salvors—Refusal to allow the Crew of the Salvaged Vessel to assist in the Salvage.

The Court will not lay down any general rule, but will be guided by the circumstances of each case in determining whether or no the master of the salvors' vessel is justified in refusing to allow the crew of the salvaged vessel to return to their own ship before the completion of the salvage.

On the 11th of November last, the screw steamship Galicia, of 749 tons and engines of 100-horse power, and with a crew of 27 men, being on a voyage from Middlesborough to Alexandria with railway iron, when about 270 miles from Malta, saw blue lights and rockets sent up, and on making for the place whence they came, found the Cleopatra, of 1,012 tons and 130-horse power, and with a crew of 30 men, and laden with grain, from Odessa. The Cleopatra was on her beam-ends in the trough of the sea; her port gunwale was awash, the sea breaking over her, and she was apparently in a sinking state, and her crew were about to leave her. The crew of the Cleopatra were got on board the Galicia, and the next morning the Galicia took the Cleopatra in tow, and about five o'clock on the 14th brought her up in Valetta harbour. The value of the Cleopatra and her cargo and freight was 24,240*l.*, and of the Galicia and her cargo and freight about the same.

In answer to the salvors' claim it was contended that the master of the Galicia refused to allow the master of the Cleopatra and her crew to return to her on the morning after they were taken on board the Galicia, though they were ready to go; that had they returned, the danger to the Cleopatra in case of bad weather coming on again would have been obviated, as they could have baled much of the water out of her, and could have properly worked her; whereas she also incurred some risk by the salvors not understanding her patent windlass. It was also alleged that she had been plundered of some of her stores and furniture.

Dr. Deane and E. C. Clarkson appeared for the salvors.

Butt and Prichard, for the owners of the Cleopatra.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE was of opinion that, even upon the statements in the Cleopatra's own protest, it was difficult to conceive a state of more desperate peril to property or life than that of the Cleopatra and her crew at the time when the salvors came to their assistance. That as to the refusal to allow a master and crew to return to their vessel after having left her, his Lordship would not lay down any general rule, but would be guided by the circumstances of each case, and in the present instance he considered the master of the Galicia justified; and as the salvage was in his opinion one of the greatest merit, his Lordship awarded 5,000*l.*

Appeal from Salvage Award.

Unless the amount awarded by magistrates is wholly inadequate, the Court of Admiralty, upon appeal, will not disturb the award, even though the Court is of opinion that the magistrates should have given a somewhat larger sum.

This was an appeal from a salvage award made by the Justices sitting in Petty Sessions at Lowestoft, on the 5th of October last. The appellants were the owner, master, and crew of the fishing lugger Children's Friend, of Lowestoft. Their case before the magistrate was, that the master of the Jeune Louise (which was a St. Malo fruit "ketch," of the value of only 212*l.*) had agreed to give the sum of 300*l.* for certain services. The master of the Jeune Louise stated that, being unable to speak English, he wrote upon a table 300 francs as the sum he would give for the services to be rendered. The magistrate who investigated the case thought the salvors' claim for 300*l.* absurd, and awarded them the sum of 20*l.*

V. Lushington for the appellants; and
E. C. Clarkson, for the respondents.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—It is not the duty of the Court to disturb a magistrate's award, unless it appears to be wholly inadequate to the circumstances of the case. Had this case come before me originally, it is very probable, considering what the services were, that I might have given a larger amount to the salvors. I regret to observe that, so far from abandoning the preposterous claim of 300*l.*, the appellants actually instituted the appeal suit in the sum of 500*l.*, and that bail was given for 300*l.* The difference between the sum I should have given and that awarded by the magistrates is not sufficiently great to induce me to disturb their award. Under the circumstances, therefore, I confirm the award, with costs.

Conflict of Law—Collision in Foreign Waters—Suit in England—Compulsory Pilotage—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854—English Law—Dutch Law.

In a cause of damage in the High Court of Admiralty in England for a collision in Dutch waters by a Dutch ship against an English ship, it appeared that the collision was caused solely by the negligence of the pilot of the English ship, whom, by the Dutch law, the owners were compelled to take on board; but that, by the Dutch law (conflicting with the English law as declared by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854), the owners of a ship doing damage to another ship are liable to make good the damage, notwithstanding that the ship doing the damage complained of was at the time navigated by and in charge of a licensed pilot.—Held, that an English Court of Justice will not enforce a foreign municipal law, or give a remedy in the shape of damages in respect of an act which, according to its own principles, imposes no liability on the person from whom the damage is claimed; and that the cause, being instituted in an English Court, ought to be decided by the principles of the law of England; and that the English ship was exempt from liability.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the High Court of Admiralty of England.

The cause was a cause of damage, in which the respondents sought to recover damages in respect of a collision which took place in Flushing Roads.

In the petition the respondents stated that, on the 8th of January, 1867, the barque Napoleon was riding at anchor in Flushing Roads, when the steam-ship Halley, under both steam and sail, came into collision with the barque, and that the collision was caused by the negligent and improper navigation of the Halley. In their answer, the appellants alleged that, before and at the time of the collision, the Halley was in charge of a pilot; whose employment was compulsory by law; that the appellants had no power of selecting him; and that the collision was occasioned by the negligence of the pilot; and was not in any way occasioned by the default of any person on board the Halley, except the said pilot. In reply the respondents pleaded the following article:—"That by the Belgian or Dutch laws in force at the time and place of the said collision, the owners of a ship which has done damage to another ship by collision are liable to pay and make good to the owners of such lastly-mentioned ship all losses occasioned to them by reason of such collision, notwithstanding that the ship which has done such damage was, at the time of the doing thereof, being navigated under the direction and in charge of a pilot, duly appointed or licensed according to the said laws, and notwithstanding that such damage was solely occasioned by the negligence, default, or want of skill of such pilot, without any contributory negligence on the part of the master or crew of such lastly-mentioned ship, and notwithstanding that it was, at the time and place of the collision, by the said laws, compulsory on such lastly-mentioned ship to be navigated under the direction and in charge of such pilot; and the defendants, the owners of the Halley, are, by virtue of the said laws, liable to pay and make good to the plaintiffs all losses occasioned to them by the said collision, even if the statements contained in the 11th article of the said answer be true." The appellants moved the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty that such article should be rejected on the ground that, even if true, the appellants would not be liable in the Court of Admiralty of England; but on the 26th day of November, 1867, the learned Judge ordered that the said article should not be struck out. From this judgment the present appeal was brought.

The case will be found reported in the Court below, 37 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Adm. 1.

The Solicitor General (Sir B. Brett) and Mr. Cohen, for the appellants.—The damage done by the collision to the respondents' vessel is damnum sine injuria, unless it was occasioned by the negligence of some person under the control of the appellants. The respondents can have no right of action in this country against the appellants unless the person whose negligence occasioned the collision was in the legal sense of the word a servant of the appellants. The appellants are not liable, inasmuch as the maxim qui facit per alium facit per se does not apply to the case under the circumstances admitted on this demurrer. There was no delict or tort of the appellants, there being no negligence on their part or on the part of any servant of theirs. Neither by the law of England, nor by the maritime law as administered in England, nor by the principles which have been termed the principles of natural justice, was the pilot who was taken on board under the circumstances the servant of the appellants. The High Court of Admiralty will not administer law upon principles different from the law of England and the maritime law as administered in England. The law by which liability is determined and pronounced is, in all actions of torts or delicts, the lex fori. The foreign law was invoked by the appellants for the purpose of proving the fact that the pilot was not the servant of the appellants. The fact of one party in a cause relying for certain purposes on the lex loci does not enable the Court to decide the ultimate liabilities and rights of the parties to that cause otherwise than by the application of the lex fori. The wrongdoer in this case was the pilot, and the question of the liability of the appellants ought not to be affected by any consideration of his not being able to make adequate compensation. Lord Seymour* (1), The Ida (2), The Hanna (3), The Bold Buccleuch (4), The Druid (5), The Bilbao (6), The Amalia (7), The Union (8), The Pacific (9), *Brown v. Mr. Manisty and Mr. Clarkson, for the respondents.—If a cause of action arises in a foreign country, the law of the country where the cause of action arises governs the case if the form of procedure where the action is brought enables the Court to carry out such law. Whoever sends his goods to a foreign country renders himself liable to all damage which may be caused by such goods. The law of England, in the case of ships, is an exception to this rule. It is a statutory exception to the principle of the common law, qui facit per alium facit per se. It is said that there is a local remedy, but the local remedy is altogether illusory. Prima facie the injured vessel is enabled to recover in any country, but by the laws of this and some other countries the merchant seaman is compelled to place his ship under the control of a licensed pilot, and because he has not the power of selecting the pilot, over whom he has no control, the owner is excepted from liability so long as his ship is under the control of the pilot. The master is released from liability if the vessel is under the control of the pilot; but such is not the law of Belgium, and this question must be governed by the law of Belgium, in so far as that law can be given effect to by the English Courts. The relation between the pilot and the owner is the relation of master and servant. If the Belgian law is to be referred to the whole law of Belgium applicable to the subject must be considered. But the question arises in a proceeding in our Court of Admiralty. It is a lien on the ship to be given effect to in the courts of this country. The sole question is whether the English law or the Belgian law is applicable to this case. Clearly the law of Belgium must govern the decision of the English Courts. They referred to Scott v. Lord Seymour (1), Mostyn v. Fabrigas (16), Cammell v. Sewell (17), Smith v. Condry (18), Huber v.

Mr. Cohen, in reply.

LORD JUSTICE SELWYN delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—This is an appeal from an order by the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty, dated the 26th of November, 1867, admitting the 3rd article of the reply filed by the plaintiffs in the Court below, who are the present respondents. The cause is a cause of damage promoted by the respondents as owners of a Norwegian barque called the Napoleon, against a British steam-ship called the Halley and her owners, for the recovery of damages occasioned to the respondents by reason of a collision which took place on the 8th of January, 1867, in Flushing Roads, between the Napoleon and the Halley. In their petition the respondents state that the collision was caused by the negligent and improper navigation of the Halley.

The appellants in their answer to that petition state that the Halley is a steam ship belonging to the port of Liverpool, and that “by the Belgian or Dutch laws which prevail in and over the river Scheldt, and to which the said river is subject, from the place where the said river pilot came on board the Halley, and thence up to and beyond the place of the aforesaid collision, it was compulsory on the said steamer to take on board and be navigated under the direction and in charge of a pilot duly appointed or licensed according to the said laws, and it was by virtue of such laws that the Halley was compelled to take on board and to be given in charge, and until the time of the said collision as aforesaid, to remain in charge of, and did take on board, and was given in charge, and up to the time of the said collision remained in charge of the said river pilot, who was duly appointed or licensed according to the said laws, and whom the defendants or their agents did not select and had no power of selecting”; and that the collision was not caused by the negligence, default, want of skill, or improper conduct of any person on board the Halley, except the said river pilot.

In reply to this answer, the respondents pleaded the following, being the 3rd article in their reply: “By the Belgian or Dutch laws in force at the time and place of the said collision, the owners of a ship which has done damage to another ship by collision are liable to pay and make good to the owners of such lastly-mentioned ship all losses occasioned to them by reason of such collision, notwithstanding that the ship which has done such damage was, at the time of the doing thereof, being navigated under the direction and in charge of a pilot duly appointed or licensed according to the said laws, and notwithstanding that such damage was solely occasioned by the negligence, default, or want of skill of such pilot, without any contributory negligence on the part of the master or crew of such lastly-mentioned ship, and notwithstanding that it was at the time and place of the collision, by the said laws, compulsory on such lastly-mentioned ship to be navigated under the direction and in charge of such pilot; and the defendants, the owners of the Halley, are, by virtue of the said laws, liable to pay and make good to the plaintiffs all losses occasioned to them by the said collision, even if the statements contained in the 11th article of the said answer be true.”

The appellants having moved the Court below to reject the 3rd article of the reply, on the ground that, even if the said article were true, the appellants would not be liable in the Court of Admiralty in England, the learned Judge of that Court has made the order now under appeal, by which he has refused the motion of the appellants, and has sustained the 3rd article of the reply.

The claim of the respondents is stated by the learned Judge to be founded upon a tort committed by the defendants in the territory of a foreign state, and we are not called upon to pronounce any opinion as to the rights which the respondents might have obtained either against the appellants as the owner of the Halley or as against that ship, if the respondents had instituted proceedings, and obtained a judgment in the foreign court. For this cause is a cause for damage instituted by petition in the High Court of Admiralty in England; and it is admitted by the counsel for the respondents that the question before us must be decided upon the same principles as would be applicable to an action for damages for the collision in question if commenced in the Court of Queen's Bench or Common Pleas. But it is contended on their part, and has been held by the learned Judge in the Court below, that the respondents are entitled to plead that the law of Belgium, within whose territorial jurisdiction the collision took place, renders the owners of the Halley, although compelled to take a pilot on board, liable to make reparation for the injury which she has done.

Their Lordships agree with the learned Judge in his statement of the common law of England with respect to the liability of the owner of a vessel for injuries occasioned by the unskilful navigation of his vessel while under the control of a pilot whom the owner was compelled to take on board, and in whose selection he had no voice; and that this law holds that the responsibility of the owner for the acts of his servant is founded upon the presumption that the owner chooses his servant and gives him orders which he is bound to obey, and that the acts of the servant, so far as the interests of third persons are concerned, must always be considered as the acts of the owner. This exemption of the owner from liability when the ship is under the control of what has been termed a compulsory pilot has also been declared by express statutory enactments (22). In cases like the present, when damages are claimed for tortious collisions, a chattel, such as a ship or carriage, may be, and frequently is, figuratively spoken of as the wrong-doer, but it is obvious that although redress may sometimes be obtained by means of the seizure and sale of the ship or carriage, the chattel itself is only the instrument by the improper use of which the injury is inflicted by the real wrong-doer. Assuming, as for the purposes of this appeal their Lordships are bound to assume, the truth of the facts stated in the pleadings, and applying the principles of the common law and statute law of England to those facts, it appears that the tort for which damages are sought to be recovered in this cause was a tort occasioned solely by the negligence or unskilfulness of a person who was in no sense the servant of the appellants, a person whom they were compelled to receive on board their ship, in whose selection they had no voice, whom they had no power to remove or displace, and who so far from being bound to receive or obey their orders was entitled to supersede, and had in fact at the time of the collision, superseded the authority of the master appointed by them; and their Lordships think that the maxim qui facit per alium facit per se cannot by the law of England be applied, as against the appellants, to an injury occasioned under such circumstances; and that the tort upon which this cause is founded is one which would not be recognized by the law of England as creating any liability in, or cause of action against, the appellants. It follows, therefore, that the liability of the appellants, and the right of the respondents to recover damages from them, as the owners of the Halley, if such liability or right exists in the present case, must be the creatures of the Belgian law; and the question is whether an English court of justice is bound to apply and enforce that law in a case where, according to its own principles, no wrong has been committed by the defendants, and no right of action against them exists.

The counsel for the respondents, when challenged to produce any instance in which such a course had been taken by any English court of justice, admitted his inability to do so, and the absence of any such precedent is the more important since the right of all persons, whether British subjects or aliens, to sue in the English courts for damages in respect of torts committed in foreign countries, has long since been established; and, as is observed in the note to Mestyn v. Fabrigas, there seems to be no reason why aliens should not sue in England for personal injuries done to them by other aliens abroad, when such injuries are actionable both by the law of England and also by that of the country where they are committed, and the impression which had prevailed to the contrary seems to be erroneous.

In the case of the Amalia, Lord Chelmsford, in delivering the opinion of the Judicial Committee, said: "Suppose the foreigner instead of proceeding in rem against the vessel chooses to bring an action for damages in a court of law against the owners of the vessel occasioning the injury, the argument arising out of the acquired lien would be at once swept away, and the rights and liabilities of the parties be determined by the law which the Court would be bound to administer."

As Mr. Justice Story has observed in his Conflict of Laws, p. 32, "It is difficult to conceive upon what ground a claim can be rested to give to any municipal laws an extra-territorial effect, when those laws are prejudicial to the rights of other nations or to those of their subjects." And even in the case of a foreign judgment, which is usually conclusive inter partes, it is observed in the same work, at s. 618A, that the Courts of England may disregard such judgment inter partes if it appears on the record to be manifestly contrary to public justice, or to be based on domestic legislation not recognized in England or other foreign countries, or is founded upon a misapprehension of what is the law of England—see Simpson v. Fogo (11). It is true that in many cases the Courts of England inquire into and act upon the law of foreign countries, as in the case of a contract entered into in a foreign country, where, by express reference or by necessary implication, the foreign law is incorporated with the contract, and proof and consideration of the foreign law therefore become necessary to the construction of the contract itself. And as in the case of a collision on an ordinary road in a foreign country, where the rule of the road in force at the place of collision may be a necessary ingredient in the determination of the question by whose fault or negligence the alleged tort was committed. But in these and similar cases the English Court admits the proof of the foreign law as part of the circumstances attending the execution of the contract, or as one of the facts upon which the existence of the tort or the right to damages may depend, and it then applies and enforces its own law so far as it is applicable to the case thus established; but it is, in their Lordships' opinion, alike contrary to principle and to authority to hold that an English court of justice will enforce a foreign municipal law, and will give a remedy in the shape of damages, in respect of an act which, according to its own principles, imposes no liability on the person from whom the damages are claimed.

The case of Smith v. Condry (18), in the Supreme Court of the United States, appears at first sight to have an important bearing upon this case; but, upon an investigation of the report, it does not appear that any question as to a conflict between the English law and the American law was discussed in that case, or that the precise point now under consideration was noticed in the judgment, nor is it specifically mentioned in any of the three exceptions which were taken to the decision of the inferior Court; and there is no report of the arguments. Their Lordships think, therefore, that that case cannot be treated as an authority sufficient to support the contention of the respondents; and, on the whole, they think it their duty humbly to advise Her Majesty to allow this appeal, and to order that the 3rd article of the plaintiff's reply be rejected, and that there should be no costs of this appeal.

Salvage—Appeal from Award by Justices—Further Evidence—Jurisdiction—“Sum in Dispute.”

When in a claim for salvage, heard before magistrates, the sum in dispute exceeds 50l., the High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal, even though the value of the property saved is under 1,000l.

The Court will not, except for special reasons, admit new evidence on the hearing of an appeal from an award of magistrates.

Senable—“The sum in dispute” (mentioned in the section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, with reference to appeals) does not mean the sum awarded by the magistrates.

This was an appeal from an award of salvage, made by two Justices of the Peace for the borough of Yarmouth. Before the services were completed, the master of the Generous signed an agreement as follows: "I agree to pay the sum of 5l. for getting my anchor on board the Generous, and for the ship to come into harbour I will pay the sum of 50l. to put her into safety." The magistrates awarded the sum of 53l. 11s., i.e. 55l., less the sum of 1l. 9s.

paid by the owners of the Generous to a tug to tow her into harbour. Against this award the owners of the Generous appealed.

Mr. Brett and Mr. E. C. Clarkson, for the appellants, contended that the Generous required no salvage services, that none were rendered, and that, therefore, the agreement was inequitable and void.

Mr. V. Lushington, for the respondents. — Before the magistrates, the appellants admitted their liability to pay the sum of 5*l.*, and only contested the claim as to 50*l.*, in respect of which the magistrates awarded 48*l.* 11*s.* The amount in dispute before the Justices did not exceed the sum of 50*l.*, and therefore the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal. The Mary Ann (1) and The Andrew Wilson (2). Again, the value of the property salvaged does not exceed 1,000*l.*, and therefore the provisions of the 464th section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, do not apply (3).

Sir R. PHILLIMORE.—It was contended that by the joint operation of section 460. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, and section 49. of the Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, the Court had no jurisdiction in this case, because the value of ship, freight and cargo was under 1,000*l.* I overruled this objection at the hearing, and upon reflection adhere to my decision. According to its true construction, section 49. of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63. when read with

(1) 1 Bro. & Lush. 334.

(2) 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccl. & Adm. 104.

(3) The following are the sections referred to: Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 460. "Whenever any dispute arises.....between the owners.....and the salvors as to the amount of salvage, and the parties to the dispute cannot agree as to the settlement thereof by arbitration or otherwise, then, if the sum claimed does not exceed 200*l.*, such dispute shall be referred to the arbitration of any two Justices of the Peace resident as follows."

Section 464. "If any person is aggrieved by the award made by such Justices.....he may appeal to the High Court of Admiralty of England.....; but no such appeal shall be allowed unless the sum in dispute exceeds 50*l.*"

Merchant Shipping Act Amendment Act, 1862, s. 49. "Such provisions shall extend to all cases in which the value of the property saved does not exceed 1,000*l.*, as well as to the cases provided for by the principal act.....All the provisions of the principal act relating to summary proceedings in salvage cases, and to the prevention of unnecessary appeals in such cases, shall, except so far as the same are altered by this act, extend and apply to all such proceedings, whether under the principal act or this act, or both of such acts."

section 464. of the former statute, appears to me to extend and apply existing regulations, also to cases in which the value of ship and freight is under 1,000*l.*, and not to add a second condition, viz., that the value of the ship and property salvaged shall also be 1,000*l.* and upwards.

The jurisdiction of the Court was also objected to, on the ground, that according to the true construction of sections 460. and 464. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, "the sum in dispute" did not exceed 50*l.*; and the cases of The Andrew Wilson (2) and The Mary Anne (1) were referred to. In the case of The Andrew Wilson (2) Dr. Lushington said, there undoubtedly was some obscurity in the words "sum in dispute," but he was of opinion that they did not mean the sum awarded by the Justices or the section would have been differently worded. In The Mary Anne (1) Dr. Lushington said, "In the case of The Andrew Wilson (2) I held that the 'sum in dispute' was not the sum awarded by the Justices, but the sum claimed by the salvors. Now, I lay out of my consideration all loose expressions which may have occurred in conversation between the master of the Mary Anne and the salvors; but it is clear that the salvors made a formal demand in writing of 40*l.* The plaintiffs by making this demand may not absolutely have debarred themselves from suing for the larger sum; but their demand before the Justices was not for a sum exceeding 50*l.*, but for a sum not exceeding 200*l.* I think this must be taken to have reference to the previous claim of 40*l.*, and therefore to constitute the 'sum in dispute.' The Court accordingly cannot entertain the appeal." These judgments really do not, as was suggested, conflict with each other. Dr. Lushington was of opinion, that upon the facts the sum claimed before the magistrates was above 50*l.* in one case, and under 50*l.* in the other. In this case the sum claimed was more than 50*l.* The Court therefore is not debarred from exercising its jurisdiction on account of the amount of the sum claimed.

A question was also raised as to the duty of this Court, sitting as an appellate court, with respect to the reception of evidence tendered for the first time before it. In the case of The Thomas Wood (4) Dr. Lushington said, "Although in cases of appeal the decision of the appellate courts is generally guided by the evidence produced before the original tribunal, the practice has been different in this Court; and in the first case of this kind, which came before Lord Stowell, that learned Judge admitted an additional affidavit to be brought in, notwithstanding the objections that were raised against its reception. The practice of the Court, therefore, is not opposed to the admission of fresh evidence." The practice of the Court, therefore, at the time when this judgment was delivered, permitted the introduction of new evidence. But in subsequent instances it appears to have been the opinion of the Court that this permission ought to be placed under considerable restrictions. There is no difference in principle, I may observe, between appeals to this Court from the decisions of magistrates and appeals from the report of the Registrar and merchants. My learned predecessor during the course of his long administration of justice in this Court became quite sensible of the evil which ensued from allowing indiscriminately the admission of new evidence. In The Glenmanna (5), which was an appeal from the Registrar's report, Dr. Lushington said, with reference to admitting new evidence, "None of this evidence was produced before the Registrar and merchants, and, therefore, in truth, I am called on to decide a new case, and not simply whether the Registrar and merchants did right upon the case before them. I very much question whether this is a regular or competent course of proceeding. It deprives the Court of the advantage of the opinion of the Registrar and merchants upon the evidence. Some additional affidavits may be admissible; but it is an irregularity which for the future I shall not permit, to withhold evidence at the reference and make a new case before the Court." In The Flying Fish (6), upon objection to the admission of such new evidence, the Court observed, "Their Lordships do not think these rules have at all the effect of restraining the power of the Judge or of fettering his discretion as to the admissibility of fresh witnesses upon these occasions, a discretion which it is unnecessary to say must always be exercised with great caution and a careful regard to the peculiar circumstances of each case." The practice of the Privy Council is, with very rare exceptions, to refuse the introduction of new evidence, unless the facts which it is to support are shewn upon affidavit to be noviter preventa to the party applying for their introduction. In the case before me I did admit, though reluctantly, some new evidence; but in all future cases the Court will require good reasons to be shewn why such evidence should be introduced in this Court, and will always exercise a discretion in this matter, entertaining, as it does, a strong opinion that such discretion should be exercised with great reserve and caution.

*Damage by Collision — Compulsory Pilotage—Passengers—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, s. 379.

The owners of a wrong-doing vessel pleaded compulsory pilotage. It appeared that the master's wife and father-in-law were on board, and the master said he treated them as passengers, but no fare was demanded of them till after the collision:—Held, that the vessel was not "carrying passengers," so as to render it compulsory upon her owners to employ a pilot.

The York Town, an American ship, on the 8th of December, 1867, left the London Docks on her voyage to New York in tow of two tugs, and when rounding Blackwall Point, her starboard quarter was run into by the screw steamship Lion, and sustained considerable damage.

The defendants admitted the damage, and pleaded that the Lion was a passenger ship, bound from London to Hull, having two passengers on board, and being at the time of the collision in charge of a duly licensed pilot; that the employment of such pilot was compulsory by law upon the owners of the Lion; that the orders of the pilot were promptly and implicitly obeyed ; that the collision, if it was caused by the Lion or any one on board of her, was solely caused by the pilot, and that neither the Lion nor her owners were liable.

The pilot of the Lion, in his evidence, said there were no passengers ; but it appeared that the master's wife and father-in-law were on board, and the master said he treated them as passengers, but that they did not pay anything for their board. No receipt was produced of the payment of fare by them, and nothing was said about such payment until the Lion arrived at Hull, when the fare was paid, as alleged by one of the witnesses ; and the master said he did not know that the carrying of passengers imposed upon him the necessity for compulsory pilotage.

The Solicitor General and Mr. C. P. Butt appeared for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Milward and Mr. E. C. Clarkson, for the defendants.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—The Lion was under the charge of a duly licensed pilot, and the question therefore which remains is, whether he was taken compulsorily, which depends upon the further question, whether the two persons, the wife and father-in-law of the master, were or were not passengers. There is no definition of the term "passenger" in the Merchant Shipping Acts. For the limited and particular purpose of surveys and certificates of passenger steamships, it has been enacted, that the word shall include any person other than the master and crew, the owner, his family and servants. The legitimate inference from this enactment would seem to be, that persons other than the master and crew, the owner, his family and servants, would not have been necessarily considered by the law as passengers, and that it required this enactment to give them that character, which it only impressed upon them for the particular purpose which it mentioned. If I look to the Passenger Acts, the latest of which is 18 & 19 Vict. c. 119, the payment of fare would appear to be a necessary incident for the constitution of a passenger in the legal sense of that term, both as to his rights and duties. The Passenger Acts still leave a large proportion of passenger traffic under the common law. But I think the common law connects the payment of fare with the status of a passenger. It was said in argument that the protection of life was the object of the statute in rendering the pilot necessary, but this seems to me too broad a proposition. The protection of the life of the crew is as important as the protection of the life of passengers ; and I think that the obligation to take the pilot was imposed by the legislature on the ground that the owner, if he made profit out of carrying a person not being one of the crew, should, in return, give him the protection which the skill and knowledge of the pilot could afford. It, I believe, not unfrequently happens that persons have secreted themselves on board a vessel, and have not been discovered till she was out at sea. In such cases it would be impossible to hold that there was an obligation on the vessel to take a pilot when she came into a river, roadstead or port in which it would be incumbent upon her to take a pilot if she had passengers on board. Upon the whole, I think that the payment of a fare is necessary to constitute the class of passengers whose presence on board the ship imposes the obligation of taking a pilot on board. Did then the payment of the fare of these two persons, whensoever made, clothe them with the character of passengers ? This question must be answered with regard to the rights of third parties in this case. When the Lion unlawfully injured the York Town by running into her, she incurred an obligatio ex delicto—in other words, the York Town had from that moment a lien upon her for reparation of the damage which she had tortiously caused. The liability which existed at that time could not, in my opinion, be got rid of by a subsequent act on the part of the wrongdoer, having for its object to convert these two persons into passengers for the purpose of placing himself under the exemption from liability, which the compulsory presence of a pilot on board his vessel at the time of the collision would have afforded. I pronounce for the damage, and that the Lion is not exempt from payment by reason of having a compulsory pilot on board at the time of the collision.

Bottomry—Notice to Owners of Cargo—Expenses already Incurred—Advance of Freight—Loan on Freight.

It is as much the duty of a master to give, or attempt to give, notice to the owners of cargo as to the owners of ship before executing a bottomry bond.

Though the debts which a master, in need of repairs in a foreign port, has incurred may be personal, he may borrow money upon bottomry of ship, freight and cargo to pay them from any one not his creditor.

*In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is presumed that a foreign lender makes advances in contemplation of bottomry; and this presumption is increased where the lex loci empowers the lender to arrest the ship in satisfaction.*

Difference between a loan secured on freight and advances of freight.

This was a cause of bottomry upon ship, freight and cargo. The amount of money borrowed under the bond was 3,228*l.* 7*s.* 2*d.*, and, no opposition having been offered to the bond by the owner of the ship, the ship had been sold and produced 512*l.* 11*s.* 9*d.* The freight amounted to the sum of 1,356*l.* 14*s.* 6*d.*, or, as it was stated by the defendants, 1,324*l.* 16*s.* The defendants in this suit, the owners of the cargo, paid into court the sum of 628*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.*, and still retained in their hands the sum of 727*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, which they claimed to deduct, on the following grounds: namely, the sum of 632*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, in respect of an alleged advance of freight made to the master of the Karnak, at Galveston, and the sum of 61*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, for the interest and insurance on the said alleged advance; and the sum of 33*l.* 18*s.* 4*d.*, as being due to the defendants for commission on the said charter-party.

The defendants also denied altogether the validity of the bond so far as it affected the cargo.

The facts of the case were as follow: The brigantine Karnak, of 267 tons, sailed from Galveston, in Texas, for Liverpool, on the 24th of December, 1866, laden with 270 bales of cotton, under a charter-party from Droege & Co., of Galveston, whereby the vessel was consigned to the order of Messrs. Droege & Co., of Manchester, a firm bearing the same name; and before sailing, the master received the sums of money from Messrs. Droege & Co. claimed as advances of freight.

After leaving Galveston he was compelled by bad weather, during which he lost nearly all his sails, spars and rigging, to put into Bermuda on the 17th of January, 1867. Acting on the advice of Hyland & Co., agents for the American Lloyd's, he had the ship and cargo surveyed, after which 580 bales of cotton were landed and warehoused, and the ship was put upon a slip and caulked all over. The master wrote to the managing owner of the ship, and there was a conflict of evidence as to whether or not he had also communicated with the agent for the owner of the cargo; and the Court came to the conclusion that the captain had attempted to give him notice by letter, and that, at all events, the agent was aware of the facts that the Karnak had met with a disaster and had put into Bermuda in distress, and that the cargo had been unshipped; that the expenses would be very great, and that there was a chance of the vessel being condemned. From the captain's evidence it further appeared that he gave orders for the repairs several days after the survey. The repairs were nearly completed in the beginning of April, and then, but not till then, Messrs. Hyland & Co. issued circulars bearing the master's signature, inviting tenders for a loan on bottomry on ship, freight and cargo. The charges were not more than the usual charges there; and after the master had communicated with the managing owner in New York, he had expected to receive money from him, and it was not till after he had written several letters and received no answer that he felt under the necessity of borrowing money on bottomry. It was then too late to get money from England, even if he had known from whom to get it; and he could not have raised the money on ship and freight only, and the vessel would have been arrested and sold for payment of the charges incurred.

Mellish and Clarkson, for plaintiffs.—The objections to the validity of the bond are:

first, that the master did not communicate with the owner of the cargo ; and secondly, that the advances on bottomry were made after all the expenses and charges had been incurred. As to the first, the master unquestionably communicated with the owners of the ship, and expected that they would supply him with funds ; and it was not until the ship was very nearly ready for sea that he, for the first time, found that he must have recourse to bottomry ; and, taking into consideration the amount of the freight and the estimated value of the ship, he had no reason to expect that more than a small portion, if any, of the money raised would fall upon the cargo. True, the master must communicate with the owners of the cargo ; but in every case the particular circumstances are to be considered—The Hamburg (1). In this case the master exercised a wise discretion in not waiting for orders from the owners of the cargo, which consisted of cotton, the market for which was falling, and a fall of one halfpenny a pound would have represented altogether a loss of between 700*l.* and 800*l.* As to the second objection, it is perfectly lawful for a master, having obtained advances from A. for the necessary purposes of the ship, to borrow money from B. for the purpose of paying A.—The Hebe (2). In this case, moreover, it is proved that, by the local law, the persons who had done the repairs and supplied the necessaries had a lien on the ship in respect of their claims, which lien they might have enforced by seizure and sale of the ship. This of itself would have been sufficient ground for resorting to bottomry—The Prince George (3). As to the sum of 727*l.*, the charter-party does not provide for an advance of freight, and the master had no authority to receive any part of it—The Salacia (4). Moreover, the nature of the transaction appears on the face of the receipts, which shew clearly that the advance was intended to be by way of a loan to the master on the security of the freight.

The Solicitor General (Sir W. B. Brett) and Cohen, for the defendants.—It is clear that all the repairs had been executed and all the expenses incurred before any attempt was made to raise money by bottomry,—the bond was executed only one day before the ship sailed ; it is not pretended that the repairs were executed or the expenses incurred with a view to bottomry ; the debts were incurred, not with any one tradesman, but with several. This case is different from those in which an agent advances money in order to procure necessaries or repairs ; it may well be that the repairs were executed by the tradesmen with the belief that they could arrest the ship ; but, in fact, the master alone had pledged his credit for the repairs ; and the tradesmen certainly did not expect bottomry bonds to be executed to them, and did not execute the repairs in contemplation of bottomry. The difficult question as to whether money was advanced in contemplation of bottomry does not arise in the present case. The question here is, whether a person who advances money on bottomry of cargo to enable a master to pay off a debt already incurred for repairs completely executed, can enforce his bottomry bond in a case where the tradesman who executed the repairs might have arrested the ship. Now, in such a case, a bottomry bond on ship could not be enforced. A bottomry bond cannot be enforced for anything which is not a necessary—The North Star (5), The Edmond (6), The Prince George (3), The Hersey (7), The Ariadne (8), The Osmanli (9). As to what is necessary, Beldon v. Campbell (10), The Gosfabrick (11), Maclachlan, 137, 3 Kent's Com. 222, Parson's Maritime Law, 423, The Aurora (12). It becomes necessary for the other side to assert that money supplied for liberating a ship from arrest is a good item, or if a ship is threatened with being taken in execution, that in such cases a bottomry bond given is good ; but this is directly negatived by The North Star (5), The Hersey (7) and The Laurel (13). Even if in such case a bottomry bond on ship were good, a bottomry bond on cargo would be bad; the mere fact of the arrest of the ship is not enough—The Osmanli (9); it must be arrested for a debt due to a person who gave credit to the ship; why, then, should a bottomry bond on cargo be good to a person who did not give credit to the cargo and could not have arrested the cargo? The case of The Hebe (2) cannot be considered as an authority; it was decided without reference to the lex loci, by which the case should have been governed. The Vibilia (14) does not apply either—The Ariadne (8), The Hamburgh (1). Again, no communication was made with shipper or consignee of cargo. If this bond be held good, the owner of the cargo cannot receive this money from his indemnity; it is not general average, it is not particular average—Rosetto v. Gurney (15).

Clarkson, in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

On the 9th of June judgment was given as follows:

SIR R. PHILLIMORE. — There are two questions in this case: first, whether the cargo is liable to this bond; secondly, whether the owners of the cargo are justified in retaining the sum of 727l. 19s. 2d. on the ground that they have advanced that sum as part payment of the freight. As to the first question, the legal argument urged by the defendants against the validity of this bond took a very wide range; and, during the course of it, the general and elementary principles upon which these instruments of hypothecation are founded, and many cases in which it was suggested that the decisions were not in perfect harmony, were discussed. The power of the master in bottomry arises out of his relation as agent both to the owner of the ship and of the cargo. A material distinction, indeed, exists between his authority as agent for the one and as agent for the other; but in both cases his power to hypothecate, like his power to sell, arises out of the necessities of the case. Among them, the following are pre-eminent. The master must endeavour to raise funds on the personal credit of the owners, and if the owner be on the spot, according to the general law, the master has no authority to bottomry (Boulay Paty, 11, 271); and if the owner be absent, it is the duty of the master to endeavour to communicate with him before bottomry be resorted to. The money must be raised to defray the expense of necessary supplies or repairs of the ship, or to enable the ship to leave the port in which he gives the bond, and to carry the cargo to its destination. With reference to the latter, much discussion has arisen whether the liability of the ship to detention according to the lex loci justifies the master in giving a bottomry bond; and the authorities upon this point are supposed to be conflicting. And again, there arises a question whether this liability to detention must not be on account of necessities furnished to the ship in order to enable her to prosecute her homeward voyage; or whether this liability may arise from any other cause, such as for old debts incurred antecedently to the voyage, or for damage done to the outward cargo in unloading at the port, or in some other manner; and again, whether the liability of the master to personal detention justifies the creation of the bond. Another important principle established by the judgments is sometimes expressed in this language, that the money must have been advanced in contemplation of a bottomry security, or, in other words, upon the credit of the ship—The Alexander (16); this proposition appears to me to have been somewhat loosely stated, for, apart from verbal or written statement or agreement, it would seem difficult to prove whether the lender or the borrower did or did not mentally contemplate hypothecation at the time when the expenses were incurred. It must, however, be taken to be ruled law that a creditor who has furnished repairs upon a personal credit cannot afterwards convert the personal debt into a bottomry transaction. And, on the other hand, that a bond executed after advances have been made, if in pursuance of an agreement for bottomry, is valid; and that an agent who has advanced money upon personal credit may take a bottomry bond for advances subsequently supplied. There is more difficulty as to the law in the case of a bottomry bond for money already supplied without any previous agreement at all; but I am of opinion that, in the absence of all evidence, the presumption must be that the foreign lender made the advances in contemplation of a bottomry security; and that this presumption is increased where the lex loci empowers the lender to arrest the ship in satisfaction of his demand. I will now endeavour to apply some of these principles of law to the circumstances of the case before me, and I will take the arguments advanced by the counsel, and the various cases adverted to, in what appears to me to be their natural order. I will address myself first to those which relate to the validity of the bond so far as it affects the ship and freight, and next as to the validity of the bond in its relation to the cargo. First, is this bond bad, because there was no necessity to raise money on bottomry, on the ground that it could have been obtained on the personal credit of the owner? I am of opinion that, according to the evidence before me, he could not have raised the necessary funds except on bottomry bond. It has not, I think, been contended that the repairs and supplies were not in themselves necessaries. Secondly, is the bond bad, because given for the purpose of raising money to pay for repairs already executed; or, as the same proposition was stated in another form, does the fact that these repairs were already executed, take them out of the category of necessaries for which it is competent to the master to bottomry his ship? I am of opinion that the bond is not bad upon this ground. The tradesmen who effected the repairs, or furnished the supplies, were not the takers of the bond. Nor is there any question in this case whether a transaction done on personal credit can be converted into bottomry. If there were, I should hold, on the authority of The Augusta (17), The Vibilia (14) and The North Star (5), that the bond was bad. The question here is whether the master, having failed to obtain funds from the owner, to pay for the repairs which the necessities of the ship compelled him to order, was not warranted in raising money for this purpose from a person other than that or those who had supplied such repairs. Upon principle, it would appear to me that it must be competent for him to do so; an incalculable amount of inconvenience and injury to commerce would flow from an opposite doctrine. It was the master's duty to place his vessel upon the slips, and to cause her repairs to be begun at the earliest possible moment. How could he, or any other master in his position, foretell the exact amount of expense which such repairs would entail? Or if by survey he could have ascertained a probable estimate of the gross expense, it could only have been a probable estimate, and many items of expense must always be incurred which such an estimate cannot cover. The case of Beldon v. Campbell (10) was much relied upon by the defendants in this case; but I am unable to perceive the application of the point decided in it to the facts of this case, inasmuch as it only decided that where the ship had arrived at her port of destination, and the owner was residing within a distance where he might be easily communicated with, the master ought to have communicated with him before he borrowed money to pay workmen employed on the ship. The facts of the case before me are materially, indeed wholly, different. But the judgment does contain a perspicuous statement, from which it appears that the master has perfect authority to bind his principal, the owner, as to all repairs necessary for the purpose of bringing the ship to its port of destination; and he has also power, as incidental to his appointment, to borrow money, but only in cases where ready money is necessary; that is to say, where certain payments must be made in the course of the voyage, and for which ready money is required. An instance of this is the payment of port dues, which are required to be paid in cash; or lights, or any dues which require immediate cash payments. So also in the case referred to in the course of the argument, where a ship being at the termination of one voyage and about to proceed on another, money borrowed to pay the wages of seamen who would not go on the second voyage without being paid, was considered necessary—Robinson v. Lyall (18). But these instances do not apply where the owner of the vessel is living so near the spot as to be conveniently communicated with. In that case, before the master has any right to make the owner a debtor to a third person, he must consult him and see whether he is willing to be made a debtor, or whether he will refuse to pay the money—Beldon v. Campbell (10). The case of The Hebe (2), it is admitted, is a direct authority in favour of the proposition that a bottomry bond for the purpose of obtaining money for the payment of debts for necessities previously incurred on personal credit may be legally given to a person who has not supplied such necessities. It has been attempted, but I think unsuccessfully, to impugn the authority of that case; I have examined it minutely; it has been very carefully reported both in the Notes of Cases, vol. 4, p. 368 (A.D. 1846), and by Dr. Deane, whose accuracy is well known to us all, in the 10th vol. of the Jurist, p. 227; and it is not unimportant to observe that the following cases were cited in argument—The Augusta (17), The Zodiac (19), The Hersey (7), The Vibilia (14) and The Lochiel (20). The case appears to have been well argued and deliberately decided in the year 1846; and it derives confirmation from the decision of the same learned Judge, who, in the case of The North Star (5), in 1860, said, "Can personal debts incurred be the foundation of a bottomry bond? The general rule is that they cannot, except preceded by the promise of a bond; but we must bear in mind the distinctions applicable to such cases. A master entering a foreign port in need of necessities, from distress or otherwise, may incur debts for repairs or necessities. Those debts may be purely personal, but he may borrow money on bottomry, from any one not his creditor, to pay such debts. On the other hand, The Augusta (17) has settled that a personal debt cannot be converted into a bottomry transaction." I should observe that I have considered the case of The Hersey, reported in 3 Moore, 82, and referred to in The Ariadne (8); and looking to the facts of The Hersey (7), I am of opinion that it in no way interferes with the decision in The Hebe (2). There is another fact having an important bearing upon the law of this case. It is in evidence that by the law of Bermuda those who supplied these necessities had a lien upon this ship, and could have arrested her. In 1838 Dr. Lushington decided the case of The Vibilia (14), and in the course of his judgment he said, "With regard to the further objection that has been urged in the argument, that it was not until after the responsibility had been incurred by Mr. Baldwin, that a bottomry bond was agreed upon, I am of opinion that such objection has been disposed of by the judgment of Lord Stowell in the case of The Alexander (16). What are the expressions used by Lord Stowell in that case? He says, 'The question is, whether, so induced, they (the consignees) did not make these advances on the credit of the ship? Against the proprietors of the cargo they had no direct demand for repairs done to the ship; and as they had no direct knowledge of the owners of the ship, it must have been that they looked to the ship itself as their security. Some of the advances were made before the master was appointed; and these, it is said, could have had no reference to a bond of hypothecation. But what could they look to but the ship? for of the owners of the ship they had no knowledge. The bond was not, perhaps, required at first; because in Pernambuco, as in other foreign states, there is no necessity for an instrument of this kind; for by the general maritime law the vessel itself is ipso facto liable for repairs. There was no necessity, therefore, for having recourse to a bond till the ship was coming to this country, where from peculiar motives of policy a special hypothecation is required.' It is evident, therefore, that in the opinion of Lord Stowell, it is competent for the foreign merchant, without any express agreement for a bottomry bond, to make advances on the security of the ship, that is, upon the faith of a lien given by the law of his own country; and it is not necessary for him to have a bond of bottomry, or an agreement for such a bond, until the ship is about to sail. This is the real substance of the case in The Alexander (16), and constitutes the important distinction between the cases of The Alexander (16) and The Augusta (17), which applies only to the conversion of an advance on personal security into a bottomry transaction"—The Vibilia (14). In the case of The Prince George (3) it is said, "If it had been proved that the law of New York gave the lien upon the ship, as suggested, we should have thought, upon the general principle, that where the master cannot in any other way raise money which is indispensably necessary to enable the ship to continue her voyage, he may hypothecate the ship. This power would extend to a case where the ship might be arrested and sold, for a demand for which the owner would be liable. It seems immaterial whether the necessity for funds arises from such a demand, or to pay for repairs, stores or port duties." It has been said that this passage contains a mere dictum, that it has not been acted upon, and has, indeed, been discountenanced by the subsequent judgment of Dr. Lushington in The Osmanli (9). It is true that in his judgment in this case the learned Judge seems at that time to have supposed that the passage in The Prince George (3) was uttered per incuriam, and without sufficient attention to Lord Stowell's judgment in The Augusta (17). That case was, however, cited by counsel in the case of The Prince George (3), and I must consider the decision to be binding upon this Court.

The Hebe (2) was decided in 1846, four years after The Prince George (3), in 1842. Dr. Lushington glanced at this liability to detention in a way which indicates that he then inclined to the opinion that such liability would warrant a bottomry bond. The same inclination of opinion is to be discovered in The North Star (5) and in The Laurel (13). This inclination seems to have become much stronger and more decided, and more at variance with The Osmanli (9), for in that case the learned Judge says, "Now the Court, from the case of The Augusta (17) to the cases up to the present day, has good reason to conclude that in almost all foreign countries, if not in all, merchants who supply money to defray the necessary expenses of the ship, and tradesmen who do the necessary repairs or furnish the necessary articles, have a right of arresting the ship to satisfy the demand. If such right of arrest per se renders valid any bottomry bond, though there was no agreement or understanding that such bond should be required, it follows that, under such circumstances, in all cases a bond and a valid bond may be executed, though the master never made any such agreement, never contemplated the granting a bottomry bond, and, if he had suspected a bond would have been required, might have hesitated before he received such assistance, might have sought for it in other quarters, or in some cases have waited for instructions from owners or consignees." These are very serious considerations, which would make the Court pause before it gave its assent to such doctrine; still, it may be that such state of the lex loci, though not perhaps sufficient to bring about all the consequences attributed to it, may be an important ingredient assisting to support the validity of the bond; and the learned Judge continues: "I think that the effect of these observations is, that such lex loci is important as regards the intention to advance on the credit of the ship, but not conclusive that the lex loci alone would render a bond otherwise void valid—The Laurel (13); for the purposes of this case it would, I think, be sufficient to accept this modified opinion of Dr. Lushington, but I must repeat, that I consider the opinion expressed in The Prince George (3) as binding upon this Court." I have hitherto considered the validity of this hypothecation in relation to the ship and freight; the defendants, the owners of the cargo, having, as it was quite competent to them to do, denied even in this relation the validity of the bond. But they have more especially contested the validity of it with respect to the cargo,—maintaining that the bond may be valid as it affects the ship and freight, and yet invalid as it affects the cargo. In the recent case of The Elise (21), I stated at length my view of the law which has been laid down with respect to the duty of the master to communicate with the owner of the cargo before he hypothecates it. It must be observed, however, that the law does not say that the necessity of communicating with the owner of the cargo is different in kind from the necessity of communicating with the owner of the ship; but that there must be a separate communication, if in the circumstances it be feasible, with both. Referring to my judgment in The Elise (21), it is only necessary to state here that it is, generally speaking, the duty of the master to communicate, or attempt to communicate, with the owner of the cargo. The rule has been now so well determined that the difficulty consists in the application of the rule to the circumstances of the particular case, and not in the ascertainment of the rule which is to be so applied. In the present case the facts appear to me to establish the following propositions: first, that the master acted with perfect good faith throughout the whole of this transaction; secondly, that he did make an attempt to communicate with the owners of the cargo, which brings him within the principle of the cases decided by the Privy Council, to which I have adverted in my judgment in the case of The Elise (21); thirdly, that having failed in this attempt, he acted on behalf of the cargo as a prudent man, having in view the benefit of the owner, ought to have acted.

As to the other question for the consideration of the Court. The defendants have, as I have already observed, retained the sum of 727*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* in their hands, due from the freight, for the following reasons set out in their answer:

9. That after the making of the charter-party in the seventh article of the petition mentioned, and whilst the Karnak was lying at Galveston, and before she departed on her chartered voyage, the defendants from time to time advanced to the said master, on account of the necessary disbursements, certain moneys amounting in the whole to 632*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, and at the respective times of the making of the said advances, as aforesaid, it was agreed between the said charterers and the said master, as follows (that is to say), that the said advances should be made and taken pro tanto in part payment of freight, and that the owners of the said vessel should in no case whatsoever be liable to refund to the said charterers the said advances, and further that the costs of the insurances to be effected by the said charterers, as well as interest at the rate of 10*l.* per centum per annum on the said advances, should be also deducted from and taken pro tanto in part payment of freight.

10. That after the greater part of the said advances (to wit), advances amounting to the sum of 596*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.*, had been made to him, the said master, indorsed on the said charter-party a receipt, of which the following is a copy:

"Received from Messrs. Droege & Co., of here, the sum of 596*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* pounds sterling, which I promise to pay at Liverpool to Messrs. Droege & Co., of Manchester, or their order, out of the proceeds of present freight, with the addition of 10*l.* per cent. per annum, and charges for insurance for the above-named sum.

(Signed) "Geo. S. Locke."

To this receipt must be added the following document, produced by the defendants under an order for discovery issued by this Court:

"Receipt for the balance of the loan by Droege & Co. to the master of the Karnak, at Galveston, not included in the receipt indorsed on the charter.

"Received, Galveston, the 13th of December, 1866, of Messrs. Droege & Co., the amount of thirty-six pounds one $\frac{1}{2}$ shillings British sterling, besides the amount of five hundred and ninety-six pounds twelve $\frac{1}{8}$ shillings sterling, entered on the charter-party, thus making the total loan of Droege & Co. to me the amount of six hundred and thirty-two pounds fourteen $\frac{1}{8}$ shillings British sterling, which with 10 per cent. per annum interest from date, and the premium of insurance I promise to pay to the order of Messrs. Droege & Co., on my arrival at Liverpool, out of the proceeds of my present freight.

"596*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* entered on charter-party.

"George S. Locke."

The question is, whether this money so advanced was a loan, as the plaintiffs contend, or an advance of freight, as the defendants maintain. In the former case, the money as representing the rest of the freight must be paid into court as being liable to contribute to the payment of the bondholder; in the latter case, the defendants will be entitled to retain this sum of money, inasmuch as they have already paid that portion of the freight which it represents, and this question must be solved by the answer to another question: What did the freight consist of at the time when the bottomry bond was granted? It is not necessary to consider whether the master, having regard to the charter-party, which provided that the freight should be paid at Liverpool, did not act ultra vires as agent for the owner in receiving freight in advance. The legal distinction between a loan and an advance of freight is clearly stated by Dr. Lushington in The Salacia (4). An advance of freight, he says, is an insurable interest, because the liability of the shipowner to repay it is dependent upon the same contingencies as the shipowner's claim to freight itself. A loan, on the other hand, is not freight, is not an insurable interest, for, whatever happens to the ship, the loan may be recovered by action against the shipowner. This difference is well shewn in Manfield v. Maitland (22). That was an action against underwriters for an advance which had been insured, and it appeared that the charter-party authorized an advance to be made, but was silent as to whether it should be allowed as a deduction on settlement of freight. In consequence of the absence of the latter provision the Court held, that the advance was not an insurable interest. The case of Hicks v. Shield (23) is an authority for shewing that the question, whether the advance be a mere loan or an advance of freight, must principally depend upon what appears upon the face of the instrument. There is some discrepancy in the evidence of the master and Bluck upon this matter; but looking to the circular issued by the master, and more especially to the language of the receipt, I am of opinion that this advance of money must be legally considered as a loan, and not as an advance of freight. I think that the freight existed at the time the bottomry bond was given, and must be considered as being duly bound by that instrument. I pronounce for the validity of this bond so far as it affects the cargo, and I direct the defendants to pay into court the sum of 727*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.* now retained by them in part satisfaction of the claim under the bond. I condemn the defendants and their bail in the sum which remains due in respect of the bond, with 4*l.* per cent. interest from the time when it ought to have been paid, and in the costs of this suit.

Bill of Lading—Non-Delivery of Cargo—Right to Sue.

A cargo of timber was shipped to be unladen at S, "at the usual place of discharge, and according to the custom of the port." On arriving at S. the vessel at once proceeded to the South Dock in S, and was being moored there when the consignees' agent directed the master to remove her to the Gill Dock in S, which the master refused to do. Both docks were usual and customary places of discharge:—Held, that the master was not bound to lie in the river waiting for instructions, and was justified in at once mooring in the South Dock, but that having received the instructions to discharge his cargo in the Gill Dock, he was bound to obey them.

The bill of lading had been indorsed to P. & Co., who had agreed to sell the cargo to B. & Co., but the purchase-money had not been paid:—Held, that P. & Co. were proper parties to sue in respect of a breach of the contract for delivery of the cargo.

This was a cause instituted on behalf of Messrs. Peacock, merchants, of Sunderland, against the ship Felix and her owners, for damages in consequence of the non-delivery of the cargo of the ship by her master, according to their order, into the Gill Dock in the port of Sunderland.

The cargo consisted of fir timber used for "props" in the coal-mines of Durham, and was shipped on board the Felix at the port of Gothenburg, by a person of the name of Wlengel, who indorsed the bill of lading to the plaintiffs, Messrs. Peacock; and Messrs. Peacock subsequently agreed to sell the cargo to Messrs. Bell & Co., but the purchase-money for the cargo had not been paid, either wholly or in part, before the arrival of the Felix, nor had the plaintiffs indorsed or delivered the bill of lading to Messrs. Bell & Co.

The following were the material parts of the bill of lading and of the charter-party, which it was contended was incorporated in it:

Bill of Lading.

Shipped in good order and well conditioned by C. Wlengel in and upon the good ship called the Felix, . . . now lying in the port of Gothenburg, and bound for Sunderland, 6,719 pieces of pit-wood, . . . to be delivered in the like good order and well conditioned, at the aforesaid port of Sunderland, . . . unto order or to assigns, he or they paying freight for the said goods and other conditions as per charter-party of the 13th of September, 1867.

Charter-Party.

Capt. S. H. Buschen charters to Mr. C. Wlengel his said ship, being perfectly tight, staunch, and strong, properly manned, victualled and equipped, provided with regular ship's documents, and every way fitted for making a voyage from Gothenburg to Sunderland, where, after having duly delivered the cargo, this affreightment ceases, and the voyage is ended. The cargo is to consist of pit-props, with necessary short lengths, a full and complete cargo in the hold and upon deck. . . . The loading is to take place in this river, as near to Mr. C. Wlengel's wood-yard as the vessel can safely float, and as fast as the captain requires the cargo. And the unloading at Sunderland at the usual place of discharge, and according to the custom of the port for ships with similar cargoes, and of the same draught of water, in five working days, to be reckoned from the day after the ship has taken her berth and is ready to discharge; for every day that the vessel may be longer detained the captain is entitled to 3*l.* sterling, to be paid him by the receiver of the cargo daily as it falls due, but no demurrage is to be charged whilst the loading or discharge is prevented by natural impediments or holidays.

It appeared that the plaintiffs' water-clerk arrived at the pier, at Sunderland, and found the Felix being moored in the South Dock, when he explained to the master that he came from the consignees of the cargo, who wished the vessel to go to the Gill Dock. Something was said about the expenses of entering the South Dock, but the plaintiffs made no definite offer to pay them, and eventually the master refused to discharge his cargo in the Gill Dock, and caused it to be detained for alleged demurrage and other claims not lawfully chargeable against the plaintiffs.

Aspinall and Clarkson, for the plaintiffs.

—The plaintiffs were no parties to the charter-party, and it is not incorporated in the bill of lading. According to the custom at Sunderland a vessel with no specific orders should drop anchor and wait a reasonable time, and on receiving orders should proceed to the place mentioned, supposing it to be a usual port of discharge, which the Gill Dock is. It is admitted that the master would have been bound to change docks if the proposed docks be unobjectionable and the consignee tender expenses, but the payment of expenses is not a condition precedent. The following cases were referred to—Russell v. Niemann (1) and The Great Northern Railway Company v. Taylor (2).

Manisty and Butt, for the defendants.—

The contract is to be found in the bill of lading and charter-party taken together. The plaintiffs are bound by the time and place fixed by the charter-party, which gives the right to the demurrage; the lay days do not begin to run till the ship takes up her berth at the usual place of discharge—Brereton v. Chapman (3). The words "at the usual place of discharge" are quite distinct from the words "according to the custom of the port." A ship is not to remain in the river as long as the consignees please, and apart from what may be reasonable or what is the custom. The reference in the contract is not to "a usual place," but to "the usual place." "The" usual place was, no doubt, in the South Dock. The Gill Dock is not within the meaning of this charter. No notice of a ship's arrival is necessary; the consignees are bound to take notice when the ship arrives—Harmer v. Mant (4). The usual place is a question of fact—Kell v. Anderson (5). A custom cannot be grafted on this contract—Kerchener v. Venus (6). The plaintiffs have no right to sue. By the contract with Messrs. Bell & Co. the property has passed out of the hands of the plaintiffs, but has not been vested in the former, inasmuch as the bill of lading has never been indorsed or delivered to them. Wlengel, the original shipper, alone has a persona standi as a suitor in this cause. Whatever may be the rights of Messrs. Bell & Co., the plaintiffs certainly cannot sue. Before the Bills of Lading Act, neither Messrs. Bell & Co. nor Messrs. Peacock & Co. could sue in this court; under that act it is not the indorsement of the bill of lading, but the vesting of the property, which gives to the consignee the rights of the original shipper—Southwaite v. Wilkins (7), The St. Cloud (8), and The Norway (9).

Aspinall, in reply, referred to The Figlia Maggiore (10).

Cur. adv. vult.

On the 9th of June judgment was given as follows:

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—The first question, in point of order, raised in this case is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to sue. Mr. Butt, the junior counsel for the defendants, contended that, by the contract with Messrs. Bell & Co., the property passed out of the hands of Messrs. Peacock, and yet is not vested in Messrs. Bell, inasmuch as the bill of lading has never been indorsed nor delivered to them; and that the original shipper alone, Wlengel, has a persona standi as a suitor in this cause; but certainly the right of the original shipper to the property had, by his indorsement of the bill of lading, passed to Messrs. Peacock; and the strict consequence of this argument would be that no party could be a suitor. It was contended, and rightly, that before the passing of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111. s. 1. (Bills of Lading Act), neither Messrs. Bell nor Messrs. Peacock could sue in this court, and that, under the true construction of that act, it was not the indorsement of the bill of lading, but the vesting of the property, which gave to the consignee of goods the rights of the original shipper with respect to the contract contained in the bill of lading. The cases of Southwaite v. Wilkins (7), The St. Cloud (8) and The Norway (9) were cited in support of this contention. I am of opinion that the interest in the bill of lading conferred by the shipper's indorsement upon Messrs. Peacock has not been divested out of them, and that, under the 6th section of the 24 Vict. c. 10. (the Admiralty Court Act, 1861), Messrs. Peacock are properly suitors in this cause. It has been maintained by one, if not both of the counsel for the plaintiffs, that they were no parties to the charter-party, and that it cannot affect them unless it be incorporated in the bill of lading, and that the reference to the charter-party in the bill of lading is too limited and partial to admit the incorporation of the words in the charter-party relating to the demurrage and "the usual place of discharge." In support of this proposition, the case of Russell v. Niemann (1), to which I have referred, was relied upon. I am of opinion, however, that, according to the true canons of construction, the charter-party is incorporated in the bill of lading to the extent for which the defendants contend. Whether by this incorporation the law applicable to this case is in any way materially affected, will appear hereafter. The material question is whether, in an open charter-party to deliver a cargo at Sunderland, the terms "usual place of discharge and according to the custom of the port," do or do not authorize the captain, having received no notice from the consignees, to take the ship into the South Dock, and to refuse to remove her from thence until he has been reimbursed the expenses incurred by entering the South Dock? That I understand to be the principal question upon which the judgment of this Court is sought. It is not necessary to recapitulate in detail the evidence. The fair result of it appears to be as follows: That the Gill Dock is a usual place of discharge for pit-props destined for the collieries of Lord Durham, but that it is not the usual place of discharge for this particular cargo. The purchaser of this very cargo of the Feliz (Mr. Coningham) admitted that the South

Dock was the place in Sunderland in which most pit-props were discharged. It was also proved that when a vessel with this cargo was expressly chartered for the Gill Dock, a larger freight was paid. I am of opinion, therefore, that the plaintiffs have not proved the Gill Dock to be the usual place of discharge. Nor do I think that they derive any advantage from the additional words "and according to the custom of the port." It may be observed that the Felix was a foreign vessel, under a foreign master, and not a vessel coming from Scotland with this peculiar cargo of pit-props. The custom, so far as any custom at all is established by the evidence, would appear to be one of this description, that, in cases of vessels freighted with this cargo, with an open charter, it is usual for the consignee to send his water-clerk to meet the vessel coming into the port, with directions as to the dock into which she is to be moored; that a further precaution is also sometimes taken of putting up a paper in the window of the pilot's office, containing the necessary instructions. But it is not proved to my satisfaction that, in the absence of such instructions conveyed by either mode, it is the duty of the foreign master to lie in the river for a reasonable period awaiting the arrival of such instructions. Assuming, therefore, as I think I am bound to do on the evidence, that the foreign master acted without bad faith in going into the South Dock in the first instance, I am of opinion that he was not to blame for doing so. The case of Brereton v. Chapman (3) (judgment of Tindal, C.J.) has established that the lay days allowed by a charter-party for a ship's discharge are to be reckoned from the time of her arrival at the usual place of discharge, and not at the port merely; though she should, for the purposes of navigation, discharge some of her cargo at the entrance of the port before arriving at the usual place of discharge. Such being the law, I should be of opinion that the "lay," or working days, had begun when the Felix came into the South Dock, if she had begun to discharge her cargo before she received any directions from the consignees to go to the Gill Dock; but this was not the case. While she was in the very act of mooring her master received those directions, and refused to obey them except under the condition of being reimbursed the expenses which he had incurred by entering the South Dock. I understand it to have been admitted (though this statement is, perhaps, too favourable to the master, as the evidence scarcely supports the position that he ever made a bona fide offer to go to Gill Dock if his expenses were paid) by Mr. Manisty that, if this payment had been tendered, it would have been the duty of the master to have obeyed the orders of the consignee; though I think it was maintained by Mr. Butt, that, even if the master had been apprised before he entered the South Dock that he was to discharge in the Gill Dock, he would have been justified under the charter-party in refusing to do so. I am of a contrary opinion. Was it, then, the duty of the master to obey the order of the consignee to go into the Gill Dock and there discharge his cargo, reserving to himself the right of recovering by legal process against the consignee the expenses which he had incurred in the South Dock. Gill Dock, it must be observed, was certainly a place of discharge, and one to which the Felix might have safely gone. It was the dock in which Messrs. Peacock had bound themselves by the first bill that the cargo should be delivered. It was, moreover, fairly argued that these pit-props are bought to sell under an open charter-party, because purchasers do not know, at the time of the purchase, where the cargo is to be sent; whereas, when they are bought by the coal-owners for themselves, the place of discharge is usually specified in the charter. But this question ought to be determined apart from this particular consideration and upon general principles; upon which, as Lord Kingsdown says, for the sake of the public interest, questions of general mercantile law should be decided—Kerchener v. Venus (6). It was the duty of the master, in the circumstances stated, to have obeyed, when he did receive it, the order of the proprietor of the cargo. The charter-party being open, the place of discharge has necessarily to be supplied. It cannot, I think, be reasonably contended that a foreign master entering this port, perhaps for the first time, was entitled to select such dock as he considered to be the usual place of discharge, and to disregard the direction of the proprietor of the cargo as to the dock in which his interests required that the cargo should be delivered.

April 21.

Bill of Lading—Right of Indorsee to Sue for Damage to Cargo.

Indorsees of a bill of lading of goods consigned to them for sale had made advances of money upon the bill of lading:—Held, that to entitle the indorsees to sue for damage done to the goods mentioned in the bill of lading it is not necessary that all the property in the goods should pass to them.

This was a suit in respect of damage to cargo arising from the negligence and breach of contract of the master of the ship on board of which the goods were laden.

The plaintiffs were Messrs. Simmonds, Hunt & Co., assignees of a bill of lading of 1,000 barrels of oil-cake shipped on board the Figlia Maggiore, of New York, by Messrs. Holgate, merchants of that city. The plaintiffs alleged that the oil-cake had been damaged by bad stowage and the want of proper ventilation; and the defendants, besides denying the damage, alleged that the vessel was under charter to Messrs. Ruger Brothers, and that the master signed the bills of lading as agent for them and not for the defendants, the shipowners, and that therefore there was no contract between the defendants and the plaintiffs. The defendants also contended that the plaintiffs were not indorsees of the bill of lading within the meaning of the statute, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, so as to be entitled to sue in this cause. The evidence was taken viva voce, from which it appeared, amongst other things, that the oil-cake had been consigned to the plaintiffs for sale, and that according to their usual custom to advance on the bills of lading of goods supplied by Messrs. Holgate & Co., a draft drawn by Messrs. Holgate on the plaintiffs had been delivered with the bill of lading, and had been accepted and paid by the plaintiffs.

The Solicitor General and Clarkson, for the plaintiffs.—Inasmuch as the ship had been put up as a general ship by the master, and as the plaintiffs had no knowledge of the charter, the contract was between the shippers and the owner, not between the shippers and the charterer—Sandeman v. Scurr (1), The St. Cloud (2). The shipowner breaks his contract, unless he makes out that the loss has been occasioned by the perils of the sea. The indorsement being for valuable consideration passed the property to the assignee, and conferred on him the right to sue.

Milward and Lushington, for the defendants.—The words in the Bill of Lading Act, “to whom the property in the goods therein mentioned shall pass,” require that all the property shall pass to the indorsees in order to place him in the position of the original shipper or owner, and confer on him the right to sue—Fox v. Nott (3). In the present case the plaintiffs are only agents of the consignor, and all the property in the oil-cake does not pass to them so as to enable them to sue upon the contract. The onus probandi as to negligence lies upon the plaintiffs—The Norway (4), The Hélène—Ohrloff v. Briscall (5), Czech v. the General Steam Navigation Company (6).

Clarkson, in reply.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—With respect to the first point of law raised, that the contract in the bill of lading was between the shippers and the charterers, and not between shippers and the defendant, therefore that the defendant was not liable for a breach of the contract, it was properly admitted by the counsel for the defendant that, inasmuch as the Figlia Maggiore had been put up by the master as a general ship, and as the plaintiffs had no knowledge of the charter-party, the cases of Sandeman v. Scurr (1) and of The St.

Cloud (2), decided by my predecessor, were directly opposed to his contention; and as I shall certainly follow the authority of these cases, I am of opinion that the proper defendant is before the Court in this case. I have next to consider the right of the plaintiffs to sue the defendant in this court. They claim as indorsees for valuable consideration of the bill of lading under the 6th section of 24 Vict. c. 10, to sue the defendant, first, for negligence, and, secondly, for breach of contract. I will deal first with the second ground. The defendant contends that the indorsees are not entitled to the property in the oil-cake so as to enable them to sue upon the contract. There is no doubt that previously to the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111, the indorsement and delivery of the bill of lading transferred to the indorsees the property, but not the contract, of the shippers, and that therefore at common law, though they might have sued the owners or the master for what is technically called the conversion, they had no action against them upon the contract for non-delivery of the goods. It is true that by the 6th section of 24 Vict. c. 10, this Court has jurisdiction "over any claim by the owners or consignee or assignee of any bill of lading of any goods" carried into any port in this country for damage on the ground of negligence or breach of contract on the part of the owners, masters or crew; but my learned predecessor, in the case of The St. Cloud, decided that a nude assignee was not entitled under the statute to sue in this court, because the words "any claim" must be interpreted to mean "any claim lawfully existing independently of this act," and to that decision I adhere. Now, as has been stated, such a claim did not exist by the common law; but by the statute 18 & 19 Vict. c. 111. s. 1, it is enacted that "every consignee of goods named in a bill of lading, and every indorsee of a bill of lading to whom the property in the goods shall pass, upon or by reason of such consignment or indorsement, shall have transferred or vested in him all rights of suit, and be subject to the same liabilities in respect of such goods as if the contract contained in the bill of lading had been made with himself." The defendant contends that the words "to whom the property in the goods therein mentioned shall pass," require that all the property should pass to the indorsee in order to place him in the position of the original shipper or owner; and the case of Fox v. Nott (3) was cited in support of the proposition. But I am of opinion that that judgment only decided that the statute was not intended to deprive an owner who had made advances on the security of the bill of lading of the benefit of the original contract of the shipper to pay the freight in the case where the shipper's agent who shipped the goods had personally contracted to pay the freight. In the case I have just mentioned Baron Bramwell was of opinion that the statute had no bearing at all upon the case; the other Judges thought that the act only applied to the absolute transfer of the goods, and one of them said that the statute meant "an actual vesting of the property as by bargain and sale." In the case before me the bill of lading had been delivered to the plaintiffs with a bill of exchange which they had accepted and paid; and it appears to me that in these circumstances the consignors had intended to vest the property in the indorsees. In the case of Lickbarrow v. Mason (7), Buller, J., referring to the case of Godfrey v. Furzo (8), observes, "The Lord Chancellor says: 'when a merchant beyond sea consigns goods to a merchant in London on account of the latter, and draws bills on him for such goods, though the money be not paid, yet the property of the goods vests in the merchant in London who is credited for them, and consequently they are liable to his debts; but where a merchant beyond sea consigns goods to a factor in London, who receives them, the factor in this case being only a servant or agent for the merchant beyond sea, can have no property in such goods, neither will they be affected by his bankruptcy.'" And Buller, J., adds, "The whole of this case is clear law." And dealing with the question of the factor he says: "I agree, if he be merely a servant or agent, that part of the case is good law, and the principal may retain the property, but then it remains to be proved that a man who is in advance, or under acceptance, on account of the goods, is simply or merely a servant or agent, for which no authority has been, or as I believe can be, produced." I am of opinion that if the two statutes (18 & 19 Vict. c. 111. and 24 Vict. c. 10.) are to be construed together, and if the indorsee of the bill of lading in order to sue the owner for a breach of contract in the Admiralty Court, under the 6th section of the latter statute, must be the indorsee to whom the property in the goods has passed, according to the former statute, the plaintiffs are entitled to sue in this capacity. But if I am wrong upon this point, I am clearly of opinion that upon the other ground, namely, the negligence mentioned in the 6th section, they are entitled to sue. A question has been raised as to the party on whom the onus probandi is to be thrown in this case. In the case of The Hélène (5), which also arose under the 6th section of this act, and was decided in this court, but reversed on appeal before the Privy Council, the assignees of the bills of lading for certain casks of oil shipped on board the Hélène sought to recover damages for loss incurred on the voyage by the leakage of the oil, occasioned, as alleged by the assignees, by the negligence and breaches of contract and duty of the owners. In the margin of the bill of lading of the casks of oil in that case there was this memorandum: "Weight, measurement and contents unknown, and not accountable for leakage," and in that case it was ruled that the plaintiffs, in order to entitle themselves to the action, were bound to give satisfactory proof that the leakage was caused by the negligence of the shipowners. And in the subsequent case of Czech v. the General Steam Navigation Company (6), where the bill of lading contained an exception from liability for "breakage, leakage or damage," the same doctrine seems to have been held by Bovill, C.J.; but in both those cases it would seem—though, perhaps, the proposition is not distinctly stated—that the burden of proof was thrown upon the plaintiffs on account of the special memorandum or exception which accompanied the bill of lading. In the case of The Norway (4), in which it was alleged that the jettison of a portion of the cargo had been caused by the grounding of the ship in consequence of the negligence of the pilot, it was contended that the plaintiffs were bound to establish that the injury thereby sustained by the vessel was either the causa proxima or causa causans of the jettison; but no decision appears to have been come to on this point by their Lordships. Assuming, however, that it is incumbent on the plaintiffs to establish a prima facie case of negligence against the master, this proposition, to borrow Willes, J.'s expression in Czech v. the General Steam Navigation Company (6), "does not restrict the plaintiffs as to the nature of the evidence by which such negligence shall be proved." The learned Judge, having commented at length on the facts, said, "I think it can scarcely admit of doubt that a prima facie case of negligence has been established by the evidence, and that that case is not displaced by the evidence produced on behalf of the defendant."

A dock-master is invested with a discretion to be exercised for the benefit of all the ships in the harbour, and the master of a vessel is therefore bound to obey the dock-master, and to assist in the removal of his ship, even though, if the interests of the ship alone might be considered, the removal was injudicious.

Where a ship is moored in dock, it is generally the duty of her master to keep on board a sufficient crew to protect the vessel against ordinary risks.

A ship after having been moored in a dock was subsequently, by order of the dock-master, removed to another part, from which, by the negligence of her master and his disobedience of the dock-master's orders, she broke loose and damaged the docks:—Held, that the ship was liable for the damage.

This was an action brought by the plaintiffs, the Falmouth Docks Company, for damage done to the western wharf of the Falmouth Harbour, on the 5th and 19th of January, 1867, by the ship Excelsior.

It appeared that the ship having entered the docks was moored, on the 25th of November, alongside the eastern wharf, where she lay for some time discharging cargo. While she was so lying there her master was frequently ordered by the dock-master to send down the ship's top-gallant-yards and strike the top-gallant-masts, which the master refused to do. On the 22nd of December, the ship was removed to the western wharf, and on the 5th of January, during a heavy gale from east-south-east, the ship having still her top-gallant-masts and yards aloft, parted her hawsers and commenced striking the plaintiff's wharf with great violence, shaking the piles and cutting down the edge of the wharf. On the 19th of January the ship, having her top-gallant-masts and yards still aloft, again broke away and did further damage. The company is governed by its local act, with which is incorporated the Harbours, Docks and Piers Clauses Act, 1867, and by these it was contended, on behalf of the plaintiffs, that the ship was bound to have substantial hawsers, tow-lines and fasts fixed to the dolphins, booms, buoys or mooring-posts when required, and that the master was bound when ordered by the dock-master to lower his top-gallant-yards and masts. And it was also contended, on their behalf, that the damage was occasioned by the refusal of the master to obey the orders given him by the dock-master, and by the insufficient crew left on board of the vessel, and the inadequate mooring-tackle.

On behalf of the defendants, the charges were denied, and it was also contended that the damage was caused by the improper removal of the ship from the eastern to the western wharf, or that it was the result of inevitable accident.

The Solicitor General (Sir W. B. Brett) and V. Lushington appeared for the plaintiffs.

Aspinall and E. C. Clarkson, for the defendants.

SIR R. J. PHILLIMORE.—That the damage was done to this wharf by the dashing of the Excelsior against it on the two occasions specified is clearly proved. The questions for the Court to decide are whether this damage was caused by the negligence or default of the master or his servants, or by the misconduct of the dock-master in causing the vessel to be improperly moored, or whether the damage was caused partly by the misconduct of the master of the vessel and partly by that of the dock-master.—[His Lordship then reviewed the evidence in the case, and continued]—These are the principal facts of the case. The law applicable to them must be determined by a consideration of the respective duties of the master of the ship and the dock-master. It has been contended on behalf of the former that he had a right to remain in the place in which he was first moored, and that the dock-master had no right to remove him. I am of a different opinion. I think that the statutes and the regulations, as well as the necessity of the case, clothe the dock-master with the discretion upon this subject, to be exercised for the welfare of all the ships which enter the harbour, and that the master was bound to obey this order, and to assist in the removal of his ship. He might do so, indeed, under protest, and reserve to himself the right of holding the company liable for any damages done to his ship in consequence of obedience to the order; but he had a duty to perform towards his ship in this instance, the neglect of which was highly culpable. The Trinity Masters think that the ship was better protected against the easterly gale and sea caused by such gale where she was originally moored by the eastern pier, and that, if the interests of the ship alone were to be considered, it was injudicious to move the ship; but, on the other hand, it is to be remembered that it was the duty of the dock-master to consider the interests of all the shipping in the harbour, and if the injured and dismantled ship, which took the place of the Excelsior absolutely required a protection which the Excelsior, with proper care, did not require, it was not an improper exercise of discretion to order the removal of that vessel. The further question then arises, would the Excelsior, with proper care, have been safe in her new mooring? It appears to me that the damage done both to the pier and to the ship is mainly attributable to two causes: first, principally to the insufficiency of the crew left on board for the management of the ship at that place in that weather. The Trinity Masters are most clearly of opinion that the crew was insufficient for the due management and care of the ship. It has been contended that it was the duty of the dock company to provide a sufficient number of hands for the ship. The proposition, however, was not put so high as this, that the captain had a right to abandon the ship altogether and devolve the whole care of it upon the company; but it was said that the few hands which he left on board were so adequate for all purposes for which he was bound to provide, that he was entitled to rely on the company for special emergencies such as happened on this occasion. The duty of a dock company generally was much discussed in the case of Thompson v. the North-Eastern Railway Company (1), which was argued before the Queen's Bench and the Exchequer Chamber in 1862. In that case the former decisions on the subject were reviewed and the judgment of Tindal, C.J., in The Lancaster Canal Company v. Parnaby (2), in error, relied upon. In that case the law is laid down to this effect and extent only, viz., that it is the duty of the dock company to take reasonable care that the dock is kept so free from obstruction that those who use it might do so without danger to their property. The respective duties of a dock company and the master of a ship must depend in some measure upon the actual condition and place of the dock, as well as upon the statutes which regulate their authority. For instance, it may possibly be that in the West or East India Docks in the river Thames, or in some of the Liverpool docks, or in some dock from its situation and construction perfectly secure in all weather, a single watchman may suffice for the protection of the ship, so far as the duty of the captain is concerned, and that he may be justified in relying for any further protection upon the dock company; in other words, that they may have expressly or tacitly bound themselves to require no further assistance from the captain. In this case the dock is certainly unfinished, and, in fact, a harbour rather than a dock in its present state. But if the western side of it was a more exposed position than the eastern for the Excelsior, it was not a secret danger, of which the dock-master was cognizant and the captain ignorant: and surely that fact did not give the captain a dispensation from the care and diligence which the duty of his office ordinarily imposes upon him. I do not say that it was incumbent upon him to have kept a full crew on board, but I do say that he ought to have kept a sufficient crew on board to have protected his ship against the ordinary incidents of peril which a competent seaman would foresee and provide against, in which category I place the gales of the 5th and 20th of January in the harbour of Falmouth. The master did not sleep in his ship, neither did his chief or second mate. But the master must or ought to have known that bad weather was coming on; on the 5th he does not come down to his ship till late in the day, and until, in fact, his duty has been performed by a stranger. For the accident of the second gale, after the warning of the first, he is even more to blame. I am of opinion that he was guilty of an indefensible dereliction of his plain duty in neglecting the proper precautions for the safety and care of the ship. The second cause of this damage is the refusal of the captain to lower his top-gallant-yards and masts. I am of opinion that this refusal is clearly proved, and the Trinity Masters instruct me that it would have been the duty of a prudent captain to have taken this measure of his own accord. Upon the whole, therefore, I am led to the conclusion that the fair result from the positive evidence produced before me on behalf of the plaintiff, and from the absence of contradictory testimony from those on board the Excelsior—which would of course have been given if it could have been given with advantage by the defendants—is, that if the master of the Excelsior had done his duty to his ship, and had obeyed the lawful orders of the dock-master, this accident and the injury occasioned by it would not have happened. I must, therefore, pronounce the Excelsior to blame.

THE LEADER.

Proctor's Lien — Garnishee Order — Priority.

A plaintiff having obtained a decree for payment by the defendant of a sum of money for costs, the defendant under the authority of two garnishee orders paid part of the sum to judgment creditors of the plaintiff. No notice had been given to the plaintiff's proctor previous to the application for the garnishee orders, nor was the existence of the proctor's lien mentioned to the Judge who made the orders:—Held, that the defendant was still liable to pay the costs decreed.

In this, which was originally a suit by the plaintiff, David Leusier, as master, for his wages and disbursements, the Court had decreed a sum of 23*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* to be paid to the plaintiff as the balance due to him, and the sum of 65*l.* 1*s.* 6*d.* for costs.

Messrs. Bell & Co., the defendant's solicitors, were also solicitors for the plaintiff's creditors, and in the latter capacity obtained two garnishee orders, attaching the moneys due from the defendant to the plaintiff, and under the authority of those orders paid to the creditors nearly the whole amount decreed in this cause. No previous notice had been given to the plaintiff's solicitors of the application for the garnishee orders and their lien had not been mentioned to the Judge before the orders were made.

The plaintiff's solicitors now moved the Court for a monition against the bail to enforce payment of the amount due to them for costs.

Clarkson, in support of the motion.—The existence of the solicitor's lien ought to have been brought to the notice of the Judge when the garnishee orders were applied for—The Common Law Procedure Acts, 1854 and 1860. The solicitors for the judgment creditors also instructed the defendant's proctor in this case, and therefore must have known of the lien. The Olive (1) was decided in 1859, before the passing of the act of 1860, which provides a special machinery applicable to these cases. A garnishee order does not affect a solicitor's lien; unless that lien be barred the defendant remains still liable to pay the claim of the plaintiff's solicitor—Bozon v. Bollond (2) and Simpson v. Prothero (3).

Butt, contra.—This Court will not review the order of a Judge—The Olive (1). The defendant has already paid the debt and costs. The garnishee order clearly bars the plaintiff's own claim; and the debt is due to the plaintiff, not to the plaintiff's attorney. The defendant's attorneys certainly took advantage of knowledge that they possessed from their peculiar position, as acting both for the defendant and for the judgment creditors of the plaintiff; but in doing so they only did their duty. It is clear on the authorities that the plaintiff's solicitors had neither a lien nor charge when the garnishee order was taken out—Hough v. Edwards (4) and Barker v. St. Quintin (5). The 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. s. 28. (The Solicitors' Act) recognizes the authority of these cases; it acknowledges no lien, but permits an application to the Court. Had the plaintiff's solicitors made an application to this Court it might have been different. But the Judge was powerless to deal with this matter till an order had been got from this Court. There is no authority in any Court for making a garnishee pay twice over.

Clarkson, in reply.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—The propositions which appear to be maintained by the counsel for the defendant are that the plaintiff's solicitor had not made an application to this Court, under the provisions of the 28th section of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127.

That the plaintiff's solicitor had no lien on this sum of money when the garnishee order was taken out, and that the garnishee was not bound to apprise the Judge of the existence of any lien if there were one. The section just alluded to is in these terms: "In every case in which an attorney or solicitor shall be employed to prosecute or defend any suit, matter or proceeding in any court of justice, it shall be lawful for the Court or Judge before whom any such suit, matter or proceeding has been heard or shall be depending, to declare such attorney or solicitor entitled to a charge upon the property recovered or preserved; and upon such declaration being made, such attorney or solicitor shall have a charge upon and against, and a right to payment out of the property, of whatsoever nature, tenure or kind the same may be, which shall have been recovered or preserved through the instrumentality of any such attorney or solicitor, for the taxed costs, charges and expenses of, or in reference to such suit, matter or proceeding; and it shall be lawful for such Court or Judge to make such order or orders for taxation of, and for raising and payment of such costs, charges and expenses out of the said property, as to such Court or Judge shall appear just and proper; and all conveyances and acts done to defeat, or which shall operate to defeat such charge or right, shall, unless made to a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, be absolutely void and of no effect as against such charge or right; provided always, that no such order shall be made by any such Court or Judge in any case in which the right to recover payment of such costs, charges and expenses is barred by any Statute of Limitations."

It was further contended that the defendant could not be made to pay twice over; and the case of The Olive (1) was relied upon to shew that this Court would consider a garnishee order as binding upon it. In that case the defendant had been condemned in costs, but before the proctor for the plaintiff had obtained payment of his entire bill of costs the money was attached by a garnishee order in the hands of the defendant. The Judge held that a payment under that order was a satisfaction of the judgment in this Court as against the proctor's lien. Two circumstances are to be observed, however, in that case, which distinguish it from the one now before me: first, that the order was not finally made by the Judge at common law until it had been served upon the plaintiff's proctor, who had full notice to appear and shew cause against the order, but did not choose to do so; secondly, that the cause was decided in 1859, previously, therefore, to the passing in 1860 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 127. But in the present case the defendant has not served the plaintiff's solicitor, as was done in The Olive (1), with a notice of the order, nor availed himself of the provisions of the statute, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 126. ss. 29, 30, which seems to have been framed for the express purpose of enabling the garnishee to protect himself from the lien of a third person. It has been further contended, on the authority of Barker v. St. Quintin (2) that the solicitor had no lien for his costs at the time that the garnishee order was made. I have considered that case, and also the case of Simpson v. Prothero (3), and in the latter case Wood, V.C. observed, "I think that this money having been recovered by the exertions of the plaintiffs, they are entitled to a lien upon it for their costs, and I do not see how the subsequent charging order can affect that lien. The principle upon which I apprehend the Court should proceed in these transactions is to consider how the fund has been obtained, and if you find that it has been recovered by the exertions of the party claiming the lien, it is but right that he should have his reward out of the fruits of his exertions." I am therefore of opinion that the plaintiff's solicitor in this case had a lien for his costs at the time when the garnishee order was made, and that the defendant ought to have caused notice to have been given to the solicitor, or ought to have apprised the Judge of the existence of this lien before the order was finally made. In the circumstances of this case, the payment under the garnishee order is not a valid satisfaction of the judgment of this Court, and I must order a monition against the bail to pay the amount of the taxed costs of the solicitor, together with the costs of and incident to this motion and the monition.

Collision — Lights — Inspection and Report by Trinity Masters.

A barque's side lights were so placed in the mizen rigging that the centre of the lights did not project beyond the gunwale. They were two feet six inches within the broadest part of the vessel, and at a distance of more than 350 feet with the masts in line they could not be seen from a window forty feet above the deck of another vessel :—Held, not to be a sufficient compliance with the regulations as to lights.

The Court has power under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 18, to order an inspection of a vessel by Trinity Masters, and will direct that they be attended by the proctors, and a viewer on behalf of each party.

A collision occurred in April last, off Dungeness, between the Hamburg-American Company's steamship Germania and the Dutch barque Pauline Constance Eleonore, and the barque was so injured by the collision that she was with great difficulty kept from sinking, and subsequently beached at Hythe.

The defence was that no light was exhibited on board the barque in sufficient time to enable the Germania to avoid the collision, and that therefore the barque was not observed until she was distant only two ships' lengths, and there being a conflict of testimony as to the accuracy of some photographs and a model of the Pauline produced by the plaintiffs, the learned Judge, at the close of the evidence, called attention to the 18th section of the Admiralty Court Act of 1861 (1), and said he was ready to exercise the power conferred on him by that section of making an order for the inspection of the vessel by the Trinity Masters.

(1) "Any party in a cause in the High Court of Admiralty shall be at liberty to apply to the said Court for an order for the inspection, by the Trinity Masters, or others appointed for the trial of the said cause, or by the party himself or his witnesses, of any ship or other personal or real property the inspection of which may be material to the issue of the cause; and the Court may make such order in respect of the costs arising thereout as to it shall seem fit."

On the application of the Queen's Advocate, the Court accordingly ordered an inspection of the vessel, which was then lying in Dover harbour, by the Trinity Masters, and directed that they should be accompanied by the proctors and a viewer on each side.

The Queen's Advocate, Dr. Spinks and Searle, for the plaintiffs (the owners of the barque).

The Solicitor General (Sir W. B. Brett), Dr. Deane, Butt and Pritchard, for the defendants.

The hearing of the cause occupied three days, and the Court now gave judgment.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—It is admitted as a matter of law that if the barque carried proper lights, properly fixed, it was the duty of the steam-vessel to get out of her way, and as a matter of fact that the steam-vessel did not see the barque until the collision was inevitable. According to the preliminary acts and the evidence, the vessels were meeting each other, and there are two principal questions for the Court to decide. Did the barque carry proper lights? And were they so placed as to comply with the regulations in this respect? It is clear that the proper lamps were on board, and that their framework was fitted to the mizen rigging. It is agreed that the night was dark, and the presumption would be in favour of the lamps being lighted. This presumption is strengthened by the evidence of those on board the barque, and the Court has come to the conclusion that the proper lights were burning at the time of the collision. I have now to consider the second question, as to which, indeed, the chief controversy in this case has been raised, viz., were the lights so placed as to comply with the regulations? They were placed in the mizen rigging, six inches clear above the iron rail, which is four feet above the poop, and between eight feet and nine feet above the main deck. A model was put in evidence for shewing the position of the lamps, the lower sails, the relative breadths of the vessel, and the height of the lamps from the poop, though not their exact projection from the rigging, and it will presently be seen that in fact the lights did not project beyond the extreme breadth of the ship, she being at that point twenty-six feet three inches, and at the broadest part thirty-one feet one inch wide. As the visibility of the lights depended in a great measure upon the accuracy of the measurements and upon the exact position of the lamps, I thought it expedient to put in force, for the first time, the provisions of section 18. of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, 24 Vict. c. 10, and request the Trinity Masters to survey the ship. They have done so, and among other things they say, "We do not consider the centre of light to project one iota beyond the actual breadth of the gunwale; the lights are on each side two feet six inches within the broadest part of the vessel. At a distance of more than 350 feet, with the masts in line, the side lights could not be seen from a window forty feet above the deck of the vessel." The regulations are silent as to the place in which the lights of a ship are to be fixed. There is no doubt that both British and foreign merchantmen do carry lights in the mizen rigging; but the propriety of so doing must depend in a great measure upon the form of the vessel. The barque in this case is full-bowed, tapering away fore and aft. The presumption, I think, is that the master of the barque deliberately put up his lights where he supposed they would be seen. It was argued that his reasons for placing the lights there were that no studding-sail or square-sail is ever set on the mizen; that lights there are less exposed to spray, and that it is important in merchant vessels to place the lights where they can be best attended to by the man in charge, whose station is on the poop. It was also contended that these lights were visible beneath the square-sails, and that the Elder Brethren would not be able to judge of this from the position in which they were when they made their inspection. Entertaining, notwithstanding the report of the Trinity Masters, considerable doubt in my own mind whether the barque had not sufficiently complied with the regulations, and whether the steam-vessel, if she had had a proper look-out, would not have been apprised of the approach of the barque by her lights, I put certain questions to the Trinity Masters, and in reply they state that they were clearly of opinion that the lights so shewn did not comply with regulations B. and C. of article 3, inasmuch as they did not shew a uniform and unbroken light over an arc of the horizon of ten points of the compass; that they could not shew an unbroken light from right ahead to two points abaft the beam; that there was, according to the evidence, a sufficient look-out on board the Germania; that, under the circumstances, the Germania was right in porting; and that her speed of eleven knots was not, under the circumstances, too great. The 29th section of the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 63. enacts that, "if in any case of collision it appears to the Court before which the case is tried that such collision was occasioned by the non-observance of any regulations made by or in pursuance of this act, the ship by which such regulation has been infringed shall be deemed to be in fault, unless it is shewn to the satisfaction of the Court that the circumstances of the case made a departure from the regulations necessary." Having, therefore, regard to the decided and deliberate opinion of the Trinity Masters upon the question, the solution of which must greatly depend upon nautical science and experience, I am obliged to pronounce that the barque is alone to blame for the collision.

Decree accordingly.

Master's Wages and Disbursements—Master Part-Owner.

When freight has been earned, the master of the ship, though also part-owner, may sue in the Admiralty Court to recover his wages and disbursements.

Upon an appeal from the report of the registrar and merchants as to a master's claim for wages and disbursements, the following items were objected to: 1. Sums of money for which the master as well as the ship was liable, and which had not been paid; 2. Slops supplied to seamen who afterwards deserted; 3. The amount of a dishonoured bill of exchange, drawn for ship's purposes by the master upon the managing owner; but it was doubtful whether the master had received notice of the dishonour:—Held, as to the first item, that the claim may be allowed upon proof, to the satisfaction of the registrar, that the sums have been actually paid. 2. That the items for slops were properly allowed as disbursements. 3. That, as to the amount of the bill of exchange, even if notice of dishonour had not been waived, the master had not claimed the benefit of notice, and that therefore, as he was liable for the amount, the item was properly allowed.

This was an appeal from the report of the registrar and merchants in a suit for wages and disbursements against the ship Feronia and her freight by the master, who was also a part-owner.

On the 11th of December, 1866, the cause was instituted in this court against the vessel Feronia and her freight, in the sum of 2,500*l.*, by Robert Hutchinson, part-owner and late master thereof. On the 18th, the Judge, Dr. Lushington, decreed a monition against Messrs. Bailey & Co., average adjusters, to pay into court the balance of freight of this vessel then remaining in their hands. On the 21st, an appearance was entered on behalf of the National Bank of Liverpool (Limited), mortgagees, by transfer of forty-eight shares in the vessel, and appearances were subsequently entered on behalf of three other parties, Mr. Rickarby, a part-owner and mortgagee of the homeward freight, Messrs. Swire, other mortgagees of the homeward freight, and Mr. Hughes, a part-owner. On the 7th of May, 1867, the Judge referred the plaintiff's claim to the registrar, assisted by merchants, to report the amount due thereon. On the 12th of August, the registrar made his report, to the effect that he found due to the plaintiff "Robert Hutchinson, in respect of his wages and disbursements as master of the ship or vessel Feronia, the sum of 1,087*l.* 8*s.* 5*d.*, together with interest thereon," and costs. From this report the National Bank of Liverpool alone, of all the defendants, appealed to the Court.

The claims objected to were: 1. Certain sums of money for which the master had made himself, as well as the ship, liable, but which he had not paid; 2. Slops supplied to seamen who afterwards deserted; 3. The sum of 135*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.*, the amount of a dishonoured bill of exchange which the master had drawn upon the managing owner for ship's purposes.

Brett and V. Lushington appeared for the appellants; and Aspinall and Cohen, for the respondent.

The arguments of counsel are fully stated by the learned Judge in the course of the judgment. The following were the cases cited: Bright v. Fleming (1), Dickenson v. Kitchen (2), Bristowe v. Whitmore (3), The Edwin (4), The Chieftain (5), The Mary Anne (6), The Gananoque (7), The Princess Helena (8), The Glenanner (9), The Repulse (10), *Gibson v. SIR R. J. PHILLIMORE.—In this case the appellants, in the first instance, object to the entire claim of the plaintiff as master, upon the ground that he was part-owner of the ship, an objection which was not taken in the answer to the original petition before the Court; for, on the contrary, the defendants prayed that the whole claim of the plaintiff might be referred to the registrar. The Court, however, was of opinion, that it could not refrain from entertaining the objection, though it ought to have been taken on the original pleadings; inasmuch as it raised a question of law to be decided by the Court in the first instance, and, if valid, the necessary expense and delay occasioned by a reference to the registrar ought to have been avoided. It has been said that the objection did not arise till the defendants were proved to be mortgagees; but that is a fact which would probably have not been denied by the plaintiff, and if it had been, might have been easily proved before the Court. The Court, however, has allowed the question to be argued at this stage of the proceedings; and, as the objection lies in limine, and if rightly taken renders the discussion of the other objections unnecessary, I had better deal with it in the first instance. The argument of the defendants appears to be, that the plaintiff, who is part-owner as well as master, has, by reason of his liabilities in the former character, forfeited the rights which would otherwise accrue to him in the latter. He cannot, it is said, recover in this court against himself; there is no contract with him as master; the only contract made was one on his behalf with himself; and he is really in this suit claiming as a part-owner in an account against other part-owners, which it is competent to him to do in this court under the 8th section of 24 Vict. c. 10, but not under the general law, by reason of a maritime lien upon the ship, which is his present contention. If he has not a lien of this peculiar character, unknown to the common law, which attaches to the res, and travels with the res into whatever hands it passes, then it is contended that he has no title to payment for wages or disbursements out of the fund which is now in court. During the voyage of the ship the mortgagees were not owners, but when the ship came into port in this country, and before she was arrested they became mortgagees in possession, and from that period they are to be treated as owners. Now, as such, it is argued they are not liable to any previous contracts made by the former owners, not even for necessities, according to a very recent decision of the Court of Exchequer—Bright v. Fleming (1); and another case, Dickenson v. Kitchen (2), has ruled that a mortgagee in possession, whose mortgage has been registered as required by sections 66. and 70. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, has a right even against an execution creditor of the mortgagor. The legislature, it is further said, contemplated two kinds of masters: first, those that navigated their own ship; secondly, those that navigated for wages a ship not their own. It might happen that the master was sole owner and mortgaged his ship; could he then be entitled to his wages, which might eat up the value of his mortgage? This is, I believe, a fair summary of the argument which has been addressed to me for the purpose of proving that a master who is part-owner cannot have a maritime lien, and that no other lien would give him any claim to have his wages paid out of the freight in derogation of the claim of the mortgagee in possession. Before I consider this argument it may be as well to state, in the language of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, the nature of a maritime lien. Their Lordships say, Harmer v. Bell, The Bold Buccleuch (15), "A maritime lien does not include or require possession. The word is used in maritime law not in the strict legal sense in which we understand it in courts of common law, in which case there could be no lien where there was no possession, actual or constructive; but to express, as if by analogy, the nature of claims which neither pre-suppose nor originate in possession. This was well understood in the Civil law, by which there might be a pledge with possession, and a hypothecation without possession, and by which in either case the right travelled with the thing into whosoever possession it came. Having its origin in this rule of the civil law, a maritime lien is well defined by Lord Tenterden to mean a claim or privilege upon a thing to be carried into effect by legal process; and Story, J. (16) explains that process to be a proceeding in rem, and adds, that wherever a lien or claim is given upon the thing, then the Admiralty enforces it by a proceeding in rem, and, indeed, is the only Court competent to enforce it. A maritime lien is the foundation of the proceeding in rem, a process to make perfect, a right inchoate from the moment the lien attaches; and whilst it must be admitted that where such a lien exists, a proceeding in rem may be had, it will be found to be equally true, that in all cases where a proceeding in rem is the proper course, there a maritime lien exists, which gives a privilege or claim upon the thing to be carried into effect by legal process. This claim or privilege travels with the thing into whosoever possession it may come. It is inchoate from the moment the claim or privilege attaches, and when carried into effect by legal process, by a proceeding in rem, relates back to the period when it first attached." Upon this argument the first observation which arises is that, although there have been a great number of cases in which the master, being also part-owner, has sued for wages upon the ground of his maritime lien upon the ship, this is the first instance in which the present objection has been raised, and The Gananogue (7) is cited as a case in which the present objection must and would have been taken if the counsel or the Judge had considered it tenable. This observation, however, although not without its weight, does not relieve the Court from the necessity of inquiring into the validity of the objection, now that it is taken. The master of the vessel by the common law and by the practice of this Court did not possess the right which the common seamen enjoyed of suing for his wages in the High Court of Admiralty. The history of the changes effected by recent legislation on this point has been fully considered in various cases determined by my learned predecessor—The Ocean (17), The Wataga (18), The Caledonia (19), The Edwin (20), The Mary Ann (6). In the case of The Mary Ann (6), it was decided, in 1865, that, under the 10th section of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 Vict. c. 10), the master has a maritime lien both for his wages and disbursements, and that upon this ground his claim was preferable to that of a mortgagee. Under the last statute this Court has jurisdiction "over any claim by the master for wages earned by him on board the ship, and for disbursements made by him on account of the ship." The latter clause must be the subject of a distinct consideration. First, I must observe that this new right is given by this statute to "the master" generally, without limitation or qualification of any kind. No subsequent statute supplies any limitation or qualification. On what principle of law, on what rule governing the construction of statutes, is the Court to import into this general enactment in favour of the master, the limitation "unless he be part-owner"? That the legislature contemplated two kinds of masters, and intended to confine the privilege of a maritime lien to one kind, appears to me a baseless suggestion. If I place myself in the position of the legislature at the time when these various statutes were passed, extending the protection enjoyed by the common seaman to the master, and removing gradually the injustice which the common law, perhaps out of an ancient jealousy of the Admiralty Court, had inflicted upon him, I cannot doubt that the legislature well knew that the combination of master and part-owner was a fact of frequent and increasing occurrence, and I believe it has been truly argued that, as a matter of public policy, it was desirous of encouraging this combination. As to the argument that a man cannot sue himself upon a contract, the answer is, that this is not a case of contract, properly speaking, but of lien, and that in the case already cited of The Gananogue (7), a master who was part-owner did recover his wages against another part-owner under the same provision of the statute which the present plaintiff has invoked on his behalf. During the course of the argument on behalf of the defendant, I put a question which was not to my mind satisfactorily answered, namely: It being admitted that the mortgagee in possession would be obliged to acknowledge the lien of an ordinary master for his wages, how is he damnified by the fact that the master happens to be also a part-owner? This very freight which the mortgagee is now claiming has been earned by the master's navigation of the vessel and her safe conduct into port; it is the produce of his exertion, energy and skill; and the case of Bristowe v. Whitmore (3) would warrant me, if any such authority was needed, in saying that the claim of the master upon the freight for his wages is founded upon a natural justice. The mortgagee has already possessed himself of the ship, and he now requires that the whole of the freight, without any deduction for the wages of the master who earned it, should be paid over to him. It is to be observed that, if his argument be good, the master, who is also part-owner, would have no maritime lien for his wages if the ship was not mortgaged, for the mortgagee in possession is in no better condition than the owner whom he represents. I am of opinion that it is not competent to the Court to impair or take away the right which the statute has given to the master by engrafting upon it the limitation for which the defendant contends, and I pronounce that the registrar has come to a just and right conclusion in allowing the claim of the master for his wages. The next question of importance relates to the true construction of the words in the statute, "disbursements made by him." It certainly appears to me that the legislature intended to include under these words all proper expenditure made by the master upon the ship, whether the particular articles the subject of this expenditure were obtained by immediate or by promised payment, and that in each case two questions would arise: First, had the particular articles actually been applied to the use of the ship? secondly, are these articles such as the necessities of the ship justified and required? In The Chieftain (5) and The Edwin (4) Dr. Lushington put a more restricted interpretation on these words, holding that the money must have been paid in order to entitle the master to recover for disbursements in this court; that a liability to pay was not sufficient to enable him to do so. As this question was argued before my predecessor, and as he so decided, if the circumstances of this case were the same as those in The Chieftain (5) and The Edwin (4), and if the learned Judge's opinion had remained unaltered, I should have thought it my duty to have followed, however reluctantly, those precedents, leaving the plaintiff to seek redress, if he thought himself injured by my adherence to these decisions, before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. But, first, it is to be observed that in neither of these cases was there a fund earned by freight paid into court; secondly, in this case the course pursued by the registrar has been to allow the charge, being satisfied upon evidence that the ship had actually received the benefit of the articles which were the subjects of the charge, but at the same time not to allow the payment to be made to the master until vouchers for the actual payment of those articles should have been filed in the registry. It is said that the Court cannot give itself jurisdiction through the act of the registrar and convert a liability into a disbursement. It is not, however, denied that if the master had borrowed the money and paid with it the bills an hour before the suit was instituted, there would have been a disbursement. In this case, before the master is paid the actual disbursement will have been made. No opinion was expressed by Dr. Lushington in The Chieftain (5) or The Edwin (4) adverse to the course adopted by the registrar in this case, nor was the point taken, for it did not arise in those cases, that the Court having a fund in its custody legally liable for all necessities, ought not to part with that fund without doing justice to all parties. The learned Judge, according to his own decision in The Glenlanner (9), would, if the owners had resisted the claim of the master, have directed all the accounts to have been gone into, and the mortgagee would then have intervened. A remark made by Dr. Lushington in that case is not inapplicable to the one before me. He said, "Why should the master be prejudiced by the sale or mortgage of the ship? The purchaser of a ship takes her with all liens, towage, bottomry, salvage and wages. A mortgagee cannot be in a better position than the owner"--- (Swabey, p. 422). I am happy to think also that in allowing this course to be taken in the particular circumstances of this case, I am not without the sanction of my learned predecessor, for though I entirely agree with the remark of the counsel for the defendant, that it is not within the province of the registrar to decide questions of law unless he be in truth compelled to do so by the particular character of the case, and that it was not competent to him to overrule the decisions in The Chieftain (5) and The Edwin (4), nevertheless, inasmuch as the circumstance which distinguished the case of The Red Rose from those of The Chieftain (5) and The Edwin (4) was brought under the attention of the late learned Judge, as well as the decision of the House of Lords in Bristow v. Whitmore (3), subsequent to those cases, and as he confirmed that report, which allowed liabilities incurred by the master for articles expended for the benefit of the ship to be considered as disbursements, and discharged out of the freight which was in the hands of the Court, I think I am not without his authority for sanctioning the report of the registrar upon this point in the present case, and I am of opinion that the principle of the decision of the House of Lords in Bristowe v. Whitmore (3) is applicable to the case before me. It is a strong authority for saying that the mortgagee in possession, or the owner, ought not to be allowed to possess himself of this freight until the master has been indemnified for the labour and disbursements by which that freight was produced. I pass now to the consideration of the particular items which are objected to. The first, which is contained in the 7th paragraph of the pleading of the objections, is the ten days' double pay of 16*l.* 10*s.* I have in fact already disposed of this objection by pronouncing for the claim of the plaintiff upon the principal sum. It is a necessary consequence that I should disallow this objection. The next objection, in the 8th paragraph, for 38*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.*, for tobacco and slops supplied to seamen, who afterwards deserted,—the objection is, that these articles were furnished by the master on a private speculation of his own, and that the owner is not liable for them; but by invariable usage these articles have been considered as a part of the seamen's wages, and the master is as much entitled to be reimbursed for them as if he had advanced a portion of their wages in money. There is no doubt whatever that in an action brought by seamen for their wages against the owner he would be entitled to set off these articles as a part-payment of their wages. They fall, moreover, within the category of those deductions of which the master is required, by section 171. of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, to keep an account, as well as of their wages. Nor do I think that the fact that the master may make some small profit by supplying these articles affects the justice of his claim. It must be remembered that sailors usually come on board in a destitute condition, and are proverbially reckless as to the manner in which they supply their immediate wants; and it is really both for the interest of the owners of the vessel and for the sailors that this disbursement of the master should be upholden, and I shall uphold it. The only remaining objection, I think, is that which is contained in paragraph 10. in respect to item 19. It is a sum of 135*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.*, which was one of the bills drawn by the master on Mr. Klingender, the principal owner, in order to pay a commission upon a charter for the homeward conveyance of a cargo of cotton, whereby a large freight was to be earned. According to the report of the registrar the former of these two bills was duly paid, but the latter, which fell due on the 20th of August, 1866, was returned dishonoured by Mr. Klingender. It was stated by the master in his evidence that he had not received any notice of dishonour, and it was thereupon contended by the defendants that the master was no longer liable under the bill. On the other hand, a letter was produced from Messrs. Hull, Stone & Fletcher, the solicitors for the Bank of Hindustan, China and Japan (Limited), the holders of the bill, addressed to Messrs. Bateson & Co., who were then the solicitors for the master, in which they say, "We shall be glad to receive payment now, or to have some acknowledgment that the bank's claim is admitted, so that payment can be secured at some future time." In reply to which Messrs. Bateson & Co. say, "Mr. Baily is receiving all the freight, and is to hold a sum to cover all the liabilities of the master, and we trust there will be no difficulty in having all claims paid, the one you represent included." The merchants are of opinion that this letter from the master's solicitor may be taken as tantamount to a waiver of notice of dishonour, and that consequently the master would be liable under the bill; I shall therefore allow this item in the claim. The law as to the consequences of neglect to give notice is thus laid down by Byles, J., in his work upon Bills of Exchange, 254, 7th ed.: "The law," he says (I do not think it necessary to state the decisions from which he deduces his statement of the law), presumes that, if "the drawer has not had due notice, he is injured, because otherwise he might have immediately withdrawn his effects from the hands of the drawee. . . . The consequence, therefore, of neglect of notice is, that the party to whom it should have been given is discharged from all liability, whether on the bill or on the consideration for which the bill was paid." It may be questionable, I think, whether the master, by reason of his having drawn upon a co-owner, may not be considered as acceptor as well as drawer, and whether on this account any notice of dishonour was necessary. Moreover, it appears clear that he had no effects at any time in the hands of the acceptor, and Byles, J. states (p. 255) the law applicable to this state of things as follows: "If the drawer had no effects at any time during the currency of the bills in the hands of the acceptor, and will have no remedy against the acceptor or any other person if he be obliged to pay the bill, he cannot, in general, have been prejudiced by want of notice, and therefore cannot set that up as a defence." Again, looking to the nice distinctions taken on this subject, I am by no means certain that the merchants were not right in their opinion that the notice of dishonour, if any were necessary in this case, has been waived. But, lastly, it appears to me that a broader ground than any of those which have been alleged may be taken for sustaining the allowance of this sum by the registrar. The whole principle of this notice of dishonour is founded upon the notion of benefiting the drawer, and it appears to me not only that he has not been injured by the absence of notice, but that he has never taken such objection or set it up as a defence; and I do not understand how it is competent to the defendants, who represent the acceptor, to set up against the will of the drawer an objection of this kind, which he refuses to put forward. As to the objection in paragraph 11, section 2, I understand it to be waived. For these reasons, I shall confirm the report of the registrar; but, inasmuch as questions of law of great importance, as to the right solution of which considerable doubt might reasonably exist, have been discussed before me, I shall make no order as to the costs incurred by the objection to this report.

Sale of Vessel at suit of Mortgagee of three-fourths of the shares.

The plaintiffs, Messrs. W. S. Gavin & Peter W. Gavin, were mortgagees of forty-eight-sixty-fourth shares of the above-named, a Scotch vessel, and Mr. John Taylor Hopeman was the owner of the other shares.

Mr. C. P. Butt, upon affidavits that the sum of 387*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* was now due in respect of the mortgage, that there had been no appearance in the suit by the owner of those shares, and that notice of sale had been duly advertised, moved the Court to decree a sale of the vessel.

The COURT ordered that the owner of the one-fourth share should have notice of the intended sale, and upon proof of this fact to the satisfaction of the Registrar, and of no appearance that the decree of sale should issue.

Attorney—Rowland Miller for first mortgagees; Proctors—Rothery & Co., for second mortgagees.

Clarkson, Son & Cooper, for third mortgagees.

INDEX

DECIDED BY THE HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1867, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1868.

APPEAL—from salvage award by Justices: further evidence: "sum in dispute"—When in a claim for salvage, heard before magistrates, the sum in dispute exceeds 50*l.*, the High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain an appeal, even though the value of the property salvaged is under 1,000*l.* The Generous, 37

Semble—"The sum in dispute" (mentioned in the section of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, with reference to appeals) does not mean the sum awarded by the magistrates. Ibid.

— appeal from salvage award: inadequate amount—Unless the amount awarded by magistrates is wholly inadequate, the Court of Admiralty, upon appeal, will not disturb the award, even though the Court is of opinion that the magistrates should give a somewhat larger sum. The Jeune Louise, 32

BILL OF LADING—non-delivery of cargo: right of indorsee to sue—A cargo of timber was shipped to be unladen at S, "at the usual place of discharge, and according to the custom of the port." On arriving at S. the vessel at once proceeded to the South Dock in S, and was being moored there when the consignees' agent directed the master to remove her to the Gill Dock in S, which the master refused to do. Both docks were usual and customary places of discharge:—Held, that the master was not bound to lie in the river waiting for instructions, and was justified in at once mooring in the S. Dock, but that having received the instructions to discharge his cargo in the Gill Dock, he was bound to obey them. The Felix, 48

The bill of lading had been indorsed to P. & Co., who had agreed to sell the cargo to B. & Co., but the purchase-money had not been paid:—Held, that P. & Co. were proper parties to sue in respect of a breach of contract for delivery of the cargo. Ibid.

— right of indorsee to sue for damage to cargo—Indorsees of a bill of lading of goods consigned to them for sale had made advances of money upon the bill of lading:—Held, that to entitle the indorsee to sue for damage done to the goods mentioned in the bill of lading, it is not necessary that all the property in the goods should pass to them. The Piglia Maggiore, 52

BOTTOMRY—notice to owners of cargo: expenses already incurred; advance of freight: loan on freight—It is as much the duty of a master to give, or attempt to give, notice to the owners of cargo as to the owners of ship before executing a bottomry bond. The Karnak, 41

Though the debts which a master in need of repairs in a foreign port, has incurred may be personal, he may borrow money upon bottomry of ship, freight and cargo to pay them from any one not his creditor. Ibid.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it is presumed that a foreign lender makes advances in contemplation of bottomry, and this presumption is increased where the lex loci empowers the lender to arrest the ship in satisfaction. Ibid.

Difference between a loan secured on freight and advances of freight. Ibid.

COLLISION—sailing ship: duty of steamer: pleading—In a cause of collision between a sailing ship and a steamer, although the sailing ship may be found to have been guilty of misconduct, or not to have observed the sailing regulations, yet the steamer will be held culpable if it appears that it was in her power to have avoided the collision. Inman v. Reck; The City of Antwerp; and The Friedrich, 25

It is the duty of a steamer where there is risk of collision, whatever may be the conduct of the sailing vessel, to do everything in her power that can be done consistently with her own safety in order to avoid a collision. Ibid.

Where a steamer is charged for omitting to do something which she ought to have done, there must be clear proof, first, that the thing omitted to be done was clearly within the power of the steamer; secondly, that, if done, it would in all probability have prevented the collision; and, thirdly, that it was an act which would have occurred to any officer of competent skill and experience in command of the steamer. Ibid.

The party against whom a judgment is given in the Admiralty Court is entitled to know from the complaint of his adversary what is the default imputed to him, in order that he may have an opportunity of meeting the case by his defence. Ibid.

— damage by: compulsory pilotage: vessels carrying passengers—The owners of a wrong-doing vessel pleaded compulsory pilotage. It appeared that the master's wife and father-in-law were on board, and the master said he treated them as passengers, but no fare was demanded of them till after the collision:—Held, that the vessel was not "carrying passengers," so as to render it compulsory upon her owners to employ a pilot. The Lion, 39

— lights: inspection and report by Trinity Masters—A barque's side-lights were so placed in the mizen rigging that the centre of the lights did not project beyond the gunwale. They were two feet six inches within the broadest part of the vessel, and at a distance of more than 350 feet with the masts in line, they could not be seen from a window forty feet above the deck of another vessel.—Held, not to be a sufficient compliance with the regulations as to lights. The Germania, 59

The Court has power under the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, s. 18, to order an inspection of a vessel by Trinity Masters, and will direct that they be attended by the protectors, and a viewer on behalf of each party. Ibid.

COMPULSORY PILOTAGE. See Collision.

CONFLICT OF LAWS—collision in foreign waters: suit in England: compulsory pilotage—In a cause of damage in the High Court of Admiralty in England for a collision in Dutch waters by a Dutch ship against an English ship, it appeared that the collision was caused solely by the negligence of the pilot of the English ship, whom, by the Dutch law, the owners were compelled to take on board; but that, by the Dutch law (conflicting with the English law as declared by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854), the owners of a ship doing damage to another ship are liable to make good the damage, notwithstanding that the ship doing the damage complained of was at the time navigated by and in charge of a licensed pilot:—Held (by the Privy Council, overruling the judgment of the Admiralty Court, — see page 1), that an English Court of Justice will not enforce a foreign municipal law, or give a remedy in the shape of damages in respect of an act which, according to its own principles, imposes no liability on the person from whom the damage is claimed; and that the cause, being instituted in an English Court, ought to be decided by the principles of the law of England; and that the English ship was exempt from liability. The Liverpool, Brasil and River Plate Steam Nav. Co. v. Benham. The Halley, 38

FREIGHT—Loan on. See Bottomry.

JURISDICTION—disbursements by mate—The High Court of Admiralty has no jurisdiction to adjudicate upon a mate's claim for wages paid to the crew, and necessary disbursements in foreign ports. The Victoria, 12

— personal damage: award of arbitrator and subsequent suit—The High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction to entertain an action and to assess the damages in respect of personal injuries done by a ship. A claim for personal injury done by a ship was referred to arbitration, with a condition reserving the claimant's rights and remedies in case the award should not be performed. The arbitrator awarded 410*l.* which had not been paid:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the claimant had not barred himself of his right to sue in the Admiralty Court. The Sylph, 14

— wages under a special contract: foreign ship: notice to consul: protest: costs—The Admiralty Court Act, 1861, provides by section 10, that "the High Court of Admiralty shall have jurisdiction over any claim by a seaman of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship, whether the same be due under a special contract or otherwise, and also over any claim by the master of any ship for wages earned by him on board the ship, and for disbursements made by him on account of the ship." The Admiralty Rules, 1859, provide by rule 10, that "in a wages cause against a foreign vessel, notice of the institution of the cause shall be given to the consul of the State to which the vessel belongs, if there be one resident in London":—Held, that the object of this section was to extend the jurisdiction which the Court had in the ordinary case of wages to the case of wages under a special contract, and of disbursements on account of the ship. Held, also, that the High Court of Admiralty has jurisdiction, under section 10. of the above statute, to entertain a suit for wages against a foreign ship, the words of the act being "any" ship; but that the Court ought not to exercise jurisdiction without first giving notice to the consul of the nation to which such ship belongs. La Blanche v. Rangel ("The Nina") (Privy Coun.), 17

The protest of a foreign consul does not ipso facto operate as a bar to the prosecution of the suit; but the Court ought to determine according to its discretion, judicially exercised, whether, having regard to the reasons advanced by the consul, and the answers offered on behalf of a claimant, it is fit and proper that the suit should proceed or be stayed. Ibid.

The appellant (a British subject) having shipped on board a Portuguese ship as mate, and having signed an agreement to be bound by the law of Portugal, which required him to submit all differences between the master and seamen to the Portuguese consul, arrested the ship, and instituted a suit against the owners in the High Court of Admiralty in England for wages, whereupon the Portuguese consul entered a protest against the proceedings:—Held, (affirming the judgment of the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty), that the suit ought to be dismissed and the ship released, but without costs. Ibid.

LIEN—garnishee order: priority—Plaintiff having obtained a decree for payment by defendant of a sum of money for costs, the defendant, under the authority of two garnishee orders, paid part of the sum to judgment creditors of the plaintiff. No notice had been given to the plaintiff's proctor previous to the application for the garnishee orders, nor was the existence of the proctor's lien mentioned to the Judge who made the orders:—Held, that the defendant was still liable to pay the costs decreed. The Leader, 57

MORTGAGE—Sale of vessel at suit of mortgagee of three-fourths of the shares. The Fairlie, 66

NEGLECT—damage done by a ship to a break-water: duties of master and dockmaster—A dockmaster is invested with a discretion to be exercised for the benefit of all the ships in the harbour, and the master of a vessel is therefore bound to obey the dockmaster, and to assist in the removal of his ship, even though if the interests of the ship alone might be considered the removal was injudicious. The Excelsior, 54
A ship after having been moored in a dock, was subsequently, by order of the dockmaster, removed to another part from which, by the negligence of her master and his disobedience of the dockmaster's orders, she broke loose and damaged the docks:—Held, that the ship was liable for the damage. Ibid.

PRACTICE—Hearing new evidence on appeal from salvage award. See Appeal.

SALVAGE—collision: assistance to wrong-doer by tug of innocent vessel—Two vessels having come into collision, a tug towing the innocent vessel rendered assistance to the wrong-doer:—Held, that the tug was entitled to salvage remuneration. The Queen, 12

— refusal to allow the crew of the salvaged vessel to assist in the salvage—The Court will not lay down any general rule, but will be guided by the circumstances of each case in determining whether or not the master of the salvors' vessel is justified in refusing to allow the crew of the salvaged vessel to return to their own ship before the completion of the salvage. The Cleopatra, 81

— Salvage award by Justices. See Appeal.

TRINITY MASTERS—Inspection by. See Collision.

WAGES — priority — Bottomry bond on ship, freight and cargo; proceeds of ship and freight insufficient:—Held, that though the master bound himself by the bond, and was also a part-owner of the vessel, the owners of part of the cargo cannot oppose his right to be paid his wages and disbursements in priority to the bondholder. The Daring, 29

— master's wages and disbursements: master part owner—When freight has been earned, the master of the ship, though also part owner, may sue in the Admiralty Court to recover his wages and disbursements. The Peronia, 60

Upon an appeal from the report of the Registrar and Merchants as to a master's claim for wages and disbursements, the following items were objected to: 1. Sums of money for which the master as well as the ship was liable, but which he had not paid; 2. Slops supplied to seamen, who afterwards deserted; 3. The amount of a dishonoured bill of exchange drawn for ship's purposes by the master upon the managing owner, but it was doubtful whether the master had received notice of the dishonour:—Held, as to the first item that the claim may be allowed upon proof to the satisfaction of the Registrar that the sums are actually paid; 2. That the items for slops were properly allowed as disbursements; 3. That as to the amount of the bill of exchange even if notice of dishonour had not been waived, the master had not claimed the benefit of notice, and that therefore as he was liable for the amount, the item was properly allowed. Ibid.

1867. } DAUNT v. CROCKER AND
Nov. 2. } OTHERS.

Criminal Suit—Bell Ringing—Consent of Incumbent—Pleading—Practice—Notice of Objection.

The control of the church bells belongs to the incumbent; but to constitute an ecclesiastical offence, it is not sufficient to allege that the ringing complained of took place without his consent; it must be against his wishes, expressed either in a general or particular prohibition.

When it is intended to oppose the admission of a pleading in the Court of Arches, a notice must be filed stating the grounds of the objection.

This was a suit brought in the Court of Arches by letters of request from the Chancellor of the diocese of Exeter, and instituted by the Rev. Edward Synger Townsend Daunt, clerk, incumbent of the perpetual curacy of St. Stephen-by-Launceston, in the county of Cornwall and diocese of Exeter, against William Crocker, carpenter, William Stapleton, blacksmith, Thomas Reed, labourer, Thomas Walters, carpenter, Thomas Benoy, domestic servant, John Benoy, wheelwright, William Jackson, labourer, Thomas Stripling, carpenter, Matthew Masters, carpenter, all of the parish of St. Stephen-by-Launceston, and against Charles Reed, labourer, of the parish of St. Thomas-near-Launceston. The decree or citation set out the offence charged upon the defendants as follows: "For that they, some or one of them, on or about the 9th of September, 1866, unlawfully broke into the belfry of the parish church of St. Stephen-by-Launceston, and without lawful authority, and contrary to the express wish of the said Edward Synger Townsend Daunt, as perpetual curate of the said parish, rang the bells of the said church; and also at or about the same time removed the lock from the door of the said belfry of the said church"; and that thereby they had offended against the laws ecclesiastical.

The articles commenced by stating, that by the laws ecclesiastical and constitutions ecclesiastical of the realm, the custody of the keys of the church and belfry is in the ecclesiastical rector, vicar, perpetual curate, minister or incumbent of the church and parish; and that it is unlawful for any parishioner or other person to take the lock off the door of the belfry of the parish church, or otherwise to break into the belfry of, or to ring the bells belonging to, such church without the leave or sanction of the minister thereof. The articles objected to were: "4. That, notwithstanding the premises, on or about the 8th of September, 1866, the said defendants, namely, &c., all or some one or more of them, surreptitiously, and without the leave or sanction of the said Rev. E. S. T. Daunt, obtained possession of the keys of the said parish church of St. Stephen-by-Launceston; and thereupon, on the 8th of September, or on the following morning, without the leave or knowledge of the said Rev. E. S. T. Daunt, all or some one or more of them, aided and abetted by the others, entered the said church, and proceeded through the same to the outer door thereof leading to the tower or belfry of the said church, and thereupon, without the knowledge or leave of the said Rev. E. S. T. Daunt, and without any just cause or lawful authority, forcibly removed the lock from off the said door leading to the said belfry or tower of the said church, in manifest breach and violation of the laws and canons ecclesiastical which they were and are obliged to observe and obey. 5. That on the 9th of September, 1866 (Sunday), the said defendants, after having entered the belfry of the said church, they, or some one or more of them, without good cause allowed by the said Rev. E. S. T. Daunt, and without his consent, rang the bells belonging to the said church, or some one or more of the said bells, in manifest breach and violation of the laws and canons ecclesiastical, which they were and are bound to observe and obey." The articles concluded with the usual prayer, that the defendants should be admonished to refrain from like behaviour for the future, and be condemned in the costs incurred and to be incurred in the cause.

[Before the argument commenced, the Dean of the Arches (SIR R. PHILLIMORE) stated, that for the future he should require that a notice under rules 7. and 11 (Rules and Regulations, 1867) (1) shall contain the grounds of objection intended to be taken against the admission of the pleading before the Court. He considered such a course would be the most convenient for all the parties.]

Dr. Swabey, for the defendants, opposed the admission of the 4th and 5th articles.—As regards the 4th, he objected that it was not an ecclesiastical offence to obtain the keys of the church surreptitiously, and that if it were, no such offence was laid in the letters of request or citation. Moreover, it being a criminal suit, the charge of breaking into the belfry should be attributed to some individual, and not to some one or more of ten individuals. That, as to the 5th article, there should be an allegation, in accordance with the citation, that the ringing of the bells was against the express wish of the incumbent; otherwise no ecclesiastical offence is set out. For it cannot be contended that the bell-ringers should be required on every occasion to obtain the sanction of the incumbent before they commenced to ring. Non constat that there was not a custom in the parish to ring the bells on certain occasions—Burn's Eccl. Law (by Phillimore), 'Bells,' vol. 1, p. 135. Canon 88, which directs the churchwardens not to allow the bells to be rung superstitiously, nor without good cause, to be allowed by the minister of the place and by themselves, does not make it an ecclesiastical offence the not obtaining the sanction of the minister of the parish and the churchwardens on every occasion.

(1) 7. "The proctor for the party cited shall declare by notice in writing to be left in the registry within eight days after his being furnished with a copy of the articles, libel or plea whether or not he opposes the admission thereof."

11. "The same time shall be allowed for the other proctor to declare whether the responsive plea is admitted or opposed."

[SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—Surely, on the other hand, the minister is not required to express a dissent on each occasion. It would certainly be sufficient if he had given a general dissent; if, for instance, he had announced that he would not allow the bells to be rung without his special authority.]

Dr. Swabey.—In all the cases which have been before this Court there had been a request made to the ringers to desist, which they had refused to obey.—He cited Nolan v. Bragg and Dowsett (the Prattwell case), Sept. 1840 (2), Redhead v. Wait (3) and Lee v. Mathews (4).

Dr. Spinks (Dr. Tristram with him), for the promoter, said it was not intended to allege that the surreptitiously obtaining possession of the key was a distinct offence; those words were only inserted historically, to shew in what way the defendants reached the belfry. That, as to the 5th article, it was sufficient to state, as they had done, that the ringing was without good cause allowed by the incumbent, and without his consent.—He referred to Harrison v. Forbes and Sisson (5).

SIR R. PHILLIMORE ordered the words "surreptitiously and" in the 4th article to be struck out; and, in the 5th, the words "against his express wish" to be introduced before the words "rang the bells belonging to the said church." He thought it his duty to remind the defendants that, if they were proved to have been guilty of the offence alleged, he would be compelled to admonish them to abstain for the future, and to condemn them in the costs. If they had no good defence, they had better at once take steps to stop the proceedings in the suit.

Nov. 2, 21. } ADLAM v. COLTHURST.

Churchyard—Removal of Human Remains to a Field adjoining—Monition to restore—Field not in Occupation of Defendant—Contempt—Practice.

The Court having determined that the defendant had offended against the laws ecclesiastical by removing without lawful authority human bones from the churchyard of his parish to an adjoining field, issued a monition to him to replace such bones and the earth with them in the burial-ground before a certain day. The defendant failed to comply with this monition, alleging as a reason that the field in which such bones and earth had been placed was no longer in his occupation or possession:—Held, that his conduct amounted to a contempt of the Court, and that unless he obeyed the monition within six days and certified the same, the Court would pronounce him to be in contempt, and signify the contempt to the Court of Chancery.

This suit was instituted, by William Adlam, against John Colthurst, an inhabitant and parishioner and one of the churchwardens of the parish of Chew Magna, in the county of Somerset and diocese of Bath and Wells, and was brought by letters of request from the Consistorial Court of that diocese. The charge against the defendant and the pleadings are set out in 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. Cas. 14.

On the 15th and 16th of May, 1867, the witnesses were examined, and on the latter day the Dean of the Arches (Dr. Lushington) decreed that the promotor had sufficiently proved the articles admitted in the cause, and that the said John Colthurst, the defendant, had offended against the laws ecclesiastical by removing or causing to be removed earth and bones from the burial-ground of Chew Magna aforesaid, and did admonish him to refrain therefrom, and ordered the said John Colthurst to replace or cause to be replaced within the said burial-ground the earth and bones so removed as aforesaid, and condemned him in the sum of 100*l.* nomine expensarum. On the 15th of June Dr. Lushington further ordered a monition to issue against the said John Colthurst, admonishing him to obey such order or decree of the Court, and to file in the registry a certificate that he had so done on or before the 7th of July. This monition was personally served upon the defendant on the 25th of June.

He was subsequently permitted to file an answer to such monition, which answer was to the following effect: "That the said John Colthurst is ready and willing to obey the orders of the honourable Judge so far as he can so do, but that he is prevented from obeying all those orders, namely, to replace or cause to be replaced within the said burial-ground such earth and bones and other remains as may have been removed by him from the said burial-ground, and to pay the sum of 100*l.*, for the following reasons: First, that the field or meadow in which the earth from the said churchyard was placed has ceased to be the property, or in the occupation, or under the control of the said John Colthurst; that shortly previous to the marriage of a daughter of the said John Colthurst with Henry Bromfield, to wit, on the 3rd of October, 1866, the whole of the interest of the said John Colthurst in the said field or meadow was transferred by him to trustees for the use and benefit of his said daughter and the said Henry Bromfield, and the field or meadow has become and is now vested in the said trustees for the uses of the said settlement. Secondly, that on the order or decree made by the honourable Judge on the 16th of May last becoming known to the said Henry Bromfield, he, as the agent of such trustees, and without any communication with the defendant, wrote to Mungo Munro, the bailiff of the farm, a letter, dated the 17th of May, 1867, in which, referring to such order, he said, 'I wish it to be distinctly understood, that none of my horses or carts shall be employed in bringing it (the earth and bones alluded to in the order) back; nor will I, so far as I have legal power to prevent them, allow any one to go into the Ham, at any rate before the grass is mown, to take the earth away;' that on the receipt of that letter, Mr. Munro communicated the contents to the defendant, and put up a board in the field called the Ham, and also in an adjacent field, through which there is a considerable thoroughfare, containing a notice that trespassers off the public path would be prosecuted. Thirdly, that since the service of the monition, the defendant has applied to Mr. Bromfield for permission to obey it so far as he can; but by a letter dated the 3rd of July, 1867, Mr. Bromfield refused such permission, and further gave the defendant a formal notice not to enter on the field for the purpose of interfering therewith or removing therefrom any of the soil. Fourthly, that the defendant, by reason of his having become chairman to and connected with a certain railway, namely, the Bristol and North Somerset Railway Company, was adjudicated a bankrupt at the Court of Bankruptcy for the Bristol district on the 25th of February, 1867, and still continues to be a bankrupt under the protection of that Court, and has thereby been deprived of the whole of his property of every description, and is consequently without funds."

A reply to this statement was also filed, which alleged that Mr. Colthurst still resided at Chew Court with an unmarried daughter and servants, and is apparently in the possession and occupation of the farm and lands (including the field or meadow called the Ham in which the earth from the churchyard was placed) belonging to and forming part of the Chew Court estate, and that his son-in-law, Mr. Bromfield, is not in occupation of the said house or farm, but resides at Stratford-on-Avon; that Mr. Colthurst, at the time of the execution of the settlement made on the marriage of his daughter, reserved to himself an interest in Chew Court and farm and the lands belonging thereto, and that his name still remains on the list of voters for the county in respect of the Chew Court estate; that as regards his bankruptcy, the adjudication on the 25th of February, 1867, could not discharge the defendant from his liability to pay the sum of 100*l.* nomen expensarum, as ordered by the decree and monition of the Court.

A rejoinder by the defendant stated that he only resided at Chew Court by the permission of Mr. Bromfield, who has a lease from the trustees of the house, farm and lands belonging thereto, which are at present managed by his bailiff, and that Mr. Bromfield, as the tenant, pays the rates and taxes for the same; that the defendant made no reservation in the settlement, save a certain reversion for life in the produce in the event only of the sale of the said estate.

Affidavits were filed on both sides, and Mr. Bromfield stated in his that being extremely desirous under the circumstances to stop the proceedings in this suit, in April, 1867, he had an interview with Mr. Adlam, and offered, on his own responsibility, to take back from the field or meadow into which the soil from the churchyard had been removed a certain quantity of the soil to the churchyard, saying at the same time it was impossible to guarantee it being the very same as was removed, by reason that it must have got mixed with the original soil of the field; that after considerable discussion, no agreement was come to, because Mr. Adlam declined any terms unless Mr. Bromfield would guarantee the payment of all the costs incurred in the suit. Mr. Bromfield told Mr. Adlam at that interview that the field was in his occupation.

Dr. Deane, for Mr. Colthurst, contended that under the circumstances of the case the Court would not enforce its monition. Before the commencement of the proceedings in this suit, namely, in October, 1866, Mr. Colthurst transferred all his interest in the estate of which the field (into which the bones and earth had been removed from the churchyard) formed part to trustees, and had ceased to have any right thereto, or any control over it, and the tenant had given him formal notice that he would not allow the meadow to be disturbed. The Court will not order the defendant to enter another man's close and break the soil of a person not a party to the suit against his wishes—Lex non cogit ad impossibilia. On this point he referred to Sieveling v. Kingsford (1). As regards the costs, on the 25th of February, 1867, Mr. Colthurst became a bankrupt, and obtained an interim protection order, whereby he is protected from arrest for the costs of this suit—Wallinger v. Gurney (2), Dickens v. Dickens (3), and Griffiths's Law and Practice in Bankruptcy, 206.

[SIR R. PHILLIMORE wished to know whether the argument went so far as this, that if a person removed all the bones in the churchyard to another man's field, therefore this Court could not order the offender to restore them to the churchyard.]

Dr. Deane said that was his argument.

Dr. Spinks and Dr. Swabey, for Mr. Adam.—The duty of the Court is merely ministerial. All the facts were before Dr. Lushington, and with the full knowledge of them he ordered the monition to issue. The Court will not reverse Dr. Lushington's decision. When Mr. Colthurst transferred the meadow to trustees, he had no right to and could not transfer the bones and soil removed from the churchyard. As to the costs, as Mr. Colthurst after his bankruptcy continued to defend the suit without reasonable cause, he was probably not protected by the interim order. At any rate, the Court will not decide that question, but pronounce him in contempt for non-obedience to its order.—They referred to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134. s. 159.

[SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—I wish I could assent to the proposition laid down by Dr. Spinks, that the duty of the Court is only ministerial. I cannot take that view. The late learned Judge ordered the defendant to file a statement of the grounds of his objections to the enforcement of the monition, thereby admitting that some objection might be taken. It is my duty to consider what has been proved on one side or the other. I will not now give judgment. I think it due to the case itself and to the argument that I should take time to consider my decision.]

SIR R. PHILLIMORE (Nov. 21).—This cause was argued before me on the 2nd of November, and my judgment would have been given shortly afterwards, had I not been requested to delay it for a few days, on the ground that there was a prospect of the matter being arranged out of court. That prospect has disappeared, and I can no longer delay my decision. The reasons assigned by the defendant for non-compliance with the order of the Court, both as to the payment of the costs and the restoring the bones and earth which had been so improperly removed, are these; that he is a bankrupt, and cannot pay the 100*l.*; and, secondly, that the field into which he has removed the bones and earth out of the churchyard is no longer his, for he has transferred it to trustees on the marriage of his daughter, and that he cannot lawfully enter upon it for the purpose of obeying the order of the Court. Looking at the whole of the circumstances of this case, as set forth in the judgment of my predecessor, and the date and character of the pleadings before him, and the minutes of the Court, I have no doubt whatever that one, if not both, of these excuses have been resorted to with the deliberate intention of rendering nugatory and treating with contempt the decree of the Court. With regard to the bankruptcy, it is alleged that the defendant became bankrupt before the decree of this Court was made; that he had a protecting order from the Bankruptcy Court, which protects him from the process of this Court. The case cited, Wallinger v. Gurney (2), shews that the production of an interim order under the 5 & 6 Vict. c. 116. s. 1. justifies the sheriff in discharging an insolvent out of his custody under a writ of execution, although the debt for which the execution creditor had recovered judgment did not exist until the insolvent's petition had been filed. Therefore, if it be true that the order which Mr. Colthurst has obtained be of this kind, and protects him from debts incurred subsequently to that order, he will, under the authority of this case, be entitled to be discharged by the sheriff on the production of that order, though he is arrested under the writ issuing in consequence of the decree of this Court. It may, however, be that these costs are not a debt provable under the defendant's present petition in Bankruptcy. It may also be,—looking to the date of the defensive allegation given in by Mr. Colthurst in this case, namely, the 21st of February, which allegation was the cause, according to Dr. Lushington, of most unnecessary expense, and the date of the bankruptcy, namely, the 25th of February, and also to the fact that Mr. Colthurst persisted in carrying on a defence which entirely failed, and in which his creditors could in no event have had the slightest interest,—it may be, I think, that Mr. Colthurst will not obtain an extended or fresh order of protection by which he will be enabled to evade this part of the sentence of the Court. At all events, I think the promoter has a right to call upon the Court to endeavour to enforce the decree for costs which he has obtained in his favour. Let me say a word upon the character of the offence of which Mr. Colthurst has been proved guilty. I cannot consider it as one of a trivial character. To remove the bones of parishioners from a churchyard into a field, where they are to serve the purpose of manure, is a great affront to the feelings of Christian men, a grave violation of the rights of parishioners, as well as plainly contrary to the law of the land. The act is not less liable to this censure if it be done by a churchwarden, and, as in this case, after he has been apprised of its illegality. Mr. Colthurst may be guiltless, as I have no doubt he was, of any deliberate intention to hurt the feelings of any one, and may have persuaded himself that no regard for the remains of bodies ought to prevent the making of an improved pathway to the church. This feeling, however, of respect and pious care for the dead bodies of Christian men is deeply rooted in the inhabitants of this country; it is hallowed by many associations, religious and moral, which the law recognizes, and which it is the desire of our Church to cherish and promote. The language of the prayer by which a churchyard is consecrated, while it expresses the mind of the Church, is in harmony with the feelings of the poor as well as the rich parishioner. "O God, who has taught us, . . . by the example of thy holy servants in all ages, to assign peculiar places where the bodies of thy saints may rest in peace, and be preserved from all indignities while their souls are safely kept in the hand of their Redeemer," &c. The rest of the prayer breathes the same spirit. A great indignity, however unintentional, has been inflicted on the bones of parishioners in this case, and it is within the especial duty and province of this Court to take care that the indignity, as far as possible, may be repaired. It is contended, however, by the counsel for Mr. Colthurst, that as he has transferred the field in which he placed the bones and soil to trustees on behalf of Mr. Bromfield, his son-in-law, and that Mr. Bromfield will not permit him to enter such field for the purpose of executing the order of the Court, therefore the Court should decline to enforce its order, and the case of Seecching v. Kingsford (1) was referred to on this point. In the case of Seecching v. Kingsford (1) the monition to replace, among other things, certain chairs, was not enforced by consent of the Court and the promoter of its office, because it was admitted they had been sold and could not be traced; that case, therefore, is totally different from this. Before noticing the general argument, I think it advisable to call attention to certain dates and facts as they appear in the evidence. On the 6th of September, 1866, Mr. Colthurst was warned by Mr. Adam that he was doing an illegal act in removing the bones and soil from the churchyard into the field, yet he persisted in doing so. On the 3rd of October he transferred, by deed, the field, with other property, to trustees for the use of his daughter and his son-in-law, Mr. Bromfield. And here I will ask, what right had Mr. Colthurst to transfer to any one these bones and the earth from the churchyard?

(1) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. 1.

(2) 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 55.

(3) 2 Sw. & Tr. 645; s.c. 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Pr. M. & A. 183.

On the 10th of December the proceedings commenced in this court, by the issuing of a decree. The articles were filed on the 9th of January, and on the 10th the trustees leased to Mr. Bromfield, the son-in-law and one of the cotuis que trust, the field about which so much has been said. It is to be observed that the trustees make no opposition to the order of the Court, but merely state they have leased the land to Mr. Bromfield. On the 16th of May the Court made the order against Mr. Colthurst. On the 17th of May Mr. Bromfield writes the letter to his bailiff, shewing clearly the concert between him and his father-in-law to set the Court at defiance. The monition is served on the 25th of June, and on the 3rd of July what I must call a farce is enacted between Mr. Colthurst and Mr. Bromfield, who, living in the same house, write letters to each other, evidently for the purpose of being used in this court, the father-in-law asking for leave to enter the field and remove the bones, and the son-in-law refusing it. The Court must be blind indeed to be deceived by such devices as these. Moreover, it appears that at one time Mr. Bromfield did offer to allow the bones to be removed, if costs were not pressed against Mr. Colthurst, and even during the last few days he has again offered to allow a certain portion, but a certain portion only, of the soil and bones to be removed. This has been done, it is said, in consequence of a suggestion from me, that I hoped this matter might be arranged out of court. Apart from the considerations applicable to this particular case, let me consider the general argument addressed to the Court by the counsel for Mr. Colthurst. The object of it was to shew that this Court has no longer any jurisdiction. This argument carried to its legitimate extent, as admitted by Dr. Deane, would amount to this, that if a man illegally removes from consecrated soil all the bones therein interred, even those that only a few hours before had been reverently placed there by the pious care of the sorrowing survivors, and before the law can be put in motion against him, transfers to a relative, as in this case, or to any purchaser, the land which had received the sacred deposit, the parishioners can have no redress for the wrong inflicted upon them, perhaps by the churchwarden, whose solemn duty it was to protect them. The case is without remedy, and this Court, in whose custody the law has placed the church and churchyard, is powerless to enforce the law, to redress the wrong, and to punish the wrongdoer. I do not believe in this doctrine, and, until better informed, I will not recognize it as law. I adopt the language of Dr. Lushington when the case was last before him: "It was hinted that by possibility an impediment might be raised because the property is not now Mr. Colthurst's. I will not believe that the order of the Court will be so contumaciously resisted. Be that as it may, I shall not be alarmed by that intimation." Nor will I be so alarmed or deterred from the endeavour to execute this judgment by being told that the wrongdoer has, since the wrong done, deliberately put it out of his power to redress it. I am not satisfied it was competent to Mr. Colthurst to transfer to trustees for the benefit of his son-in-law and his daughter the consecrated earth. He could only transfer what was his property: this soil and these bones were never his property. But if so, he must take the consequences of his act. The Court has ordered him to replace the bones of the parishioners and the soil, as far as practicable, in the churchyard, and he refuses to do so. It only remains for me to enforce, to the best of my power, the lawful order made by my predecessor, to pronounce Mr. Colthurst in contempt, and to order the same to be signified to the Court of Chancery in the usual manner.

Having discharged my duty in delivering this judgment, I have still two remarks to which I desire to draw the attention of counsel. First, upon the general subject of alterations in churches and churchyards. If a faculty had been applied for, as it ought to have been in this instance, the objections of the parishioners would have been heard, the law would have been explained, the Ordinary would have given proper directions with respect to the decent arrangement of the bones and the earth, all the expenses of this suit would have been saved, and all the strife in the parish avoided. Secondly, with respect to this particular case, I still think it possible that the necessity for sending Mr. Colthurst to prison for contempt may be avoided. It has occurred to me that if both parties were to consent that the archdeacon or rural dean should superintend the removal of the earth and bones back into the churchyard, any difficulties respecting the question of earth to be replaced together with the bones might be avoided, and also by the intervention of a third person clothed with an official character all feelings of bitterness between the parties might be removed, and the peace of the parish restored; and in that case the archdeacon or rural dean might certify to the Court generally that, in his opinion, the order of the Court had been sufficiently complied with. I earnestly press this suggestion upon both parties. If I receive a proper intimation that it will be complied with, I will not decree the contumacy and contempt of the defendant to be formally recorded upon the minutes of the Court; and on receiving the certificate of the archdeacon or rural dean, I will dismiss the suit (4). In the hopes that this suggestion may be adopted, I will suspend for six days the formal pronouncing of the defendant to have been guilty of contumacy and contempt; but after the lapse of that time, if I receive no such intimation, I shall, without further discussion, pronounce the defendant contumacious and in contempt, and signify the same to the High Court of Chancery.

This suit was instituted, under the Church Discipline Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, against the Rev. John Robinson, the rector of the parish church of Bowness, in the county of Cumberland and diocese of Carlisle. The offences charged were alleged to have been committed when the defendant was employed as assistant curate in a parish in the diocese of Oxford. The Bishop of Oxford, on the application of the Bishop of Carlisle, having issued a commission to inquire into the matters charged against the defendant, the Commissioners reported that there was prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings. Ultimately, the suit was sent by letters of request to the Chancery Court of York; and articles were exhibited in that Court against the defendant. These articles were approved and signed by Mr. Shepherd, a barrister-at-law, who is not a member of the College of Advocates at Doctors' Commons.

Dr. Deane opposed the admission of the articles.—The suit being a criminal suit, the requirements of the statute must be strictly complied with. The articles have not been signed and approved by an advocate practising at Doctors' Commons, as required by the 7th section of the Church Discipline Act, and cannot be admitted.

Bayford, for the promotor, contended that the clause in the 7th section must be taken to mean that the articles must be approved and signed by a person practising as an advocate in the Arches Court of Canterbury; and that such reading now includes the whole Bar.

The COURT admitted the articles.

Faculty to erect a Pulpit—Opposition of the Parishioners—Conditional Grant.

At the time of the erection of a new church, which on consecration became the parish church of A, the foundations were laid and the designs prepared for a stone pulpit, but, from want of funds at the time, a temporary wooden pulpit was placed in the church. Some years afterwards, certain persons connected with the parish gave directions for the execution of the new pulpit, and, having raised a portion of the estimated cost of it by voluntary contributions, and given security for the rest, so that the parish could not incur any liability in the matter, they applied to the proper Court for leave to fix it in the church. The defendants, acting on a resolution of the vestry of the parish, refused to consent to the erection of the new pulpit until the debt for the building of the church itself had been paid off. No objection was made to the character or ornamentation of the proposed new pulpit:—Held, that, as the parish had already provided a substantial pulpit, which continued in good order and was in no way dilapidated, the Court could not, against the expressed objection of the vestry, order the removal of such temporary pulpit, and that it should be replaced by a new one; but it might allow a faculty to issue on the terms proposed by the vestry.

This was an application for a faculty to erect a stone pulpit in the parish church of St. Mary, Stoke Newington, Middlesex, promoted by the Rev. Thomas Jackson, clerk; the rector of that parish, against Messrs. Singer and Carson, two of the parishioners of the same.

ton, for a faculty authorizing the erection of a permanent pulpit in the said church, in place of the temporary pulpit now placed there. The petition of the rector recites that at the time when the said church was erected, a proper foundation was laid for a pulpit of the dimensions and character suitable to the size and construction of the church; that a temporary pulpit was then placed therein, which has now become dilapidated; that the architect of the church has furnished designs for a permanent pulpit, the estimated cost of which is about 200*l.*, which will be defrayed by subscriptions raised for the express purpose, and which at present amount to 170*l.*; that the subject having been brought before a vestry meeting, held on the 26th of December, 1865, duly convened for that purpose, the proposition for the erection of such pulpit was negatived by a majority, on the ground that the subsisting debt for the erection of the church should be first provided for. The decree having been duly served, an appearance was given on behalf of the churchwardens of the parish and others of the parishioners, and they prayed to be heard in objection to the grant of the proposed faculty. Their petition, which consists of thirteen articles, after going into various questions connected with the past history of the building and furnishing of the church, and the various collections of money made from time to time in furtherance of the same, alleges that the existing pulpit is in no way dilapidated, and is well suited and sufficient for the purpose; that the moneys necessary to defray the cost of erecting the proposed new pulpit are not yet collected, and the parishioners will, in breach of a previous agreement, be called upon to contribute to a fund to defray the expenses of erecting it; and that at the vestry meeting, held on the 26th of November, 1865, a resolution was duly proposed and seconded, and was carried by a large majority of the parishioners there assembled, in the following words, "That having heard with regret that it is intended to incur further expenses in enlarging the organ, and also in the erection of a new pulpit, without first making provision for the discharge of the debt incurred in the erection of the church, this vestry strongly deprecates such a proceeding." No objection has been raised by the parishioners in vestry assembled to the style or character of the proposed pulpit; and the Court has reason to believe, from the drawing submitted to it, that it is perfectly unobjectionable in its design and ornamentation, and that it will be, in an architectural point of view, a suitable completion to the furniture of the church. It further appears from the affidavit of Mr. Singer, the vestry clerk of the parish, that after service of the decree in this cause on the 22nd of February, 1867, at a meeting of the parishioners in vestry assembled, it was resolved unanimously that the vestry clerk should be instructed to enter an appearance to the citation, and to offer no opposition to the issue of the faculty for the erection of the said pulpit, provided it be shewn, to the satisfaction of the Court, that the costs of such pulpit are fully defrayed by voluntary contributions, and that the debt incurred in the erection of the church is first paid off. Under these circumstances, and on an occasion of this kind, where both the parties are actuated by such praiseworthy motives, the rector being desirous to promote the good work of completing the furniture of the parish church in a suitable manner, the vestry on the other hand preferring to remove from the parish church the burden of an existing debt, and jealous of allowing any further debt to be incurred, the Court was anxious that an understanding or arrangement might have been arrived at between the parties, whereby the objects which both parties have in view might be attained, and that harmony restored in this parish which seems at one time to have been a distinguishing feature of the relations between the present rector and his parishioners. The counsel for the rector, in the course of his address to the Court, stated that the whole of the funds necessary for defraying the expenses of the proposed new pulpit have been now collected, and the Court has been furnished with an affidavit since the hearing of the cause, from which it appears that the architects have acknowledged the payment of the money due to them for the execution of the pulpit. So far, then, one of the grounds upon which the vestry clerk was instructed to oppose the grant of this faculty, may be held to be removed. It remains to be considered whether, under this altered state of circumstances, the opposition of the parishioners ought to be overlooked by the Court. If the proposed new pulpit were a necessary article of church furniture, which the churchwardens were bound by the requirements of the laws ecclesiastical to supply at the common charge of the parishioners, and, the parishioners having neglected to perform their duty in that respect, the rector was proposing to make good their neglect by the voluntary aid of certain loyal parishioners, and prayed a faculty to authorize the erection of a pulpit at their private expense, the Court would have little difficulty in authorizing the rector to discharge the duty which ought to have been fulfilled by the churchwardens; but in the present case I find in the affidavit made by the vestry clerk that the present pulpit in the said church is a sufficiently substantial erection, in good order, and not in any way dilapidated, and although a counter affidavit on behalf of the rector and two of the parishioners states that the present pulpit is not a substantial erection, but is made of common stained deal, slightly put together and cannot properly be fixed to the fabric as a permanent structure, there is no affidavit in support of the original statement in the rector's petition that the present pulpit has become dilapidated, which is set out in the citation as one of the grounds upon which the faculty is prayed. The evidence, therefore, so far fails in an important respect, and there is no neglect of duty shewn on the part of the churchwardens and the parishioners in supplying a pulpit which satisfies the 83rd canon ordering the churchwardens or questmen, at the common charge of the parishioners, in every church to provide a comely and decent pulpit; and when I am called upon to grant the present faculty, I must bear in mind that I am called upon to authorize the rector to remove from the church the present pulpit, which is parish property and in no way unfit for use, against the strong remonstrances of the parishioners assembled in vestry. I am not disposed to overrule their opposition, for I think that they have a legal right to object to the issuing of the faculty, and that the conditions upon which they instructed the vestry clerk to forego any further opposition were reasonable conditions. I shall decree the faculty, but I shall instruct the Registrar not to allow it to issue until a certificate is lodged in the registry that the balance of the debt incurred in the erection of the church has been paid off. I consider that the exhibition of that certificate will satisfy the condition upon which the vestry clerk was instructed on behalf of the parishioners to make no further opposition. I trust that all parties will co-operate to bring about this result as speedily as possible. I shall make no order as to the costs of these proceedings.

1868. } THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER
Feb. 5. } v. RUGG.

Church Discipline Act—Neglect to Perform Divine Services—Consecrated Building in the Parish—1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. ss. 77, 109.—Jurisdiction—Protest.

The 109th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, which enacts that in every case in which jurisdiction is given by the act to the bishop of the diocese for the purposes thereof, and the enforcing the due execution of the provisions thereof, all other and concurrent jurisdiction in respect thereof shall wholly cease, will not apply to prevent the bishop instituting proceedings against a beneficed clergyman, under the Church Discipline Act, for omitting to perform, or provide for the performance of public divine service in a consecrated building within his parish; the provisions of the statute 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. sec. 77. only applying to cases where the services of any benefice have been inadequately performed, not where they have been omitted altogether.

Although an incumbent of a parish has a right to object to the consecration of a building within his parish, if the bishop overrules such objection, and proceeds to consecrate the building, such consecration will not be invalid by reason of the dissent of the incumbent.

This was a cause of the office of the Judge promoted by the Bishop of Winchester against the Rev. Lewis Rugg, clerk, the incumbent of the perpetual curacy of Ecchinswell-cum-Sydmonton, in the county of Southampton and diocese of Winchester, under the Church Discipline Act, and brought into the Court of Arches by letters of request. The offence, as stated in the letters of request and citation, was as follows: "That the Rev. Lewis Rugg has offended against the laws ecclesiastical by having omitted to perform, or to provide for the performance of public divine service as prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, and administration of the Sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies, according to the use of the Church of England, in the church of St. Mary, Sydmonton, within the said perpetual curacy of Ecchinswell-cum-Sydmonton, on Sunday the 12th of May, on Sunday the 19th of May, on Sunday the 26th of May, and on Sunday the 2nd of June, 1867."

On the 20th of July, 1867, Brooks, for the Rev. Lewis Rugg, appeared under protest, and on the 26th of July brought in an act on petition, setting out his grounds of protest, the principal points in which were—First, that by virtue of divers provisions contained in the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, and more particularly by sections 77. and 109, the Court of Arches has no jurisdiction to administer articles to the defendant for the alleged offences for which he is cited by the decree of the Court served upon him, and dated the 2nd of July, 1867. Secondly, that the building in the said decree called the Church of St. Mary, Sydmonton, is not a church, as falsely therein suggested. . . . That in the year 1865 Mr. Kingsmill, for his own private ends and purposes, and without notice to the said Rev. Lewis Rugg as incumbent, to the churchwardens and other parishioners of the said parish, petitioned the Lord Bishop of Winchester to consecrate the said building. That the said Rev. Lewis Rugg, on receiving notice from the said Lord Bishop of Winchester of his intention, at the private request of Mr. Kingsmill, to consecrate the said building, wrote that he objected to the consecration, on the ground of there being no sufficient endowment for the said proposed church, the emoluments received by the incumbent of Ecchinswell-cum-Sydmonton arising from the said district of Sydmonton amounting only to 40*l.* per annum, and the income of the incumbency amounting altogether to only 170*l.* per annum; and, further, he objected that the land abutting all round on the outside of the building was the private property of Mr. Kingsmill, and, consequently, that there was no right of access outside the said building for the purposes of repair, &c. The petition then further stated, that notwithstanding Mr. Rugg's objections, and although he locked up the church, the Bishop of Winchester ordered the door to be forced open, and proceeded with the ceremony of consecration. Thirdly, that on the Sundays mentioned in the decree on which it is alleged that the Rev. Lewis Rugg omitted to perform, or to provide for the performance of public divine service at Sydmonton, the defendant performed two full services in the parish church of Ecchinswell-cum-Sydmonton, which is only distant about two miles from the said building; and that by reason of the premises, the Court of Arches has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

The answer, as regards the first point, alleged that the provisions of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, ss. 77, 109, do not in any way interfere with the jurisdiction of the Court; for the 77th section applies only to such inadequate performance or neglect of duty as does not constitute an ecclesiastical offence, and is not intended to be treated as an offence; and the said 109th section does not prevent the Bishop of Winchester from taking proceedings under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. against the said defendant for the ecclesiastical offence as set forth in the citation (the said offence being a breach of the statute 13 & 14 Car. c. 4). That the said statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. is the only act under which the bishop can proceed against the said defendant for the said offence committed, by law. That the said 77th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. applies to cases where a service may happen to be inadequately performed in a church about the character of which, as a public consecrated building, there is no dispute, and not to the case where the question is whether the clerk proceeded against is free from all obligation to perform public divine service in a particular building by reason of its being, as alleged, a private and uncon-secrated building, and that such question is in dispute in the present case. The rest of the answer merely corrected some statements made by Mr. Rugg as to the history of the consecration of the church of Sydmonton, but did not contradict his averment that such consecration was performed in spite of his express dissent.

The 77th section of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. enacts, that whenever the bishop shall see reason to believe that the ecclesiastical duties of any benefice are inadequately performed, it shall be lawful for him to issue a commission to four beneficed clergymen to inquire into the matter; and if their report be in the affirmative, it enables the bishop to appoint a curate, and secure to him a salary. Section 109. is as follows: "In every case in which jurisdiction is given to the bishop of the diocese, or to any archbishop, under the provisions of this act, and for the purposes thereof, and the enforcing the due execution of the provisions thereof, all other and concurrent jurisdiction in respect thereof shall, except as herein otherwise provided, wholly cease, and no other jurisdiction in relation to the provisions of this act shall be used, exercised or enforced, save and except such jurisdiction of the bishop and archbishop under this act."

Mr. Rugg, in person, contended against the jurisdiction of the Court—First, as he had on the days indicated performed two full services at Ecchinswell, he had not violated the 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. s. 2, or committed an ecclesiastical offence; secondly, that the bishop had mistaken his way; he ought to have proceeded under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. s. 77, and was precluded from instituting a suit on this ground under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86; thirdly, the Court has no jurisdiction, inasmuch as the church at Sydmonton has never been legally consecrated. The bishop had no right to consecrate a church on the rector's freehold without his sanction, and the form gone through was a mere nullity after Mr. Rugg had signified his dissent. — He referred to Battiscombe v. Eve (1) and Griffin v. Dighton (2).

Dr. Deane and Dr. Swabey, for the promoter, were not called upon.

SIR R. J. PHILLIMORE. — This case is brought before me by letters of request, and it is a suit instituted under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, against the Rev. Lewis Rugg, for having offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by having omitted to perform, or to provide for the performance of public divine service, as prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, in the church of St. Mary, Sydmonton, within his perpetual curacy or parish, on four consecutive Sundays last year. Mr. Rugg has appeared under protest, and denies the jurisdiction of the Court, on three grounds. First, he says that his refusal to perform service in Sydmonton church, under the circumstances he has stated, is not an ecclesiastical offence; but I am of opinion that it is, and that he is properly charged here with an ecclesiastical offence under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. Secondly, he urges another reason why these proceedings are not applicable to him. He says that they ought to have been taken under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. The 77th section of that act authorizes the bishop to appoint a curate where he considers that the ecclesiastical duties of a benefice are inadequately performed, and he urges that that course ought to have been taken in his case, and that he ought not to have been cited into this Court under the letters of request. I am of opinion that the section in no way binds the bishop to take the course therein mentioned, but that it is left to his discretion to do so; and, moreover, that so far as I can judge of the charge as laid in the decree, it would not have been proper for him to have taken proceedings under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. s. 77. against Mr. Rugg, because the charge is not that the services have been inadequately performed, but that they have not been performed at all. I am of opinion, therefore, that so far the suit is properly before the Court under the letters of request and the provisions of the Church Discipline Act. Thirdly, he objects to the jurisdiction of the Court, that the building called St. Mary's, Sydmonton, is not a church. Assuming for this purpose that the statements made by the defendant are true, it seems somewhat inconsistent with this objection, that in his argument

Mr. Rugg claims the ground as his freehold (which it could not be unless it were consecrated), and therefore that the consecration of the church was illegal, being performed without his consent. The question, however, is, whether the consecration so performed, in spite of the dissent of Mr. Rugg, was or was not legal. If legal, the authority of the Ordinary was founded ratione loci, and the cause was properly sent to this Court by letters of request. In my opinion, although it was quite reasonable for Mr. Rugg to put before the bishop his objections, it was also competent for the bishop to overrule them, and proceed with the consecration. As I entertain that opinion, I must also hold that the bishop had jurisdiction in this case, and that the non-performance of divine services in a duly consecrated church is an ecclesiastical offence. I overrule the protest, and order Mr. Rugg to appear absolutely. The costs to be costs in the cause.

Faculty—Vault—Entrance not on Consecrated Ground—Appeal—Variation from former Decree.

A. applied for a faculty to secure to himself and his family whilst resident in a particular house the exclusive use of a vault which had been constructed under the chancel of a consecrated church, but the sole entrance to which was in his own garden, on unconsecrated ground. The faculty was ordered to issue by the local Ordinary. On appeal, it was determined that such order must be varied by adding a condition that before the faculty issues a sufficient space of ground around the aperture of the vault be consecrated and so placed under the jurisdiction and control of the Ordinary.

It is only under very exceptional circumstances that the Ordinary should grant permission for burials to take place under the chancels or the bodies of churches.

This was an appeal from an order or decree made, on the 4th of May, 1867, by Dr. Lushington, the late Dean of the Arches, whereby he confirmed an order or decree made by Charles Sumner, Esq., barrister-at-law, the Chancellor of the diocese of Winchester, directing that a faculty should be issued out of the Consistorial Court of Winchester, as also from the order or decree of the said Chancellor of the diocese of Winchester. It was brought by the Rev. Lewis Rugg, the incumbent of the parish of Echchinswell-with-Sydmonton, in the county of Southampton, against William Howley Kingsmill, the principal landowner and owner and occupier of a mansion-house called Sydmonton Court in such parish, and the possessor of the great tithes of the parish. The faculty was for the purpose of appropriating and confirming a certain family vault or burying-place under the chancel of the church of Sydmonton to Mr. Kingsmill, his family and successors, being proprietors of the mansion-house and estate of Sydmonton Court. The judgments of Mr. Sumner and of Dr. Lushington, from which Mr. Rugg appealed, will be found in 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccl. Cas. 17. The grounds of appeal were the following: First, that where the inhabitants of a district have no common law right of burial in such district, an ecclesiastical Court has no jurisdiction to grant to one family of that district a faculty for the privilege of burial, or for the exclusive privilege of burial in a public chapel of such district. Secondly, that assuming that an Ecclesiastical Court has jurisdiction to grant such a faculty, the granting of faculties for vaults in a church or public chapel has for a long time past been discouraged by the legislature and public authorities, as injurious to the public health; and faculties for such vaults have not been granted, except in cases free from other objections, and where all parties interested have been consentient; and that this not being such a case, the faculty ought not to have been granted. Thirdly, that assuming that the Consistory Court of Winchester had jurisdiction to grant a faculty to the respondent, and that this was a proper case for such a faculty, yet that it ought not to issue in the terms decreed, but ought to be varied by the insertion of a proviso that the respondent appropriate to the church such a piece of land round the church for the purpose of consecration as to place the entrance of the vault, where the whole or a part of the public service for the burial of the dead must at every burial in the vault, of necessity, be performed, on consecrated ground, and under ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and to secure to all persons desirous of being present at such burials the right of attending, without a liability of being treated as trespassers.

Mr. Rugg conducted his appeal in person.

Dr. Deane and Dr. Swabey appeared for Mr. Kingsmill.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE (March 11).—This is an appeal from a decree pronounced by the late Judge of the Arches Court of Canterbury, whereby he affirmed the sentence of the Consistorial Court of Winchester, which decreed a faculty to issue to Mr. Kingsmill authorizing the appropriation to that gentleman of a vault under the chancel of Sydmonton Church. This church is situate in the parish of Sydmonton, in the county of Southampton. It appears that the whole property, as well as the principal house in the parish, belongs to Mr. Kingsmill, and that with the exception of the consecrated ground upon which the church is built, he is proprietor of all the land up to the very walls of the church, which has no burial-ground attached to it. In the year 1849 there was a chapel which occupied the site of the present building. Under the chancel of the former chapel the father of Mr. Kingsmill possessed a vault. In the year 1849 the chapel was pulled down. In 1852 Sydmonton-and-Echchinswell, which formerly formed part of the parish of Kingsclere, were formed under an Order in Council, bearing date the 19th of August, 1852, into a distinct and separate parish for ecclesiastical purposes, by the name of Echchinswell-with-Sydmonton, and Mr. Rugg, the appellant, was instituted incumbent thereof. In 1853 the present church was built by Mr. Kingsmill's father at his sole cost and expense. In August, 1864, the church was consecrated. In August, 1865, the faculty now in question was granted by the Chancellor of Winchester. Before a faculty, either to the parishioners in general, or to a private inhabitant of the parish, can be decreed, the ecclesiastical law requires that all persons interested in opposing the grant shall have an opportunity of being heard before the Ordinary. The faculty which has been decreed in this case is, as has been stated, for a burial vault underneath the chancel. The objector to the grant of the faculty is the incumbent, who is either vicar or perpetual curate. The applicant for the faculty is the improper rector, who resides in the parish, and whose father appears to have rebuilt and partially endowed at his own cost the church. The vicar or perpetual curate, although entitled to officiate in, and have free access to, the chancel, has no right, strictly speaking, to fees for the erection of monumental tablets, or for the construction of vaults (in the very rare instances in which they should be allowed) in the chancel; but he has certainly a persona standi, by reason of his general spiritual position as incumbent, to oppose the grant of such a faculty as the present. The objections of the appellant to the judgments from which he appeals are various. First, he contends that the ecclesiastical Court has no jurisdiction to grant this faculty. He supports this objection by reference to the fact that there is no burial-ground attached to this chapel; that no funeral has ever taken place there; that the inhabitants of the district have consequently no general right of burial connected with the chapel. And his argument appeared to extend so far as to question the validity of the consecration of the chapel itself by the Bishop. Their Lordships, however, see no reason to doubt that the Bishop had full authority to consecrate this building; and they are of opinion that the objection founded on the absence of any burial-ground, and of any general right of burial on the part of the parishioners, did not render unlawful the act of the Ordinary, though it imposed upon him the duty of exercising with much caution the discretion which the law has vested in him as to granting a faculty of this kind. The appellant further contended that the grant of the faculty was bad upon the ground that the proper forms prescribed by the practice of the Ecclesiastical Court had not been complied with. Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that the case was regularly and properly conducted in the diocesan court of Winchester, and that the objection cannot be sustained. The appellant contends that this faculty could not be granted without his consent, but that contention is not supported by authority or practice. The vicar or perpetual curate, as has been stated, is entitled to be heard against the grant of a faculty, and his objections ought, of course, to be considered by the Ordinary; but the discretion of the Ordinary is not fettered or taken away by the dissent of the vicar. There are objections, however, urged by the appellant, which are of a more serious character. They may be all arranged under one general head,—that the discretion of the Ordinary was unwisely exercised in the grant of this faculty. From the decision of the Ordinary an appeal lies to the Archbishop, and ultimately to the Crown, under the advice of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. If we think that the grant of the faculty, though not absolutely illegal, was, as it at present stands, indiscreet and likely to give rise to future trouble and difficulty in the church and district of Sydmonton, which was not duly considered in the Ecclesiastical Courts, we ought to advise Her Majesty accordingly. The appellant has pointed out to their Lordships that the ground upon which the church stands alone is consecrated; that the jurisdiction of the Ordinary depends upon the consecration of the ground, and does not extend over any part of the ground which comes up to the very walls of the church. The legal consequences of this circumstance, upon which the appellant insists, will presently be noticed. Their Lordships, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this church and parish, are not disposed to dissent from the opinion expressed by the Judge of the Arches Court, that the judicial discretion of the local Ordinary was lawfully exercised in granting permission to Mr. Kingsmill to retain for the use of himself and his family, so long as they shall remain proprietors of Sydmonton Court (for this must, of course, be a provision contained in the instrument), the vault which has been constructed underneath the chancel. Their Lordships desire that it should be understood that they do not mean to express any approbation of a general practice of granting faculties for interments in chancels or in the bodies of churches. On the contrary, they are of opinion that very exceptional circumstances can alone justify such an exercise by the Ordinary of the discretion which the law has vested in him. With respect to the particular faculty the consideration of which is now before their Lordships, they have come to the conclusion that it ought not to be issued at the present time in the manner proposed. Their Lordships are extremely reluctant to interfere with the exercise of the discretion in those matters by the local Ordinary, and they fully recognize the expediency of the rule of practice which discountenances such interference. But their Lordships think that the objection to the immediate issue of this faculty, while the only entrance to the vault is in the private and unconsecrated ground of Mr. Kingsmill, is deserving of great consideration. In the first place, it is clear that the Ordinary could not compel the incumbent, by ecclesiastical censures, to perform the burial service in the unconsecrated ground in which the only entrance to the vault is to be found. It has not been argued that the Ordinary could so compel the incumbent; indeed, it has been very properly admitted by counsel that no authority can be found for such a practice. In the next place, it appears to their Lordships to be inexpedient that the spot on which a portion at least of the burial service is usually performed by the minister should be exempt from the jurisdiction of the Ordinary. It is true that the Ordinary would have jurisdiction over the vault itself, and that the whole service might lawfully, their Lordships think, in the peculiar circumstances of this case, be performed in the church, and the corpse afterwards taken into the garden and deposited in the vault; and their Lordships do not mean to say that the Ordinary might not be enabled to punish any unlawful proceedings which might precede or accompany the act of burial; but it is also true that the absence of any ecclesiastical jurisdiction over this spot of ground might afford an apparent impunity to evade the law, and thereby possibly cause a scandal in the parish. If in the present state of circumstances the grantee of this faculty, or his successors in the mansion to which it is in fact attached, were hereafter, either perhaps on account of their having ceased to be members of the Church, or on account of some quarrel with the incumbent, or for any other motive, to cause a service different from that which is enjoined in the Prayer Book to be read over the corpse, or if they were to place the body in the vault without the previous performance over it of any religious service, in any such case the Ordinary might be considerably embarrassed in the exercise of his proper jurisdiction to remove the scandal, or to punish the authors of it. Their Lordships think that it is the duty of the Ordinary, when granting a privilegium of this kind, to take every precaution in his power against the possibility of a misuse by the grantee, or his representative, of the special favour which is conceded to him. They see no reason why the grant of the faculty to Mr. Kingsmill should not be made conditional upon his consenting to allow a sufficient piece of ground near the aperture to the vault to be first duly consecrated for the sole and special purpose of burials in this vault. The jurisdiction of the Ordinary, ratione loci, would then be unquestionable, and any impropriety with relation to the performance of the burial service would be subject to his correction and control. Their Lordships therefore think that this cause should be remitted to the Court of Arches, with directions to issue the faculty in question whenever it has been duly certified to that Court that the consecration of the additional portion of ground has taken place, and with power, if it should be deemed necessary, to vary the terms of the faculty by a reference to a recital of the fact of such consecration having been effected. Their Lordships think that both parties ought to bear their own costs incurred in this court and in the Court of Arches. Their Lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with the opinion they have now expressed.

Church Discipline Act—Rites and Ceremonies in the Church of England—Retained—Not forbidden—Elevation of Paten and Cup—Lighted Candles—Incense—Water mixed with the Wine.

There is a legal distinction between a rite and a ceremony. The former consists in services expressed in words; the latter, in gestures or acts preceding, accompanying, or following the utterance of those words.

As regards ceremonies, no sound argument against their lawfulness can be deduced merely from their identity with those in use before the Reformation, nor from their disuse since. The real test is, are they, on a fair construction, necessarily connected with those novelties which the Church of England rejected at the Reformation?

Whatever is expressly prohibited in the Rubric is prohibited altogether, and may not be evaded by any contrivance which, under a different name and appearance, attains the same end.

Whatever is expressly ordered by the Rubric must not be evaded by an illusory or partial compliance; and any ceremony which is subsidiary to what is ordered, is in accordance with primitive and catholic use, and not necessarily connected with novelties which were rejected at the Reformation, is lawful. But the doing or use of such ceremony must be governed by the discretion of some person in authority, who may enforce his order in the matter, by monition and the penalty of contumacy.

Elevation, that is, the raising the paten and also the cup respectively, after the consecration of the bread and wine, for an appreciable time, after which there is a pause before the service is continued, is a ceremony so connected with the repudiated doctrine of transubstantiation, that it is not permissible in the Church of England.

The amount of kneeling to be employed by the officiating minister is a matter to be regulated by the Bishop, in accordance with his discretion.

The use of incense during the celebration of the Communion is a distinct ceremony, additional to and not even indirectly incident to the ceremony ordered by the Book of Common Prayer, and therefore unlawful.

As the mention of water and the mixing of water with the wine, which was introduced into the first Prayer Book, is omitted in the subsequent Prayer Books, it must be held that such mixing is prohibited during the celebration of the Communion.

Two lights are ordered by the Injunctions of Edw. 6. A.D. 1547, to be placed on the Holy Table during the administration of the Communion. As the Injunctions, whether authorized or not by 31 Hen. 8. c. 8. have always been recognized as valid, and as the use of such lights is primitive and catholic in its origin, and not connected with any rite or ceremony rejected by the Church of England at the time of the Reformation, the lawfulness thereof is established.

This was a proceeding, under the Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), brought by letters of request from the Bishop of London into the Court of Arches. It was promoted by John Martin, of Baldwin's Gardens, in the district of St. Alban's, High Holborn, in the county of Middlesex, against the Rev. Alexander Heriot Mackonochie, clerk, the perpetual curate of such district. The articles are set out at length, 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. 25; but their contents may be stated shortly, as follows: First, according to the statute law and the canons and constitutions ecclesiastical, all clerks shall use and observe in the celebration of divine service the orders, rites and ceremonies prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, and in the Act of Uniformity printed therewith, without diminishing in regard of preaching, or in any other respect, or adding anything in the matter or form thereof; and any clerk offending against such statute law, constitutions and canons ought to be punished. Thirdly, that the defendant on certain days, within the last two years, in the church of St. Albans, during the prayer of consecration in the order for the administration of the Holy Communion, elevated the paten in a greater degree and otherwise than by merely taking the same into his hands as prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer, and in a greater degree than is necessary to conform with the requirements of such book, and has permitted and sanctioned such elevation, and has taken into his hands and elevated the cup during the prayer of consecration aforesaid, in a manner contrary to the statute law and the said Book of Common Prayer, and has permitted and sanctioned the cup to be so taken and elevated, and has knelt or prostrated himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration, and has permitted and sanctioned such kneeling or prostration by other clerks in holy orders. Fifthly, that at the same times and place the defendant used lighted candles on the communion-table of the church of his parish during the celebration of the Holy Communion at times when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light, and has permitted and sanctioned such use of lighted candles. Seventhly and eighthly, also at the same times and place he used incense for censuring persons and things in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, and has permitted and sanctioned such use of incense. Tenthly, also at the same times and place he, during the celebration of the Holy Communion, mixed water with the wine in the said parish church, and has permitted and sanctioned such mixing and the administration to the communicants of the wine and water so mixed. And as regards the elevation, prostration, the use of lighted candles or incense, and the mixing of water with the wine, it was alleged that each was an unlawful addition to and a variation from the form and order prescribed and appointed by the statute law and by the Book of Common Prayer, and is contrary to the statute law and the constitutions and canons ecclesiastical.

In answer to the articles, the defendant filed an allegation in which he referred in detail to the spiritual destitution of the district attached to St. Albans before he was licensed and admitted to the incumbency of such district, and to the numerous services he had established for the benefit of the inhabitants of such district, and to the satisfactory results arising therefrom, more especially amongst the poorer inhabitants. The allegation then stated that ever since he (Mr. Mackonochie) has been admitted incumbent of the said parish he has resided therein, and has, with the most unwearied zeal and self-devotion, faithfully and diligently discharged his duty as minister thereof, in accordance with and in conformity to the laws, canons and constitutions of the Church of England, and has conducted himself and his services without any complaint on the part of and to the great satisfaction of the majority of the inhabitants of the said district, amongst whom he is held in high esteem and regard, as well for the manner in which he, with the co-operation of his curates, performs his public ministrations, as for his attention to the schools, and also to the poor and sick of the said district, and that such esteem, satisfaction and regard continue undiminished up to the present time. That from the time he became incumbent of the said district up to the present time, neither of the two churchwardens of the parish, one of whom is appointed by Mr. Mackonochie, and the other by the inhabitants in vestry assembled, has presented or made any complaint against Mr. Mackonochie to the bishop at his visitation; or to the archdeacon for having in any way violated or infringed, or for neglecting to conform to any of the laws, canons and constitutions of the Church of England. Thirdly, in answer to the third paragraph of the articles, he alleged that, although he admits that he did on the said two Sundays and on the said Christmas-day during the prayer of consecration, kneel, and sanction the kneeling by other clerks before the Lord's table, yet he denies that he did on those days kneel or prostrate himself before the consecrated elements, or permit and sanction such kneeling or prostration by other clerks in holy orders; and he further alleged that whilst he did on those days elevate and sanction the elevation by other clerks of the paten and cup above his head, as is in the third article pleaded, yet that such elevation of the paten and cup has been wholly discontinued by him since the 30th day of December, 1866, and long prior to the institution of this suit. That such practice was discontinued in consequence of legal advice, and in compliance with the expressed wish of the Lord Bishop of the diocese, and with a resolution of Convocation, as was well known to the promoter of this suit before he instituted the same. Fourthly, he denies that the elevation of the paten and the taking and elevation of the cup, so discontinued as aforesaid, and the kneeling and prostrating charged in the third article are severally unlawful additions to and variations from the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes and the Book of Common Prayer, or that they are contrary to the said statutes and to the 14th, 36th and 38th of the Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical, and also to an act of parliament, 13 Eliz. c. 12, and to the 25th and 28th Articles of Religion referred to in the fourth article. Fifthly, in answer to the fifth article he alleges, that on the days mentioned in such article the said lighted candles were not placed on the communion-table, but upon a narrow movable ledge of wood resting on the said table, and that the said candles were so placed and kept lighted, not during the celebration of the Holy Communion only, as falsely suggested in the 5th article, but also during the whole of the reading of the Communion Service, including the Epistle and Gospel, and during the singing after the reading of the Nicene Creed, and during the delivery of the sermon. Sixthly, he denies that the use of such lights is an unlawful addition to and variation from the form and order prescribed, &c. Seventhly, in answer to the seventh article, he admits that on Sunday the 28th of December, 1866, on Christmas-day in that year, and on the following Sunday, he used incense for censuring persons and things in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, and permitted and sanctioned such use of incense; but since the 30th of December, 1866, as was well known to the promoter of the suit prior to the institution thereof, he has desisted from so doing, and has ever since discontinued the said ceremony on being apprised by the opinion of counsel that such usage was of doubtful legality, and that he has never since introduced the said ceremony, as appears in his published address to his parishioners dated January, 1867, and appended to and exhibited with the articles. Eighthly, he admits that he has in his said church on Sunday the 13th of January, 1867, caused and allowed incense to be burnt during the reading of the prayer of consecration, and afterwards until the time for the administration of the Communion to the people, and permitted and sanctioned such use of incense, but that he denies that he did the same unlawfully, or that such use is unlawful. Ninthly, he denies that the uses of incense as alleged in the seventh and eighth articles are severally unlawful additions to and variations from the form and orders prescribed, &c. Tenthly and eleventhly, he admits the facts stated in the tenth article to be true, but denies that the mixing and administration of wine and water, as in the tenth article alleged, is an unlawful addition to and variation from the form and order prescribed, &c. Thirteenthly, he denies that John Martin is of Baldwin's Gardens, in the district of St. Albans, or that he is an inhabitant or parishioner of the said parish or ecclesiastical district, but he is an attorney at law and solicitor, residing at No. 9, Montague Place, Russell Square, in the parish of St. George, Bloomsbury. That the only connexion he has with the district of St. Alban's is as a secretary of a school in Baldwin's Gardens, and he is acting contrary to the wish and desire of the churchwardens and parishioners generally of the said parish or ecclesiastical district, and at the instigation and as the agent and at the cost of a certain society called the Church Association.

A. Stephens, Coleridge, Dr. Swabey, and Droop appeared for the promoter.

W. M. James, Prideaux, Dr. Tristram, and Charles, for the defendant.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE (March 28).—This case of Martin v. Mackonochie was brought before my predecessor in this chair, by letters of request from the Bishop of London, under the provisions of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. That statute, passed in the year 1840, enables any bishop within the Province of Canterbury either to try the case of a clerk for a criminal offence before himself with certain assessors, or to send it to the Court of the Archbishop for trial in the first instance. Since the passing of this statute, bishops have very generally availed themselves of the latter provision, and this Court has now before it several cases so sent from several suffragan dioceses of the Province of Canterbury.

Under the old law, when these cases were triable in the Consistorial Court of each bishop, if they were sent by letters of request to the Court of Arches, these letters contained an averment that the lack of counsel, and difficulty of obtaining proper legal assistance, rendered it expedient, for the ends of justice, that the case should be tried in the first instance in the Court of Appeal, that is, in this Court. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that this is, I believe, the only case but one which has been sent by letters of request from the great diocese of London, amply furnished as it is with all means and appliances requisite for the administration of justice, to the Court of Appeal ; and I much regret that I am deprived of the great assistance which I should have derived from the judgment of the Chancellor of the Bishop of London upon the important matters now before me if the case had been brought to this Court in the regular course of appeal.

The letters of request were accepted by Dr. Lushington, my learned predecessor in this chair, and in an early stage of these proceedings, before evidence had been taken, or argument heard upon the merits of the case, I was counsel for the accused clerk, and took objections to the manner in which the offence was charged in the criminal articles. When the Archbishop of Canterbury was pleased to confer on me the Judgeship of his Grace's Court, I proposed to hear the case, with the assistance of two learned persons well skilled in ecclesiastical law, the Vicar General of the Archbishop, and the Chancellor of Rochester ; but this arrangement was demurred to on behalf of the promoter of the Bishop of London's office, that is, the accuser ; and I then appointed, as my patent gave me full power to do, those two learned persons to be my surrogates for the hearing of this cause. They held one Court, and in consequence of arguments addressed to them touching the validity of their appointment, they adjourned the hearing of the cause until an opportunity had been afforded for an application to the temporal Court for a prohibition. The counsel for Mr. Mackonochie applied to the Court of Queen's Bench for a rule nisi to shew cause why the prohibition should not go to these surrogates, upon the ground that I had exceeded my power in appointing them.

The promoter or accuser did not appear to shew cause against the prohibition, and the rule, upon an ex parte statement, was perhaps almost necessarily made absolute.

But I think if the rule had been opposed, and the powers given by my patent, and also the fact of the invariable usage of this Court, as proved by its earliest records, to appoint surrogates, been duly brought to the attention of the Court of Queen's Bench, it would have refused the rule. I mention this circumstance, in order to prevent any inconvenience which might ensue from its being supposed that this Court had no power to appoint surrogates. After these proceedings in the Court of Queen's Bench, the surrogates whom I had appointed, by a formal instrument entered upon the records of this Court, resigned the powers which I had conferred upon them.

A good deal has been said by the counsel on both sides respecting the motives of the accuser and the accused in this suit, but upon this subject the Court need say but very little.

Mr. Martin has been allowed by the Bishop of London to promote his Lordship's office in this case, and I must, of course, presume that his Lordship was satisfied upon good grounds, both that it was proper that his office should be promoted, and that Mr. Martin was a proper promoter ; because his Lordship, who has the advantage of having a very learned legal adviser, was, no doubt, aware, from the decision of the Queen's Bench in The Queen v. the Bishop of Chichester (1), as well as from the decision of the Privy Council in Ray v. Sherwood (2), that it was competent to him to exercise his discretion as to whether his office should be promoted or not. I must, therefore, consider Mr. Martin as having obtained full sanction for the course which he has adopted, and wholly decline to impute to him any unworthy motive whatever for the part which he has taken in this suit. It is, however, a matter of fact, admitted or proved before me, that Mr. Martin is not, legally speaking, a parishioner of St. Alban's, nor, of course, a churchwarden, a part of whose office it is to represent to the Ordinary any misconduct on the part of the incumbent. This fact, however, if it should prove to be of any importance at all in this case, can only relate to the subordinate question of costs, and in no way affects my judgment upon the principal questions before me.

(1) 2 El. & El. 209 ; s. c. 29 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 23.

(2) 1 Moo. P.C. 397.

Upon the other hand, it is only fair to Mr. Mackonochie to state, that it appears from the documents in the cause, that having the cure of souls in one of the worst and most neglected districts of London, and receiving moderate temporal emolument, he has devoted himself to the discharge of his holy office, and to evangelizing an almost heathen population.

It is hardly necessary to say that he is not on this account entitled to conduct the services of the Church (if he has done so) in a manner not authorized by the law.

There are two modes of procedure in the Ecclesiastical Courts, one of civil, and the other of a criminal, character. There have been, in recent times, two leading judgments delivered upon the lawfulness of certain ornaments (to which word a precise legal meaning has been attached) used during the celebration of Divine worship and of certain decorations of churches.

In both these judgments the questions for judicial decision were raised in the civil form of procedure.

The "stone altar case" (as it has been commonly called)—Faulkner v. Lichfield (3)—arose on an application for a faculty in the Consistory of Ely, and was brought on appeal to this Court. The cause relating to the Knightsbridge Church—Westerton v. Liddell (4)—was instituted in a similar way in the Consistory of London, from a decision of which Court an appeal was prosecuted, first to the Court of Arches, and ultimately to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which last tribunal recommended Her Majesty to reverse, upon many points, the decision of the Courts below. As the Archbishops and the Bishops, who are Privy Councillors, are only members of the Judicial Committee in cases of criminal proceedings against clerks in holy orders, the prelates who did sit on this last occasion sat only as assessors and not as members of the Court.

The proceedings taken in this case are of a criminal character, and the sound of them, so to speak, is harsher than that of those in the cases to which I have referred, but substantially the same end is sought, and the same remedy is pursued; and, with an exception to be hereafter stated, I am not prepared to say,—inasmuch as not only certain ornaments, but also the use of them in the services of the Church, are complained of,—that it would have been competent to the promoters to have brought before me in a civil form all the matters contained in these criminal articles.

They are comprised under the following heads:

- (1.) The elevation of the Blessed Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, accompanied by kneeling "or excessive kneeling" at times not prescribed by the Rubrics.
- (2.) The use of incense during the celebration of the Eucharist.
- (3.) The mixing of water with wine at the time of the administration of the Lord's Supper.
- (4.) The use of lighted candles upon the Holy Table.

It will be necessary presently to enter into a fuller and more detailed statement of each of these charges, and of the answers to them. I will only observe that, with one exception to be noticed hereafter, there is no dispute in the case as to the facts to which the law is to be applied.

Statutes of Uniformity.

The law principally, though not exclusively, relied upon by the counsel for the promoter is contained in the Statutes of Uniformity. I must refer to these statutes.

The first statute is that of 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 1, which accompanied the first Prayer Book. The second is that of 5 Edw. 6. c. 4, which accompanied the second Prayer Book, and has been repealed. The third is that of 1 Eliz. c. 2, the penal sections of which are in force.

The additions made to the Prayer Book by James the First were not accompanied by a separate statute, but were made under the powers conferred upon the Crown acting with the metropolitans, under a clause of the statute of Elizabeth.

Fourthly, the present Statute of Uniformity, 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4, which embodies so much of the statute of 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 1. and of 1 Eliz. c. 2, as were necessary for "the establishing and confirming" of the new Prayer Book.

It is necessary to refer somewhat at length to the statutes now in force.

The 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 1, which is the first act of uniformity of Edward the Sixth, begins by reciting that there had been in England different forms of prayer; "that is to say, the use of Sarum, of York, of Bangor, of Lincoln, and besides the same now of late much more divers and sundry forms and fashions have been used in the cathedral and parish churches of England and Wales, as well concerning the matins or morning prayer and the evensong, as also concerning the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass, with divers and sundry rites and ceremonies concerning the same, and in the administration of the other sacraments of the Church; and as the doers and executors of the said rites and ceremonies, in other form than of late years they have been used, were pleased therewith; so other not using the same rites and ceremonies were thereby greatly offended; and, albeit, the King's Majesty, with the advice of his most entirely beloved uncle, the Lord Protector, with others of the council, hath heretofore divers times assayed to stay innovations or new rites, yet the same have not had such good success as His Highness required in that behalf; whereupon His Highness, by the most prudent advice, being pleased to bear with the frailty and weakness of his subjects in that behalf, of his great clemency hath not been only content to abstain from punishment of those that have offended in that behalf, (for that His Highness taketh that they did it of a good zeal,) but also to the intent a uniform, quiet, and godly order should be had concerning the premises, hath appointed the Archbishop of Canterbury and certain of the most learned and discreet bishops and other learned men of the realm to consider and ponder the premises; and thereupon having as well eye and respect to the most sincere and pure Christian religion taught by the Scriptures as to usages in the primitive church, should draw and make one convenient and meet order, rite, and fashion of common and open prayer, and administration of the sacraments, to be had and used in His Majesty's realm of England and Wales, the which at this time, by the aid of the Holy Ghost, with one uniform agreement is of them concluded, set forth, and delivered to His Highness, to his great comfort and quietness of mind, in a book, entitled 'The Book of Common Prayer and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, after the use of the Church of England:' Wherefore the Lords spiritual and temporal, and the Commons, in this present parliament assembled, considering as well the most godly travel of the King's Highness, of the Lord Protector, and of other His Highness' council, in gathering and collecting the said archbishop, bishops, and learned men together, as the godly prayers, orders, rites, and ceremonies in the said book mentioned, and the considerations of altering those things which be altered, and retaining those things which be retained in the said book, but also to the honour of God, and the great quietness which by the grace of God shall ensue upon the one and uniform rite and order in such common prayer, and rites and external ceremonies, to be used throughout England and in Wales, at Calice, and the marches of the same, do give to His Highness most hearty and lowly thanks for the same." Then it goes on and says, "That all and singular the ministers in any cathedral or parish church shall be bounden to say and use the matins, evensong, celebration of the Lord's Supper, commonly called the Mass, and administration of each of the sacraments and all their common and open prayer, in such order and form as is mentioned in the same book, and none other or otherwise."

It then enacts, "That if any manner of parson, vicar, or other whatsoever minister that ought or should sing or say the common prayer mentioned in the said book, or minister the sacraments, shall refuse to use the said common prayer or to minister the sacraments in such cathedral or parish church, in such order and form as they be mentioned and set forth in the said book, or shall use, wilfully and obstinately standing in the same, any other rite or ceremony, order, form, or manner of mass openly or privately, or matins, evensong, administration of the sacraments, or other open prayer, than is mentioned and set forth in the said book," he becomes liable to certain penalties.

The 7th section of this act states, "That it shall be lawful for all men, as well in churches, chapels, oratories, or other places, to use openly any psalm or prayer taken out of the Bible at any due time, not letting or omitting thereby the service or any part thereof mentioned in the said book."

The 8th section of this act provides, "That the books concerning the said services shall, at the costs and charges of the parishioners of every parish and cathedral church, be attained and gotten before the Feast of Pentecost next following, or before; and that all such parishes and cathedral churches, or other places where the said books shall be attained and gotten before the said Feast of Pentecost, shall, within three weeks next after the said books so attained and gotten, use the said service, and put the same in use according to this act."

The present Act of Uniformity, passed in the year 1662, the 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4, is entitled 'An Act for the Uniformity of Public Prayers, and Administration of Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies; and for establishing the form of making, ordaining and consecrating Bishops, Priests and Deacons in the Church of England.'

The 1st section gives the following title to our present Prayer Book: 'The Book of Common Prayer and administration of the Sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, according to the use of the Church of England; together with the psalter or psalms of David, pointed as they are to be sung or said in Churches; and the form and manner of making, ordaining and consecrating of Bishops, Priests and Deacons.'

The 2nd section, after reciting "that nothing can conduce more to the settling of the peace of the nation, nor to the honour of our religion and the propagation thereof, than a universal agreement in the public worship of Almighty God, and to the intent that every person in this realm may certainly know the rule to which he is to conform in public worship and administration of sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the Church of England," enacts, "That all ministers shall be bound to say and use the morning prayer, evening prayer, celebration and administration of both the sacraments, and all other the public and common prayer, in such order and form as is mentioned in the book annexed and joined to the present act, intituled the Book of Common Prayer, and administration of the Sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, according to the use of the Church of England."

And by the 24th section it is further enacted, "by the authority aforesaid, that the several good laws and statutes of the realm, which have been formerly made, and are now in force, for the uniformity of prayer and administration of the sacraments within this realm of England and places aforesaid, shall stand in full force and strength, to all intents and purposes whatsoever, for the establishing and confirming of the said book," (intituled as aforesaid) "hereinbefore mentioned to be joined and annexed to this act, and shall be applied, practised and put in ure for the punishing of all offences contrary to the said laws, with relation to the book aforesaid, and no other."

By the 17th section it is further enacted, "by the authority aforesaid, that no form or order of common prayers, administration of sacraments, rites or ceremonies, shall be openly used in any church, chapel, or other public place, or in any college or hall in either of the Universities, the colleges of Westminster, Winchester or Eton, or any of them, other than what is prescribed and appointed to be used in and by the said book."

By the statute 1 Eliz. c. 2. s. 27, it is enacted, "that all laws, statutes and ordinances wherein or whereby any other service, administration of sacraments, or common prayer is limited, established, or set forth to be used within this realm, or any other the Queen's dominions or countries, shall from henceforth be utterly void and of none effect."

The main proposition upon which the alleged unlawfulness of all the matters contained in the criminal articles has been rested by the counsel for the promotor is, that they are all, in effect, rites and ceremonies other than and additional to those which are prescribed in the Prayer Book and the Act of Uniformity.

The answer to this charge is twofold: first, it is averred that the matters complained of are not rites or ceremonies; secondly, that if they fall within either category they are not "other than or additional to" those prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer, in the sense of being at variance with or repugnant to them, forasmuch as they are in accordance with and subsidiary to them.

Under the first position they maintain that the terms "rites and ceremonies" mean an entire service, such as Masses for the dead, or services for particular festivals; or customs, such as creeping to the Cross, and the like, which were abolished at the time of the Reformation.

That the elevation of the Blessed Sacrament, excessive kneeling, the use of incense, the mixing water with the wine, the lighting of candles, are elements or ingredients of a rite or ceremony, and not a rite or a ceremony per se.

The terms Rite and Ceremony, as used in the first Prayer Book, and from thence imported into our present Prayer Book, are terms, so to speak, of ecclesiastical and ritual art, and must be construed with reference to their use in contemporaneous and other works of writers upon ritual, unless they receive a different meaning from a comparison of other passages or parts in the Prayer Book or Statute in which they are found.

I must, therefore, refer at length to the Preface in our Prayer Book, entitled,—

"Of Ceremonies.

"Why some be abolished and some retained.

"Of such ceremonies as be used in the Church, and have had their beginning by the institution of man, some at the first were of godly intent and purpose devised, and yet at length turned to vanity and superstition; some entered into the Church by indiscreet devotion, and such a zeal as was without knowledge; and for because they were winked-at in the beginning, they grew daily to more and more abuses, which not only for their unprofitableness, but also because they have much blinded the people, and obscured the glory of God, are worthy to be cut away, and clean rejected: other there be, which although they have been devised by man, yet it is thought good to reserve them still, as well for a decent order in the Church (for the which they were first devised), as because they pertain to edification, whereunto all things done in the Church (as the apostle teacheth) ought to be referred.

"And although the keeping or omitting of a ceremony, in itself considered, is but a small thing; yet the wilful and contemptuous transgression and breaking of a common order and discipline is no small offence before God, Let all things be done among you, saith Saint Paul, in a seemly and due order: the appointment of the which order pertaineth not to private men; therefore no man ought to take in hand, nor presume to appoint or alter any publick or common order in Christ's Church, except he be lawfully called and authorized therunto.

"And whereas in this our time, the minds of men are so diverse, that some think it great matter of conscience to depart from a piece of the least of their ceremonies, they be so addicted to their old customs; and again on the other side, some be so new-fangled, that they would innovate all things, and so despise the old, that nothing can like them but that is new; it was thought expedient, not so much to have respect how to please and satisfy either of these parties, as how to please God, and profit them both. And yet lest any man should be offended, whom good reason might satisfy, here be certain causes rendered, why some of the accustomed ceremonies be put away, and some retained and kept still.

"Some are put away, because the great excess and multitude of them hath so increased in these latter days, that the burden of them was intolerable; whereof Saint Augustine in his time complained, that they were grown to such a number, that the estate of Christian people was in worse case concerning that matter, than were the Jews. And he counselled that such yoke and burden should be taken away, as time would serve quietly to do it. But what would Saint Augustine have said, if he had seen the ceremonies of late days used among us ; whereunto the multitude used in his time was not to be compared ! This our excessive multitude of ceremonies was so great, and many of them so dark, that they did more confound and darken, than declare and set forth Christ's benefits unto us. And besides this, Christ's Gospel is not a ceremonial law (as much of Moses' law was), but it is a religion to serve God, not in bondage of the figure or shadow, but in the freedom of the spirit ; being content only with those ceremonies which do serve to a decent order and godly discipline, and such as be apt to stir up the dull mind of man to the remembrance of his duty to God, by some notable and special signification, whereby he might be edified. Furthermore, the most weighty cause of the abolishment of certain ceremonies was, that they were so far abused, partly by the superstitious blindness of the rude and unlearned, and partly by the unsatiable avarice of such as sought more their own lucre, than the glory of God, that the abuses could not well be taken away, the thing remaining still.

"But now as concerning those persons, which peradventure will be offended, for that some of the old ceremonies are retained still : If they consider that without some ceremonies it is not possible to keep any order, or quiet discipline in the Church, they shall easily perceive just cause to reform their judgments. And if they think much, that any of the old do remain, and would rather have all devised anew : then such men granting some ceremonies convenient to be had, surely where the old may be well used, there they cannot reasonably reprove the old only for their age, without bewraying of their own folly. For in such a case they ought rather to have reverence unto them for their antiquity, if they will declare themselves to be more studious of unity and concord, than of innovations and new fangleness, which (as much as may be with true setting forth of Christ's religion) is always to be eschewed. Furthermore, such shall have no just cause with the ceremonies reserved to be offended. For as those be taken away which were most abused, and did burden men's consciences without any cause : so the other that remain, are retained for a discipline and order, which (upon just causes) may be altered and changed, and therefore are not to be esteemed equal with God's law. And moreover, they be neither dark nor dumb ceremonies, but are so set forth, that every man may understand what they do mean, and to what use they do serve. So that it is not like that they in time to come should be abused as other have been. And in these our doings we condemn no other nations, nor prescribe any thing but to our own people only : for we think it convenient that every country should use such ceremonies as they shall think best to the setting forth of God's honour and glory, and to the reducing of the people to a most perfect and godly living, without error or superstition ; and that they should put away other things, which from time to time they perceive to be most abused, as in men's ordinances it often chanceth diversely in divers countries."

Perhaps it would be difficult to deduce from this language any certain conclusion as to the precise sense in which the terms Rites and Ceremonies are used.

In the first Prayer Book, at the close of the dissertation, which is at the end of the services, "Of ceremonies, why some be abolished and some retained," are "certain notes for the more explication and decent ministration of things contained in this book," one "note" is "as touching kneeling, crossing, holding up of hands, knocking upon the breast, and other gestures, they may be used or left as every man's devotion serveth without blame."

This note does not appear in the subsequent Prayer Books, but, nevertheless, at the Hampton Court conference in the year 1604, the Bishop of Winchester, replying to the objections made by the Puritans to the use of the cross in baptism and ceremonies generally, said,—"In prayer, the kneeling on the ground, the lifting up of our hands, the knocking of our breasts, are ceremonies significant : the first, of our humility coming before the mighty God ; the second, of our confidence and hope ; the other, of our sorrow and detestation of our sins ; and these are and may lawfully be used."

"Mr. Dean of the Chapel remembered the practice of the Jews, who, unto the institution of the Passover, prescribed unto them by Moses, had, as the rabbins wit-nesse, added both signes and words, eating soure herbs, and drinking wine, with these words to both, 'Take, and eat these in remembrance,' &c.; 'Drink this in remembrance,' &c. Upon which addition and tradition of theirs, our Saviour instituted the Sacrament of his last Supper, in celebrating it with the same words and after the same manner; thereby approving that fact of theirs in particular, and generally, that a Church may institute and retain a signe significant," which, says the reporter of the conference, satisfied His Majesty exceeding well—Cardwell; Conferences on the Book of Common Prayer, p. 197.

These gestures appear to me to have been considered as ceremonies wisely left to every man's discretion.

In the first "order of the Communion" which preceded the first Prayer Book, the Rubric says, "The time of the Communion shall be immediately after that the Priest himself hath received the Sacrament, without the varying of any other rite or ceremony in the Mass (until such order shall be provided), but, as heretofore, usually the Priest has done with the Sacrament of the Body," &c.

Here, again, rite and ceremony seem to be used for elements or portions of a service.

Let us consider the construction put upon the Latin terms (from which, of course, the English terms are borrowed) ritus et cæremoniæ by high Latin authorities.

Bona (Opera Omnia, p. 562), writing, De Disciplina psallendi, § III., says, Cæremoniæ quid sint, et quæ hujus nominis origo. Earum efficacia, et utilitas ad divinum cultum. Veræ a falsis, et superstitiosis discernendæ. Exteriores cæremonias sine interno spiritu parum prodesse.

..... Sunt autem cæremoniæ, si proprie loqui velimus, ritus sancti in sacrificiis, et divinis officiis ad Dei cultum adhibiti: sed migravit vocabulum in usus etiam profanos; nam cum homines instituissent sibi invicem inclinare, genua flectere, manus osculari: hæ et aliæ honoris exhibitiones, cum proprio nomine carerent, cæptæ sunt etiam cæremoniæ dici.

Van Espen (Jus Eccles. Universum, p. 410. t. 5. c. 1, de Celebratione Missarum) speaking of the celebration of the Eucharist, says: "Certum tamen est ipsum apostolis suis, totique Ecclesiæ, in eorum persona, potestatem auctoritatemque dedisse ea omnia in augustissimi hujus mysterii ritibus seu cæremoniis addendi, demendi, immutandi quæ illius dignitati et populorum devotioni pro temporum et locorum diversitate magis congruere judicarent."

Here, ritus and cæremoniæ are not separate services, but certain ingredients or accompaniments of one service, that of the Eucharist.

Gavanto (vol. 1. p. 3, edit. 1823, Venice), a great Roman ritualist, says, that Bona and Suarez both define cæremonia as "actio religiosa ad cultum et decentiam sacrificii ab ecclesia instituta."

He quotes Quarti's opinion as follows: "Procedit Quarti ad dividendas cæremonias in eas, quæ sunt intrinsecæ ipsi missæ, et partes ejusdem, et consistunt, dicit ipse, tum in verbis, tum in gestibus celebrantis, de quibus late Suarez, disp. 83 et 84, et in eas, quæ sunt circumstantiæ extrinsecæ ejusdem sacrificii, ut locus, tempus, vasa, et vestimenta sacra, &c. Dicit præterea, quod illæ cæremoniæ, quæ consistunt in gestibus, quædam inductæ sunt propter decentiam operandi, nec habent aliam significationem, ex. gr. quod sacerdos dum signat seipsum, ponit sinistram sub pectore; et aliæ inductæ sunt propter significationem moralem, vel mysticam, verb. grat. mixtio aquæ cum vino" (observe these words), "digitorum ablutio, crucis signa, de quibus Divus Thomas 3 part. quæst. 83, artic. 4, § 5. Verum, pace tanti viri, ego distinguem cæremoniam sacram a ritu, dicendo, ritus sacros consistere in illis precibus, epistola, evangelio, &c., quæ juxta ecclesiæ dispositionem recitari debent in missa; cæremoniam autem consistere in solis gestibus, quibus prædictæ preces juxta ejusdem ecclesiæ præscriptum peragi debent ad majorem ornatum, et decentiam sacrificii, quod celebratur; et revera Cæremonialia, seu libros cæremoniarum vocamus illos, qui non orationes et preces dicendas præscribunt, sed modum, quo illæ dicendæ sunt; e contra Rituales nuncupamus illos, qui continent preces, seu alias orationes, quas recitandas præscribunt. Ritus, quoniam in verbis regulariter consistunt, vel sunt partes missæ ordinariæ, quia scilicet semper ingrediuntur ejus compositionem; vel sunt extraordinariæ, sive mobiles, quia non semper ejus compositionem ingrediuntur, sed ad majorem quandoque adduntur solemnitatem, atque ornatum" (5).

The Council of Trent, in the 22nd session, the 5th chapter, "De Missæ Ceremoniis et Ritibus," speaks as follows: "Quumque natura hominum ea sit, ut non facile queat sine adminiculis exterioribus ad rerum divinarum meditationem sustolli, propterea pia mater ecclesia ritus quosdam ut scilicet quædam submissa voce alia vero elatiore in missa pronuncierentur, instituit, ceremonias item adhibuit; ut" (these are the instances of ceremonies) "mysticas benedictiones, lumina, thymiamata, vestes, aliaque id genus multa ex apostolica disciplina et traditione, quo et majestas tanti sacrificii commenderetur, et mentes fidelium per hæc visibilia religionis et pietatis signa ad rerum altissimarum, quæ in hoc sacrificio latent, contemplationem excitarentur."

Whatever authority this passage may have, it would appear to include under the title Cæremoniæ, among other things, the use of lights, of incense and of vestments.

There is no doubt that the terms Rites and Ceremonies are sometimes used in the sense contended for by the defendants; but on the whole, the result of this examination of authorities leads me to the conclusion that there is a legal distinction between a Rite and a Ceremony; the former consisting in services expressed in words, the latter in gestures or acts preceding, accompanying or following the utterance of these words.

Applying this principle to the charges before me, I am of opinion, that the matters complained of must be considered in law as ceremonies.

Before I proceed to consider the greater question, whether they are ceremonies forbidden by the ecclesiastical law of England, and more especially by that part of it which consists of the provisions of the Prayer Book and the Statute of Uniformity, I think it right to draw attention to the judgment of the Church Universal, and especially of "that pure and apostolical branch of it established in this realm," upon the general subject of ceremonies.

And from that judgment it will, I think, appear that an essential distinction is drawn between those which are from their origin immutable, and those which it is competent to the proper authorities to mould according to the varying necessities and exigencies of each particular Church.

(5) Gavanto, 'Thesaurus Sacrorum Rituum,' vol. 1. p. 4, par. I., in Rubrica Generali.

The only orders given in the New Testament with respect to the ritual of the Church are of the most general kind, and are to be found in the following passages: St. Paul in his First Epistle to the Corinthians ch. xiv. 26, 40, directs,

πάντα πρὸς οἰκοδομὴν γένησθω and again,

πάντα εὐσχημῶνς καὶ εἰς τὴν δόξαν γένησθω which we render,

"Let all things be done to edification,"

and

"Let all things be done decently and in order."

St. Augustine, whose authority our Church so highly regards, observes (Ep. 36, tom. 2. p. 101), "In his rebus de quibus nihil certi statuit Scriptura Divina, mos populi Dei vel instituta majorum pro lege tenenda sunt."

And St. Jerome, to whom our articles refer, says (Ep. 28. ad Lucinium Bæticum), "Ego illud te breviter admonendum puto traditiones ecclesiasticas præsertim" (remark the caution) "quæ fidei non officiant ita observandas ut a majoribus traditæ sunt: nec aliorum consuetudinem aliorum contrario more subverti. Sed unaquæque provincia abundet in suo sensu, et præcepta majorum leges apostolicos arbitretur."

When Augustine, the missionary of Gregory the Great (to whom this country is so much indebted), found the ancient British Churches in possession of a ritual in accordance with the Gallican use and that of the Eastern Church, he became perplexed what course to pursue, and wrote for advice on the subject to the Pope. From our old historian Bede we learn how wise an answer he received (Beda, Hist. i. 27, II. "Interrogatio Augustini"): "Cum una sit fides," wrote Augustine, "cur sunt ecclesiarum diversæ consuetudines, et altera consuetudo missarum in sancta Romana ecclesia, atque altera in Galliarum tenetur? Respondit Gregorius Papa. Novit fraternitas tua Romanæ ecclesiæ consuetudinem, in qua se meminit nutritam. Sed mihi placet, sive in Romana, sive in Galliarum, seu in qualibet ecclesia aliquid invenis" quod plus Omnipotenti Deo possit placere, sollicite eligas, et in Anglorum ecclesia, quæ adhuc ad fidem nova est, institutione præcipua, quæ de multis ecclesiis colligere potuisti, infundas. Non enim pro locis res, sed pro bonis rebus loca amanda sunt. Ex singulis ergo quibusque ecclesiis, quæ pia, quæ religiosa, quæ recta sunt elige, et hæc, quasi in fasciculum collecta, apud Anglorum mentes in consuetudinem deponere."

According to a later historian of our Church, the learned Field, Dean of Gloucester: "Ceremonies are outward acts of religion, having institution, either from the instinct of nature, as the lifting up of the hands and eyes to heaven, the bowing of the knee, the striking of the breast, and such like; or immediately from God, as the sacraments; or from the Church's prescription: and either only serve to express such spiritual and heavenly affections, dispositions, motions and desires as are or should be in men; or else to signify, assure and convey unto them such benefits of saving grace as God in Christ is pleased to bestow on them. To the former purpose and end the Church hath power to ordain ceremonies; to the later, God only"—Field, Of the Church, vol. 2. p. 527.

And Burnet in his History of the Reformation (edit. 1829, vol. 2, p. 164), expressing himself with greater accuracy than usual, in speaking of the use of a ceremony in relation to the belief of the Church, says, "This seems more necessary to be well explained, by reason of the scruples that many have since raised against significant ceremonies, as if it were too great a presumption in any Church to appoint such, since these seem to be of the nature of sacraments. Ceremonies that signify the conveyance of a Divine grace and virtue are indeed sacraments, and ought not to be used without an express institution in Scripture; but ceremonies that only signify the sense we have, which is sometimes expressed as significantly in dumb shews as in words, are of another kind; and it is as much within the power of the Church to appoint such to be used, as it is to order collects and prayers, words and signs being but different ways of expressing our thoughts."

The language of our Church in her Articles on this subject is expressed as follows: In Article 20,—

"Of the Authority of the Church.

"The Church hath power to decree rites or ceremonies, and authority in controversies of faith: And yet it is not lawful for the Church to ordain anything that is contrary to God's Word written, neither may it so expound one place of Scripture, that it be repugnant to another. Wherefore, although the Church be a witness and a keeper of Holy Writ, yet, as it ought not to decree anything against the same, so besides the same ought it not to enforce anything to be believed for necessity of salvation."

And in the 34th Article,—

"Of the Traditions of the Church.

"It is not necessary that traditions and ceremonies be in all places one, or utterly like, for at all times they have been divers, and may be changed according to the diversities of countries, times, and men's manners, so that nothing be ordained against God's Word. Whosoever through his private judgment, willingly and purposely doth openly break the traditions and ceremonies of the Church, which be not repugnant to the Word of God, and be ordained and approved by common authority, ought to be rebuked openly (that others may fear to do the like), as he that offendeth against the common order of the Church, and hurteth the authority of the magistrate, and woundeth the consciences of the weak brethren.

"Every particular or national Church hath authority to ordain, change and abolish ceremonies or rites of the Church ordained only by man's authority, so that all things be done to edifying."

Bishop Beveridge (few higher authorities could be invoked) in his 'Ecclesia Anglicana Ecclesia Catholica, or the Doctrine of the Church of England consonant to Scripture, Reason, and Fathers, in a Discourse upon the Thirty-nine Articles,' (Oxford Edition, 1846,) vol. 7, p. 373, thus comments upon article 20, "Of the authority of the Church":—"First (he says), it hath power to decree rites and ceremonies, so that it is lawful for the Church to decree and appoint what rites or ceremonies shall be used in the public worship of the great God ; not as parts of that worship, for then they would not be rites and ceremonies. And therefore it is in vain objected by the adversaries to this truth, that herein we give the Church power to add anything to God's worship which is not commanded in his Word ; as if rites and ceremonies were in themselves any part of worship. Whereas what is any part of God's worship cannot be a mere rite or ceremony, neither can that which is a mere rite or ceremony be any part of His worship. For rites and ceremonies, in that they are nothing but rites and ceremonies, be in themselves indifferent, neither good nor bad, until determined by the Church ; after which determination also they still remain indifferent in themselves, and are good and bad only in reference to their decree, who had power and authority to determine them. Whereas every the least part of God's worship in that it is a part of God's worship can be by no means omitted without sin ; and therefore when it is here said that the Church hath power to decree rites and ceremonies, we must always by the words 'rites and ceremonies' understand nothing else but the particular circumstances and customs to be observed in the service and worship of God, not as any cause or part thereof."

Again the Bishop says, (p. 375)—"We must needs grant that the Church of Corinth (and so other Churches) had power and authority to determine and order these things. Or, if they had no such power before, yet St. Paul, or rather the Most High God by St. Paul, did in these words grant them such a power and authority, in the decreeing these and the like circumstances and ceremonies for the more decent and orderly worshipping of the Glorious Jehovah, giving them this one general comprehensive rule, 'Let all things be done to edifying, and in order ;' out of which one general rule, that, and all Churches whatsoever, according to the variety of times and places they live in, were to frame other particular rules and canons for the edifying and orderly performance of God's worship ; who being a God, not of confusion, but of order in himself, he requires such worship as is done in order, not in confusion, from us."

versies should be denied the Church. For first, as for ceremonies, they cannot but be acknowledged to be indifferent, neither in themselves good nor bad ; and if they be in themselves either good or bad and not indifferent, they are not merely ceremonies, especially if they be in their own nature bad and sinful, they are not the ceremonies intended in this place. For this same Article, in the following part of it, doth determine that the ceremonies here intended are only such as are not against the Scripture, and by consequence not unlawful. Now such rites and ceremonies as are in themselves indifferent, it can be no sin to determine them to either part ; for which part soever they are determined to, they cannot be determined into sin. I mean, what is in itself indifferent, and so may be used or not used without sin whether it be decreed to be used, or not to be used, it cannot be any sinful decree, especially when, after as well as before the decree, they are still acknowledged to be in themselves indifferent, though not as to our use. Which things of indifferency also, as all ceremonies are, cannot be supposed to come within the command of God, for then they would not be indifferent ; and seeing God hath not left any particular command, but only a general rule about all things of indifferency, that they be so ordered that they be done decently and to edifying, the Church cannot be thought to sin in determining them, so as she thinks the most edifying and decent, as we shall by the blessing of God see more fully in the 34th Article. And if it be no sin thus for the Church to determine ceremonies, it must needs be granted that she hath power to decree them."

And on Article 34, "Of the Traditions of the Church," the Bishop observes, (p. 526)—"But there being many circumstances required to the performance as well of religious as civil actions, and so to the worship of God as well as anything else, as, for example, the time when, the place where, the habit in which His public service shall be performed, and the like, it being impossible it should be performed without these and the like circumstances, and seeing the all-wise God hath thought good not to determine these in His Word, but to leave it to the discretion of the Church to determine them as it shall see fit, only giving them this general rule to square all these their determinations by—‘Let all things be done decently and in order.’ Hence it is that every particular Church hath still thought fit to exercise this her power and authority in determining these circumstances, according to that manner as seemeth to herself orderly and devout, so that there is no necessity that one Church should determine them after the same manner that another doth ; nay, it is often necessary that one Church should not follow another in this case ; for it often so falls out that what is decent in one place is unseemly in another, and every Church is bound to model circumstances according to that order which is the most seemly and decent in the place where it is settled.”

(Page 536)—“And if we should descend down to after councils, we shall find there was scarce ever a Provincial Church met together in council since our Saviour’s time but did not ordain some ceremonies or other to be observed by her children. It would be an endless thing to reckon up all the ceremonies that were ordained or altered by Provincial Churches ; or indeed, all the Provincial Churches that ordained or altered ceremonies in the primitive times. I shall, therefore, instance only in such ceremonies as our Church hath thought good still to retain, that so we may see both how Provincial Churches have still looked upon themselves in all ages to have power to ordain ceremonies, and also, that the ceremonies retained and ordered by our Church are no new-fangled ceremonies, nor Popish superstitions, but that most of them were ordained and used in the Primitive Church before the Pope had forged his superstitions.”

This very learned prelate then recites a great number of instances in which the Provincial Councils of different countries have made ordinances with respect to their own ritual observances, and adds, “And thus we see how many, even of the very rites and ceremonies which are still in use amongst us, were long ago ordained by Provincial Churches met together in council. Many more might I heap up to the same purpose, but these may be enough to shew how the Provincial or National Churches of Christ in all ages, since His Incarnation.

have still exercised this power in ordaining, altering and abolishing ceremonies, which certainly they would never have done if they had not believed they had power to do it.”

Bishop Jeremy Taylor, (vol. 14, Heber’s edition), in his ‘Rule of Conscience’ (p. 21), lays down as Rule XII., All those Rituals which were taught to the Church by the Apostles concerning Ministries, which were of Divine institution, do oblige all Christendom to their observation.

And on this rule he observes, —“(1.) I instance in the Holy Sacrament first of all ; concerning which the Apostles delivered to the Churches the essential manner of celebration, that is, the way of doing it according to Christ’s commandment, for the words themselves, being large and indefinite, were spoken indeed only to the Apostles, but yet they were representatives of all the whole ecclesiastical order in some things, and of the whole Christian Church in other ; and, therefore, what parts of duty, and power, and office did belong to each, the Apostles must teach the Church, or she could have no way of knowing without particular revelation.

“(2.) Thus the Apostles taught the bishops and priests to consecrate the symbols of bread and wine before they did communicate ; not only because by Christ’s example we were taught to give thanks before we eat, but because the Apostles knew that the symbols were consecrated to a mystery. And this was done from the beginning, and in all Churches, and in all ages of the Church ; by which we can conclude firmly in this rule, that the Apostles did give a canon or rule to the Churches to be observed always, and that the Church did never believe she had authority or reason to recede from it. For in those rites which are ministries of grace, no man must interpose anything that can alter any part of the institution, or make a change or variety in that which is of Divine appointment. For the effect in these things depends wholly upon the will of God, and we have nothing to discourse or argue ; for we know nothing but the institution, nothing of the reason of the thing, and therefore we must in these cases, with simplicity and obedience, apply ourselves to practise as we have received, for we have nothing else to guide na. Memory and obedience, not discourse and argument, are here in season."

The Bishop then proceeds to distinguish between alterable and unalterable rites, as follows (p. 222): "But where the Apostles did not interpose, there the Churches have their liberty; and in those things also, which evidently were no part of the appointed liturgy or ministration in those things, though it be certain the Apostles did give rules of order and decency, yet because order is as variable as the tactics of an army, and decency is a relative term, and hath a transient and changeable sense, in all these things there is no prescription to the Church, though we did know what the Churches apostolical did practise, for they did it with liberty, and therefore we are not bound; the Churches are as free as ever; though the single persons in the Churches can be bound, yet the Churches always have liberty."

Luther, in the 'Formula Missæ et Communionis' for the Church of Wittenberg, which appears to have been written in 1523, speaking of the ceremonies of Divine worship which he recommends, says:—"Sexto, sequitur Evangelii lectio. Ubi nec candelas neque thurificationem prohibemus, sed nec exigimus, esto hoc liberum."

The same spirit of true liberality is exemplified in the writings of the late most distinguished American prelate, the Bishop of Vermont. Speaking of ornaments used in the services of the Church, he observes: "The same liberty exists with regard to lights upon or behind the altar, the use of chrism and incense, the mixing of water with the wine of the Holy Eucharist, and the representation of figures and emblems in stained glass windows; for all of these were established by usage in the second year of Edward the Sixth, and our Church has uttered no prohibition concerning any of them, but has merely omitted to notice them, directly or indirectly, in her whole legislation. It is certain that none of these things interfere with our liturgy, because they may be used without deviating in the slightest degree from our prescribed forms. And the plain result would seem to be, that their introduction, whether expedient or not, can never be justly considered unlawful"—Law of Ritualism, by Bishop of Vermont, p. 84.

Great variety of usage is to be found in the Greek, the Roman, the Gallican and the English Churches upon this subject. All persons moderately acquainted with ecclesiastical history are aware with what zeal and tenacity the Church of Milan has clung to its Ambrosian rite;—of the various liturgies of the Greek Church, and the different uses in England which, though much reconciled by the famous use of Sarum, were ultimately merged in our present Prayer Book.

I will close my citations on this subject with one from the Great Roman Ritualist, Bona: "Quarto, tanquam verissimum, et apud omnes indubitatum habendum est id quod sæpius in hoc libro repetendum fuit, quædam esse in ecclesia, quæ ad fidem ut dogmata, quædam quæ ad ritus ut mores pertinent. Quæ fidei sunt, sancta inviolabilia, immutabilia semper, et ubique manent; Deumque solum auctorem agnoscunt. Ad ea credenda cæco quodam obsequio captivum ducimus intellectum; ut si quis ea turbare, vel quovis modo immutare aut iis contradicere ausus fuerit, diro anathemate percussus extra ecclesiam fit, nec locum deinceps habet inter Orthodoxos. Ritus et ea quæ morum, ac disciplinæ sunt ab hominum arbitrio pendent, et cum tempore variantur, rerumque statu immutato veteres consuetudines abrogantur, et novæ succedunt, illæsa fidei unitate"—Bonæ Opera Omnia, "Rerum Liturgicarum," lib. 1. c. 23. p. 265.

"Moribus autem mutatis sacros quoque ritus variari consequens fuit. Distinguendæ igitur ætates; disquirenda mutationis ratio et omnia ad sua principia revocanda sunt ut certa rerum notitia habeatur"—Bona, Rer. Lit., lib. 1. c. 18. s. 1. p. 242.

(IX.) Ritus ac cæremoniæ non in æternum permanent tollique possunt ac mutari sine fidei ac unitatis dispendio—Ib. s. 9, p. 247.

I have thought it expedient to recite the foregoing authorities upon the nature of Rites and Ceremonies in order to fortify my position, that the questions now pending before me in no way affect the relations of the Church of England to the Church Catholic, but have reference solely to matters of detail and order in her ministrations, which every independent Church has at all times claimed and exercised; and having thus, I trust, divested the issue of the case before me of that importance which has been, not unnaturally perhaps, ascribed to it by the excited feelings of both parties, I return to the consideration of the charges contained in these criminal articles.

I am not called upon to pronounce in the judgment which I am about to deliver any decision upon any question of doctrine. If, indeed, the law had cast so grave a responsibility upon me, I should have much considered whether it would not have been right and proper to have invoked the aid of spiritual assessors, competent from their position and learning in the Church, to have assisted and guided me in the discharge of such a duty. I thank God, however, that no such consideration embarrasses me on the present occasion.

Criminal Articles in the Ecclesiastical Court distinguished from an Indictment.

Two conclusions result from the premises which I have stated : first, that the matters in dispute are Ceremonies ; and secondly, that they belong to that category of Ceremonies which are designated "mutable."

There is also a proposition of fact which should be mentioned in this place, that none of the ceremonies complained of are expressly directed to be used either in the Prayer Book or the Act of Uniformity.

The promotor avers, and undertakes to prove, that with respect to these matters of charge, Mr. Mackonochie has violated the Statutes of Uniformity, certain specified canons of those enacted by the Convocation and Crown in 1603, and the general ecclesiastical law.

The counsel for Mr. Mackonochie have contended, that inasmuch as a breach of the Statutes of Uniformity rendered Mr. Mackonochie liable to be proceeded against criminally in a court of common law, as well as in this court, I am bound to apply the same rules and observe the same strictness required by the common law courts in a matter of indictment. I am of a different opinion, having regard both to principle and to precedent ; nor do I admit the proposition that unless Mr. Mackonochie be proved to have committed a breach of the Statutes of Uniformity, although he should be proved to have offended against the Law Ecclesiastical, that he is entitled to an acquittal from the charges now laid against him. I deem it to be my duty to consider whether the defendant be or be not proved to have offended against the Laws Ecclesiastical in the matter of one or more, or all, of these criminal charges, and to give my decision accordingly.

I have been referred to a case—The King v. Sparkes (6). This was an indictment in the first year of James the Second against a clergyman, at the Quarter Sessions in Devonshire, for using alias preces in the Church, and alio modo than mentioned in the Book of Common Prayer ; and the indictment concluded contra formam statuti, &c. He was found guilty, and fined 100 marks. Upon writ of error, it was admitted that offences against these statutes might be inquired of by the Justices, but the indictment was held bad, for that it ought to have alleged that the defendant used other forms and prayers instead of those enjoined, which were neglected by him ; for that otherwise any person might be indicted who used prayers before his sermon other than such as are required by the Book of Common Prayer ; and Mr. Cripps observes, that although this decision established that Justices had jurisdiction in such cases, and that indictments, properly framed for offences against these statutes, might be inquired of by them, yet it is probable that indictments of this nature have been very rarely, if ever, preferred ; for the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical court was in no way taken away by those statutes. And wherever it may have been necessary to institute any penal proceedings against clergymen for the omission of, or addition to, anything contained in the Book of Common Prayer, the proceeding has probably been always in the ecclesiastical court ; and, indeed, prosecutions in the temporal courts upon those statutes seem to have been discouraged by the Judges ; for in a case at the Thetford Lent Assizes in 1795, a clerk was indicted upon these statutes, but the evidence was not that he left out or added any prayers, or altered the form of worship, but that he did not read prayers twice on a Sunday, but alternately one Sunday in the morning and the next in the evening, and omitted to read them at all on certain saints' days. Mr. Baron Perryn, who tried the indictment, observed, that it was primæ impressionis, and being of opinion that the offence complained of was purely of ecclesiastical cognizance, and not the subject of prosecution in the temporal courts, directed the jury to acquit the defendant, which they accordingly did.

(6) 3 Mod. 79 ; s. c. Cripps's Laws of the Church, 604 ; 3 Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, 429.

Looking at all the circumstances it does not appear to me that the case of The King v. Sparkes is worthy of much attention, and it will in no way influence my judgment.

The principal heads under which the argument of the counsel for the promoter may be ranged appear to me to be the following :

First. That as by each and all of the practices charged in these articles, a new rite or ceremony has been added by Mr. Mackonochie to those which are prescribed by the Statutes of Uniformity, such practices are unlawful.

Secondly. That these particular additions are expressly prohibited.

Thirdly. That they are by necessary implication prohibited, inasmuch as they are connected with Roman or Popish doctrines.

Fourthly. That as such they have, as a matter of fact, been disused ever since the Reformation.

Now it appears to me necessary to examine, in the first instance, these last two grounds of objection, inasmuch as a consideration of the weight due to them must affect the general application of the law,—wherever it be obscure or ambiguous, or silent as to positive precept,—to the particular subject of these criminal charges.

Identity of the Status of the Church before and after the Reformation.

I will, therefore, consider in the first instance what weight is to be ascribed to the proposition—

“That they are by necessary implication prohibited, inasmuch as they are connected with Roman or Popish doctrines.”

The counter proposition appears to be that the similarity of these ornaments and practices with those in the Church of Rome does not furnish a safe criterion whereby to try the question of their legality in the Church of England. That the true criterion is conformity with primitive and catholic use, and not antagonism to Rome.

A great part of the arguments addressed to me by the counsel on both sides was founded upon one or the other of these propositions.

I am very far from complaining of these arguments, or of the length to which they extended, for, in my opinion, a careful consideration of these propositions, however large, grave, and difficult, is a necessary preliminary to the due construction of the laws, formularies, and usages involved in the present inquiry.

They must, if this construction be doubtful, receive, so to speak, a colour and complexion from the judgment which is formed upon the spirit and principles which governed the Reformation of our Church.

It is my duty to form this judgment upon an historical examination—however unequal my powers may be to the task—into the principal acts of the State and the Church which, since the great epoch of the Reformation, have introduced, accompanied, and settled the ecclesiastical establishment of this kingdom.

It is scarcely necessary to say that where the language of a statute is plain I must obey it, or that where the Court of Appeal has laid down a principle applicable to this case, I must follow it. But, where I have no such guide, I must seek the exposition of the law from the general language of the cardinal statutes, the public and authoritative declarations which accompanied and illustrated them, the judicial construction which they have received, the formularies which these Statutes ordered, whether with or without the concurrent sanction of the Church, though happily the latter alternative is of rare occurrence ; I must also consider the canons which bind the clergy, and the opinions of the Bishops and great divines of our Church, who were not unfrequently also the councillors of the State and the authors of the formularies.

A.—Identity in Law.

I propose to pursue my investigation in the following order : first, I will consult the law ; secondly, I will have recourse to historical and theological statements.

The inquiry into the law admits of the following subdivisions: the statute law; the canons enacted since the Reformation; and the general common law of the Church.

In the history of no kingdom is the independence of the national Church written with a firmer character than in that of England, in the statutes of the realm, in the decisions of judicial tribunals, and the debates of parliament (7).

The Articles of Clarendon, in Henry the Second's reign (A.D. 1164), though directly aimed at the repression of the inordinate claims and privileges of the National Church, were, no doubt, indirectly "calculated," as Hume observes, "to establish the independency of England on the Papacy"; and therefore, when the King sought Pope Alexander's ratification of them, that Pontiff annulled and rejected all but six out of the sixteen memorable articles.

The resistance of Beckett, and, still more, the general feeling excited by the wicked and impolitic murder of that prelate, procured the practical abrogation of the articles objected to, by the enactments of Edward 1. and 3, of Richard 2, of Henry 4. and 5, and of Edward 4.

But in the severe penalties attached to the statutes of Provisors and Præmunire may be read the steady determination of the English people to maintain an independent National Church, and to resist the ultramontane doctrines which had taken root in some other countries.

The Statute of Provisors (25 Edw. 3. stat. 6, A.D. 1350) recites that "the Holy Church of England" was founded in the "estate of prelacy within the realm of England" by the King and nobles of England, and forbids the prevalent abuses of the Pope's bestowing benefices upon aliens, "benefices of England which be of the advowry of the people of Holy Church," the reservation of first-fruits to the Pope, and the provision or reservation of benefices to Rome. By 38 Edw. 3. stat. 2. c. 1. (A.D. 1363), persons receiving citations from Rome in courts pertaining to the King, &c. are liable to the penalty of 25 Edw. 3.

renders the procuring of bulls from Rome liable to præmunire, and it recites a variety of papal aggressions upon the privileges of the Crown; among other matters, as to the translation of bishops out of the realm, or from one bishopric to another within the realm; and the carrying of treasure out of the realm; and so the realm, destitute as well of counsel, as of substance, to the final destruction of the said realm, and so the Crown of England, which hath been so free at all times that it hath been in no earthly subjection, but immediately subject to God in all things touching the regality (la regalie) of the same Crown, and to none other, should be submitted to the Pope, and the laws and statutes of the realm by him defeated and avoided at his will, in perpetual destruction of the sovereignty of the kingdom of the King and Lord, his Crown, his regality, and of all his realm, which God defend.

This statute before the Reformation, and the subsequent enactment of 24 Hen. 8. c. 12, and the great case of Cawdry (8), as reported by Lord Coke and corrected by Bishop Stillingfleet, may be said to contain a treatise on constitutional law of England upon the subject of the usurpation of the Papal See upon the liberties of the National Church, and in regard to the authority and privilege of the English Crown. It would be difficult to conceive a clearer or more dignified exposition of the law upon this subject than is contained in the prefatory part of the statute of Hen. 8: "Where by divers sundry old authentick histories and chronicles it is manifestly declared and expressed, that this realm of England is an empire, and so hath been accepted in the world, governed by one supreme head and king, having the dignity and royal estate of the imperial Crown of the same, unto whom a body politic, compact of all sorts and degrees of people, divided in terms, and by names of spirituality and temporality, been bounden and owen to bear next to God a natural and humble obedience; he being also institute and furnished, by the goodness and sufferance of Almighty God, with plenary, whole and entire power, pre-eminence, authority, prerogative, and jurisdiction, to render and yield justice, and final determination to all manner of folk, resiants, or subjects within this his realm, in all causes, matters, debates and contentions, happening to occur, insurge or begin within the limits thereof, without restraint or provocation to any foreign princes or potentates of the world; the body spiritual whereof having power, when any cause of the law divine happened to come in question, or of spiritual learning, then it was declared, interpreted and shewed by that part of the said body politic called the spiritualty, now being usually called the English Church, which always hath been reputed, and also found of that sort, that both for knowledge, integrity and sufficiency of number, it hath been always thought, and is also at this hour sufficient, and meet of itself, without the intermeddling of any exterior person or persons, to declare and determine all such doubts, and to administer all such offices and duties as to their rooms spiritual doth appertain; for the due administration whereof, and to keep them from corruption and sinister affection, the King's most noble progenitors, and the antecessors of the nobles of this realm, have sufficiently endowed the said Church both with honour and possessions; and the laws temporal for trial of property of lands and goods, and for the conservation of the people of this realm in unity and peace, without rapine or spoil, was and yet is administered, adjudged and executed by sundry judges and ministers of the other part of the said body politic, called the temporality; and both their authorities and jurisdictions do conjoin together in the due administration of justice, the one to help the other."

At the period of the Reformation the National Church introduced an express denial of the authority of the Pope,—henceforth called in all public acts and documents the Bishop of Rome,—into her articles and canons, and an acknowledgment of the temporal supremacy of the Crown over the ecclesiastical as well as the civil state. Henry the Eighth was excommunicated, and in the Bull his subjects were commanded to renounce their allegiance, and the nobles were ordered "sub ejusdem excommunicationis ac perditionis bonorum suorum poenis," to unite with all Christian princes in expelling Henry from England. Elizabeth was excommunicated in pretty similar terms, but not until twelve years after her accession. In answer to a request from the Emperor and other Roman Catholic princes, that she would allow the Roman Catholic places of worship, she replied that she would not allow them to keep up a distinct communion, alleging her reasons in these remarkable words: "For there was no new faith propagated in England; no religion set up but that which was commanded by Our Saviour, practised by the primitive Church, and unanimously approved by the fathers of the best antiquity." The Roman Catholics, both in England and Ireland, appear to have outwardly conformed to the services of the Church for about ten years.

The peculiar character of the English people and the English Church is also strongly shewn in their determination not to admit the general body of the Canon Law into these realms, but only such portions of it as were consistent with the Constitution, the common law, and the peculiar usages of the Anglican Church. The rules of the general Canon Law were principally introduced into this country, and considerably modified in their introduction through the medium of provincial constitutions passed by the authority of the Metropolitans of England. It is true that the Pope endeavoured to maintain his authority in this matter by sending legates from time to time, and by the device of creating the Archbishop of Canterbury "legatus natus" of the Holy See (9). But England possesses in her provincial constitutions, collected by Lyndewode, a body of domestic ecclesiastical law, upon which, before the Reformation, a national independent character was in many respects impressed. The common law was always disposed to recognize these constitutions,

(9) "Thus much is evident, as Gervasius, in the life of William, at this time (anno 1125) Archbishop of Canterbury, well observes, that the legatine power was looked upon as a breach of the law of England, and an invasion of the ancient liberties of the English Church and nation, as well as the rights of the Sees of Canterbury and York in particular, and that the minds of men were scandalized and offended at it."—Inett's Origines Anglicanae, vol. 2. p. 223.

while to the general canon law it always manifested considerable averseness.

But it has always been the doctrine of the temporal and ecclesiastical Courts since the Reformation that the constitutions contained in Lyndewode, and the general usages of the Church, and certain portions of the canon law admitted by those usages, are still binding upon the Church of this realm.

I will give some instances: So late as the year 1848 criminal articles were preferred against a clerk in holy orders for accepting a benefice with cure of souls whilst in possession of another benefice with a cure of souls without dispensation — Burder v. Mavor (10). The articles alleged that by the 29th canon of the 24th Council of Lateran, A.D. 1215, he was ipso jure deprived of the first living. Sir H. Jenner Fust observed, "The first of the articles sets forth the law, namely, that by a decree of the Council of Lateran, when any person in possession of a benefice with cure of souls shall accept another like benefice, the former becomes void, that is, he loses that benefice, and that is the law of this country at this time. The statute of Henry the Eighth does not affect this law, except that it makes the other living voidable; that is, by sentence, or void by presentation of the patron. . . . Under these circumstances, the facts being proved, the Court is bound to sign a sentence, declaring the perpetual curacy of Forest Hill void by Mr. Mavor's acceptance of another benefice with cure of souls."

In the case of Saunders v. Head (11) Sir Herbert Jenner Fust said, "It has been made a subject of complaint, on behalf of Mr. Head, that the articles do not contain any specification of the law relied on to establish them; that the first article is merely general, and that, under such general pleading, it is difficult for a defendant to know how to address himself to the question of law applicable to his case; that the canon law has been referred to generally without particular specification."

(Page 579)—"Now the objection taken in this case is not taken for the first time: it has been frequently taken in this court, and as often overruled. The answer always given to the objection is, that where the general Law Ecclesiastical is relied on, it is not necessary to plead specifically; that where the offence is one generally cognizable in the Ecclesiastical Court it is not necessary to point out the particular canon or statute on which the proceedings are founded."

In the case of Kemp v. Wickes (12), Sir John Nicholl said,—"The law of the Church of England and its history are to be deduced from the ancient general Canon Law, from the particular constitutions made in this country to regulate the English Church, from our own canons, from the Rubric, and from any acts of parliament that may have passed upon the subject; and the whole may be illustrated, also, by the writings of eminent persons."

In the year 1856 a royal licence was granted to Convocation to alter certain canons of 1603; the licence recited the 25 Hen. 8. c. 29. restraining the meeting of Convocation, and continued as follows: "And further, by the said act it is provided that no canons, constitutions, or ordinance should be made or put in execution within this realm, by authority of the Convocation of the clergy, which shall be contrariant or repugnant to the King's prerogative royal, or the customs, laws or statutes of this realm, anything in the said act to the contrary thereof notwithstanding; and, lastly, it is also provided by the said act that such canons, constitutions, ordinances, and synodals provincial which then were already made, and which were not contrary or repugnant to the laws, statutes, and customs of this realm, nor to the damage or hurt of the King's prerogative royal, should then still be used and executed as they were upon making of the said act, till such time as they should be viewed, searched, or otherwise ordered and determined by the persons mentioned in the said act, or the more part of them, according to the tenor or form and effect of the said act, as by the said act amongst divers other things more fully and at large it doth and may appear."

B.—Historical and Theological Statements as to Identity.

Having made these observations with regard to the connexion that subsists between the law as to the Church before and after the Reformation, I will now advert to the evidence of identity furnished by our history and theology since the Reformation.

In 1549, Edward the Sixth's government in their message to the Devonshire rebels state, "It seemeth to you a new service, and indeed is none other but the old; the self-same words in English which were in Latin, saving a few things taken out (13)."

Constant references are made in the Homilies, which were produced under the auspices of Cranmer early in the reign of Edward the Sixth, to the "usages of the primitive Church," and the "sentences and judgments of the most ancient, learned, and godly doctors of the Church."

Collier (14), speaking of the various influences at work during this reign, says, "Peter Martyr concurred with Bucer in his animadversions upon the Common Prayer Book, as appears by his letter to him upon that subject.

"However, from what has been observed, the reader may perceive Bucer was somewhat overcharged with scruples, and carried his censure too far. Neither are his remarks at all reconcilable with his concessions in the beginning of his discourse. And, amongst other things, his setting aside antiquity with so much ease is particularly remarkable. There is a great deference, without doubt, due to the authority of the first centuries. It was then the apostolical traditions were fresh, miracles were frequent, and the Church under the conduct of a distinguishing illumination. Then secular views and projects of ambition were foreign to inclination. Under such opportunities and qualifications, what room is there for suspicion of ignorance or foul dealing? To reject the usages of the ancient Church, because we do not meet with them in Scripture, is no good logic. It is plainly not the design of the New Testament to furnish liturgies and rituals. The converts to St. Peter's sermon continued stedfastly in breaking of bread (15)—that is, administering the Holy Eucharist—and in prayers. But what the prayers were at this solemnity is nowhere delivered in Scripture. Where the extraordinary effusions of the Holy Ghost were not supplied, things of this nature were left to the discretion of the spiritual directors, who were to govern themselves by St. Paul's general rule, 'Let all things be done decently and in order.' (1 Cor. xiv. 40.)

"It is true, if the religious customs of antiquity were plainly inconsistent with the doctrine of the inspired writings, we ought to stand off from them; but in other cases our Saviour's saying is applicable to the present purpose, 'He that is not against us, is for us.' And when the governors of the Church are under no restraint as to ceremonies and compositions, what should hinder them from following their judgments, and directing as they think fit 'For where there is no law, there can be no transgression.' What should hinder them in this case from enlarging the circumstances of worship, from assisting the memory, raising the affections, and explaining the mysteries, with additional ceremonies and devotions?

"His objection against primitive usages, because they have been overvalued and misapplied by the Church of Rome, goes upon a mistaken ground; for, granting the allegations hold good, there is no consequence in the reasoning. To argue from the abuse against the use of things is the way to take our Bibles from us; for what book has been more abused than the inspired text? By this topic almost everything in religion and nature must be contraband and prohibited. Bucer was formerly sensible of this fallacy; he saw the danger of disputing at this rate, and determines against it. To quit antiquity in any custom because it is continued in the Church of Rome has neither reason nor charity in it. It is a peevish principle, and helps to keep up a spirit of division. We ought rather to lament the breaches in the Church than make them wider. All reproachful language, humoursome distance, and unnecessary squabbles, serve only to exasperate one part of Christendom against another, and make our common religion the jest of infidels and atheists."

The same author (16) thus introduces the subject of the Apology of Jewel.

"The next remarkable occurrence is Bishop Jewel's sermon at Paul's Cross. It was preached in Lent this year, upon these words of the Apostle Paul, 'I have received of the Lord that which also I deliver unto you.' From this text he took occasion to make that remarkable challenge in defence of the Reformation. The Church of England was reproached with novelty by the Papists, and charged with departing from primitive doctrine and practice. To wipe off these aspersions the Bishop put the case upon a bold issue, and declared in the pulpit, 'That if any learned men of all our adversaries, or if all the learned men that are alive, are able to bring any one sufficient sentence out of any old Catholic doctor or father, or out of any general council, or out of the Holy Scriptures of God, or any one example of the primitive Church, whereby it may be plainly and clearly proved that for the six hundred years after Christ there was any private mass in the world; or that there was any communion administered under one kind; or that the people had their common prayer in a language which they did not understand; or that the Bishop of Rome was then called universal bishop or head of the universal church; or that the people were then taught to believe that Christ's body is really, substantially, corporally, carnally, or naturally in the sacrament, &c. If any one of his adversaries were able to make good but a single proposition amongst all these, either by sufficient declarations in Scripture, or by the testimony of the ancient fathers and councils, he was ready to give up the contest and subscribe himself a proselyte.'"

It is not unworthy of remark that in the canon of 1571, concerning preachers, it is ordered, "In primis videbunt concionatores, nequid unquam doceant pro concione quod a populo religiose teneri et credi velint, nisi quod consentaneum sit doctrinæ Veteris aut Novi Testamenti, quodque ex illa ipsa doctrina Catholici patres et veteres episcopi collegerint."

The Puritans did not dispute the lawfulness of set forms of prayer, but they were to be such as were used in Geneva and Scotland—Neale's History, p. 236; Madox, p. 78. But Bishop Burnet observes, speaking of the year 1548 (17): "It being resolved to bring the whole worship of God under set forms; they (our Reformers) set one general rule to themselves (which they afterwards declared) of changing nothing for novelty's sake, or merely because it had been formerly used. They resolved to retain such things as the primitive Church had practised, cutting off such abuses as the latter ages had grafted on them, and to continue the use of such other things which, though they had been brought in not so early, yet were of good use to beget devotion, and were so much recommended to the people by the practice of them that the laying aside these would, perhaps, have alienated them from the other changes they made; and therefore they resolved to make no change without very good and weighty reason. In which they considered the practice of our Saviour, who did not only comply with the rites of Judaism himself, but even the prayer he gave to his disciples was framed according to their forms; and his two great institutions of Baptism and the Eucharist did consist of rites that had been used among the Jews; and since he who was delivering a new religion, and was authorized in the highest manner that ever any was, did yet so far comply with received practices as from them to take those which he sanctified for the use of his Church, it seemed much fitter for those who had no such extraordinary warrant to give them authority in what they did, when they were reforming abuses, to let the world see they did it not from the wanton desire of change or any affectation of novelty, and with those resolutions they entered on their work."

I now approach an authority to which almost universal homage has been accorded,—the authority of Hooker (18).

"They," he says, "which measure religion by dislike of the Church of Rome think every man so much the more sound by how much he can make the corruption thereof to seem more large ; and therefore some there are, namely, the Arians in reformed Churches of Poland, which imagine the canker to have eaten so far into the very bones and marrow of the Church of Rome as if it had not so much as a sound belief, no not concerning God himself, but that the very belief of the Trinity were a part of antichristian corruption ; and that the wonderful providence of God did bring to pass that the Bishop of the see of Rome should be famous for his triple crown,—a sensible mark whereby the world might know him to be that mystical beast spoken of in the Revelation, to be that great and notorious antichrist in no one respect so much as in this, that he maintaineth the doctrine of the Trinity. Wisdom therefore and skill is requisite to know what parts are sound in that Church and what corrupted.

“Neither is it to all men apparent which complain of unsound parts, with what kind of unsoundness every such part is possessed. They can say, that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, in sacraments, the Church of Rome hath (as it hath indeed) very foul and gross corruptions, the nature whereof, notwithstanding because they have not for the most part exact skill and knowledge to discern, they think that amiss [many times which is not ; and the salve of reformation they mightily call for, but when and what the sores are which need it, as they wot full little, so they think it not greatly material to search.”

“(19) That the Church of Rome doth hereby take occasion to blaspheme, and to say our religion is not able to stand of itself unless it lean upon the staff of their ceremonies, is not a matter of so great moment that it need to be objected, or doth deserve to receive an answer. The name of blasphemy in this place is like the shoe of Hercules on a child's foot. If the Church of Rome do use any such kind of silly approbation, it is no such ugly thing to the ear that we should think the honour and credit of our religion to receive thereby any great wound. They which hereof make so perilous a matter do seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they relieving us might afterwards laugh and gibe at our poverty ; whereas in truth the ceremonies which we have taken from such as were before us are not things that belong to this or that sect, but they are the ancient rites and customs of the Church of Christ, whereof ourselves being a part, we have the selfsame interest in them which our fathers before us had, from whom the same are descended unto us.”

“No man which is not exceeding partial can well deny but that there is most just cause wherefore we should be offended greatly at the Church of Rome. Notwithstanding at such times as we are to deliberate for ourselves, the freer our minds are from all distempered affections the sounder and better is our judgement. When we are in a fretting mood at the Church of Rome, and with that angry disposition enter into any cogitation of the orders and rites of our Church, taking particular survey of them, we are sure to have always one eye fixed upon the countenance of our enemies, and according to the blithe or heavy aspect thereof our other eye sheweth some other suitable token either of dislike or approbation towards our own orders. For the rule of our judgment in such case being only that of Homer, ‘This is the thing which our enemies would have,’ what they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject ; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us much the better if we espy that it galleth them.

“Miserable were the state and condition of that Church the weighty affairs whereof should be ordered by those deliberations wherein such a humour as this were predominant. We have most heartily to thank God, therefore, that they amongst us to whom the first consultations of causes of this kind fell were men which aiming at another mark, namely, the glory of God and the good of this His Church, took that which they judged thereunto necessary, not rejecting any good or convenient thing only because the Church of Rome might perhaps like it.”

The Puritans at the Hampton Court Conference in the reign of James the First vehemently objected to the sign of the Cross in the sacrament of Baptism, and the reply to their objections incorporated in the thirtieth canon (of 1603) deserves the careful study of those who would thoroughly understand the mind of the English Church upon the subject now under consideration.

(20) "And this use of the sign of the Cross in Baptism was held in the primitive Church, as well by the Greeks as the Latins, with one consent and great applause. At that time, if any had opposed themselves against it, they would certainly have been censured as enemies of the name of the Cross, and consequently of Christ's merits, the sign whereof they could no better endure. This continual and general use of the sign of the Cross is evident by many testimonies of the ancient fathers.

"It must be confessed that in process of time the sign of the Cross was greatly abused in the Church of Rome, especially after that corruption of popery had once possessed it. But the abuse of a thing doth not take away the lawful use of it. Nay, so far was it from the purpose of the Church of England to forsake and reject the Churches of Italy, France, Spain, Germany, or any such like Churches in all things which they held and practised, that, as the Apology of the Church of England confesseth, it doth with reverence retain those ceremonies which doth neither endamage the Church of God, nor offend the minds of sober men, and only departed from them in those particular points wherein they were fallen both from themselves in their ancient integrity, and from the apostolical Churches which were their first founders."

".... So that for the very remembrance of the Cross, which is very precious to all of them that rightly believe in Jesus Christ, and in the other respects mentioned, the Church of England hath retained still the sign of it in Baptism, following therein the primitive and apostolical Churches."

Dr. Jackson, who was President of Corpus Christi College and Dean of Peterborough, one of our most learned divines, writing A.D. 1629, in his treatise of the Holy Catholic Faith and Church, says (21), "That the title of Catholic is proper and essential unto the faith professed by the present visible Church of England, but cannot truly be attributed to the faith or creed of the modern visible Romish Church.

(20) Canon 30. The lawful Use of the Cross in Baptism explained.

(21) Works, vol. 12. ch. 21. p. 161, edit. 1845.

"Whether the name Catholic were first bestowed upon the Church, or upon that faith which is the life and soul of the Holy Apostolic Church, shall be no part of our inquiry. It sufficeth that the name Catholic itself is univocal in respect both of Church and faith. True faith is therefore Catholic faith, because it is the only door or way unto salvation, alike common unto all, without national or topical respect. Whosoever of any nation have been saved have been saved by this one and the same faith, and whoever will be saved (as Athanasius speaks) must hold this Catholic faith, and he must hold it pure and undefiled. The main question then is, who they be that hold this Catholic faith, and whether they hold it undefiled or no. Were Vincentius' rules as artificial as they are orthodoxal and honest, the issue betwixt us and the Romanist would be very easy and triable. But let us take them as they are: 'Id Catholicum est quod ab omnibus ubique et semper,' &c. 'That is Catholic which is held by all, in all places, and at all times.'

"The three special notes of the Catholic faith or Church by him required are universality, antiquity, and consent. Whether these three members be different or subordinate, and oftentimes coincident, I leave it to be scanned by logicians. According to the author's limitation, all three marks agree to us, not to the Romanist."

"The fallacy by which the Romanists deceive poor simple people is in making them believe that our religion and their religion, our faith and their faith, are duo prima diversa, or so totally distinct that part of the one could not be included in the other. But for the universality of our faith we have every member of the Romish Church a suffragant or witness for us. First, nothing is held as a point of faith in our Church but the present Romish Church doth hold the same, and confess the same to have been held by all orthodoxal antiquity. So that for the form of faith established in our Church, we have the consent of the primitive Church, of the four first general councils, of all succeeding ages unto this present day, the consent likewise of the present Romish Church, and of ourselves. Now, as France is a great deal bigger than Normandy, if we compare them as distinct and opposite, and yet France and Normandy is bigger than France without Normandy, so likewise though the present visible Romish Church be much greater than the Church of England, yet seeing the Romish Church, how great soever, doth hold all the points of faith which our Church doth for catholic and orthodoxal, our consent and their consent, our confession and their confession, is more universal than their consent without ours. But if their consent unto the points of faith believed by us prove our faith to be universal, and our Church by consequence to be catholic, why should not our consent unto the points of faith believed by them prove their faith to be universal, or their Church to be catholic? Because it is not enough to hold all points of Catholic faith, unless the same points be kept holy and undefiled. The Romish Church, we grant, doth hold all points of Catholic faith, and so far as she hold these points we dissent not from her; yet dissent from her we do in that she hath defiled and polluted the Catholic faith with new and poisonous doctrines, for which she neither hath the consent of antiquity, nor of reformed churches."

And again, answering that silly taunt of the Romanists, "Where was your Church before the Reformation?" he observes: "The question is much the same as if they should ask us, where was King Henry the Seventh's kingdom, where were his subjects, where was your commonweal whilst Richard the Third did call parliaments, and sway the sceptre of this kingdom? The kingdom of Henry the Seventh and of his successors, or the English commonweal, was in the same place then as now it is. The deposition of the tyrant, the dissolution of the tyranny, and the reducing of English subjects to their true allegiance, did work no essential alteration in the commonweal of the kingdom, but only a reformation of the government, and redcement of it to the fundamental laws of the land.

"No more did the rejection of the Romish Church's usurped authority in matters spiritual induce any substantial alteration in the English Church, but a reformation or reduction of it unto the fundamental constitution of the primitive Church" (22).

In the warrant issued by Charles the Second for the conference at the Savoy, which preceded the adoption of our present Prayer Book (Cardwell's Conferences, p. 300), a commission of certain persons is appointed to advise upon and review the said Book of Common Prayer, comparing the same with the most ancient liturgies which have been used in the Church in the primitive and purest times.

So careful were the compilers of this great treasure of the Church that it should speak the Catholic language, to which Christian ears and hearts had been accustomed, while the apostolical spirits and doctrine still guided the undivided Church.

Hear on this subject the erudite and eloquent Donne: "If they (the Roman Catholics) say, we are perplexed with differences of opinions amongst ourselves, let this satisfy them, that we do agree all in all fundamental things; and that in things much nearer the foundation than those in which our differences lie they differ amongst themselves, with more acrimony and bitterness than we do. If they think to perplex us with the fathers, we are ready to join that issue with them; where the fathers speak unanimously, dogmatically, in matters of faith, we are content to be tried by the fathers. If they think to perplex us with councils, we will go as far as they in the old ones; and, as far as they for meeting in new councils, if they may be fully, that is, royally, imperially, called, and equally proceeded in, and the resolutions grow and gathered there upon debates, upon the place, and not brought thither upon commandment from Rome."—Donne's Works, vol. 3. p. 11.

Bishop Cosin, an authority of special significance and weight, because he largely assisted in the compilation of our Prayer Book (23), says: "In truth we have continued the old religion; and the ceremonies which we have taken from them that were before us are not things which belong to this or that sect, but they are the ancient rites and customs of the Church of Christ, whereof ourselves being a part, we have the selfsame interest in them which our fathers before us had, from whom the same descended to us. To abrogate those things without constraint of apparent harm thence arising had been to alter unjustly the universal practice of the people of God and those general decrees of the fathers, which (in St. Augustin's language) is madness and insolence to do, both in respect of the universal authority of the Church, which no particular Church has power to control, and also in regard of reasons before mentioned."

Archbishop Bramhall, who wrote in 1677 his 'Just Vindication of the Church of England,' &c., says: "But it is not enough to charge the court of Rome unless we can discharge ourselves, and acquit our own Church, of the guilt of schism which they seek to cast upon us. First, they object that we have separated ourselves schismatically from the communion of the Catholic Church. God forbid! Then we will acknowledge, without any more to do, that we have separated ourselves from Christ, and all His holy ordinances, and from the benefit of His passion, and all hope of salvation.

"But the truth is, we have no otherwise separated ourselves from the communion of the Catholic Church than all the primitive orthodox fathers, and doctors, and churches did long before us, that is, in the opinion of the Donatists, as we do now in the opinion of the Romanists; because the Romanists limit the Catholic Church now to Rome in Italy, and those churches that are subordinate to it, as the Donatists did then to Cartenna in Africa, and those churches that adhered to it. We are so far from separating ourselves from the communion of the Catholic Church that we make the communion of the Christian Church to be thrice more catholic than the Romanists themselves do make it, and maintain communion with thrice so many Christians as they do. By how much our Church should make itself, as the case stands, more Roman than it is, by so much it should thereby become less catholic than it is."—Works, folio, Dublin, chap. 9.

"As for my religion," said the holy Ken, with almost his latest breath, "I die in the holy catholic and apostolic faith, professed by the whole Church before the disunion of East and West; more particularly I die in the communion of the Church of England, as it stands distinguished from all Papal and Puritan innovations, and as it adheres to the doctrine of the Cross."

Bishop Beveridge compiled, with infinite labour and accuracy, a Codex Canonum Ecclesie Primitivæ vindicatus ac illustratus: in his preface to which are these words (s. 6.), "For when this our English Church, through long communion with the Roman Church, had contracted like stains with her, from which it was necessary that it should be cleansed, they who took that excellent and very necessary work in hand, fearing that they, like others, might rush from one extreme to the other, removed indeed those things, as well doctrines as ceremonies, which the Roman Church had newly and insensibly superinduced, and, as was fit, abrogated them utterly. Yet notwithstanding whatsoever things had been at all times believed and observed by all churches in all places, those things they most religiously took care not so to abolish with them. For they well knew that all particular churches are to be formed on the model of the Universal Church, if indeed, according to that general and received rule in ethics, 'every part which agreeth not with its whole is therein base.' Hence, therefore, these first reformers of this particular church, directed the whole line of that reformation which they undertook, according to the rule of the whole or Universal Church, casting away those things only which had been either unheard of, or rejected by the Universal Church, but most religiously retaining those which they saw, on the other side, corroborated by the consent of the Universal Church. Whence it hath been brought to pass, that although we have not communion with the Roman, nor with certain other particular churches, as at this day constituted, yet have we abiding communion with the Universal and Catholic Church, of which evidently ours, as by the aid of God first constituted, and by his pity still preserved, is the perfect image and representation."

Observe how Barrow speaks in his Treatise on the Pope's Supremacy. "This new creed," he says, "of Pius the Fourth containeth these novelties and heterodoxies: 1, Seven sacraments; 2, Trent doctrine of justification and original sin; 3, Propitiatory sacrifice of the mass; 4, Transubstantiation; 5, Communicating under one kind; 6, Purgatory; 7, Invocation of Saints; 8, Veneration of relics; 9, Worship of images; 10, The Roman Church to be the mother and mistress of all churches; 11, Swearing obedience to the Pope; 12, Receiving the decrees of all synods and of Trent" (24).

Bishop Sanderson (died 1662) believed that "(25) all men would be found much mistaken who account all Popery that is taught or practised in the Church of Rome. Our godly forefathers, to whom (under God) we owe the purity of our religion, and some of whom laid down their lives for the defence of the same, were, sure, of another mind, if we may, from what they did, judge what they thought. They had no purpose (nor had they any warrant) to set up a new religion, but to reform the old, by purging it from those innovations, which on tract of time (some sooner, some later) had mingled with it, and corrupted it both in the doctrine and worship. According to this purpose they produced, without constraint or precipitancy, freely and advisedly, as in peaceable times, and brought their intentions to a happy end, as by the results thereof contained in the articles and liturgy of our Church, and the prefaces thereunto, doth fully appear. From hence chiefly, as I conceive, we are to take our best scantling, whereby to judge what is, and what is not, to be esteemed Popery. All those doctrines then held by the modern Church of Rome, which are either contrary to the written Word of God, or but superadded thereunto as necessary points of faith to be of all Christians believed under pain of damnation; and all those superstitions used in the worship of God which are either unlawful as being contrary to the Word; or being not contrary and therefore arbitrary and indifferent, are made essentials, and imposed as necessary parts of worship: these are, as I take it, the things whereunto the name of Popery doth properly and peculiarly belong. But as for the ceremonies used in the Church of Rome which the Church of England at the Reformation thought fit to retain, not as essential or necessary parts of God's service, but only as accidental and mutable circumstances attending the same, for order, comeliness, and edification's sake; how these should deserve the name of popish, I so little understand, that I profess I do not yet see any reason why, if the Church had then thought fit to have retained some other of those which were then laid aside, she might not lawfully have so done; or why the things so retained should have been accounted popish. The plain truth is this: the Church of England meant to make use of her liberty and the lawful power she had (as all the Churches of Christ have, or ought to have) of ordering ecclesiastical affairs here; yet to do it with so much prudence and moderation that the world might see by what was laid aside, that she acknowledged no subjection to the See of Rome; and by what was retained, that she did not secede from the Church of Rome out of any spirit of contradiction, but as necessitated thereunto for the maintenance of her just liberty. The number of ceremonies was also then very great and thereby burdensome, and so the number thought fit to be lessened. But for the choice which should be kept and which not, that was wholly in her power and at her discretion."

Bishop Smalridge, the accomplished friend of Addison, wrote a sermon on the authority of the governors of our Church to prescribe rites and ceremonies (vol. 1. p. 145), in the course of which he said:

"But because those who allow some rites to be lawful may entertain some doubts concerning the use of ours, as apprehending them to have some particular faults which do not belong to all ceremonies in general, I shall proceed to clear those which we of this Church are required to observe, from such objections as are brought to prove them unlawful and unwarrantable. Those who scruple the use of them allege it as one main ground of their scruples, that those ceremonies which are used in our Church are also used in the Church of Rome, and they are therefore cautious of observing them, lest they should thereby countenance the errors and corruptions of that Church. Now this would be a good argument against the usage of such rites, if it could be proved that those who err in some things do certainly err in everything; or, that we ought to shew our abhorrence of the corruptions of a Church by condemning and abolishing even those usages which have nothing in them but what is innocent and incorrupt. But we have not declared war against those of that Church as they are Christians, but as they are perverters of the Gospel of Christ; we do not profess to differ from them in everything, but only in such things wherein we apprehend them to have degenerated from the pure and undefiled Church of Christ. We think that we should not be able to vindicate ourselves from the charge of schism, which they bring against us, if whatever doctrine they held, whatever rite they practised, that we should, for no other reason but because they held and practised it, forthwith condemn and reject. The ablest champions for the cause of the Reformation have always thought it the best answer against the charge of schism, to allege and prove that we have no further departed from them than they departed from the pure and primitive Church of Christ. What is contrary to the purity of the Gospel, that we reject; not because popish, but because repugnant to the laws and doctrines of Christ: what is noways contradictory to the simplicity of the Gospel, what may be subservient to piety, that we retain; not because practised by the Church of Rome, but because agreeable to the rules of the Gospel. If there be anything in our ceremonies that is sinful, they ought presently to be abolished, though there was nothing of the same kind practised by those of the Roman communion (26). What is decent and laudable in them cannot lose its worth and value, because others have them in common with us. If it be laid down as a good rule of reformation that we must depart as far as possible from Rome, we must renounce the articles of our creed, because they of that Church profess to believe them; we must declare ourselves Socinians that we may be thought staunch Protestants; and we must renounce the doctrine of the Trinity, because it is held by those who do also hold that of transubstantiation. In the Romish religion there are some things evil, some things good, some things wholly indifferent. Whatever is sinful in that communion we are bound to reject, and have, we think, accordingly rejected; what is good we ought to retain, and therefore do retain; what was indifferent, it was at the discretion of our reformers either to keep or change, as they thought should be more expedient. Private persons may, according to the variety of their judgments, think some things might have been kept which were left off, or some things might have been dropped which are still kept; but unless they can prove those that have been abolished to be necessary, or those that are reserved to be unlawful, they are bound quietly to submit to the abolition of the former, and to the usage of the latter."

Bishop Bull, writing in 1705 on "The Corruptions of the Church of Rome, in answer to the Bishop of Meaux' queries," thus maintains the true position of our Church: "I proceed to the bishop's questions: He asks me what I mean by the Catholic Church? I answer, What I mean by the Catholic Church, in the book, which he all along refers to, I have already shown, and the very title of the book sufficiently declares. If he asks me what I mean by the Catholic Church, speaking of it as it now is, I answer, By the Catholic Church, I mean the Church Universal, being a collection of all the Churches throughout the world, who retain the faith (ἡ πίστις) once delivered to the Saints (Jude 3); that is, who hold and possess in the substance of it, that faith and religion which was delivered by the Apostles of Christ to the first original Churches, according to Tertullian's rule before mentioned. Which faith and religion is contained in the Holy Scriptures, especially of the New Testament, and the main fundamentals of it comprised in the canon or rule of faith, universally received throughout the primitive Churches, and the possession thereof acknowledged to be a sufficient tessera or badge of a Catholic Christian. All the Churches at this day which hold and profess this faith and religion, however distant in place, or distinguished by different rites and ceremonies, yea, or divided in some extra-fundamental points of doctrine, yet agreeing in the essentials of the Christian religion, make up together one Christian Catholic Church under the Lord Christ, the supreme head thereof. The Catholic Church under this notion is not a confused heap of societies separated one from another."—These are important words.—“But it seems, no other union of the Church will satisfy the bishop, but an union of all the Churches of Christ throughout all the world, under one visible head, having a jurisdiction over them all, and that head the bishop of Rome for the time being. But such an union as this was never dreamed of amongst Christians for at least the first six hundred years, as shall be shown in its due place” (27).

In addition to this mass of evidence derived from the writings of English divines, I may cite the following testimonies to the same effect from the works of three distinguished foreigners, who watched with deep interest the form which the Reformation of the Church took in England: Isaac Casaubon, Hugo Grotius, and Saravia.

Casaubon [ad Salmas Epist. 837. p. 489,] A.D. 1612: “Quod si me conjectura non fallit, totius Reformationis pars integerrima est in Anglia, ubi cum studio veritatis viget studium antiquitatis.”—[Epist. ad Cardinal Perron, p. 494]. “Parata est Ecclesia Anglicana fidei suæ reddere rationem, et rebus ipsis evincere, auctoribus Reformationis hic institutæ non fuisse propositum novam aliquam ecclesiam condere, ut imperiti et malevoli calumniantur; sed quæ erant collapsa, ad formam revocare quam fieri posset optimam; optimam autem judicarunt nascenti Ecclesiæ ab Apostolis traditam, et proximis seculis usurpatam.”

Hugo Grotius [Epist. ad Boetsaeler, Epist. 62, p. 21, edit. 1637]: “Certum est mihi Λειτουργίαν Anglicanam, item morem imponendi manus adolescentibus in memoriam Baptismi, auctoritatem Episcoporum, et Presbyteria ex solis Pastoribus composita multaque alia ejusmodi satis congruere institutis vetustioris Ecclesiæ, a quibus in Gallia et Belgio recessum negare non possumus.”—[Epist. ad Corvinum, Epist. p. 434]: “Qui illam optimam antiquitatem sequuntur ducem, iis non eveniet ut multum sibi ipsis sint discolores. In Anglia vides quam bene processerit dogmatum noxiorum repurgatio; hac maxime de causa, quod qui id sanctissimum negotium procurandum susceperunt, nihil admisissent novi, nihil sui,

Hadrian Saravia, the friend of Hooker: “Among others that have reformed their churches, I have often admired the wisdom of those who restored the true worship of God to the Church of England,—who so tempered themselves, that they cannot be reproved for having departed from the ancient and primitive customs of the Church of God; and that moderation they have used, that by their example they have invited others to reform, and deterred none.”—Wordsworth, Theophilus Anglicanus, p. 171.

In 1851 the Archbishops of Canterbury and York and twenty bishops published a statement in which they set forth “the undoubted identity of the Church before and after the Reformation;” and that at the Reformation the English Church rejected certain corruptions and established “one uniform ritual,” but “without in any degree severing her connexion with the ancient Catholic Church.”—Phillimore's International Law, vol. 2. p. 422, and The Guardian, April 2, 1851.

In 1867, eight primates and sixty-eight bishops assembled from all parts of the globe, under the presidency of the Metropolitan of Canterbury.

The resolutions of this conference were prefaced by the following introduction: “We, Bishops of Christ's Holy Catholic Church, in visible communion with the United Church of England and Ireland, professing the Faith delivered to us in Holy Scripture, maintained by the Primitive Church, and by the Fathers of the English Reformation, now assembled, by the good providence of God, at the Archiepiscopal Palace of Lambeth, under the presidency of the Primate of all England, desire, first, to give hearty thanks to Almighty God for having thus brought us together for common counsels and united worship; secondly, we desire to express the deep sorrow with which we view the divided condition of the flock of Christ throughout the world, ardently longing for the fulfilment of the prayer of our Lord, ‘That all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in Us, that the world may believe that Thou hast sent me;’ and, lastly, we do here solemnly record our conviction that unity will be most effectually promoted by maintaining the Faith in its purity and integrity, as taught in the Holy Scriptures, held by the Primitive Church, summed up in the Creeds, and affirmed by the undisputed General Councils."

But after all no argument for the continuity of the Church of England can be stronger than that which is derived from the structure, order, and contents of the Prayer Book. It contains the Breviarium, in which towards the end of the eleventh century had been inserted all the offices of the canonical hours, called also Portiforium and in England Portuary, the Missale or the service for the Holy Communion, and the Ordinale, which is referred to under the name of the "Pie" in the preface. There were various "Uses" or Prayer Books in England, known as the Salisbury, the York, the Bangor, and the Hereford Uses, and others. The most celebrated appear to have been the Portiforium or Breviary of Sarum, which contained the Daily Services,—the Sarum Missal, which contained the Holy Communion Service,—and the Sarum Manual, a book of occasional offices. These books of devotion seem to have been compiled by Osmund, Bishop of Salisbury, about the time of the Conquest; and in 1531 a reformed edition of the Sarum Portiforium was reprinted, and shortly afterwards a reformed Missal was published. There were also Primers, which contained, in a vulgar tongue, large portions of the Service in use amongst the people. In 1536 the Roman Breviary was reformed, and published by a Spanish Bishop, Cardinal Quignonez; and in 1544 Hermann, Archbishop of Cologne, whom the Pope during the early sittings of the Council of Trent deprived (28), published a reformed ritual (29).

In 1542 Henry the Eighth directed Convocation to consider the revision of the books of devotion then in use in this country. It is probable that the fruit of their labours, as well as the other works to which reference has been made, were laid before the royal visitors appointed by Edward the Sixth in January, 1546–7, and the Committee of Convocation, to whom the preparation of the Prayer Book of 1549 was entrusted.

The whole Prayer Book in fact, with very inconsiderable exceptions, consists of a translation of the ancient liturgies, and especially of the liturgy used by the Western Church. And we learn from the Preface to the Prayer Book that the object was to restore that "godly and decent order of the ancient fathers" which had been broken, and to introduce an order of prayer and reading of Holy Scripture "agreeable to their mind and purpose;" and that all suggested alterations which "secretly struck at some laudable practice of the whole Catholic Church of Christ" were rejected; and that the calendar contained a "table of feasts, vigils, fasts, and days of abstinence," which were in accordance with primitive and catholic use; while the ornaments of the church and the vestments of the ministers were such as to present to the people some of the most prominent features of the ancient service, and were for this reason the ground of unceasing attack from the Puritans, and the disciples of the Genevan school. And it is the observation of Mr. Hallam, while speaking of the Roman Catholics, "that it was always held out by our Church, when the object was conciliation, that the liturgy was essentially the same with the mass book."—Const. History, vol. 1. p. 117 n. edit. 1829.

These premises, which I have stated at some length, lead me to the conclusion that no sound argument against the lawfulness of the matters objected to in these articles can be deduced from the mere fact of their identity with the ceremonies in use before the Reformation.

Argument from Disuse.

I will next consider the argument founded on the alleged de facto disuse, since the Reformation, of the ceremonies or ornaments complained of in these articles.

It assumes this kind of shape:

"If these things were legal they would have been in use; their non-usage is almost fatal to their claim of legality; the presumption of law is strongly against them; and in order to refute that presumption a continuous usage must be established by those who maintain their lawfulness."

(28) Sarpi, Istoria del Concil. Trident., lib. 1. n. 59.

(29) See Preface to Annotated Book of Common Prayer.

This argument seems to have been in the mind of the Judge of the Consistory of London in the Knightsbridge Church cases, though at the same time he strenuously asserted that no provision of statute or lawful canon could be abrogated by non-user. The doctrine of desuetude he repudiated, as unknown to the law of England.

This argument from the long disuse of ornaments and observances recently revived cannot be altogether passed over.

The fact of disuse raises a practical prejudice, if not a legal obstacle to all such revivals. The consideration of the causes which have induced it has a bearing upon the discussion of the questions which I am to adjudicate.

The argument appears to me to admit of two distinct answers.

In the first place it proves too much; for perhaps there is no historical fact more certain than this, namely, that the law derived from the rubrics and canons has never, at any period since the Reformation, been universally and duly obeyed. The proposition is startling, but I think unquestionably true. The instances of disobedience are striking, if not many; take, as one example, the vestments of the clergy.

The rubric of Edward the Sixth provides: "And here it is to be noted, that such ornaments of the church, and of the ministers thereof, at all times of their ministration, shall be retained, and be in use, as were in this Church of England, by the authority of Parliament, in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth."

And the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, in Westerton v. Liddell, most deliberately and emphatically decided that "the rubric to the Prayer Book of January the 1st, 1604, adopts the language of the rubric of Elizabeth; the rubric to the present Prayer Book adopts the language of the Statute of Elizabeth; but they all obviously mean the same thing, that the same dresses and the same utensils or articles which were used under the first Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth may still be used." Their Lordships say: "No difficulty will be found in discovering amongst the articles of which the use is there enjoined, ornaments of the church, as well as ornaments of the ministrations. Besides the vestments differing in the different services, the rubric provides for the use of an English Bible," &c.—Liddell v. Westerton (30).

The dresses of which the use is prescribed in the first Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth are thus ordered: "Upon the day, and at the time appointed for the ministration of the Holy Communion, the priest that shall execute the holy ministry shall put upon him the vestures appointed for that ministration; that is to say, a white albe plain, with a vestment or cope."

"And whensoever the bishop shall celebrate the Holy Communion in the church, or execute any other public ministration, he shall have upon him, beside his rochet, a surplice or albe, and a cope or vestment, and also his pastoral staff in his hand, or else borne or holden by his chaplain."

The canons of 1603 could not alter or affect the positive provisions of a statute; but, on the supposition that they alone were to be consulted, the use of the surplice in parish churches is distinctly enjoined by them (Canon 58). Nevertheless I well recollect that when Bishop Blomfield published his celebrated charge in 1842, the expression therein of his opinion, that the preacher ought to wear the surplice rather than the gown in the morning service, raised a storm of religious controversy and excited feeling upon which a sober-minded man now looks back with surprise and regret. And I cannot but agree with his biographer, that "it will hardly be denied, that the great principle for which Bishop Blomfield contended, that in Divine service all things should be done decently, and in order, is now acted upon in the Church of England to an extent which, twenty years ago, would hardly have been expected by men of calm judgment, and which, thirty years ago, would by most have been pronounced impossible."—Memoir of Bishop Blomfield, vol. 1. p. 64.

The same canons enjoined the use of copes in cathedrals (Canon 24), a special prayer called the bidding prayer to be used by all ministers before every sermon (Canon 55), a passing bell to be tolled for every dying parishioner (Canon 67); "upon every Sunday and Holyday" the minister shall "under pain of suspension and excommunication, for half an hour or more, examine and instruct the youth and ignorant persons in his parish in the Ten Commandments, the Articles of the Belief, and in the Lord's Prayer; and shall diligently hear, instruct, and teach them the Catechism set forth in the Book of Common Prayer" (Canon 59); that a particular dress, minutely specified, shall be worn by ecclesiastical persons on a journey (Canon 74); that the Litany shall be said or sung wherever appointed by the Prayer Book, more particularly upon Wednesdays and Fridays, though they be not holydays (Canon 15).

The rubric directs that the holy elements shall be placed upon the Table of the Lord at a particular part of the service; but till lately, and before the decision of the Privy Council in favour of the use of the credence table, this rubric was generally disobeyed. The rubric is express in its directions, that "unless the minister be otherwise reasonably hindered," he shall perform daily service; that "the feasts shall be observed," in which category are included all Sundays, and certain feasts and saints' days; and there is also a careful table of the vigils, fasts, and days of abstinence to be observed throughout the year; that "so many as intend to be partakers of the Holy Communion shall signify their names to the curate at least some time the day before." Private baptism, which was only to be allowed for "great cause or necessity," had so generally superseded public baptism, that the late Bishop of London was compelled expressly to forbid his clergy to baptize privately except in cases of necessity; and, indeed, of all these precise orders, of which the catalogue is not exhausted, having for their object the spiritual edification of members of the Church, how very few, till lately, within our own memory, have been obeyed, and how much more common has been the breach than the observance of them.

It is true that Mr. Mackonochie is not charged with any disobedience to the law in these respects; his offence is that of unauthorized addition, of doing too much and not too little in his ministrations in the Church; but I refer to this notorious fact of general disobedience to the law in these respects, because a revived obedience to it, not unnaturally, excites the surprise and sometimes the anger of persons who have been habituated to a more relaxed and less careful system. A compliance with the law has the effect of novelty upon them, and they are apt to consider as illegal not the desuetude of a prescribed usage, but the restoration of it.

This argument of disuse was most strongly urged in the Knightsbridge Church cases as conclusive against the Cross and the Credence Table; and it was truly said that the instances in which any trace of them could be substantiated by evidence, since the Reformation, were very few and inconsiderable,—not half a dozen I believe in number, and it was contended that such disuse amounted to a practical rejection of them by the Church. And this argument prevailed with the Judges of the Consistory of London and of the Arches Court, who accordingly pronounced these things to be unlawful. But it did not avail before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, who, looking to their innocent and primitive use, reversed the sentence of these Courts and pronounced them to be lawful.

The mere fact, therefore, that the practice complained of is novel, furnishes by no means an irrefragable argument that it is unlawful, and it can afford, in truth, but little assistance in solving the question whether the practices charged against Mr. Mackonochie are or are not contrary to the law.

In the second place, the alleged disuse or desuetude must be measured by a reference to the history of the institution during the period in which it has prevailed. The questions,—has that institution been during this period in its normal condition? has it been in a state of unconstrained freedom? of undisturbed liberty of action? or has it during this period been from time to time turned aside from its natural course? has it been oscillating between peril and disquiet and the apathy which is so often their reactionary successor? has it manifested wherever it has been in a state of freedom, peace and vigour, a desire to restore and reserve as much as it could of a lawful inheritance which had been forcibly put in abeyance, and had that desire and endeavour always accompanied a revival of life and energy?—these are questions which must be answered before the argument from disuse can be properly estimated. A careful examination of the history of this country, and more especially of that part of it which relates to the Church, affords some explanation of the careless and imperfect compliance with the directions and orders of the Prayer Book to which I have adverted. To enter at length into this history would far exceed the limits of my present judgment, but I will make a very cursory reference to the principal epochs.

From the reign of Edward the Sixth to the reign of Her present Majesty the intervals during which the Church has been undisturbed by troubles from within or without have been few.

During the short reign of Edward the Sixth she underwent various trials. Her worship and her ritual were twice dealt with by Parliament, and not only her revenues but the ornaments and treasures within her fabrics were scandalously plundered in order to fill the purses of the corrupt courtiers of a precocious, well-meaning, but prejudiced and narrow-minded boy, who, during the few years of his reign, was little more than an instrument in the unscrupulous hands of the religious and political factions which surrounded and besieged his throne.

I will borrow the language of Fuller in his Church History of Britain (book 7. p. 329, edit. 1837).

Speaking of the year 1550, this quaint but faithful historian says: "Come we now to the saddest difference that ever happened in the Church of England, if we consider either the time how long it continued, the eminent persons therein engaged, or the doleful effects thereby produced. It was about matters of conformity. Alas! that men should have lesse wisdom than locusts; which when sent on God's errand, 'did not thrust one another' (Joel ii. 8), whereas here such shoving, and shouldering, and hoisting, and heavings, and justling, and thronging, betwixt clergymen of the highest parts and places. For now nonconformity in the days of King Edward was conceived, which afterward in the reign of Queen Mary (but beyond sea at Frankford) was born, which in the reign of Queen Elizabeth was nursed and weaned, which under King James grew up a young youth, or tall stripling, but towards the end of King Charles his reign, shot up to the full strength and stature of a man, able, not only to cope with, but conquer the hierarchy its adversary."

Speaking of the year 1552, the same historian says: p. 347, "Lately information was given to the king's council, that much costly furniture, which was embezzled, might very seasonably (such the king's present occasions) and profitably be recovered. For private men's halls were hung with altar-cloths, their tables and beds covered with copes, instead of carpets and coverlets. Many drank at their daily meals in chalices, and no wonder if it came to the share of their horses to be watered in rich coffins of marble. And, as if first laying of hands upon them were sufficient title unto them, seizing on them was generally the price they had payed for them. Now although four years were elapsed since the destruction of colleges and chantries, and much of the best church ornaments was transported beyond the seas, yet the Privy Council thought this very gleaning in the stubble would richly be worth the while, and that, on strict inquisition, they should retrieve much plate in specie and more money for moderate fines on offenders herein. Besides, whereas parish churches had still many rich ornaments left in the custody of their wardens, they resolved to convert what was superfluous or superstitious to the king's use. To which purpose commissions were issued out to some select persons in every county," &c.

It was probably a like spirit of avarice which, using the honest fanaticism of the Geneva divines as its instrument, dictated the destruction of all the ancient service books as well as images, by the Order in Council of December 24, 1549, and the 3 & 4 Edw. 6. c. 10.

The bindings and cases of these books of devotion were often studded with gems of great value; and the images from their costly material, as well as their careful execution, offered a tempting prey to the spoiler.

During the succeeding reign of Mary the Church was altogether driven from her sanctuary. Elizabeth, indeed, exerted the great sagacity which she possessed in laying deep and wide the foundations of the establishment to which the Church was restored. But the foreign element, which the persecutions of Mary had much increased, began to ferment, and to wage a ceaseless war with the principles upon which the Church had been reformed, and though the masculine sense and vigorous hand of this great Queen restrained the attacks of the innovators from Geneva and Germany, she was obliged to tolerate a practical laxity in all that related to the ritual of the Church, in order to secure the maintenance of the Catholic doctrine.

It cannot be doubted from her resolute retention of the ornaments of her chapel, including lights and a crucifix, from her avowed belief in the Real Presence, as well as from her language and conduct, that her desire and intention were to embrace the Lutheran and the Romanist within the wide and liberal pale of the National Church (31).

And I may observe in passing, that it was in the same spirit of liberality and comprehensiveness that our Bishops in 1661, said, "It was the wisdom of our reformers to draw up such a liturgie as neither Romanist nor Protestant could justly except against; and therefore, as the first never charged it with any positive errors, but only the want of something they conceived necessary, so it was never found fault with by those to whom the name of Protestants most properly belongs, those that profess the Augustine Confession; and for those who unlawfully and sinfully brought it into dislike with some people, to urge the present state of affairs as an argument why the book should be altered to give them satisfaction, and so that they should take advantage of their own unwarrantable acts, is not reasonable."—Lathbury's History of the Book of Common Prayer, chap. 13. p. 324.

Bishop Sandys writes to Archbishop Parker: "The last book of service is gone through with a proviso to retain the ornaments which were used in the 1st and 2nd year of King Edward until it please the Queen to take further order for these. Our gloss upon this text is that we shall not be forced to use them, but that others in the mean time shall not convey them away, but that they may remain for the Queen."—Strype Ann., vol. 1, part 1, p. 122; Burnet, vol. 1. part 2. p. 465.

The Puritans rejected with scorn the toleration which the Queen and Walsingham, with a rare wisdom unknown to their age, were ready to extend to them. Bishop Madox cites a declaration of this party as follows: "As for you dear brethren, whom God hath called into the brunte of the battle, the Lord keep you constant, that ye yield neither to toleration, neither to any other subtil persuasions of dispensations or licences, which were to fortify their Romish practices; but, as you fight the Lord's fight, be valiant. The matter is not so small as the world doth take it; it will appear, before all be ended, what an hard thing it is to cut off the rags of the Hydra of Rome. Let us not make the heritage of God as a bird of many colours, holding of divers religions; but rather let us take away, if we can, the names, memories, and all monuments of Popery." The Bishop goes on to say, "Who were meant by this description in the year 1570 needs no explanation. The bishops and clergy of the Church of England were then constantly represented as bearing the names and supporting the monuments of Popery. Agreeably to this exhortation of yielding to no toleration, nor accepting any indulgence, in all their petitions, admonitions, supplications, &c., we see nothing of a toleration for themselves only, but their single request or command, in whichever style they speak, is, the absolute overthrow of the established Government and worship, and the introduction of their own with penalties, even sharp punishments to be inflicted upon those who did not comply with it."

In 1597 Hooker wrote the fifth book of his Ecclesiastical Polity, in which he vindicated the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England against the attacks of the Puritans, and pointed out with a prophetic spirit, the confusion which would ensue "if it should be free for men to reprove, to disgrace, to reject, at their own liberty, what they see done and practised according to order set down" (32).

In the reign of Elizabeth's successor, the

(31) The rubric, commonly called the black rubric, after the Communion, in the second Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth, explained that no adoration was due to the real and essential presence. Elizabeth struck it out. The rubric reappears in the last Prayer Book with the very material alteration of "or unto any corporal presence of Christ's natural flesh or blood."

Hampton Court Conference, and the canons of 1603, aided by the disposition of James, and the great power of his prerogative which then rested on the Statute of Elizabeth and the general tranquillity of the country, enabled the Church to put in force, in some degree at least, the provisions of her ritual.

The leaven of the Puritans, however, was at work, and is well illustrated by the language which they held respecting our Prayer Book at this time. I refer again to Bishop Madox (p. 73): "But Mr. Neale tells us, it would have obviated many objections, if the Committee had thrown aside the Mass Book, and composed an uniform service in the language of Scripture." This was an objection frequently made by the Puritans, with great variety of very severe and very coarse expressions. Thus in their first admonition to the Parliament, "Remove (say they, in great warmth) homilies, articles, injunctions, and that prescript order of service made out of the Mass Book." In their second admonition to the Parliament they express themselves after this manner: "We must needs say as followeth, that this book is an imperfect book, culled and picked out of that Popish dunghill, the Portuise and Mass Book, full of all abominations." Another of them is pleased to deliver his opinion in the following words: "The whole form of the Church Service is borrow'd from the Papists, pieced and patched, without reason or order of edification." Their famous leader, Mr. Cartwright, likewise declares his and his brethren's displeasure upon this head: "Before I come to speak of prayers (says he) I will treat of the faults that are committed almost throughout the whole liturgy and service of the Church of England, whereof one is that which is often objected by the authors of the admonition, that the form of it is taken from the Church of Antichrist."

During the early part of the reign of Charles the First the advance in ritual restoration was rapid, and was accompanied by great imprudence and little knowledge of, or attention to, the actual circumstances of the State. The Puritan religious element allied itself with the political element; and so it came to pass that a literal and strictly legal compliance with the rubric formed no insignificant part of the impeachment which brought about the judicial murder of Archbishop Laud, one of the most distinguished writers against the pretensions of the Papacy (33).

Then was the wisdom, as well as the piety, of the principles upon which our Church was reformed demonstrated. In Protestant Germany and in Geneva, where the Apostolical order and primitive usages had been, from whatever causes, neglected or abandoned, and in this kingdom during the troubles of the civil wars almost every variety of sect which the vanity, presumption, and ignorance of man, under the influence of unchecked religious excitement, could devise, sprang into existence.

All these,

Who thought religion was intended For nothing else but to be mended, and whom the poem of Butler has rescued from oblivion, have furnished to Rome her strongest weapon for the defence of abuses equally without warrant from Scripture and tradition, and for attack upon the purer branches of the Catholic Church.

At the Restoration, the Church, with the full and hearty consent of the people, restored, with few exceptions, the primitive ritual, of which Cranmer and Ridley, the chiefs of a noble army of martyrs, had approved.

But the impoverished condition of the clergy, the dilapidated state of the desecrated churches, the profligacy (a reaction from Puritanism) and poverty of the land-owners, combined to prevent that moderate amount of ritual development which a strict obedience to the direction of the rubric required.

Lord Macaulay's picture of the miserable status of the parochial clergy during the seventeenth century ('History of England,' Vol. I. p. 327) is probably painted in too dark colours: but there is no doubt that it was one highly unfavourable to ritual ornament either in the dress of the priest or in the furniture of the church.

It was seldom that men connected with noble families entered into Holy Orders, and the adoption of that profession by Herbert was a remarkable phenomenon of the time.

Then came the struggle of James the Second, by God's good providence defeated, to reimpose the yoke of Rome upon the liberties of our Church.

The very learned Cave, in his Epistle Dedicatory to the History of the Fathers of the Church in 1683, observes,—“The Church of England, incomparably the best part of the Catholic Church at this day visible upon earth, is miserably torn in pieces, hated, and maligned; secretly undermined by enemies from abroad, and openly assaulted by pretended friends at home. Altar is erected against altar, and private congregations kept up in opposition to the publick constitution. The liturgy and forms of Divine administration derided, odiously traduced, and run down with nothing but noise and clamour. The rites and institutions, though the same that were used in the primitive ages of Christianity, derided as antichristian. The discipline and authority weakened, and, by the obstinacy and perverseness of men, made ineffectual.”

The great defection of the non-jurors, who were much attached to ritual observances, among whom were some of the most pious and learned prelates of the realm, at the beginning of William the Third's reign, must, I think, have been unfavourable to ritual observances in the Church Establishment which they had left (34).

As we enter on the eighteenth century we trace the gradual increase of disobedience to all directions of the Church which had for their object not merely the ornament but the decency of Divine worship.

In 1710 good Bishop Fleetwood, in his charge to his clergy, observed, “that unless the good public spirit of building, repairing, and adorning churches prevails a great deal more among us, and be more encouraged, an hundred years will bring to the ground an huge number of our churches.”

During the reigns of the first two Georges, and the beginning of the third, a decay of piety and learning, with brilliant exceptions indeed, went hand in hand with slovenliness of ritual and habitual indifference to rubrical injunctions upon this subject; and in 1751, that is, forty years afterwards, not many months before his death, that great prelate, Bishop Butler, whose “Divine philosophy” (35) has charmed educated men of all creeds, referring to these words of Bishop Fleetwood, uttered this lamentation, “This excellent prelate made this observation forty years ago; and no one, I believe, will imagine that the good spirit he has recommended prevails more at present than it did then.”

In another part of the same charge he says: “Nor does the want of religion in the generality of the common people appear owing to a speculative disbelief or denial of it, but chiefly owing to thoughtlessness and the common temptations of life. Your chief business, therefore, is to endeavour to beget a practical sense of it upon their hearts as what they acknowledge their belief of, and profess they ought to conform themselves to. And this is to be done by keeping up, as we are able, the form and face of religion with decency and reverence, and in such a degree as to bring the thoughts of religion often to their minds; and then endeavouring to make this form more and more subservient to promote the reality and power of it. The form of religion may indeed be where there is little of the thing itself, but the thing itself cannot be preserved amongst mankind without the form. That which men have accounted religion in the several countries of the world, generally speaking, has had a great and conspicuous part in all public appearances, and the face of it has been kept up with great reverence throughout all ranks, from the highest to the lowest; not only upon occasional solemnities, but also in the daily course of behaviour. In the heathen world, their superstition was the chief subject of statuary, sculpture, painting, and poetry. It mixed itself with business, civil forms, diversions, domestic entertainments, and every part of common life. The Mahometans are obliged to short devotions five times between morning and evening. In Roman Catholic countries people cannot pass a day without having religion recalled to their thoughts, by some or other memorial of it, by some ceremony or public religious form occurring on their way; beside their frequent holidays, the short prayers they are daily called to, and the occasional devotions enjoined by their confessors. By these means their superstition sinks deep into the minds of the people, and their religion also into the minds of such among them as are serious and well-disposed. Our reformers, considering that some of these observances were in themselves wrong and superstitious, and others of them made subservient to the purposes of superstition, abolished them, reduced the form of religion to great simplicity, and enjoined no more particular rules, nor left anything more of what was external in religion, than was in a manner necessary to preserve a sense of religion itself upon the minds of the people. But a great part of this is neglected by the generality amongst us; for instance, the service of the Church, not only upon common days, but also upon Saints' days, and several other things, might be mentioned. Thus they have no customary admonition, no public call to recollect the thoughts of God and religion from one Sunday to another." "Indeed in most ages of the Church the care of reasonable men has been, as there has been for the most part occasion, to draw the people off from laying too great weight upon external things, upon formal acts of piety. But the state of matters is quite changed now with us. These things are neglected to a degree which is and cannot but be attended with a decay of all that is good. It is highly seasonable now to instruct the people in the importance of external religion. And doubtless under this head must come into consideration a proper regard to the structures which are consecrated to the service of God. In the present turn of the age one may observe a wonderful frugality in everything which has respect to religion, and extravagance in everything else. But amidst the appearance of opulence and improvement in all common things, which are now seen in most places, it would be hard to find a reason why these monuments of ancient piety should not be preserved in their original beauty and magnificence. But in the least opulent places they must be preserved in becoming repair and everything relating to the Divine service be, however, decent and clean, otherwise we shall vilify the face of religion, whilst we keep it up. All this is, indeed, principally the duty of others; yours is to press strongly upon them what is their duty in this respect, and admonish them of it often, if they are negligent."

(34) Mr. Hallam observes: “Eight Bishops, including the Primate and several of those who had been foremost in the defence of the Church during the late reign, with about four hundred of the clergy, some of them highly distinguished, chose the more honourable course of refusing the new oaths: and thus began the schism of the Non-jurors, more mischievous in its commencement than its continuance, and not so dangerous to the government of William the Third and George the First as the false submission of less sincere men.” Having alleged reasons in favour of the imposition of the oath, he adds in a note: “Yet the effect of this expulsion was highly unfavourable to the new government; and it required all the influence of a latitudinarian school of Divinity, led by Locke, which was very strong among the laity under William, to counteract it.”—Constit. Hist., vol. 3. p. 108. 7th edit.

Then followed the great schism of which the pious Wesley was unwillingly and unwittingly the leader, but of which the apathy and sloth of the Church were the true cause. A resuscitation of Christian life was afterwards brought about by a school in the Church which, though with little knowledge of or care for ecclesiastical traditions or primitive usage, yet almost within the memory of the present generation represented the earnestness and energy of the establishment. Both these events were unfavourable to the maintenance of ritual observances.

The piety of this school is not incompatible with superior erudition and historical knowledge in persons more susceptible to the influences of external rites and ceremonies. A school has sprung up in our memory, which, having first restored the true ecclesiastical architecture in our churches, proceeded to inquire into the real meaning of the rubrical directions in our Prayer Book, examined them by the light of history and tradition, and arrived at the conclusion that a bare and unattractive service, sordid furniture, and the absence of all that was beautiful in art in the Temple of God, was not a necessary condition of a Church which had thrown off the corruptions and novelties of Rome. The Prayer Book referred them to the custom and usage which prevailed in the second year of Edward the Sixth. In the Lutheran and Swedish services they found crucifixes, incense, lighted candles, and gorgeous dresses. They thought it obvious, therefore, that no necessary connexion subsisted between these ornaments and usages of primitive antiquity, and the mediæval and false claims of the Papacy.

Recognizing the spirit of this movement in the Church, the late Bishop of London, in his Charge in 1842, used this emphatic language : " Every clergyman is bound by the plainest obligations of duty to obey the directions of the rubric. For conforming to them, in every particular, he needs no other authority than that of the rubric itself. We ought not to be deterred from a scrupulous observance of the rites and customs prescribed or sanctioned by our Church by a dread of being thought too careful about the externals of religion. If we are not to go beyond her ritual, at least we ought not to fall short of it ; nor to make her public services less frequent, nor more naked and inexpressive, than she intends them to be."

Again he says,—" An honest endeavour to carry out the Church's intentions, in every part of public worship, ought not to be stigmatized as Popish or superstitious. If it be singular, it is such a singularity as should be cured, not by one person's desisting from it, but by all taking it up. When I have been asked whether I approved of certain changes in the mode of celebrating Divine service, which were spoken of as novelties, but which were in fact nothing more than a return to the anciently established order of the Church, my answer has been, far from questioning the right of the clergy to observe the rubric in every particular, I know it to be their duty ; and the only doubt is, how far are we justified in not enforcing such observance in every instance."

Bishop Stanley, in his Charge in 1845, says, " Speaking of the decorations of churches, I am aware of the reply ; they pander, it is said, to idolatry, and may again become the object of superstitious worship. In a former age, when the minds of men were under the control of a superstitious and designing priesthood, such reasoning might have weight, but I must confess I cannot now hear it without mingled sentiments of pain and surprise." . . . " We need not," he concludes, " like the Puritans of old, banish the influence of art from the sphere of religion, and return to that rude spirit which went forth as the destroyer of all that was beautiful, glorying in its barbarous mutilations."

I will conclude my observations on this subject in the words of the oldest and certainly not the least able and learned of our prelates. In 1851 the Bishop of Exeter said (from Appendix A. to the Report of the Ritual Commission, page 122), " Let me make one general remark. Where the congregation consists mainly of the poorest orders, there we commonly observe a great love of a majestic and even elaborate service. The ornaments of their church ; the storied glass ; the painted, and it may be gilded, walls ; the table of the Lord elevated above the rest, and decked with sober yet costly furniture ; the pealing organ ; the chanted psalms ; the surpliced choristers ; the solemnity of the whole ritual—gladdens, while it elevates their minds ; they recognize in it their own high privilege as Christians, and rejoice to find themselves equal participants with their richest neighbours in the homage thus paid to the common Lord and Father of all. In truth, when we consider the little which the poor man has to delight his heart and touch his imagination in his own squalid home, we ought to rejoice that he can find enjoyment in the house of prayer, his Father's house. For this reason few occurrences have affected me more than the lamentations of the poor worshippers, in one of the districts of the metropolis, when they saw, or thought they saw, at the dictation of a riotous and lawless mob of strangers, the approaching surrender of the ritual which they loved, and which was their weekly, to many among them the daily, solace of that poverty to which the providence of God had consigned them."

It was in this spirit that the church of St. Alban's was, we know, built. In this spirit we must all hope that its services have been conducted. But it remains to be seen whether they have or have not gone beyond those bounds of ritual observance which the law of our Church has set.

General Principles for the Construction of Rubrics.

In the foregoing observations I have dealt with two heads of the arguments urged by the counsel for the promoter, which for the sake of clearness I will repeat; namely, that these particular practices are by necessary implication prohibited, inasmuch as they are connected with Roman or Popish doctrines. And that as such they have, as a matter of fact, been disused ever since the Reformation.

I am of opinion that neither of these arguments can avail to prove that the practices complained of are illegal.

I have now to consider the two other heads of their argument; namely, that, as by these practices a new rite or ceremony has been added to those which are prescribed by the Statutes of Uniformity, such practices are unlawful. And that these particular additions are expressly prohibited.

The due consideration of these arguments renders it expedient that I should previously determine upon what principles the rubrical directions of the Prayer Book should be construed.

It has been argued on the one side that the legal effect of express directions in the rubric is to shut out every rite, ceremony, utensil, or ornament which is not the subject of such express provision, or by necessary implication directly subsidiary to it. It has been argued, on the other side, that every ancient Catholic rite, ceremony, utensil, or ornament which is not the subject of an express prohibition is lawful. I am not disposed to assent to either of these propositions in their full latitude.

I believe the following rules to be well founded in principle, reason, and law, and I shall endeavour to guide myself by them; namely, that what is expressly prohibited is prohibited altogether, and may not be evaded by any contrivance which, under a different name or appearance, attains the same end; that whatever is expressly ordered may not be evaded by an illusory or partial compliance; that whatever is subsidiary to what is ordered, and whatever, being in itself decent and proper, is in accordance with primitive and catholic use, and is not by any fair construction necessarily connected with those Roman novelties which the Church "cut away and clean rejected" (to use the language of the Prayer Book) at the Reformation, is, under restrictions to be mentioned, lawful.

There are, in other words, three categories of these things,—

- (1.) Things lawful and ordered.
- (2.) Things unlawful and prohibited.
- (3.) Things neither ordered nor prohibited expressly, or by implication, but the doing or use of which must be governed by the living discretion of some person in authority.

Construction of Rubric—As to the Discretion of the Ordinary.

I wish to say a word first upon this last category.

The compilers of our Prayer Book, and the legislature which clothed it with the authority of a statute, were well aware that such a living discretion was indispensably necessary for the government of the Church in the performance of her Divine service, as well as in the due discharge of her other functions.

In the Preface concerning the service of the Church, it is stated that "nothing can be so plainly set forth but doubts may arise in the use and practice of the same;" accordingly the first and every subsequent Prayer Book, including the present one, provided what must have been intended and believed to be a sufficient remedy for the evil which was thus contemplated as of possible, perhaps probable, occurrence.

It is important to notice the nature and character of the remedy proposed. It was one in perfect accordance with the principle upon which the order and discipline of the Church had, in obedience to the will of Christ, been founded by his Apostles ; a principle which recognized the apostolical order of bishops as necessary for the due constitution of the Church ; and in perfect accordance with the great principle of the Reformation of the Church in England, that a duly consecrated bishop had a Divine authority, perfect and complete in itself, and wholly independent of the previous consent or subsequent ratification of that authority by the Pope.

The remedy was as follows : "To appease all such diversity (if any arise), and for the resolution of all doubts concerning the manner how to understand, do, and execute the things contained in this book, the parties that so doubt or diversely take anything shall always resort to the bishop of the diocese, who by his discretion shall take order for the quieting and appeasing of the same ; so that the same order be not contrary to anything contained in this book, and if the bishop of the diocese be in doubt, then he may send for the resolution thereof to the archbishop."

The words of this order deserve the closest attention ; it provides "for the resolution of all doubts concerning the manner how to understand, do, and execute the things contained in this book ;" terms which certainly appear to comprehend every conceivable difficulty or doubt which could possibly arise. The authority which is to resolve these doubts and remove these difficulties, is that officer in whose hands, previously to the statutory enactment of any Prayer Book, the Church had placed a supreme command over all that relates to her ritual.—"The parties that so doubt or diversely take anything shall always resort to the bishop of the diocese." The mode of resolution is not stated, but the language is such as to render it improbable that any formal proceedings in a court were contemplated. "The bishop by his discretion shall take order for the quieting or appeasing of the same,"—large, and, I think, wise expressions, making reference to a living authority, such as the nature of the thing seems to demand, and the Church had always recognized as having the power to deal with the circumstances of each case as they arose. Was there any limitation to this authority ?—One only, it appears ; that his order "shall not be contrary to anything contained in this book ;" leaving, therefore, in my judgment, within the domain of his authority that third category to which I have referred, namely, "things neither ordered nor prohibited expressly or by implication."

Was there any provision for controlling the exercise of this discretion ?—Yes, a provision not inserted it is true in the first Prayer Book, but equally in accordance with the discipline of the Catholic Church and with the denial of papal pretension,—the provision "that if the bishop be in doubt he may send for the resolution thereof to the archbishop."

Some construction must be placed upon this order. There are but three possible constructions which occur to my mind : one, that the order merely means that the minister or "party" may quiet his own conscience by having recourse to the private advice of the Ordinary, which advice, when given, he is conscientiously bound to follow ; a second construction is, that the order contemplates formal proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts of the diocese and the province ; the third is, that which I have suggested.

It is certainly remarkable that as far as I am aware this order has never yet received any judicial interpretation. I remember very well arguing before a very learned ecclesiastical Judge, Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, in "the Stone Altar case ;" (it was brought into the Court of Arches by appeal from the sentence of the Court of Ely, which Court had affirmed the legality of the stone altar,) that the question was one to be decided according to the discretion of the Ordinary, according to this order ; and, in his judgment, Sir H. J. Fust said, "After much consideration now given, I am of opinion the matter is not one of discretion but of law. Were it otherwise I should be desirous of consulting the wish of the parish (36). It was clearly, therefore, the opinion of Sir H. J. Fust, who was perfectly conversant with ecclesiastical law and practice, that this order was not to be treated as a dead letter, although, after much reflection, he was of opinion the questions as to the material and position of the altar-table did not come within its purview. The structure of a stone altar he conceived to be "contrary" to the provisions of the Prayer Book. And in Westerton v. Liddell, the Lords of the Privy Council, after deciding that it was lawful to place upon the holy table cloths of various colours, observed, "whether the cloths so used are suitable or not is a matter to be left to the discretion of the Ordinary" (37).

There is a difficulty arising out of this construction, from the consideration of which I must not shrink. It may be said that the bishop, when he had taken order for appeasing the doubt, would have no legal means of enforcing that order, and that for the purpose of such enforcement he must have recourse to his court. But it appears to me that, on the supposition that the matter was one on which he could exercise his discretion, he could clothe his order with the character of a monition, and that a disobedience to such monition would subject the person disobeying to the penalties of contumacy.

I should observe that the canon law unquestionably placed in the hands of the bishop the authority to govern all questions of ritual.

"Et quidem" (Van Espen says) "quia dispares diversarum nationum mores et ingenia diversos ritus et cæremonias, ut in politicis ita in ecclesiasticis exigunt, hinc in ritibus magna ecclesiarum varietas; præsertim quia nullo extante de his Christi vel Apostolorum præcepto, libera potestas episcopis relicta erat, id sentiendi et discernendi quod unicuique salva fide magis expediens videbatur."

And citing the decree of a synod he says: "Novæ cæremoniæ nullæ in ecclesiis recipiantur sine episcopi judicio"—Van Espen, vol. 1. pp. 411, 412.

Upon this construction of the rubrics, it will be my duty to consider whether any of the charges preferred against Mr. Mackonochie ought to have been dealt with by the discretion of the Ordinary, and not to have been made the subject of a criminal proceeding against him in this or in any other court.

Construction of Rubrics generally.

things lawful and ordered, and things unlawful and prohibited, there is a question in limine which must be considered. Is there a common law of the Church unwritten, living by usage, though partly expressed, perhaps, by judicial decisions; but still more, to use a common expression, taken for granted by all authorities in Church and State—filling up the void of positive provision in statute or formulary—a necessary part of an organized religious system and establishment, rendering the practical working of it possible, and, on the whole, harmonious?

That there has been such a usage in the Church at large, from its earliest foundation, is certain. "We know no such customs, neither we nor the churches of God," was the language which we learn from inspired authority she used as her shield against the earliest assaults upon her integrity. "Let the ancient customs prevail" was the maxim, fatal to the mediæval and modern pretensions of Rome, which the Church enunciated in her earliest œcumenical council. The canon law of the Western Church fully recognizes custom and usages as a distinct source of ecclesiastical jurisprudence. Was the branch of this Church, which the constitution and the legislature have established in this kingdom devoid of this subsidiary aid to her discipline and government?

In the case of Wilson v. M'Math (38), a very curious question was raised, whether the minister, as such, has a right to preside at a vestry meeting.

Sir John Nicholl, the Official Principal of the Archbishop of Canterbury, observed: "The case is said to be a new one, so far as regards any express law, or any judicial decision on the subject. There is no statute, no canon, no reported judgment, either expressly affirming or expressly negating the right. It nevertheless may exist as a part of the common law of the land, as a part of the lex non scripta, which is of binding authority, as much in the ecclesiastical as in the temporal courts. Indeed, the whole canon law rests for its authority in this country upon received usage; it is not binding here proprio vigore. Moreover, this Court upon many points is governed, in the absence of express statute or canon, by the jus tacito et illiterato hominum con- sensu et moribus expressum. It is true that generally the existence of this jus non scriptum is ascertained by reports of adjudged cases; but it may be proved by other means: it may be proved by public notoriety, or be deducible from principles, and analogy, or be shewn by legislative recognitions. Published reports of the decisions of the Ecclesiastical Courts (with one very recent exception) do not exist; and if they did, yet the particular right in dispute may never have been so much as doubted or questioned before." Upon this principle, in the time of James the First, the King's Bench refused to prohibit the Ordinary from compelling a woman to be churchd in a veil, because it was certified by divers bishops to be the common custom of the Church of England (39).

There is, therefore, a common law of the Church which runs by the side of the statute law, and which must assist in the construction of it.

It is often said that a rubric should be construed on the same principles as an act of parliament; but admitting this to be so, it is obvious that there are peculiar difficulties incident to the construction of a rubric which seldom, or in a much less degree, beset the construction of an ordinary statute. And it will appear from what has been already said, that the right understanding of the rules supplied by the rubric for the regulation of the services may often require a reference to the sources not only of historical, but to a certain extent theological knowledge.

There is one important rule applicable to the construction of all instruments, namely, that the construer should endeavour to place himself in the position of the framer of the instrument, and to gather from all the circumstances which surrounded him at the time when he framed it, and from the context of other portions of the instrument, what the real meaning and intention was, if the language which he has used have left that meaning and intention doubtful or obscure.

In the case of Escott v. Mastin (40), in which a question as to the lawfulness of baptism administered by a layman with water and the invocation of the Trinity, was mooted, the Lords of the Privy Council observed as follows: "The 68th canon being that upon which this proceeding is grounded, it is necessary to consider what the law was at the date of the canon, the year 1603. Without distinctly ascertaining this, we cannot satisfactorily determine what change the rubric of 1661, adopted into the 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4, made, and in what state it left the law on this head; because it is very possible that the same enactment of a statute, or the same direction in a rubric, bearing one meaning, may receive one construction when it deals for the first time with a given subject-matter, and have another meaning and construction when it deals with a matter that has already been made the subject of enactment or direction; and this is most specially the case where the posterior enactment or direction deals with the matter without making any reference to the prior enactment or direction. Still more it is necessary to note the original state of the law, when it is the common law that comes in question, as well as the statute. The words are plainly directory, and do not amount to an imperative alteration of the rule then subsisting. If lay baptism was valid before the new rubric of 1661, there is nothing in that rubric to invalidate it. Generally speaking, where anything is established by statutory provisions, the enactment of a new provision must clearly indicate an intention to abrogate the old, else both will be understood to stand together if they may. But, more especially, where the common law is to be changed—and, most especially, the common law which a statutory provision had recognized and enforced—the intention of any new enactment to abrogate it must be plain to exclude a construction by which both may stand together. This principle, which is plainly founded in reason and common sense, has been largely sanctioned by authority. The distinction which Lord Coke takes in one place between affirmative and negative words, giving more effect to the latter (Coke, Littleton, 115, a), has sometimes been denied, at least doubted (W. Jones, 270, Lovelace's case, before the Windsor Forest Court, in 1632, in which there is a dictum of Lord Chief Justice Richardson,) Mr. Hargrave thinks upon a misapprehension (Note 154). But the rule which is laid down in 2 Inst., 200, has been adopted by all the authorities, that 'a statute made in the affirmative, without any negative expressed or implied, doth not take away the common law.' So Comyns's Digest, tit. 'Parliament,' (R. 23); and he cites the case De Jure Ecclesiastico, in 5 Rep. 5 b, which lays down the rule in terms."

Let me apply this rule to the subject before me. The first Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth contains only one prohibition, the Elevation of the Blessed Sacrament; but it contains various directions respecting the articles to be used in the administration of the Holy Communion. It has been pointed out that the enumeration of these articles could not be exhaustive, inasmuch as the indispensable article of "a fair linen cloth" is omitted from it."

The argument is, I think, valid; the officiating priest must have supplied this article, and the legislature must have intended him to supply it. He must have looked to an unwritten use, the foundation of a common law for the Church, not less than for the State. So it must have been intended by the rubric in our present Prayer Book: "The priest shall then place upon the table so much bread and wine as he shall think sufficient," that there should be a table or place from which the elements should be then brought; and therefore the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, reversing the sentence of the Consistory of London and the Court of Arches, decided that the Credence Table, which supplied this want, was a lawful ornament. Those who compiled the first Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth were not inventing a ritual for the first time, but were constructing one from the various service books, some English and some foreign, which they had before them. This ritual was to be placed in the hands of persons conversant with the older service books; and it seems highly unreasonable to suppose that it was not competent to the priest to supply any accidental omission in the new ritual by a reference to the previously existing usage and practice. In the same way, in the Sarum Missal no mention is to be found of the two lights to be placed upon the altar, but there is no doubt that the constitution which ordered those two lights was legally binding upon, and such lights must have been a part of the furniture of, those churches which adopted the Use of Sarum, at least in the province of Canterbury. Another illustration is furnished by the very remarkable fact that the second Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth omitted all reference to the manual acts, ordered in the first and last Prayer Book, attending the consecration of the Holy Elements; and that during the whole period which elapsed between the date of the second Prayer Book in 1552 and that of the present Prayer Book in 1661, the officiating priest was left without any direction upon this subject in the Prayer Book which he was to use. Now, one of two consequences must follow: either the cup was never taken in the hand, the bread never broken as at present, or these manual acts were done without any specific order in the Prayer Book, as a matter of recognized usage and custom. No proof has been laid before me, and I can find none, as to the omission of these necessary acts during a period of more than a century, and I think the inference that they must have been still practised is reasonable and sound.

And in this opinion I am strengthened by observing that, at the Savoy Conference the Dissenters objected, "that the manner of the consecrating of the elements is not here" (i. e., in the consecration prayer) "explicit and distinct enough, and ministers breaking of the bread is not so much as mentioned." The bishops replied by "conceding that the manner of consecrating the elements be made more explicit and express," which was the origin of our present rubric. — Cardwell, Conferences, pp. 321, 363.

The opinion of Bishop Cosin (vol. 5. p. 65, edit. 1854), a high authority upon this subject, appears to be sound. "The book" (he says) "does not everywhere enjoin and prescribe every little order that should be said or done, but takes it for granted that people are acquainted with such common things already used as such. Let the Puritans, therefore, give over their endless cavils, and let ancient custom prevail, the thing which our Church chiefly intended in the review of this service." This reasoning, therefore, brings me to the conclusion, that from the mere silence of the rubric a positive prohibition cannot in all cases be inferred.

Something more is required to render the article supplied illegal. For instance, the mention of the article in a former Prayer Book, and the omission of it in the present, may furnish a presumption that it was intentionally rejected, even when it be in itself innocent, or apparently expedient. Or the article must have, as has been already observed, some necessary connexion with a use inconsistent with the principles upon which the formularies of the Church are founded.

I must repeat that the rubrics with respect to decorations and furniture of the church are not exhaustive. This point has been decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. They allowed on this principle the use of the Cross and the Credence Table and the various coloured cloths for the Holy Table. They allowed also the use of a movable ledge for the purpose of holding candlesticks upon the Holy Table. This question came before their Lordships as a corollary to their principal decision on the Knightsbridge Church cases. It was contended that the monition of the Court with respect to St. Barnabas Church had not been obeyed as to the Holy Table or as to the Cross.

The act on petition alleged, that the monition was still in part uncomplied with in the following particulars: First, that the metal cross which was standing in the church or chapel, on or attached to the super-altar, on the stone altar, which formerly stood therein prior to the delivery of the judgment of the Judicial Committee on the 21st of March, 1857, was then placed on the sill of the great eastern window of the church or chapel of ease of St. Barnabas, above the table then used as a Communion Table in the church or chapel. Secondly, that the table which had been substituted in the church or chapel for the stone altar which formerly stood therein was not a flat table, but had an elevation or structure placed thereon, so as to resemble what is generally known and described as a super-altar in Roman Catholic churches or chapels.

The answer on behalf of the Hon. and Rev. Robert Liddell and the then chapel-wardens to this act on petition, denied that the monition was in any part uncomplied with, and pleaded, first, that the metal cross which was on the 27th of March, 1857, standing in the church or chapel of St. Barnabas (attached to the ledge of wood at the back of the stone altar, which then stood in the chancel of the church or chapel) was at the present time placed on the sill of the centre compartment of the eastern window of the chancel of the church or chapel, five feet ten inches above the surface of the Communion Table standing there, and wholly disconnected therewith; secondly, that the table which had been substituted in the church or chapel for the stone altar which formerly stood therein was a flat movable table of wood; and that the elevation or structure alleged in the second article of the act on petition as placed thereon was simply a movable ledge of wood placed in order that two candlesticks might stand thereon at the back of the table, and that the ledge was always raised up before the celebration of the Lord's Supper, in order that the decree of the Court might be complied with, namely, that a fine linen cloth should cover the Communion Table at the time of the ministration of the Lord's Supper, and that the cross was in the church or chapel at the time of the consecration thereof, and then formed one of the ornaments of the church or chapel.

Their Lordships were of opinion, "that no disobedience, no impropriety, no irregularity, has been established; and that the application, therefore, failed" (41).

In the same spirit, usages not prescribed by the Prayer Book during the service have been allowed,—such as turning to the east while the Creeds are read, the "Glory be to Thee, O Lord," before the reading of the Gospel, and the expression of thanks after the reading of it, the use of hymns—a use perhaps not only not ordered, but contrary to the order of the Prayer Book; and an inscription on a tombstone of "pray for the soul" of a departed person has been, by express judicial decision, pronounced not to be "contrary to the articles, canons, constitutions, doctrine, and discipline of the Church"—Brecks v. Woolfrey (42).

And here I will notice what I may call the churchwarden argument. It has been said that one test of the legality of ornaments is whether the churchwardens can or cannot be compelled to provide them. I am of opinion, however, that this is not a conclusive test. The law upon this subject was well and clearly laid down by Dr. Lushington (43),—namely, that there are two classes of expenses for parochial purposes; one, necessary expenses, which the churchwardens may defray of their own authority out of a rate, without the sanction of the vestry; another, expenses not absolutely necessary, a class which requires, if they are to be defrayed out of a rate, the previous sanction of the vestry. Under this latter category would fall all expenses incurred for furniture of a decorative kind, which would also require the sanction of the Ordinary.

The Special Charges considered.

Having thus considered the principles of law which ought to guide me in adjudicating the charges preferred against the reverend defendant in the case before me, I will now consider and pronounce judgment upon each individual charge, which, for the sake of convenience, I will arrange in the following manner:

First, the Elevation of the Blessed Sacrament, including the Kneeling;

Secondly, the use of Incense during the administration of the Holy Communion;

Thirdly, the Mixing of Water with the Wine during the administration of the Holy Communion;

Fourthly, the use of Lights during the administration of the Holy Communion.

Elevation.

3rd Article.—The third of the articles in this suit charges the defendant, "That he, the defendant, had in his said church, and within two years last past, to wit, on Sunday the 23rd of December, on Christmas Day last past, and on Sunday the 30th of December, all in the year 1866, during the prayer of consecration, in the order of the administration of the Holy Communion, elevated the paten in a greater degree than by merely taking the same into his hands, as prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer, and in a greater degree than is necessary to conform with the requirements of such book, and permitted and sanctioned such elevation; and had taken into his hands and elevated the cup during the prayer of consecration aforesaid in a manner contrary to the said statutes, and to the said Book of Common Prayer, and permitted and sanctioned the cup to be so taken and elevated; and knelt or prostrated himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration, and permitted and sanctioned such kneeling or prostrating by other clerks in holy orders."

Answer.—To this article the defendant has answered, "That whilst he admits that he, the defendant, did on the said two Sundays, and on Christmas Day, during the prayer of consecration, kneel, and sanction kneeling by other clerks, before the Lord's Table, he denies that his said party did on the said two Sundays, and on the said Christmas Day, kneel or prostrate himself before the consecrated elements, or permit and sanction such kneeling or prostration by other clerks in holy orders, as in the 3rd article pleaded. And he further alleges that whilst he admits that he did on the said two Sundays and Christmas Day, in the said 3rd article mentioned, elevate and sanction the elevation by other clerks of the paten and cup above his head, as in the said 3rd article pleaded, yet that such elevation of the paten and cup has been wholly discontinued by the said defendant during the administration of the Holy Communion ever since the said 30th of December, 1866, and long prior to the institution of this suit; that such practice was discontinued in consequence of legal advice, and in compliance with the expressed wish of the Lord Bishop of the diocese of London, and with a resolution of Convocation, as was well known to the promoter of this suit before he instituted the same."

rally unlawful additions to and variations from the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes, and by the said Book of Common Prayer and administration of the sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, and are contrary to the said statutes, and to the 14th, 36th, and 38th of the said constitutions and canons, and also to an act of parliament passed in a session of parliament holden in the thirteenth year of Queen Elizabeth, cap. 12, and to the 25th and 28th of the articles of religion therein referred to."

Answer.—The defendant to this article answers, "That he denies that the elevation of the paten and the taking and the elevation of the cup so discontinued as aforesaid, and the kneeling and prostrating charged in the said third article, are severally unlawful additions to and variations from the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes, and by the said Book of Common Prayer and administration of the sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, or that they are contrary to the said statutes, and to the 14th, 36th, and 38th of the said constitutions and canons, and also to an act of parliament passed in a session of parliament holden in the thirteenth year of Queen Elizabeth, cap. 12, and to the 25th and 28th articles of religion therein referred to, as in the 4th article alleged."

The elevation of the Blessed Sacrament was not incorporated formally into the law of the Western Church before the beginning of the thirteenth century. The account given by Cardinal Bona is clear and concise (Rerum Liturgicarum, lib. 2. cap. 3. s. 2.): "Latini peracta consecratione, Græci paulo ante communionem, ut ex Liturgiis Jacobi, Basilii, et Chrysostomi manifestum est, corpus Dominicum et calicem elevant, ut a populo adoretur. Idque ab antiquo tempore fieri solitum indicant scriptores Græci." He then cites a variety of authorities in support of this position, and mentions the introduction of the custom of ringing a bell at the time of the elevation, at first as it should appear in order to excite the devotions of the faithful, and not for the purpose of the worship of the Host—p. 349.

It was not till the year 1217, during the Papacy of Honorius the Third, that this peculiar doctrine of elevation became part of the canon law.

In lib. 3. tit. 42. Decret. Greg., cap. 10, the decree upon the subject is as follows: "Sane, cum olim (ut infra). Ne propter incuriam Sacerdotum divina indignatio gravius exardescat, districtè præcipiendo mandamus, quatenus a Sacerdotibus Eucharistia in loco singulari, mundo et signato semper honorifice collocata, devote ac fideliter conservetur. Sacerdos vero quilibet frequenter doceat plebem suam, ut, cum in celebratione missarum elevatur hostia salutaris, se reverenter inclinet, idem faciens, cum eam defert Presbyter ad infirmum. Quam in decenti habitu superposito mundo velamine ferat, et referat manifeste ac honorifice ante pectus cum omni reverentia et timore, semper lumine præcedente, cum sit candor lucis æternæ, ut ex hoc apud omnes fides et devotio augeatur. Prælati autem hujusmodi mandati graviter punire non differant transgressores: si et ipsi divinam et nostram volunt effugere ultionem."

William, Bishop of Paris, soon after the beginning of the thirteenth century, made an order that, "Sicut alias statutum fuit, in celebratione missarum, quando corpus Christi elevatur, in ipsa elevatione vel paulo ante campana pulsetur, ut sic mentes fidelium ad orationem excitentur."

And Archbishop Peckham, who was consecrated in the year 1278 and died in the year 1292, appears to have first introduced into England this custom by the following constitution (Constitutions at Lambeth, A. D. 1281, par. 1): "In elevatione corporis Christi ab una parte ad minus pulsantur campanæ, ut populares, qui celebrationi missarum non valent quotidie interesse, ubicunque fuerint, sive in agris sive in domibus, flectant genua, indulgentias concessas a pluribus episcopis habituri."

Lyndwood (writing, it is to be observed, about 1430) has this gloss: "Elevatione, quæ fit ut populus illud adoret."

This passage appears to me to dispose of the argument addressed to me, "that it had been the invariable practice of the Church of England not to connect adoration with elevation."

Nor am I satisfied by the difference between the canon of the Sarum Use and that of the Roman Missal upon this point, that at the time of the Reformation the adoration was separated from the elevation of the Host. The true proposition is, that the original practice, in England as in other countries, had been to stir up the devotion of the people to God by the elevation of the Blessed Sacrament, until in this, as in so many other instances, the Church, or perhaps more strictly speaking the Curia, of Rome introduced an unwarrantable innovation upon an ancient and laudable usage.

The first prohibition of this custom, of elevating the Host in order that it might be adored, is to be found in the Order of the Communion of Edward the Sixth, which was published in 1548, and preceded the first Book of Common Prayer. The last "note" to that order, after providing for the case in which it has become necessary to consecrate more wine than had been originally consecrated, contains these words, "and without any levation or lifting up." This prohibition would seem from the context to be limited to the case of an additional consecration of wine. In the first Prayer Book, after the prayer of consecration, follow these words: "These words before rehearsed are to be said, turning still to the altar, without any elevation, or showing the sacrament to the people."

The Council of Trent, by the 6th canon of the 13th session, passed the 11th of October, 1561, decrees: "Si quis dixerit, in sancto eucharistiæ sacramento Christum unigenitum Dei Filium non esse cultu latræ, etiam externo, adorandum, atque ideo nec festiva peculiari celebritate venerandum, neque in processionibus secundum laudabilem et universalem ecclesiæ sanctæ ritum et consuetudinem solenniter circumgestandum, vel non publice, ut adoretur, populo proponendum, et ejus adoratores esse idololatrias, anathema sit."

The liberal and strong sense of Luther appear in his treatment of this question of elevation. In the "Formula Missæ et Communionis" for the church at Wittemberg he gives this direction: "(IV.) Finita benedictione chorus cantet sanctus et sub benedictum elevetur panis et calix, ritu hactenus servato, vel propter infirmos qui hac repentina (mutatione) hujus insignioris in missa ritus forte offendentur, præsertim ubi per conciones vernaculas docti fuerint quid ea petatur elevatione."—Cod. Liturg. 2. 87, edit. Leipzig, 1848. Daniel, the learned German editor of the Codex Liturgicus, observes, that the elevation was for a long time not only tolerated but approved of and defended by Luther. He thought it right that when the Sacrament was lifted up a bell should ring; for the priest and the bell spoke the same language, namely, "Hearken, ye Christians, and behold, then take and eat, take and drink, this is the body and blood of Christ." Afterwards Luther placed the elevation "inter adia-phora quæ possunt servari vel omitti ad habitum ecclesiarum," and discontinued it in the church at Wittemberg. The rite appears to have prevailed during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries in the churches of Sweden and Denmark.

By the 28th of the Thirty-nine Articles, which became part of the Statute Law in 1571, though passed in Convocation with the consent of the Crown in 1562, it is declared, "That the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper was not by Christ's ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped."

It is true that these words contain a declaration only, and no specific order; but looking to the spirit as well as to the letter of our present Prayer Book, as well as to this article, and to the documents which illustrate the early period of the Reformation, it appears to me clear that those who guided the Church of England through this process of restoration to primitive antiquity were of opinion that the elevation was so connected with the repudiated doctrine of Transubstantiation, as distinguished from the Real Presence, that it ought not to be suffered to remain. And I am confirmed in this opinion by the authority of some of the greatest divines in our Church, of whom I will only cite two: one, the learned Grabe; the other, who received the thanks of Christendom for his defence of the Nicene Creed,—Bishop Bull.

The former says, "But if it should be asked, of what use the said form, with such annotations, can be at present, when it is out of use, I answer, that it will serve at least to shew, to the honour of our forefathers, the first reformers of this Church, how near they, concerning the celebration of that most holy Sacrament, kept to the primitive institution of it by our blessed Saviour, and to the practice of His Holy Apostles and the first Apostolical Churches, although they changed and threw out many abuses and corruptions of this sacred ordinance which were crept in afterwards, and at last established by Popish decrees and councils of later ages. Such was, in the whole, the use of an unknown tongue in this holy office. . . . And not to mention the elevation of the consecrated elements to be worshipped by priest and all people as Jesus Christ himself, both God and man in person, whom the Church of Rome believeth to be substantially and wholly present under the outward figures of bread and wine"—Grabe, MS. Adversaria.

Bishop Bull, in a portion of his answer to the Bishop of Meaux, who had expressed his surprise that he was not a Romanist as well as a Catholic, says, "Come we now to the principal part of the Christian worship, the holy sacrament of the Eucharist. How lamentably hath the Church of Rome vitiated the primitive institution of that most sacred rite. She hath taken from the laity the blessed cup, contrary to our blessed Saviour's express command as expounded by the practice of the apostles, and of the universal Church of Christ for the first ten centuries, as hath been above observed.

"All the learned advocates of the Roman Church, with all their sophistry, have not been able to defend her in this matter from manifest sacrilege, and a violation of the very essentials of the sacrament, as to the laity administered, nor can they prove it so administered to be a perfect sacrament. He that would see this in a short compass fully proved, and all the weak evasions of the Romanists obviated, may consult our learned Bishop Davenant. Besides, the whole administration of it is so clogged, so metaphorized and defaced by the addition of a multitude of ceremonies, and those some of them more becoming the stage than the table of our Lord, that if the blessed apostles were alive and present at the celebration of the mass in the Roman Church they would be amazed and wonder what the meaning of it was; sure I am they would never own it to be that same ordinance which they left to the churches.

"But the worst ceremony of all is the elevation of the Host to be adored by the people as very Christ himself under the appearance of bread, whole Christ, Θεάνθρωπος, "God and man," while they neglect the old sursum corda, the lifting up of their hearts to heaven, where whole Christ indeed is."

The kind of elevation which it is charged that at one time Mr. Mackonochie practised, and as to which witnesses were examined before me, amounts upon the evidence to the following acts: that after the consecration, both of the bread and of the wine, he elevated the paten and the cup respectively for an appreciable time, after which there was a pause before the service was continued; this evidence was taken at the beginning of the cause; but during the progress of the argument, at the desire and with the consent of both counsel, Mr. Mackonochie was examined by me upon the single point, whether when the elevation was made his face was or was not towards the people, Mr. Mackonochie said, "I do not turn round to the people, and I never have done so during any time of the consecration prayer."

I have said "with the consent and desire of both counsel," because such was the fact; but if Mr. Mackonochie was by law an incompetent witness, their consent in a criminal case would not render his evidence admissible; but I venture to think that he was a competent witness, and am emboldened to hold this opinion, though it be at variance with that of my predecessor, in consequence of the observation made by the Lords of the Privy Council in Burney v. the Lord Bishop of Norwich (44).

This elevation Mr. Mackonochie asserts, and it is not denied, that he discontinued after conference with his diocesan, and upon the other grounds to which I have already referred, before the institution of this suit.

I am very glad that he did so, because in my judgment that kind of elevation was unlawful, and I must and do admonish Mr. Mackonochie not to recur to it.

His present practice is not complained of, and some elevation the rubrics of the present communion service must contemplate when they order as follows, "Here the priest shall take the paten into his hands;" that is, into both his hands; subsequently to which he is ordered to break the bread. So also when he is directed to take the cup into his hand there must be some elevation from the Holy Table.

Kneeling.

With respect to the charge against Mr. Mackonochie of kneeling or prostration before the Eucharist, I observed during the course of the argument that no charge of adoration of the Holy Sacrament itself, or of our Lord's body being present after a corporal manner in the Holy Sacrament was contained in these articles; that if it was intended to charge Mr. Mackonochie with either kind of adoration, the rules of pleading in criminal cases in this Court would have required that such adoration should have been distinctly and plainly averred.

The argument before me was confined to the allegation of improper or excessive kneeling; the evidence as to the fact was very far from being clear; Mr. Mackonochie was asked no question himself upon the subject.

Mr. Beames said, that after the elevation of the cup, Mr. Mackonochie prostrated himself on his knees with his head to the ground, and then that he knelt immediately after the cup was replaced, and that there was the same kneeling after the elevation of the paten. It was clear, however, from the evidence of this witness that Mr. Mackonochie remained on his knees, and that his head did not touch the ground, and that he did not really prostrate himself, supposing that such a gesture of devotion to be, which I do not pronounce it to be, illegal.

The only other witness, the Reverend Henry Malins, deposed that the clergy, already kneeling, threw their bodies forwards, and that the consecrating clerk knelt in the middle of the prayer, and then went on with the prayer. But on further examination he said that he was behind him all the time, that he could not in fact say that he prostrated himself, but to use his own words "there was a somewhat excessive bending forwards." He said he was kneeling himself at the time, and that it was his own practice, when not assisting, to kneel during the prayer of consecration.

It is true that the Rubric does not give precise directions that the celebrant himself should kneel at the times when it appears that Mr. Mackonochie does kneel; but I am very far from saying that it is not legally competent to him, as well as to the other priests and to the congregation, to adopt this attitude of devotion. It cannot be contended that at some time or other he must not kneel during the celebration, although no directions as to his kneeling at all are given by the Rubric.

It is observable that at the Savoy Conference the Puritans asked to have it considered "Whether it will not be fit to insert a rubrick touching kneeling at the communion, that is, to comply in all humility with the prayer which the minister makes when he delivers the elements."

No notice of this request was taken by the bishops unless it be considered to be included in their concession, "That the general confession at the communion be pronounced by one of the ministers, the people saying after him, all kneeling humbly upon their knees."—Cardwell's Conferences, pp. 275, 363.

Moreover, in my opinion, if Mr. Mackonochie has committed any error in this respect, it is one which should not form the subject of a criminal prosecution, but belongs to the category of those cases which should be referred to the Bishop, in order that he may exercise thereupon his discretion, according to the Rubric to which I have already referred.

Incense.

The charge against Mr. Mackonochie as to the use of incense is twofold; the first part relates to what is technically called "censing persons and things," and is as follows:

7th Article.—The seventh article alleges, "that the said defendant has in his said church, and within two years last past, to wit, on Sunday, the 23rd December, on Christmas Day last past, and on Sunday the 30th December, all in the year 1866, used incense for censing persons and things in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, and permitted and sanctioned such use of incense."

Answer.—And the defendant in answer to this article says, "that he admits that he (the defendant) on Sunday the 23rd December, on Christmas Day last past, and on Sunday the 30th December, used incense for censuring persons and things in and during celebration of the Holy Communion, and permitted and sanctioned such use of incense ;” but he alleges, “that ever since the 30th December, 1866, he, the said defendant, as was well known to the promoter of this suit prior to the institution thereof, desisted from so doing, and has ever since discontinued the said ceremony on being apprised by the opinion of counsel that such usage was of a doubtful legality, and that he has never since re-introduced the said ceremony, as appears in the published address of the said defendant, dated January, 1867, and exhibited and appended to the articles brought in and admitted in the cause.”

I should here observe, that an objection was taken on behalf of Mr. Mackonochie that this charge of censuring persons and things was not specified in the decree issued under the letters of request, and therefore, that according to the practice of this Court, it could not be preferred in the articles. My learned predecessor overruled this objection, and I thought it right, whatever my opinion might be, to abide by his decision.

It appears that Mr. Mackonochie has discontinued, though under protest, this particular use of incense, upon the same grounds and for the same reasons that he discontinued the elevation, and also before the institution of this suit.

The other part of the charge relates to another use of incense, and is laid in the following words :

8th Article.—The eighth article alleges, “that the said defendant has in his said church, and within two years last past, to wit, on Sunday the 13th day of January A.D. 1867, unlawfully used incense in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, and permitted and sanctioned such unlawful use of incense.”

Answer.—To this the defendant has answered, “that he admits that he has in his said church, to wit, on Sunday the 13th day of January A.D. 1867, caused and allowed incense to be burnt during the reading of the prayer of consecration, and afterwards until the time for the administration of the Communion to the people, and permitted and sanctioned such use of incense, but that he denies that he used the same unlawfully, or that such use is unlawful.”

9th Article.—The ninth article charges, “that such uses of incense as in the two preceding paragraphs alleged are severally an unlawful addition to and variation from the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes, and by the said Book of Common Prayer and administration of the Sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, and are contrary to the said statutes, and to the 14th, 36th, and 38th of the said constitutions and canons.”

Answer.—The defendant in his plea has answered, “that he denies that such use of incense as in the 7th and 8th articles alleged are severally an unlawful addition to and variation from the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes, and by the said Book of Common Prayer and administration of the Sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, and are contrary to the said statutes, and to the 14th, 36th, and 38th of the said constitutions and canons, as in the 9th article alleged.”

The objection is not taken to the general use of incense for the purposes of ornament or fumigation of the church, for which purposes it appears to have been used at various times since the Reformation, and especially by the saintly Herbert, to whom Mr. Coleridge referred : “The country parson,” Herbert says, “hath a special care of his church, that all things there be decent and befitting His name by which it is called. Therefore, first, he takes order that all things be in good repair, as walls plastered, windows glazed, floor paved, seats whole, firm, and uniform, especially that the pulpit and desk, and communion table and font, be, as they ought, for those great duties that are performed in them. Secondly, that the church be swept and kept clean, without dust or cobwebs, and at great festivals strewed and stuck with boughs, and perfumed with incense. Thirdly, that there be fit and proper texts of Scripture everywhere painted, and that all the painting be grave and reverend, not with light colours or foolish antics. Fourthly, that all the books appointed by authority be there, and those not torn or fouled, but whole and clean, and well bound ; and that there be a fitting and sightly communion cloth of fine linen, with a handsome and seemly carpet of good and costly stuff or cloth, and all kept sweet and clean in a strong and decent chest, with a chalice and cover, and a stoop or flagon, and a basin for alms and offerings; besides which, he hath a poor man's box conveniently seated to receive the charity of well minded people, and to lay up treasure for the sick and needy. And all this he doth, not as out of necessity, or as putting a holiness in the things, but as desiring to keep the middle way between superstition and slovenliness, and as following the Apostle's two great and admirable rules in things of this nature; the first whereof is, 'Let all things be done decently and in order;' the second, 'Let all things be done to edification.' " (45).

The burning of frankincense, probably on account of the grateful odour which it emits, and the graceful form which it assumes, may be traced, as an accompaniment of prayer, thanksgiving, and sacrifice, to the very earliest antiquity. All classical readers are aware of the βωμὸς θυήεις of Homer, (46), and of the "centum aræ Sabæo thure calentes" (47). The use of incense in the Jewish worship was divinely ordained (48). Nadab and Abihu were stricken with death because "they took either of them his censer and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord" (49). And Aaron, when he "made an atonement for himself and his house," was directed to take a censer full of burning coals of fire from the altar of the

And it was truly urged that Zachariah was burning incense according to the custom of the priest's office, in the temple of the Lord (52), when he received the message from the angel; and that in many places in Holy Writ prayer is symbolized by incense. It appears to have been very early in use, though the exact date of it is uncertain, among the Christians; it is mentioned in the apostolical canons, and there is no doubt that it is warranted by the authority of the primitive Church.

It certainly was in use in the Church of England in the time of King Edward the Sixth's first Prayer Book. The visitation articles of Cranmer as to forbidding the censuring to certain images, &c., supplies one of the proofs of this fact. On the other hand, the use of it during the celebration of the Eucharist is not directly ordered in any prayer book, canon, injunction, formula, or visitation article of the Church of England since the Reformation. Bishop Andrewes, a very high authority, appears to have used it, though in what way is not clear, in his own private chapel; and probably traces of the use of it may be found in the private chapels of other bishops, and in the Royal chapels.

It is not, however, necessarily subsidiary to the celebration of the Holy Communion, and it is not to be found in the rubrics of the present Prayer Book, which describe with considerable minuteness every outward act which is to be done at that time.

To bring in incense at the beginning or during the celebration, and remove it at the close of the celebration, of the Eucharist, appears to me a distinct ceremony, additional and not even indirectly incident to the ceremonies ordered by the Book of Common Prayer.

Although therefore it be an ancient, innocent, and pleasing custom, I am constrained to pronounce that the use of it by Mr. Mackonochie in the manner specified in both charges is illegal, and must be discontinued.

Looking upon incense in connexion with the other ceremonial observances of the Mosaic ritual, it would rather seem to be symbolical, not of prayer itself, but of that which makes prayer acceptable, the intercession of Christ. In Rev. viii. 3, 4, the incense is spoken of as something distinct from, though offered with, the prayers of all the saints (Luke i. 10), and in Rev. v. 8. it is the golden vials, and not the odours or incense, which are said to be the prayers of saints. Psalm cxli. 2. at first sight appears to militate against the conclusion; but if it be argued from this passage that incense is an emblem of prayer, it must also be allowed that evening sacrifice has the same symbolical meaning.

Mixing Water with the Wine.

Article 10th.—The tenth article against Mr. Mackonochie alleges, “that he, the defendant, has in his said church, and within two years last past, to wit, on Sunday the 23rd day of December, on Christmas Day last past, on Sunday the 30th day of December, all in the year of our Lord 1866, and on Sunday the 13th day of January, A.D. 1867, during the celebration of the Holy Communion, mixed water with the wine used in the administration of the Holy Communion, and permitted and sanctioned such mixing, and the administration to the communicants of the wine and water so mixed.”

Answer.—The defendant admits this article to be true.

Article 11th.—The eleventh article states, “that such mixing and administration of the wine and water is an unlawful addition to and variation from the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes, and by the said Book of Common Prayer and administration of the Sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, and is contrary to the said statutes, and to the 14th, 20th, 21st, 36th, and 38th of the said constitutions and canons.”

Answer.—The defendant has denied in his plea, “that such mixing and administration of the wine and water, as in the said tenth article alleged, is an unlawful addition to and variation from the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes, and by the said Book of Common Prayer, and administration of the Sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, and is contrary to the said statutes, and to the 14th, 20th, 21st, 36th, and 38th of the said constitutions and canons, as in the said eleventh article alleged.”

It appears that from a very early period—the precise date is uncertain—a custom prevailed amongst Christians of adding a very small quantity of water to the wine which forms one element of the Blessed Sacrament. This custom, whether it arose from a belief that the wine used by the Jews at the Passover, and by our Lord at the Last Supper, was mingled with water, or from some reason symbolical of His passion, is wholly unconnected with any papal superstition, or any doctrine which the Church of England has rejected. It has the warrant of primitive antiquity and of the undivided Church in its favour.

The whole subject will be found discussed with his usual perspicuity and subtilty by Thomas Aquinas in the third part of his Summa Theologica, quæstio 74, “De materia Eucharistiae quantum ad speciem ;” which is divided into eight articles ; the sixth of which is, “Utrum sit admiscenda aqua ;” the seventh, “Utrum aqua sit de necessitate hujus sacramenti ;” the eighth, “De quantitate aquæ quæ apponitur.” With regard to the sixth, he decides that some water shall be mixed with the wine ; with regard to the eighth, that it should be a very small quantity, “paululum aquæ,” and for this reason, “quia si tanta fieret appositio aquæ ut solverentur species vini, non posset perfici sacramentum.” And in accordance with this view, with regard to the seventh, it is important to observe that he decides, that “aquæ admixtio non est de necessitate sacramenti.” The mingling of water, therefore, with the sacramental wine is clearly within that category of ceremonies as to the adoption of which each branch of the Church has its own liberty.

In our own Church this custom prevailed before the Reformation ; and in the first order of the Communion, which preceded the first Prayer Book, the rubric directed that the priest should “bless and consecrate the biggest chalice or some fair and convenient cup or cups full of wine with some water put unto it ;” and the rubric to the Communion Service of the first Prayer Book directs that the minister shall “take so much bread and wine as shall suffice for the persons appointed to receive the Holy Communion” “and putting the wine into the chalice or else in some fair and convenient cup prepared for that use (if the chalice will not serve), putting thereto a little pure and clean water, and setting both the bread and wine upon the altar.” It is clear, therefore, that under the word “wine” might be comprehended the wine and water ; and in a subsequent rubric at the end of the service the direction is, that the pastors and curates shall find at their costs and charges “sufficient bread and wine for the Holy Communion.”

In all subsequent Prayer Books the mention of water is omitted ; perhaps from the omission in the second Prayer Book no argument unfavourable to the use of water could fairly be drawn, as no manual acts of consecration are prescribed in that book. But in the present Prayer Book the manual acts are advisedly specified with great distinctness and particularity; exact directions are given when the priest shall take into his hands the bread and the wine, when he shall place them on the table, and how he shall administer them; and I must bear in mind that the compilers of our present Prayer Book had before them the first Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth and carefully considered the rubrics which it contained; and in my opinion the legal consequence of this omission, both of the water and of the act of mixing it with the wine, must be considered as a prohibition of the ceremony or manual act of mixing the water with the wine during the celebration of the Eucharist.

I am by no means insensible to the very remarkable argument addressed to me with respect to the analogy between the blood and water used in the prototypal service of the Passover, and the wine and water in the Eucharist; and, as I have already observed, the mingling a little pure water with the wine is an innocent and primitive custom, and one which has been sanctioned by eminent authorities in our Church, and I do not say that it is illegal to administer to the communicants wine in which a little water has been previously mixed; my decision upon this point is, that the mixing may not take place during the service, because such mixing would be a ceremony designedly omitted in and therefore prohibited by the rubrics of the present Prayer Book.

Lighted Candles on the Holy Table.

5th Article.—The fifth article against Mr. Mackonochie alleges, “that the defendant has in his said church, and within two years last past, to wit, on Sunday the 23rd December, on Christmas Day last past, on Sunday the 30th December, all in the year of our Lord 1866, and on Sunday the 13th day of January in the year of our Lord 1867, used lighted candles on the Communion Table during the celebration of the Holy Communion at times when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light, and permitted and sanctioned such use of lighted candles.”

The answer to this article alleges, “that such charges are, in part, untruly pleaded, for the party proponent (the defendant) alleges that on the said three Sundays and Christmas Day, in the said 5th article mentioned, the said lighted candles were not placed on the Communion Table, but upon a narrow movable ledge of wood, resting on the said table, and that the said candles were so placed and kept lighted, not during the celebration of the Holy Communion only, as falsely suggested in the said 5th article, but also during the whole of the reading of the Communion Service, including the Epistle and Gospel, and during the singing after the reading of the Nicene Creed, and during the delivery of the sermon.”

6th Article.—The sixth article alleges, “that the use of such lighted candles is an unlawful addition to, and variation from, the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes, and by the said Book of Common Prayer, and administration of the Sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, and is contrary to the said statutes, and to the 14th, 36th, and 38th of the said constitutions and canons.”

And the defendant, in answer to this, “denies that the use of such lighted candles is an unlawful addition to, and variation from, the form and order prescribed and appointed by the said statutes, and by the said Book of Common Prayer, and administration of the Sacraments and other rites and ceremonies of the Church, and is contrary to the said statutes, and to the 14th, 36th, and 38th of the said constitutions and canons, as in the said sixth article alleged.”

There is no express direction in the rubrics, or in the Statutes of Uniformity, or in the Canons of 1603 for the use of lights at all on the holy table. Nor is there, in these documents, any express prohibition of this ornament of divine service; and, adhering to the principle which has guided my judgment in the matters of the elevation, the mixing of water with wine, and of the incense, it becomes my duty to consider whether the use of lights on the holy table falls under the category of things indirectly, or by necessary implication, prohibited upon the grounds which have been stated, or whether it be lawful either as indirectly ordered or innocently subsidiary to divine worship. But there is also another consideration peculiar to this subject, and which must in some degree distinguish the treatment of this ornament from that which the others have received, namely, the important consideration whether the use of lights has not been ordered by competent authority, and whether that order must not, upon legal principles of construction, be deemed a part of the present law of the church.

The rubric directs, "that such ornaments of the church and the minister thereof shall be retained and be in use as were in this Church of England by the authority of Parliament in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth." The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council have instructed me as to the legal meaning of the word "ornament" in this rubric (53). Their Lordships say as follows: "All the several articles used in the performance of services and rites of the Church are 'ornaments.' Vestments, robes, cloths, chalices, and patens are amongst Church ornaments; a long list of them will be found extracted from Lyndwood in Dr. Phillimore's edition of Burn's Ecclesiastical Law (vol. 1. pp. 375-7). In modern times organs and bells are held to fall under this denomination." Their Lordships go on to say, and I invite particular attention to their language, "When reference is made to the first Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth, with this explanation of the term 'ornaments,' no difficulty will be found in discovering, amongst the articles of which the use is there enjoined, ornaments of the church as well as ornaments of the ministers. Besides the vestments differing in the different services, the rubric provides for the use of an English Bible, the new Prayer Book, a poor man's box, a chalice, a corporas, a paten, a bell, and some other things." "That these articles were included in the term 'ornaments of the Church,' at the period in question is clear from two documents nearly contemporaneous, one before and the other after the establishment of the first Prayer Book.

"In a letter of the Council to Cranmer, dated the 30th of April, 1548, to be found in Strype's 'Memorials of Cranmer,' vol. 2. p. 90, they complain of the conduct of certain churchwardens, who sent away their chalices, crosses of silver, bells, and other ornaments of the church; and in a commission in 1552, 1 Card. Doc. Ann. p. 112, No. xxvii. (edit. 1844), the Commissioners are enjoined to leave 'in every church or chapel of common resort, one, two, or more chalices or cups, according to the multitude of people in every such church or chapel, and also such other ornaments as by their discretion shall seem requisite for the Divine Service in every such place for the time"—Westerton v. Liddell (54).

Edward the Sixth succeeded to the throne on January the 28th, 1547. His Privy Council shewed an early intention of carrying much further the Reformation begun in the preceding reign. For this object homilies were composed, mixed commissions of clergy and laity were formed, with circuits assigned to them and large visitatorial powers.

These royal visitations superseded and practically inhibited for a time diocesan visitations.

In 1547 the royal injunctions, the subject of so much discussion during the course of the argument, were issued. I refer to a very curious and rare edition with which I have been furnished, printed in London in 1547, contemporaneously therefore with the issue of the injunctions themselves. The injunctions begin as follows:—"The Kynges mooste royal majestie, by the advice of his most dere uncle the Duke of Somerset, Lorde Protector of all his realmes, dominions, and subjectes, and governor of his most roiall persone, and the residence of hys mooste honorable counsaile, intending the advauncement of the true honor of Almighty God, the suppression of idolatrie, and supersticion, throughout all hys realms or dominions, and to plant true religion, to the exterpacion of all hypocrisy, enormities, and abuses, as to hys duety apperteineth; doth minister unto his loving subjectes, these godly injunctions, hereafter folowing: Whereof, parte were geven unto them heretofore, by authoritie of his most derely beloved father Kyng Henry the eighte, of most famous memorie, and parte are nowe ministered and geven by hys Majesty; all which injunctions, his highness willet and commaundeth his saied louing subjectes, by his supreme authoritie, obediently to receaue, and truely to observe and kepe, euery man in their offices, degrees, and states, as they will avoyde his displeasure, and the paynes in the same incccions hereafter expressed."

The reference to the injunctions issued by Henry the Eighth is important, in its bearing upon an argument presently to be noticed.

(54) Moore's Special Report, 157-8.

I pass on to the injunctions more immediately affecting the present subject. Their general object it will be seen is to remove all ornaments that relate to superstition or idolatry.

"Besides this, to the intent that all supersticion and hypocrisy, crept into diverse menes hartes, may vanysh away, thei shal not set furthe or extolle any images, reliques, or miracles, for any supersticion or lucre, nor allure the people be any inticementes, to the pylgrimage of any saint or ymage; but reprovyng ye same, they shall teache, that al goodnesse, health, and grace, ought to be both asked and looked for only of God, as of the varye author and geuer of the same, and of none other.

Item.—"That they, the persones above rehersed, shall make or cause to bee made in their churches, and every other cure thei have, one sermon, every quarter of the yere at the least, wherein they shall purely and sincerely declare the woordes of God; and in the same, exhorte their hearers to the woorkes of faythe, mercye, and charitie, specially prescribed and commanded in scripture, and that woorkes devised by mannes phantasies, besides scripture, as wanderyng to pilgrimages, offeryng of money, candelles or tapers, to reliques, or images, or kysying and lickying of the same, praying upon beades, or such lyke supersticion, have not only no promise of reward in scripture, for doying of them: but contrariwise, great threatens and malediccions of God, for that they bee thynges, tendyng to idolatry and supersticion, which, of al other offences, God Almighty doth most detest and abhorre for that the same diminishe mooste his honor and glory."

The next injunction is the one which affects the question as to the lawfulness of these lights.

Item.—"That suche images as thei knowe in any of their cures, to bee, or have been so abused with pilgrimage or offrynges, of any thyng made thereunto, or shal bee hereafter censed unto, thei (and none other private persones) shall for the avoyding of that mooste detestable offence of idolatrie, furthewith take downe or cause to bee taken downe, and destroye the same, and shall suffre from hensefurthe, no torches, nor candelles, tapers, or images of ware, to bee sette afore any image or picture, but onely two lights upon the high altar, before the Sacrament, whiche, for the signification, that Christe is the very true light of the worlde, thei shall suffre to remain still: admonishyng their parishioners that images serve no other purpose, but to bee a remembrance, whereby, man maie bee admonished of the holy lifes and conversacion of them that the said images doo represent; whiche images, if they doo abuse for any other intent, they commit idolotrie in the same, to greate daunger of their soules."

A variety of questions arise upon the subject of these injunctions; but they may be all, I think, comprehended under the following heads:

1. Were these injunctions lawfully issued under statutable authority?
2. If so, were they subsequently abrogated by statutable authority?

It could not have been accurately said, and it has very properly not been contended by the counsel for the promoter, that any judgment has been given upon this subject which is binding upon this Court.

In the St. Barnabas case, as regards the use of lighted candles during the Holy Communion Service, an opinion, which will presently be considered, adverse to their legality was expressed by the learned Judge of the Consistory of London, but during the progress of the suit it appeared that as a matter of fact the candles were not lighted as alleged, and no decree was made by the Court. The legality of lighted candles on the Holy Table, therefore, was not directly submitted to the judgment of the Court of Arches or of the Privy Council: but it will be seen that the latter tribunal expressed an opinion both in favour of the lawfulness of the injunctions and of the candlesticks upon the Holy Table.

First, let me consider whether these injunctions were lawfully issued: The question is one of no mean difficulty. To define with certainty the exact legal limits within which the Crown might in the time of Edward the Sixth exercise its prerogative in relation to the Church, is a task which no one cognizant of the difficulties which surround the subject would willingly undertake.

It is said in the books that the Crown has power to visit, reform, and correct abuses in the Church by the ancient law (55) of the realm. What this power was, however, is very uncertain. When Henry the Eighth procured from Parliament the title of Supreme Head of the Church (though in fact, whatever servile courtiers might say, he did but regain the position from which the Pope had expelled the Crown), he no doubt asserted that this authority required no sanction of Parliament for its exercise, but it is remarkable that he obtained that sanction as well as that of Convocation for almost every important act which he did to the Church.

In truth our 37th Article 'Of the Civil Magistrates' fixes the bounds of the Royal authority in matters of religion: "The Queen's Majesty hath the chief power in this realm of England, and other her dominions, unto whom the chief government of all estates of this realm, whether they be ecclesiastical or civil, in all causes doth appertain, and is not, nor ought to be, subject to any foreign jurisdiction. When we attribute to the Queen's Majesty the chief government, by which titles we understand the minds of some slanderous folks to be offended, we give not to our princes the ministering either of God's word or of the Sacraments, the which thing the injunctions also lately set forth by Elizabeth our Queen do most plainly testify, but that only prerogative which we see to have been given always to all godly princes in Holy Scripture by God Himself; that is, that they should rule all estates and degrees committed to their charge by God, whether they be ecclesiastical or temporal, and restrain with the civil sword the stubborn and evil doers. The Bishop of Rome hath no jurisdiction in this realm of England."

When Cranmer was persecuted under the form of a trial at Oxford, Dr. Martin, who appeared as his judge, asked him (I take the account from the last volume of the Dean of Chichester's work), "Who was the supreme head of the Church of England?"

(55) 2 Rol. Abr. 220, tit. 'Prerogative le Roy.' (E.) Quel person visitera.

- (1) Per l'auncient Ley de Realm le Roy ad power de visit, reform et correct toutes abuses et enormities en l'Eglise (Davis 1, Proxies 4.)
- (2) Per le statute temps H. 8. le corone fuit lorsque remit et restore a son auncient jurisdiction que fuit usurp per l'Evesque de Rome. (Davis 1, Proxies 4.)

The Archbishop was glad to have an opportunity of explaining his former rather strong assertions on this point. "Marry," he said, "Christ is head of this member, as He is of the whole of the body—of the universal Church." "Why," quoth Dr. Martin, "you made King Henry the Eighth supreme head of the Church." "Yea," said the Archbishop, "of all the people of England, as well ecclesiastical as temporal." "And not of the Church?" asked Martin. "No," said Cranmer, "for Christ is only head of this Church, and of the faith and religion of the same. The King is head and governor of his people, which are the visible Church." "What!" quoth Martin, you never durst to tell the King so?" "Yea, that I durst," quoth he, "and did, in the publication of his style; wherein he was named supreme head of the Church there was never other thing meant" (56).

It is, to say the least, extremely doubtful whether, at any period of our constitution, the Crown had power to issue, of its own authority, injunctions of this kind.

It becomes, therefore, important to consider the language of what is called the Supremacy Act.

The statute of 26 Hen. 8. c. 1. was passed A.D. 1535, and enacts as follows: "Albeit the King's Majesty justly and rightfully is and ought to be the supreme head of the Church of England, and so is recognized by the clergy of this realm in the convocations, yet nevertheless for corroboration and confirmation thereof, and for increase of virtue in Christ's religion within this realm of England, and to repress and extirp all errors, heresies, and other enormities and abuses heretofore used in the same, be it enacted by authority of this present Parliament, that the King our Sovereign Lord, his heirs and successors, kings of this realm, shall be taken, accepted, and reputed the only supreme head on earth of the Church of England, called Anglicana Ecclesia, and shall have and enjoy, annexed and united to the imperial crown of this realm, as well the title and style thereof, as all honours, dignities, pre-eminences, jurisdictions, privileges, authorities, immunities, profits, and commodities to the said dignity of supreme head of the same Church belonging and appertaining; and that our said Sovereign Lord, his heirs and successors, kings of this realm, shall have full power and authority from time to time to visit, repress, redress, reform, order, correct, restrain, and amend all such errors, heresies, abuses, offences, contempts, and enormities, whatsoever they be, which by any manner, spiritual authority, or jurisdiction, ought or may lawfully be reformed, repressed, ordered, redressed, corrected, restrained, or amended, most to the pleasure of Almighty God, the increase of virtue in Christ's religion, and for the conservation of the peace, unity, and tranquillity of this realm, any usage, custom, foreign laws, foreign authority, prescription, or any other thing or things to the contrary hereof notwithstanding."

There is no doubt that under the authority of this statute the three royal injunctions in the years 1536 and 1538 were issued. The statute of 31 Hen. 8. c. 8, intituled 'An Act that Proclamations made by the King shall be obeyed,' commonly called the Proclamation Act, was not passed till the year 1540—Strype's Memorials, vol. 1. part 1. pp. 494-7.

Strype remarks "that these last injunctions were given out by reason of the negligent observation of the former, which the clergy took little heed to."

There is no reason for surprise, therefore, in finding some of them repeated in the next reign (see p. 496 in fine), such especially as that which orders the ministers to preach against "offering candles and tapers to reliicks."

It has been argued by Mr. Stephens, adopting the opinion of Sir John Dodson, that this statute, as well as every statute "relating to doctrine or other matters of religion," has been repealed by 1 Edw. 6. c. 12, passed in the year 1547. The proposition appeared to me at the time, having regard to the necessary consequences flowing from it, to be of an alarming character; and, after very mature deliberation, I have arrived at the conclusion that it cannot be sustained. The section which it is alleged possesses this great power of abrogation and repeal (section 2.) is as follows: "And also be it enacted by thauctoritie aforesaide, that all Actes of Parliament and

It was truly observed that the object of this statute is to repeal laws which inflicted severe punishments and penalties, imprisonment, fine, and death, on account of opinions entertained "concerning doctrine or matters of religion," such as had been enforced in the reigns of Richard the Second, Henry the Fifth, and Henry the Eighth, against heretics of various kinds.

If the wider signification which has been contended for be given to this statute, it would in truth repeal the principal statutes enacted during the reign of Henry the Eighth for establishing the independence of the Church of England.

It will be difficult to maintain that the statutes against the payment of annates (23 Hen. 8. c. 20), the restraint of appeals (24 Hen. 8. c. 12), and even the Act of Supremacy (25 Hen. 8. c. 19), would not fall under the category of enactments concerning "doctrine or matters of religion : " but in truth the number of statutes which this construction would repeal might amount to forty-two, and certainly would include a great many of grave importance (57). I remember that Sir W. Maule (one of the members of the Judicial Committee) observed, "that if there were anything in Magna Charta about religion, it would on this construction be repealed."

I am of opinion that the operation of this statute of Edward the Sixth must be confined within the limits which I have stated, and that it has not repealed any power to issue royal injunctions which Henry the Eighth derived either from the Supremacy or the Proclamation Statute.

The legal authority of these injunctions of Edward the Sixth was discussed in the Westerton v. Liddell cases. The Judge of the Consistory of London held that the burden of proving their legal authority lay upon those who asserted it, and that the burden had not been discharged, and he treated the injunctions as invalid ; and on that ground, among others, decided that the "Cross" was not a lawful ornament of the Church.

The Court of Arches, however, held that Edward the Sixth had power to issue these injunctions under the authority of the Proclamation Act, 31 Hen. 8. c. 8, and the learned Judge decided that the Cross was an illegal ornament because it was forbidden under the name of an "image"

(57) Perry on Lawful Church Ornaments, App. pp. ix—xxxv.

by these very injunctions of Edward the Sixth.

When the case of Westerton v. Liddell was appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, they decided that the Cross was a lawful ornament, and that it was not an "image" forbidden by these injunctions (58).

In arriving at this conclusion they certainly treated the injunctions as valid, whether or not they agreed with Sir John Dodson's opinion that their validity was derived from the powers conferred on the Crown by the Proclamation Act: and referring to the 28th section of these very injunctions, they say, "The section could not mean that all candlesticks should be removed from Churches, for two were to be retained" (namely, by the 3rd section) "on the high altar" (59).

If this be so, their decision is binding upon me, and the general question as to the legal validity of these injunctions has been decided in the affirmative. It may be as well, however, to look a little more closely into this question.

It has been argued that these Injunctions were not lawfully issued under the Proclamation Act, because it related only to temporal and not to spiritual matters, and also because the orders which it prescribed for the preparation and issue of instruments under its authority were indispensable conditions, and had not been complied with.

Mr. Stephens, in his argument upon this subject, laid down four propositions. First, if these injunctions were issued under the Proclamation Act, which was repealed in November, 1547, they would not have had any force by the authority of Parliament in the second year of Edward the Sixth. Secondly, if they were intended to be issued under the Proclamation Act of Henry the Eighth, they were not issued in accordance with their provisions; (1.) because there is no time limited during which the injunctions were to continue in force; (2.) because the copies of those injunctions which were printed and circulated were not signed by thirteen members of the King's Council, as required by 31 Hen. 8. c. 8, and there is no evidence of their having been proclaimed in accordance with the 3rd section of that statute. Thirdly, that instead of the punishment by fine and imprisonment which the Council, under section 4. of 31 Hen. 8. c. 8, were empowered to inflict, the injunctions of 1547 only threatened ecclesiastical punishments, which the Council had no power to inflict under the Proclamation Act; and those ecclesiastical punishments are to be inflicted by the ordinary, and not by the thirteen members of the King's Council. Fourthly, it appears from the earliest historians of the Reformation, Fox, Fuller, and Heylin, that the injunctions were not issued under the Proclamation Act, but by virtue of the King's supremacy.

From the first of these propositions I have already expressed my dissent. With regard to the second, I think there is every presumption of law, and that a court of justice must, after this distance of time, act upon that presumption, that these injunctions were signed by the requisite number of members required by this statute, and the absence of a specified time during which the injunctions were to be in force would not, in my opinion, invalidate their validity. As to the objection that they were not duly proclaimed in the market-place by the sheriff, the clause which requires this seems to be directory only, and to whatever penalty non-compliance with it might render the sheriff amenable, such non-compliance would not invalidate the injunctions. The contrary position was, indeed, maintained by Bishop Gardner (60) when he was imprisoned for disobedience to these injunctions, which he considered to have been issued under the Proclamation Act. It is remarkable, however, that he does not dispute the power of the Crown to issue the injunctions, nor that the proper number of counsellors had not signed the instrument, but maintains that he ought not to be imprisoned by virtue of the Proclamation Act; and it might be that the Injunctions were valid under the "Supremacy Act," but that the additional power of secular punishment given by the Proclamation Act could not be put in force against him, and that he was only liable to ecclesiastical punishment under the injunctions. This was probably the opinion of Fox, Fuller, and Heylin, to whom Mr. Stephens referred in his fourth proposition.

I have made these observations upon the Proclamation Act out of deference to the argument which was addressed to me ; but after all, whether these observations are well founded or not is of small moment, because it seems to me impossible to doubt that these injunctions were recognized by the legislature, not only because they would derive validity from the Supremacy Act, but also because they are specially recognized in the first Prayer Book, which is part of the first Statute of Uniformity, in the following words : " Upon Wednesdays and Fridays the English Litany shall be said or sung in all places after such form as is appointed by the King's Majesty's injunctions, or as is or shall be otherwise appointed by His Highness "—Liturgical Services, p. 97, Rubric after the Communion Service.

I should mention that in the year 1548-49 the Visitation Articles for the diocese of Canterbury in the second year of Edward the Sixth repeat this injunction in the following inquiry : " Whether they have not . . . destroyed in their churches, chapels, and houses all images, all shrines, coverings of shrines, all tables, candlesticks, trindles or rolls of wax, pictures, paintings, and all other monuments of feigned miracles, pilgrimages, idolatry, and superstition, so that there remain no memory of the same in walls, glass windows, or elsewhere ; " and also the inquiry : " Whether they suffer any torches, candles, tapers, or any other lights to be in your churches, but only two lights upon the high altar. "—Cardwell, Doc. Ann. p. 49.

Before I leave this subject let me observe that I cannot find that the legal authority of these injunctions per se was ever seriously questioned before the judgment of Dr. Lushington in the St. Barnabas case, Nor am I aware of any statute,—none has been cited to me,—by which they have been deprived of their original authority. There were many occasions on which those who were adverse to them would gladly have impugned their original validity, and there was no lack of learned advisers versed in legal and constitutional lore to have prompted or maintained such a proposition.

In the interval between 1547 and 1549 no objections whatever appear to have been taken to these injunctions ; but in that year a paper appeared, the authority of which is extremely questionable ; it was unsigned, and the author is unknown : it is headed " Articles to be followed and observed according to the King's Majesty's injunctions and proceedings ; " and the second of these articles forbad, among a variety of other things, " setting any light upon the Lord's board at any time. "—Cardwell, Doc. Ann. vol. 1, 75.

It is clear, however, that these articles (perhaps Visitation Articles, and only binding, like those of Ridley in 1550, if at all, in a particular diocese) cannot affect the question of whether lights were an ornament " in use in this Church of England by authority of Parliament in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth. "

Here I must notice two remarkable letters which throw the light of contemporary history on this subject ; the first is a letter written by Martin Bucer and Paul Fagius to the ministers at Strasburg (' Original Letters ' published by the Parker Society, p. 535) ; it is dated April 26, 1549. " We yesterday waited upon the Archbishop of Canterbury, that most benevolent and kind father of the Churches, who receives and entertains us as brethren. The cause of religion as far as appertains to the establishment of doctrines and the definition of rites is pretty near what could be wished. " . . . " As soon as the description of the ceremonies now in use shall have been translated into Latin we will send it to you. We hear that some concessions have been made both to a respect for antiquity and to the infirmity of the present age, such, for instance, as the vestments commonly used in the Sacrament of the Eucharist and the use of candles, so also in regard to the commemoration of the dead and the use of chrism, for we know to what extent or in what sort it prevails. They affirm there is no superstition in these things, and that they are only to be retained for a time, lest the people, not having yet learned Christ, should be deterred by too extensive innovations from embracing His religion, and that rather they may be won over. "

The second letter is from John Hooper to Henry Bullinger, 7th December, 1549 ('Original Letters, Parker Society,' p. 71); it is, "The altars are here in many churches changed into tables. The public celebration of the Lord's Supper is celebrated three times a day. Where they used heretofore to celebrate in the morning the Mass of the Apostles, they have now the Communion of the Apostles; where they had the Mass of the Blessed Virgin, they have now the Communion, which they call the Communion of the Virgin; where they had the principal or High Mass, they now have, as they call it, the High Communion. They still retain their vestments and the candles before the altars."

Surely during the reign of Elizabeth the legal invalidity of these injunctions would have been urged by those who were adverse to the use of lights.

Bishop Cox, writing to Gaultier on February 12, 1571, says of the Queen, that she "has always been so exceedingly scrupulous in deviating even in the slightest degree from the laws prescribed"—Zurich Letters, 1st series, No. 94, p. 234. And it is an admitted fact that the two lights were used in her chapel at the celebration of the Holy Communion. It is no less certain that many of her counsellors, temporal and spiritual, pressed her to discontinue the use of these lights, an object they were most anxious to effect, but in no one single instance did they ever allege to Her Majesty that the burning of these lights upon the Holy Table was contrary to the law. I say this with some confidence, not only because I have been unable to find any instance myself, but because the leading counsel for the promoter whose industry and whose acquaintance with these subjects no one will gainsay, having been so good, in compliance with my request, as to make search into the authorities upon this point, was unable to find that any such argument had ever been adduced.

The lawfulness of placing these two lights upon the Holy Table appears to me established by these injunctions, unless they are, as has been contended, by necessary implication abolished, inasmuch as they are significant of a papal superstition, which was rejected by the Church at the time of the Reformation.

To this argument there are various answers:

First. These lights, in their original institution, were not significant of any rejected papal superstition, but of the fundamental truth of Christianity, namely, the light of the Gospel. The origin of them in the canon law I will presently refer to.

Secondly. They were suffered to remain because of their strictly Evangelical character; they were for the honour of Christ, not of the Blessed Virgin or of Saints, as lights on bye altars might be.

About the year 376 (A.D.) Vigilantius spoke with derision of the practice of Christians to burn candles during Divine Service at mid-day. St. Jerome wrote a defence of the Church, and of this practice: "Non diffiteor (he says) omnes nos, qui in Christo credimus, de idololatriæ errore venisse, non enim nascimur, sed renascimur Christiani, et quia quondam colebamus idola, nunc Deum colere non debemus, ne simili eum videamur cum idolis honore venerari? Illud fiebat idolis, et idcirco detestandum est; hoc fit martyribus, et idcirco recipiendum est. Nam et absque martyrum reliquiis per totas orientis ecclesias, quando legendum est evangelium, accenduntur luminaria, jam sole rutilante, non vtique ad fugandas tenebras, sed ad signum lætitiæ demonstrandum, unde et virgines illæ evangelicæ semper habent accensas lampades suas; et ad apostolos: Sint lumbi vestri præcincti, et lucernæ ardentes in manibus vestris. Et de Joanne Baptista: Ille erat lucerna ardens, ut lucens: ut sub typo luminis corporalis illa lux ostendatur, de qua in psalterio legimus: Lucerna pedibus meis verbum tuum Domine, et lumen semitis meis."—Hieronym. Stridonensis Opera. Adversus Vigilantium, t. 1. p. 160, edit. Colon. 1516.

Dr. Donne, in his defence of the use of lights in the daytime during Divine service, relies much upon the early Christian practice: "I would not (he says) be understood to condemn all use of candles by day in Divine service, nor all churches that have or do use them, for so I might condemn even the primitive church in her pure and innocent estate. And therefore that which Lactantius, almost three hundred years after Christ, says of those lights, and that which Tertullian, almost a hundred years before Lactantius, says in reprehension thereof, must necessarily be understood of the abuse and imitation of the Gentiles therein; for that the thing itself was in use before either of these times I think admits little question. About Lactantius's time fell the Eliberitan Council, and then the use and the abuse was evident; for in the 34th canon of that council it is forbidden to set up candles in the churchyard; and the reason that is added declares the abuse, . . . that the souls of the faithful departed should not be troubled. Now the setting up of lights could not trouble them, but these lights were accompanied with superstitious invocations, with magical incantations, and with howlings and ejaculations which they had learned from the Gentiles, and with these the souls of the dead were in those times thought to be affected and disquieted. It is in this ceremony of lights as it is in other ceremonies: they may be good in their institution, and grow ill in their practice. So did many things which the Christian Church received from the Gentiles in a harmless innocency, degenerate afterwards into as pestilent superstition there as amongst the Gentiles themselves. For ceremonies which were received but for the instruction and edification of the weaker sort of people were made real parts of the service of God and meritorious sacrifices. To those ceremonies, which were received as helps to excite and awaken devotion, was attributed an operation and an effectual power, even to the ceremony itself, and they were not practised, as they should, significative, but effective, not as things which should signify to the people higher mysteries, but as things as powerful and effectual in themselves as the greatest mysteries of all, the Sacraments themselves. So lights were received in the primitive church to signify to the people that God the Father of Lights was otherwise present in that place than in any other; and then men came to offer lights by way of sacrifice to God; and so that which was providently intended for man, who indeed needed such helps, was turned upon God, as though He were to be supplied by us. But what then? Because things good in their institution may be depraved in their practice . . . shall therefore the people be denied all ceremonies for the assistance of their weakness?

. . . We must not be hasty in condemning particular ceremonies, for in so doing, in this ceremony of lights, we may condemn the primitive church that did use them, and we condemn a great and noble part of the reformed church which doth use them at this day."—Dr. Donne's Sermons, p. 80, folio, 1640, vol. 1. 15 Oct.

Thirdly, as to the averment that the words "before the Sacrament" denote the reserved Sacrament. (See the Injunctions, ante, p. 72.)

The practice of reserving the Holy Sacrament, it has been truly said, is unlawful according to the present law of the Church of England.

In the Office for the Communion of the Sick in the Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth, it is provided by the prefatory rubric as follows: "And if the same day there be a celebration of the Holy Communion in the church, then shall the priest reserve (at the open Communion) so much of the Sacrament of the body and blood as shall serve the sick person, and so many as shall communicate with him (if there be any); and so soon as he conveniently may, after the open Communion ended in the church, shall go and minister the same, first, to those that are appointed to communicate with the sick (if there be any), and last of all to the sick person himself."—Liturgical Services, edit. Camb., 1844, p. 141.

In the present Prayer Book it is ordered: "And if any of the bread and wine remain unconsecrated, the curate shall have it to his own use; but if any remain of that which was consecrated, it shall not be carried out of the church, but the priest, and such other of the communicants as he shall then call unto him, shall, immediately after the Blessing, reverently eat and drink the same."

The light which burnt before the reserved Sacrament was generally a lamp.

This light was continually burning, and therefore probably oil was used, whereas these two lights were only burning during the celebration.

The lights before the reserved Sacrament appear to have been always of an uneven number when the light was not, as it usually was, single.

The lights "before the Sacrament" in England were necessarily, for mystical reasons, or more properly fancies, enumerated by Lyndwood, but which it is not necessary to recapitulate here, made of wax.

The words "before the Sacrament" are omitted in Cranmer's Visitation Articles intended to execute the injunction, but that clearly means "tempore quo missarum solennia peraguntur," while the ceremony was being performed. The candles might be lighted before the elements have been consecrated, and before the Sacrament is therefore complete, "accedit verbum elemento et fit sacramentum," as St. Augustine says, but they are not the less burning before it when it is complete.

The reserved Sacrament was not in the time when Lyndwood wrote his Commentary (in 1430) placed upon the "High Altar." It was one of the usages peculiar to the Church of England to suspend the reserved Sacrament above the altar.

The account given by Lyndwood clearly shows that two wax candles (the number and the quality it is important to notice) ought properly to accompany every celebration of the Mass, because Christ is the splendour of eternal light.

In a constitution of Archbishop Walter, under the following title, "Sacerdos curet, ut omnia Eucharistiæ deservientia sint integra et munda, atque verba consecrationis debite pronunciet, nec celebret antequam matutinas primam et tertiam perlegerit, nec sine clerico superpellicio induto, nec sine tunica, nec in peccato mortali," we find this order: Lyndwood, p. 236, Walterus.—"Nullus insuper sacerdos parochialis præsumat missam celebrare, antequam matutinale persolverit officium, et primam et tertiam de die. Item nullus clericus permittatur ministrare in officio altaris, nisi indutus sit superpellicio, et tempore quo missarum solennia peraguntur, accendentur (*) duæ candelæ, vel ad minus una."

Upon this constitution the gloss of Lyndwood is as follows:

(*) Duæ candelæ.—"Est enim a parte juris ordinatum quod sacerdos sine lumine ignis non celebret missam. (Extra eo c. ult. ubi de hoc.) Si tamen faciat, nihilo minus conficit, licet graviter peccet, secundum Hostien. ibi, et concordant alii doctores. Et nota, quod candelas in celebratione missæ arsuras convenit esse de cera potius quam de alia materia. Candela namque sic ardens significat ipsum Christum, qui est splendor lucis æternæ. (Extra eo c. sane)" (61).

The Devonshire rebels, when in 1549 they demanded the restoration of Roman Catholic rites, drew up a series of articles in which their grievances were stated; they said in their 4th article: "We will have the Sacrament hang over the high altar, and there to be worshipped, as it was wont to be; and they which will not thereto consent, we will have them die like heretics against the Holy Catholic Faith."

The answer of Cranmer is very remarkable:—"Is this the Holy Catholic Faith, that the Sacrament should be hanged over the altar and worshipped? and they be heretics that will not consent thereto? . . . Innocent the Third, about 1215 years after Christ, did ordain that the Sacrament and Chrism should be kept under lock and key. But yet no motion he made of hanging the Sacrament over the high altar, nor of the worshipping of it. After him came Honorius the Third, and he added further, commanding that the Sacrament should be devoutly kept in a clean place, and sealed, and that the priest should often teach the people reverently to bow down to the Host when it is lifted up in the mass time, and when the priest should carry it to the sick folks. And although this Honorius added the worshipping of the Sacrament, yet he made no mention of the hanging thereof over the high altar as your article proposeth. Nor, how long after, or by what means, that came first up into this realm, I think no man can tell. And in Italy it is not yet used until this day."—Strype's Cranmer, App. 97.

The inference to be drawn from this letter is that the two lights ordered by the Injunctions of 1547, and which Cranmer had enforced by his Visitation Article in 1548, could not have been placed before the reserved Sacrament, inasmuch as the complaint of the rebels in 1549 is that, the Sacrament was not suspended over or placed upon the high altar. It is remarkable that Dr. Rock, whose knowledge as an antiquary in the matter of Church rites and ceremonies is supposed to be considerable (The Church of our Fathers, vol. 3, part 2, p. 208), says, "That the first wooden or stone tabernacle resting on the altar seen in this land was put up in Queen Mary's reign."

(61) Unde et candela in sua compositione significat Christum propter tria: componitur namque candela ex cera, lychno, et lumine. Sic quoque Christus constat ex carne virginis sine semine generatus, sicut procedit cera ex ape sine generatione vel coitu apis. Lychnus, qui est candidus, significat in Christo animam candore innocentie adornatam. Lumen vero significat ejus divinitatem carni unitam. De his sic dicitur Cantic. 5: "Dilectus meus candidus propter animam candidam et rubicundus propter divinitatem fulgidam. Electus ex millibus propter carnem sine peccato genitam."

It appears from Lyndwood's gloss upon the Provincial Constitution of John of Peckham, that according to the English custom the reserved Eucharist was placed in a Pix, and the Pix in a Tabernaculum, and the Tabernaculum, instead of being placed stationary as it afterwards was in conformity with later Roman usage upon the altar, was hung up over it. And in support of Dr. Rock's assertion that in Queen Mary's reign the reserved Sacrament was placed upon the altar is the inquiry of Cardinal Pole in 1557, "Whether they do burn a lamp or a candle before the Sacrament;" and referring to his injunctions in 1566 this would appear to have been "a tabernacle set in the midst of the high altar."

With respect to the custom of the Greek Church, Goar says: "A lamp, kept perpetually burning, is suspended in such a manner as to hang between the altar and the place for the Blessed Sacrament, and is regarded by the Greeks as a becoming token of reverence towards the word of God inscribed within the sacred volume, and the Word made flesh, Christ Jesus dwelling in us, but veiled under the appearance of the sacramental species"—Goar, Eucha. Græc. p. 15; Hierurgia, p. 507.

I was referred by Mr. Prideaux to a treatise in French upon the exposition of the Holy Sacrament of the Altar. It was published in 1673, and the account which the author, a Roman Catholic of course, gives of the practice as to the reserved Sacrament, the importance especially of having a lamp perpetually burning before it, is interesting, and bears upon the subject now under consideration. "Néanmoins," (says the author) "on ne se met pas en peine comment la très-Sainte Eucharistie est logée dans les églises de la campagne, n'y comment elle est portée aux malades, dans presque tous les villages, où elle y est portée dans un si pauvre appareil, qu'il est plutôt capable d'exciter de la douleur et de l'indignation dans le cœur des véritables fidèles, que de la dévotion et du respect. La plus part de ces églises sont ou désolées, ou découvertes, ou sans lambris, ou sans vitres, ou sans luminaires, ou sans livres, ou enfin destituées, sans ornements nécessaires pour célébrer dignement les saints mystères et les divins offices. Leurs vaisseaux sacrez ne sont que d'estain, ou de cuivre, ou même de plomb en quelques endroits; leurs tabernacles sont ou rompus, ou déformés, ou mal ornés; ou enfin leurs fabriques n'ont point de revenu pour entretenir une lampe toujours ardente devant le Sacrament où repose l'Eucharistie. Et l'on fait tous les jours de grandes dépenses dans les villes pour l'exposition, fréquente de ce divin mystère." The author regrets this expense, and continues: "Ne vaudroit-il pas mieux les employer à la décoration, ou aux réparations des églises de la campagne, et à l'achat des vaisseaux sacrez, des livres, des meubles et des ornements dont elles ont si grand besoin? N'a-ce pas été l'intention de Paul III. qu'elles y fussent employées, comme on le peut voir par les paroles de sa bulle que nous avons rapportées?"—Traité de l'Exposition du St. Sacrement de l'Autel, édit. 1673, p. 171.

It is surely most improbable that Cranmer, who was advancing tentatively in the path of reform, and who was the real author of the injunctions, should have ordered two lights to be continued perpetually burning before the reserved sacrament, having regard to his desire to abrogate the custom of reservation, and also on account of the expense which the ordering would have entailed upon the parishioners.

Gavanto (vol. 5. p. 65), writing in Italy his "Prævia Compendiaria Visitationis Episcopalis," and describing the duties of the bishop on his visitation, under the heading "De Sanctissima Eucharistia," says: "Observet Episcopus, et Notarius describat, an sint, qualia sint, quæ sequuntur;" and among these articles is to be found "Basim Tabernaculi vacuam" and "Lampadem ardentem," which is clearly the one lamp before the reserved Sacrament.

Symbolism and the worship of symbols are distinct things, "is confirmat usum qui tollit abusum."

I am disposed to assent to the opinion expressed by Mr. Stephens in his elaborate and useful edition of the Book of Common Prayer: "It may, however," that learned person says, "be argued that a distinction is to be taken between (1.) the lights burning before shrines and images, (2.) the symbolical lights formerly placed on the altar during the communion, and (3.) those which are for actual use for the decent enlightenment of the house of God. The lights mentioned in King Edward's Injunctions are not to be confounded with the lamp or cresset, a single light, burning before the suspended Pyx. King Edward's mention of the Sacrament appears to be merely circumstantial: two lights (which are known to be of wax, not one lamp) were to be on the altar before the Sacrament or Pyx, 'for the signification that Christ is the very true light of the world.' The Pyx was then considered to contain the actual body of Christ. The removal of the Pyx, in consequence of the purified doctrine of the Church, did not weaken the force or propriety of the symbol, as Christ is spiritually present in His own house. It is to be remarked that Archbishop Cranmer omits the words 'before the Sacrament'" —Book of Common Prayer, vol. 2. p. 1120 (62).

The usages with respect to the custody of the Reserved Sacrament appear then to have been these:

- (1) The use which Lyndwood refers to as existing in Holland, Portugal, and other places, and which apparently existed too in Italy, of keeping it in a place in the wall under lock and key:
- (2) The peculiar English custom of suspending it in a pyx in a tabernaculum over the high altar:
- (3) Cardinal Pole's order in Queen Mary's time, that it should be placed upon the altar.

In Westerton v. Liddell, Dr. Lushington came, apparently not without reluctance, to the conclusion that candlesticks upon the holy table were lawful ornaments.

(62) Dr. Hook seems to be of the same opinion on this point. See his Church Dictionary, article Lights.

It seems to me difficult to suppose that the use of candlesticks does not bear witness to the partial retention,—no uncommon fact in the history of ritual observances,—of the custom of burning lights upon the altar embodied in the earliest usages of the Church in the provincial constitutions of our own country, and in the Injunctions of 1547 (63).

I should not omit to notice the argument, much referred to by counsel, from the inventories made by order of the Government of Edward the Sixth, in order to stop the wholesale sacrilege and plunder of the furniture and goods of parish churches by those who humbly imitated the rapine which, on a large scale, had been carried on by the courtiers, out of their zeal for the Reformed Religion.

I am not inclined to rely very much, on the one hand, upon the fact that certain ornaments are proved by these inventories to be de facto in existence after the second year of Edward the Sixth, nor, on the other hand, that only certain of these ornaments were retained, by the Commissioners who caused these inventories, for the use of parish churches.

However, the fact is not to be laid wholly out of consideration that two or three years after the date of the first Prayer Book there should be in twenty-one counties no less than 1,400 churches which possessed each two candlesticks. Such is the result, I believe, of an investigation of the inventories in the Record Office, which were taken in 1552, when the second Prayer Book was in course of preparation.

Inasmuch, therefore, as I think that the injunctions which order these two lights were issued under statutable authority, and have not been directly repealed by the like authority; inasmuch as they are not emblematical of any rite or ceremony rejected by our Church at the time of the Reformation; inasmuch as they are primitive and catholic in their origin, evangelical in their proper symbolism, purged from all superstition and novelty by the very terms of the injunction which ordered their re-

(63) It is true that candlesticks possess, as Archdeacon Freeman observes, (Rites and Ritual, p. 76), a symbolism of their own, and that St. John saw in his vision "golden candlesticks," not burning candles or lamps (St. John v. 35; Rev. v. 8; viii. 3).

tention in the Church;—I am of opinion that it is lawful to place two lighted candles on the holy table during the time of the Holy Communion “for the signification that Christ is the very true light of the world.”

Conclusion.

These are the conclusions at which I have arrived, and this is the judgment which I am about, in formal language, to pronounce, after a most anxious, painful, and, I may be allowed to add, conscientious, however inadequate, examination of the law applicable to the facts of the case. I have not been able to conceal from myself that this exposition of the law may wound the feelings of some, whose love for the Church of Christ is as unquestionable as their loyalty to the Church of England,—men, who think no ornament too costly, no service too magnificent, for the house of God,—capable of any act of self-denial and self-sacrifice to promote these objects;—to whom it may at first appear harsh and illiberal to be told that the sentence of the law bids them forego any symbolical act, or incident of Divine worship, with which they have accustomed themselves to associate in any way the administration of the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of our Lord; but I have good hope that further and deeper consideration will convince them of the truth of the proposition, which I stated at the outset of my judgment, that no matter of doctrine or faith is affected by this decision, the true result of which is simply to pronounce, that by those statutes, ordinances, and canons which form the compact of union between the Church and the State in this country, it has been determined that certain usages, however in themselves innocent, laudable and primitive, shall, for the sake of general peace and harmony, form no part of the rites and ceremonies of the Church of England.

In Westerton v. Liddell, the Privy Council said, “Their Lordships are not disposed in any case to restrict within narrower limits than the law has imposed, the discretion which within those limits is justly allowed to congregations by the rules both of the Ecclesiastical and the Common Law Courts.”

The basis of the religious establishment in this realm was, I am satisfied, intended by the constitution and the law to be broad and not narrow. Within its walls there is room, if they would cease from litigation, for both parties; for that which is represented by the promoter and for that which is represented by the defendant; for those whose devotion is so supported by simple faith and fervent piety that they derive no aid from external ceremony or ornament; and who think that these things degrade and obscure religion; and for those who think with Burke, that religion “should be performed, as all public solemn acts are performed, in buildings, in music, in decorations, in speech, in the dignity of persons according to the customs of mankind taught by their nature, that is, with modest splendour and unassuming state, with mild majesty and sober pomp;” who sympathize with Milton the poet rather than with Milton the Puritan; and who say that these accessories of religious rites

... dissolve them into costliness,

And bring all Heaven before their eyes:

St. Chrysostom and St. Augustine represented different schools of religious thought; the Primitive Church held them both. Bishop Taylor and Archbishop Leighton differed as to ceremonial observances, but they prayed for the good estate of the same Catholic Church; they held the same faith “in the unity of spirit, in the bond of peace, and in righteousness of life”; and the English Church contained them both.

There is surely room for both the promoter and the defendant in this Church of England, and I should indeed regret if, with any justice, it could be said that this judgment had the slightest tendency either to injure the Catholic foundations upon which our Church rests, or to abridge the liberty which the law has so wisely accorded to her ministers and her congregations.

I must say a word as to costs. This is a matter to be governed by the discretion of the Court, that is, by a discretion judiciously exercised.

It appears that the promoter is not a churchwarden, nor a resident parishioner.

Of the ~~alms~~ charges brought against Mr. Mackonochie, in which I include the excessive kneeling, upon these there have been adverse decisions to Mr. Mackonochie. With respect to the elevation, Mr. Mackonochie submitted the question to his Ordinary, and discontinued, under his direction, the practice before the institution of this suit, though it is true, he has done so under protest.

With respect to the incense, he had discontinued, though also under protest, the censuring of persons and things, before the institution of this suit.

With respect to the excessive kneeling, I have decided that it was a matter that ought to have been referred to the discretion of the Ordinary.

With respect to the mixing water with the wine, the decision is in favour of the promoter; and with respect to the lights, in favour of the defendant.

Taking all these circumstances into my consideration, I shall make no order as to costs in this case.

I admonish Mr. Mackonochie to abstain for the future from the use of incense, and from the mixing water with the wine, as pleaded in these articles. And I further admonish him not to recur to the practices which he has abandoned under protest, with respect to the elevation of the Blessed Sacrament, and the censuring of persons and things.

LIDDELL AND OTHERS v.
RAINSFORD.

Criminal Suit—Civil Proceedings—Retaining Alms—Practice.

The Court declined to order a decree or citation in a criminal suit to issue against a clergyman officiating in a chapel to which no district is assigned, for refusing to pay over to the incumbent and churchwardens of the church of the district in which such chapel is situated the alms collected at the offertory in such chapel, there being no satisfactory evidence before the Court that the district had become a separate parish. It ordered a citation to issue in a civil suit, calling upon the clergyman to shew cause why he should not pay over to the incumbent and churchwardens of the district church the moneys he had received at the offertory in his chapel.

It is doubtful whether the disposing to pious and charitable uses of the alms of the parishioners, is the exercising of a civil right under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, s. 19, so that a suit in a criminal form can be brought in a Consistorial Court to ascertain to whom such right belongs.

This was an application to the Official Principal of the Consistorial Court of London, to cause to be cited before him the Rev. Marcus Rainsford, clerk, the officiating minister of St. John's Chapel, situated in Halkin Street, Belgrave Square, to answer to certain articles touching and concerning his soul's health and the lawful correction of his manners, to be administered to him by virtue of the office of the Judge, at the voluntary promotion of the Hon. and Rev. Robert Liddell, clerk, the incumbent, and George Sheward and John Osborne, the churchwardens, of the church of St. Paul, Knightsbridge, for refusing to pay over to the said incumbent and churchwardens the alms collected at the offertory in the said chapel, and for appropriating the said alms contrary to law and the express orders and injunctions of the Hon. and Rev. Robert Liddell, and further to do and receive as unto law and justice shall appertain.

Dr. Tristram appeared for the incumbent and churchwardens of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge.—He depended upon the Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), s. 19, which enacts, that nothing in the act contained shall prevent any person from instituting, as voluntary promoter, or from prosecuting in such form and manner, and in such court as he might have done before the passing of the act, any suit which, although in form criminal, shall have the effect of asserting, ascertaining or establishing any civil right,

SIR T. TWISS (Jan. 10).—It cannot be disputed, upon the face of the proposed citation, that the present application is for leave to institute a criminal suit against a clerk in holy orders of the United Church of England and Ireland, and that he is charged with an offence against the laws ecclesiastical. The first question, therefore, which must be considered is, whether the Consistory Court of the Bishop of London, which, before the passing of the Church Discipline Act, had undoubted jurisdiction to entertain a criminal suit of this character, is not precluded by that statute from acceding to the present application. That statute enacts (s. 23), that no criminal suit or proceeding against a clerk in holy orders of the United Church of England and Ireland, for any offence against the laws ecclesiastical, shall be instituted in any ecclesiastical court otherwise than is thereinbefore enacted or provided, that is to say, otherwise than by letters of request, addressed by the Bishop of the diocese to the Judge of the Arches Court of Canterbury. Prima facie, then, as this is a criminal suit, the statute precludes the present applicants from instituting proceedings in the Consistory Court of the Bishop. But it has been contended very forcibly by their counsel that the present case is within the exception of the 19th section, which provides that nothing thereinbefore contained shall prevent any person from instituting, as voluntary promoter or from prosecuting, in such form and manner, and in such courts as he might have done before the passing of this act, any suit which, though in form criminal, shall have the effect of asserting, ascertaining or establishing any civil right, and that as Mr. Liddell is the incumbent of the district in which Belgrave Chapel is situated, it is a civil injury to withhold from him and the churchwardens of St. Paul's Church the offertory-money received in Belgrave Chapel, as the distribution of the alms received at the offertory in private chapels belongs of right to the incumbent and churchwardens of the parish in which the chapel is situated. If no other question were involved in this suit than the duty of the Rev. Mr. Rainsford to pay over the offertory alms to the incumbent and churchwardens of the parish in which Belgrave Chapel is situated, it might be necessary for me to decide the question whether the spiritual charge of disposing to pious and charitable uses of the alms of the parishioners is to be regarded as a civil right within the 19th section of the statute, the denial of which would entitle the incumbent and churchwardens to proceed against Mr. Rainsford by promoting the office of the Judge. There is, however, a preliminary difficulty which cannot be overlooked. In the affidavit, which has been sworn by the incumbent of St. Paul's, I observe that the word parish has been struck out, and that the words district chapelry have been substituted in its place; and I had occasion in the course of the argument to inquire what was the precise character of this district chapelry, whether it had become a separate parish from the parish of St. Peter's, Pimlico, either under an Order in Council or under Lord Blandford's Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 104); inasmuch as there might be some grounds for Mr. Rainsford to dispute whether, if it were a district chapelry, the collection of the alms at the offertory at Belgrave Chapel was a parochial matter as regards the incumbent and churchwardens of St. Peter's, Pimlico, or as regards the incumbent and churchwardens of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that some injustice might be worked, if I were to allow these proceedings to be instituted in the criminal form; and that the more convenient course will be for the incumbent and churchwardens of St. Paul's, Knightsbridge, to take out a citation in a civil suit against the Rev. Mr. Rainsford, calling on him to shew cause why he should not pay over to the incumbent and churchwardens of St. Paul's Church the money received at the offertory in Belgrave Chapel, to be disposed of according to the rubric. The form of the citation can be settled in the registry.

 April 18, 27; } THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER
 May 2. } v. RUGG.

Criminal Suit — Non-Performance of Divine Service in a Parish Church—Two Chapelries United—13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4.

Two chapelries, each having a church within its limits, were united in one benefice by an order in Council; the incumbent of the benefice on certain Sundays omitted to perform any service in one of the churches, but had two full services on those days in the other. The bishop of the diocese gave him notice that he would require him to perform alternate morning and evening service in each church; which notice the incumbent disobeyed:—Held, that the bishop has a discretion in such a matter, and that the incumbent's disobedience to his orders was an ecclesiastical offence.

This was a cause of the office of the Judge promoted by the Bishop of Winchester against the Rev. Lewis Rugg, clerk, the incumbent of the perpetual curacy of Ecchinswell-with-Sydmonton, in the county of Southampton and diocese of Winchester, brought into the Court of Arches by letters of request. The offence, as stated in the letters of request and citation, was as follows: That the Rev. Lewis Rugg had offended against the laws ecclesiastical by having omitted to perform or to provide for the performance of public divine service as prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer and the administration of the sacraments and other rites and ceremonies according to the use of the Church of England, in the church of St. Mary, Sydmonton, within the said perpetual curacy of Ecchinswell-with-Sydmonton, on three successive Sundays in May, 1867, and on Sunday the 2nd of June, 1867. Mr. Rugg appeared under protest to this citation, but his protest was overruled (ante, p. 11), and he then appeared absolutely. The articles were as follows: 1. That by the common ecclesiastical laws of the realm, and by the statute 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. s. 2, every clerk in holy orders of the United Church of England and Ireland is bound on every Sunday, otherwise called the Lord's

Day, in the year to perform or provide for the performance of public divine service as prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer and administration of the sacraments according to the use of the Church of England, in every consecrated church or chapel of the ecclesiastical parish or benefice of which he is the incumbent. 2. That the Rev. Lewis Rugg was and is a clerk in holy orders of the United Church of England and Ireland, and was on or about the 29th of September, 1852, lawfully licensed to be perpetual curate and incumbent of the perpetual curacy and benefice of Ecchinswell-with-Sydmonton, in the county of Southampton, the diocese of Winchester and province of Canterbury, and has continued to be such perpetual curate and incumbent up to the present date. 3. That the said perpetual curacy and benefice consists of two separate parochial chapelries now and for many years past known by the respective names of Ecchinswell and Sydmonton, in each of which has been from time out of mind a consecrated church or chapel, to wit, the church or chapel of St. Lawrence, Ecchinswell, and the church or chapel of St. Mary, Sydmonton. That such ancient parochial chapelries up to the 18th day of August, 1852, belonged for all ecclesiastical purposes to the vicarage and parish church of Kingsclere, but were separated therefrom by an Order in Council bearing date on that day, and since that date they have been and are a separate parish for ecclesiastical purposes and a perpetual curacy and benefice by the name or style of Ecchinswell-with-Sydmonton. 4. That the said Lewis Rugg has within two years last past offended against the said common ecclesiastical laws and the said statute by having omitted to perform or to provide for the performance of public divine service as prescribed by the Book of Common Prayer, &c. in the said church or chapel of St. Mary, Sydmonton, on Sundays the 12th, 19th and 26th days of May, and the 2nd day of June, 1867. 5. In part supply of proof the following letter was set out:

"27, Parliament Street, Westminster, 28rd May, 1867.

"Sir,—The Bishop of Winchester has received a complaint that on the 5th of May you gave notice in the church of Sydmonton that there would be no more services in that church, and that on the Sundays the 12th and 19th inst. divine service was not performed there. The Bishop desires to know whether the above information is correct, and if so, on what grounds you have suspended the service.

“Burder & Dunning, Secretaries.”

“Ecchinswell, May 27, 1867.

“Gentlemen,—In answer to your letter addressed to me at the request of the Bishop, I have to inform you that I have discontinued the service of Sydmonton, and have returned to the two full services in the church at Ecchinswell as performed by me during the first four years of my charge of this parish. I think I shall best discharge my duty to my parishioners generally by the return to two full services (morning and evening) here, and this will be more strictly in accordance with the requirements of both the common and ecclesiastical law than holding only one service in order that there may be one in a building which I cannot recognize as ever having been lawfully consecrated, and for the sake merely of one family (not much resident) and their immediate dependents, whilst the great bulk (more than nine-tenths) of my parishioners live nearer to Ecchinswell Church, where they can better and more conveniently attend than by having to go out of their way a mile or two more distant to Sydmonton.

“Lewis Rugg.”

On the 30th of May, 1867, the Bishop's secretaries again wrote to Mr. Rugg: “We are desired to inform you that the Bishop requires you to resume the services in Sydmonton Church on Sunday next, and to continue performance of such services in future; and we beg to add, that we have forwarded a copy of this letter to the churchwarden requesting him to inform the Bishop whether the order has been complied with.” In reply, on the 31st of May, Mr. Rugg says, “I beg to inform his Lordship, with all due deference to his authority, that I see neither the necessity nor the obligation under existing circumstances of performing divine service at Sydmonton, and it is not my intention to resume the service there until every impediment be removed and the church, so called, has been judicially decided to be lawfully consecrated. I have moreover to inform you that there is no churchwarden at Sydmonton, and therefore no need to wait for a reply to any copy of a letter or request to know whether his Lordship's order has been complied with.”

6. That on being informed of such breach of the common and Ecclesiastical law, and of the said statute, by the said Lewis Rugg, the Bishop, by virtue of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, sent the case in the first instance by letters of request under his hand and seal to the Judge of the Arches Court of Canterbury, which said letters of request have been duly presented and accepted in this cause, by reason whereof and other premises the said Lewis Rugg was and is subject to the jurisdiction of the Court. The articles prayed that Mr. Rugg should be admonished to abstain from offending for the future, and should be condemned in the costs. Mr. Rugg filed a responsive allegation, the material parts of which are stated in the judgment.

Dr. Deane and Dr. Swabey appeared for the Bishop of Winchester.

Mr. Rugg argued his own case in person.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—This is a cause instituted in this court by letters of request from the Bishop of Winchester, under the Clergy Discipline Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. The Bishop of Winchester is himself the promoter of the office of the Judge. The defendant is the Rev. Lewis Rugg, and the object of the suit is to compel Mr. Rugg, who is the incumbent of Ecchinswell-with-Sydmonton, to perform one service every Sunday in the chapel of the latter benefice. It is not necessary to consider whether or not previously to August, 1865, the old church which occupied the site of the present church, which was built in 1853, had been consecrated or not. The Order in Council, which dates from the 18th of August, 1852, severs the chapelries of Ecchinswell and Sydmonton from the vicarage and parish church of Kingsclere, and forms them into a separate parish for ecclesiastical purposes, and a perpetual curacy and benefice by the name or style of the perpetual curacy of Ecchinswell-with-Sydmonton. The same order recites that there is in each of the said chapelries a church or chapel, that of Ecchinswell being nearly two miles, and that of Sydmonton about three miles, distant from the parish church of Kingsclere. It further recites that each of the chapelries has its own churchwardens; that the tithe rent-charge of Ecchinswell was commuted at 60*l.* and that of Sydmonton at 50*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*; and that the fees of both chapelries amounted to about 2*l.* per annum. These recitals in the Order in Council furnish evidence which the Court is bound to accept as far as they affect the question now before it. Mr. Rugg was, in September, 1852, instituted as incumbent of Ecchinswell-with-Sydmonton. Mr. Kingsmill, the principal owner of land in the parish, rebuilt the chapel at Sydmonton in 1853. It appears, from the pamphlet printed by Mr. Rugg, which has been admitted as evidence in this cause, that for eleven years divine service was performed by him at Sydmonton, and that, in 1863, he had an unfortunate quarrel with Mr. Kingsmill about sittings in the chapel, and in consequence, as Mr. Rugg says, he was under the necessity of suspending the services until his wishes were respected. On the 5th of September, 1863, he wrote to Mr. Kingsmill complaining of his conduct "in intimidating, as you have done, the inmates of my house from sitting in the pew which was appropriated to my household at the vestry meeting held prior to the opening of the church." "I think, indeed," he adds, "it is high time the church should be closed when it is come to such a pass as this, coupled with the conduct which has generally been characterized by so much injustice towards your pastor. You cannot, I am sure, spiritually benefit by the services therein performed, nor, as far as your influence is permitted to operate, can it be otherwise than detrimental to the bearing of religion on the hearts of other worshippers." The Court much regrets to discover from this letter that a priest of the Church of England should suppose that he is justified, on account of a dispute about a sitting in a church with a particular person, in refusing to administer spiritual services to the whole parish, and in actually closing the church. It is clear that such an act was illegal as well as wrong. The quarrel seems to have been made up for a short time; for, on the 7th of September, Mr. Rugg wrote to Mr. Kingsmill, "I hope to resume the duty at Sydmonton next Sunday, and, sincerely regretting as I do that any disturbance should have arisen from so trivial a matter, I remain, &c." On the 17th of December, the Bishop wrote to Mr. Rugg, inclosing a letter from one of the churchwardens of Sydmonton, complaining that on various Sundays there had been no service at Sydmonton; that Mr. Rugg had said he was not well or strong enough sometimes to perform service; and further, that he, Mr. Rugg, was not compelled to perform the service at Sydmonton because the church was not consecrated when rebuilt, that is, in 1853. On the 21st of December, 1863, Mr. Rugg wrote a long answer to the Bishop, in which he maintained that, as the church had not been consecrated, he was not legally bound to perform service in it; and observed, that "the portion of the endowment, as regards Sydmonton, does not amount, after the outgoings are deducted, to more than 20*l.* a year." A further correspondence ensued between Mr. Rugg and the Bishop, in which the former maintained that he was not bound to officiate in an unconsecrated church. Early in August, 1865, Mr. Rugg received notice that the Bishop intended to consecrate the chapel. Mr. Rugg declared that he would not consent to the consecration, and refused the use of the key to open the door of the church. The Bishop, however, proceeded to perform his duty, and consecrated the church on the 7th of August, 1865. Mr. Rugg maintains that this consecration has no legal effect, and admits he performed no divine service on the days laid in the articles, and, indeed, for a whole year from the present month (May). Mr. Rugg's position, in my opinion, is untenable and erroneous. I have no doubt that the church was duly and legally consecrated; that Mr. Rugg by withholding his consent in no way affected the legal validity of the act. It is not necessary that I should again advert to the Order in Council; but I listened with surprise to Mr. Rugg's assertion that Sydmonton is unendowed, whereas it is plain that he derives nearly as much income from it as from Ecchinswell. However, the question of the validity of this consecration has been determined by the Privy Council, whose decision is binding upon me—Rugg v. Kingsmill (1).

They decided, not only in express terms, but by their act, so to speak, for they granted a faculty to Mr. Kingsmill for a vault under the chancel of this chapel on the condition that an additional piece of ground were first consecrated; but every one acquainted with ecclesiastical law must know that a faculty cannot be granted for a vault in an unconsecrated building. As to the objection of Mr. Rugg, that there is no right of way to this chapel, and that therefore he is excused from performing service therein (to pass over the fact that this objection is not sustained by any evidence, but is clearly an after-thought to support Mr. Rugg's resolution, taken upon other grounds, not to perform service in this chapel), the law seems to me clear that if there is no access to this chapel, except through the land of Mr. Kingsmill, there must be what is called a way of necessity over such land, for the chapel is a public building to which all the parishioners of Sydmonton have a right to resort. The only question as to which there really can be anything like a serious argument, arises on the second branch of Mr. Rugg's defence, namely, that where an incumbent has a parish made out of two benefices, with a chapel or church in each, is it competent for him to perform service in one of these chapels or churches alone, and by so doing will he satisfy the requirements of the Statute of Uniformity and the general ecclesiastical law. Can it be argued that a discretion in this matter is vested in the incumbent and not in the bishop? and that the parishioners, whatever may be said in the Order in Council, have no right or title to claim to have divine service performed at all in their chapel? The consequence, if the last point be answered in the affirmative, would be, that they would be altogether deprived of their strict right to attend divine service, for if the accommodation at Ecchinswell be only sufficient for the parishioners of that chapelry, the parishioners of Sydmonton can have no legal right to be seated in Ecchinswell Church. Again, if Mr. Rugg has a discretion as to which chapel he may perform service in, he may do so in Sydmonton chapel only, and so exclude the majority of his parishioners. It is not denied that by the existing law, 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4. s. 2, every minister, and Mr. Rugg amongst others, is bound to say and use the morning prayer, evening prayer, celebration and administration of both the sacraments, and all other the public and common prayers, in such order and form as is mentioned in the Prayer Book, on every Lord's day, and upon all other days and occasions, and at the times therein appointed; and that such prayers are to be openly and solemnly read by all and every minister and curate in every church, chapel or other place of public worship within the realm. By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106. s. 80. the bishop may order two full services, including a sermon or lecture, to be performed on every Sunday throughout the year, in the church or chapel of every or any benefice within his diocese. Some restraint, however, is placed upon the bishop's discretion if the benefice is composed of two or more parishes or chapelries, in each of which there is a church or chapel, and the value of the living and the amount of the population do not reach a certain limit. The 17 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 1. par. 4. was cited by Mr. Rugg; but, in the first place, the statute applies to only a very particular class of churches, namely, those in cities and towns corporate; and in the second place, the principle of the act is directly opposed to Mr. Rugg's argument, for the discretion as to the performance of divine service is expressly vested in the bishop, and not in the minister. There are in this kingdom many parishes which contain united benefices, with a church in each, and it is, I believe, the very first time that it has been contended by the incumbent of such a parish that it is competent to him to perform divine service in one of those chapels only, and that the inhabitants of the district, in which the other church is situated may be deprived of the right, equally recognized by the common and ecclesiastical law of this realm, to the performance of divine service by their minister in their own church. To whom are these parishioners to look for redress for this wrong done to them? How are they to obtain the performance of divine service in their church? Surely by an appeal to the authority of their bishop. He has the cura animarum within his diocese. It is his bounden duty to enforce in every church within his diocese the performance of the services prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer; and where the circumstances of the parish are unfortunately such as not to permit of the performance of full divine service in every church of united parishes, it is clearly, in my opinion, the intendment of the law, ancient and modern, common and ecclesiastical, as well as of the particular Order in Council under which these parishes were united, that a service should be performed every Sunday in each church, so that the inhabitants of both parishes should have access on that holy day, at least, to their respective churches, and there receive the benefits of the ministrations of the church, according to such a distribution of the duty of the incumbent as may best secure that object. According to the opinion of the bishop in this case, that object is best secured by alternate morning and evening service in the two churches. I see no reason to doubt that the general authority of the Ordinary in matters of this kind, which has been recognized by the ecclesiastical law as inherent in his office, and necessary for the performance of his duties, has been properly exercised in this instance. I think that the parishioners of Sydmonton are entitled to the performance of a service by their minister in their own church every Sunday; that the bishop has rightly exercised his discretion in commanding Mr. Rugg to perform such service; and I must formally admonish Mr. Rugg, as I now do, to obey the directions of his Ordinary. I think it right to call Mr. Rugg's serious attention to the necessity of his obeying the order of this Court. He has the assistance of an experienced proctor, who will inform him that disobedience to such an order will be attended with the grave penal consequences which the law attaches to the offence of contumacy. I must further, in the execution of my duty, condemn Mr. Rugg in the costs of these proceedings.

May 25. } MOSS v. EDWARDS.

Criminal Suit — Negative Issue—Evidence—Practice—Rules and Orders, 1866, 9, 10.

In a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, against a clergyman, if a negative issue be filed on his behalf without any defensive plea, evidence may nevertheless be given of all material facts necessary to the defence, but not of special circumstances which do not immediately arise out of the charges made against the defendant.

This was a cause of office promoted by William Moss, of the city of Lincoln, gentleman, against the Reverend Joseph Charles Edwards, clerk, rector of the parish of Ingoldmells, in the county of Lincoln. It was brought in the Court of Arches by letters of request from the Bishop of Lincoln. The articles charged the defendant with undue familiarity with and lewd and incontinent conduct towards two females. The defendant filed a long statement, of a very informal character, as an answer to the articles.

Dr. Spinks (Dr. Tristram with him) moved that the answer should be rejected. It was so informally drawn that the Court could not admit it as a responsive allegation.

Mr. Edwards appeared in person.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE.—I must reject this answer, but if Mr. Edwards will give in a negative issue, under the New Rules he may prove all the material parts of this statement by evidence at the hearing without any plea at all. Under the negative issue all material facts may be proved, but not such special circumstances as would come by surprise upon the promoter, of which, therefore, he should be apprised beforehand. I may also inform Mr. Edwards that at the hearing it will be competent for him, if he thinks proper, to offer himself as a witness, and give his own account of the matter on oath. In accordance with my ruling in another case—The Bishop of Norwich v. Pearce, I shall hold such evidence to be admissible.—[See the next case, in which Sir R. Phillimore, upon the defendant being tendered as a witness and objected to, admitted his evidence, and on a subsequent day stated his reasons for so doing.]

Proctors—Dyke & Jenner, for promoter; defendant appeared in person.

[IN THE COURT OF ARCHES.]

1868. }
May 25, 26; } THE BISHOP OF NORWICH v.
June 4. } PEARSE.

Witness—Criminal Suit—Evidence of Party Accused.

The Court held, reversing the decision in Burder v. O'Neil (1), that in a criminal suit against a clergyman, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, the defendant is competent and may be compelled to give evidence.

This was a suit instituted under the Church Discipline Act against the Rev. Robert Wilson Pearse, clerk, rector of Gaywood, in the county of Norfolk and diocese of Norwich. It was sent by letters of request to the Arches Court, under the hands of and was promoted by the Bishop of Norwich. The charge against the defendant was, that within the two years previous to the institution of the suit he had indecently assaulted three young men. At the hearing the defendant was examined and cross-examined.

Dr. Deane and Dr. Tristram appeared for the Bishop of Norwich.

Ballantine, Serj., Dr. Spinks and Dr. Middleton, for the defendant.

SIR R. PHILLIMORE in the course of his judgment said: The hearing of this cause has been attended with one remarkable circumstance. It furnishes, practically speaking, the first instance in which the accused clerk has been allowed to give his own personal evidence as a part of his defence. It is right that I should state fully the grounds upon which I came to the conclusion that such evidence was admissible, because the consequences of this decision, if it be correct, are obviously very important. It materially affects, for good or for evil, the administration of justice in these proceedings against criminous clerks. In my opinion, the protection of innocence and the detection of guilt are promoted by the admissibility of this evidence, and the discovery of the truth—the proper end, I think, of all rules of evidence and legal procedure,—facilitated. But such, I regret to say, was not the opinion of my predecessor in this seat, and this fact alone would render a statement of the reasons for a contrary opinion imperative upon me. The question stands in this way: By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, entitled 'An act for improving the law of evidence,' and which recites that, whereas the inquiry after truth in courts of justice is often obstructed by incapacities created by the present law, and it is desirable that full information as to the facts in issue, both in criminal and in civil cases, should be laid before the persons who are appointed to decide upon them, and that such persons should exercise their judgment on the credit of the witnesses adduced, and on the truth of their testimony, it is enacted, "That no person offered as a witness shall hereafter be excluded, by reason of incapacity from crime or interest, from giving evidence, either in person or by deposition, according to the practice of the Court, on the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any suit, action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in any Court, or before any judge, jury, sheriff, coroner, magistrate, officer, or person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive and examine evidence; but that every person so offered may and shall be admitted to give evidence, on oath, or solemn affirmation in those cases wherein affirmation is by law receivable, notwithstanding that such person may or shall have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question or inquiry, or of the suit, action or proceeding in which he is offered as a witness, and notwithstanding that such person, so offered as a witness, may have been previously convicted of any crime or offence. Provided that this act shall not render competent any party to any suit, action or proceeding individually named in the record, or any lessor of the plaintiff or tenant of premises sought to be recovered in ejectment, or the landlord or other person in whose right any defendant in replevin may make cognizance, or any person in whose immediate and individual behalf any action may be brought or defended, either wholly or in part, or the husband or wife of such persons respectively." This act was followed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, and Dr. Lushington, after commenting upon these two acts, came to the conclusion, in Burder v. O'Neil (1), that he could not allow a defendant, in a suit instituted under the Church Discipline Act, to be examined as a witness. In a subsequent case, Berney v. the Bishop of Norwich (2), this ruling of my learned predecessor was brought to the attention of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, as a reason for not having examined Mr. Berney upon a point as to which his evidence would have been very material. Their Lordships, in the course of the judgment they delivered, observed that this question might be worth re-considering, if need should hereafter arise. This is the first case which has happened since this observation was made, and I have thought myself not only authorized but bound to re-consider the question. In the first place, I think that the plain and true construction of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99. does not leave me at liberty to discuss the question of the expediency of admitting the evidence in question. As I read that statute, the second clause renders all parties in all suits competent witnesses, except those mentioned in the two following clauses, which contain a catalogue of exceptions to the principle of general admissibility. In that catalogue parties to criminal suits in the Ecclesiastical Courts are not enumerated, and are therefore admissible as witnesses. But it is said that, if this proposition were generally true, it does not apply to cases where the offences charged against the clerk are (like the present) indictable or punishable by summary conviction; but, again, I am obliged to dissent from this construction of the statute. I think that the words "in any criminal proceeding" contained in the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99. s. 3. refer to proceedings in which the Crown, as guardian of the public weal, is prosecutor, and not to suits which the Canon Law denominates criminal, and in which the prosecutor is the ordinary or his representative, especially having regard to the 4th section, in which the Ecclesiastical Court is specifically mentioned, which it is not in the 3rd section. Another objection is, that the statute 13 Car. 2. c. 12. is a special statute which forbids the examination of parties to these criminal suits; and the authority of Lord Justice Turner, in Hawkins v. Gathercole (3) is given for the position that a special statute can only be repealed by a special statute. The oath, ex officio, referred to in 13 Car. 2. c. 12. s. 4. was an oath whereby any person might have been obliged to make any presentment of any crime or offence, or to confess or accuse himself or herself of any criminal matter or thing, whereby he or she might have been liable to any censure, penalty or punishment whatever—3 Burn (by Phillimore), 14. The 4th section (13 Car. 2. c. 12.) enacted that "no person having or exercising spiritual or ecclesiastical jurisdiction shall tender or administer unto any person whatsoever the oath usually called the oath ex officio, or any other oath, whereby such person to whom the same is tendered or administered may be charged or compelled to confess or accuse, or to purge himself or herself of any criminal matter or thing, whereby he or she may be liable to any censure or punishment; anything in the statute or any other law, custom or usage heretofore to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding." I have read with care the judgment in Hawkins v. Gathercole (3). Not to go into it at length, I will only say that I do not think that the principles of construction which it lays down warrant the conclusion that any restriction on the admissibility of evidence prescribed by 13 Car. 2. c. 12. could not be taken away by the language of the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99. Lastly, the learned Judge alleges the evil that would ensue, if a clerk were to be allowed to give evidence, "where the penalty may be disgrace and the loss of valuable preferment." I have already expressed my opinion upon this general subject: I must add, that the other side of the question does not seem to have been considered, namely, the extreme hardship, I should say injustice, of allowing a clerk to be accused of any offence, however infamous, alleged to have been committed in the presence of the accuser alone, and supported by his testimony alone, and of sealing up the mouth of the accused, who, if innocent, may give a satisfactory refutation of the charge, and who, if guilty, ought not to be protected by a technical rule from exposure, more especially in a case where third parties, the parishioners, have a right to demand that the cure of their souls should not be entrusted to a wicked pastor. At this moment, in the Divorce Court, a husband accused of cruelty, which may include the commission of an unnatural crime, of impotency, of adultery, if the suit be instituted in a particular form, is a competent witness. Under what temptation is he placed to exculpate himself by perjury? In the Probate Court, Dr. Smethurst was admitted, in a case where he was the party benefited under a will, to give evidence on the subject of it, although he had been found guilty of poisoning the maker of that will by a sentence afterwards remitted by the Crown; and, in the civil suit, he was cross-examined by Mr. Serjeant Ballantine as to all the circumstances of the alleged crime, as to which it is true, when tried for his life, his lips had been sealed by the law. But the other day, a party accused of obtaining by undue influence nearly half-a-million of money from an insane testatrix gave evidence in favour of the will. Under what temptations were these persons to commit perjury? Certainly, according to the reasoning of Burder v. O'Neil (1), their evidence ought to have been inadmissible. I will not pursue the subject further. In my opinion the statute renders this species of evidence in this Court admissible; and I do not think that this Court should endeavour to discover an ingenious construction of the statute for the purpose of excluding such evidence, on the ground of the mischief consequent on its admission; but, on the contrary, that, for the sake of the administration of justice both to the individual and the Church of which he is a minister, it ought to be ready to receive it. Therefore, when the counsel for the defendant in this case tendered him as a witness, I overruled a formal objection made by the counsel for the promoter, and I allowed the defendant to be examined. In considering, however, the evidence of the defendant, I must remember that the law which made his evidence admissible did not, of course, remove those objections to its credibility which arise from the strong bias under which it must be given. It must be admitted that in this case the defendant has the very strongest motives of interest by which a man can be swayed to deny the charges now preferred against him. On the other hand, the improbability that an educated gentleman and a clergyman of mature years and long standing in his profession should deliberately commit the sin of perjury has been strongly urged upon me; and it has been truly said that that sin has been committed by him if the story he has told be untrue. The argument deserves consideration; but I am afraid that, on the assumption of guilt, the man who committed these various abominations at various periods, and with deliberate purpose, must have so polluted his mind and defiled his conscience as to render the commission of the additional sin of perjury, in the hope of thereby escaping the loss of character, fortune and station, not an impossible act; certainly not an act of such manifest improbability as to induce the Court on that ground alone to discredit, much less discard, the adverse testimony. The accused clerk is indeed entitled to the full benefit of those legitimate presumptions of innocence which arise from his character, his social position, and still more from his holy calling. These presumptions are to be constantly borne in mind by the Court, and to be weighed in the same scale against the inducements to perjury which, on the assumption of guilt, the fear of detection and of punishment would suggest.

The COURT then proceeded to examine the evidence given for the promoter and for the defence, and determined that each of the charges made was established, and pronounced a sentence of deprivation against the defendant, which he ordered to be certified to the Bishop, and further condemned him in the costs of the proceedings.

Proctors—Brooks & Du Bois, for the promoter;
Clarkson, Son & Cooper, for defendant.

INDEX

TO THE REPORTS OF CASES

DECIDED IN THE ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1867, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1868.

ALMS. See Criminal Suit.

ARTICLES—By whom to be signed. See Church Discipline Act.

BELL RINGING—consent of incumbent—The control of the church bells belongs to the incumbent; but to constitute an ecclesiastical offence, it is not sufficient to allege that the ringing complained of took place without his consent; it must be against his wishes, expressed either in a general or particular prohibition. Daunt v. Croker, 1

BURIAL GROUND—Refusal to restore remains improperly removed. See Contempt. And see Vault.

CHURCH DISCIPLINE ACT—signature of articles by advocate practising at Doctors' Commons—The Church Discipline Act requires that when the bishop of the diocese in which an offending clergyman holds preferment, or the party complaining, after the report of the Commissioners appointed under the act, shall think fit to proceed against the party accused, articles shall be drawn up, and shall be approved and signed by an advocate practising in Doctors' Commons:—Held, that the approval and signature of any barrister practising in the Arches Court of Canterbury will satisfy the statute. Mouncey v. Robinson, 8

— neglect to perform divine services in consecrated building in the parish—The 109th section of the 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, which enacts that in every case in which jurisdiction is given by the act to the bishop of the diocese for the purposes thereof, and the enforcing the due execution of the provisions thereof, all other and concurrent jurisdiction in respect thereof shall wholly cease, does not apply to prevent the bishop instituting proceedings against a beneficed clergyman, under the Church Discipline Act, for omitting to perform, or provide for the performance of public divine service in a consecrated building within his parish; the provisions of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 106, s. 77, only applying to cases where the services of any benefice have been inadequately performed, not where they have been omitted altogether. Bishop of Winchester v. Rugg, 11

Although the incumbent of a parish has a right to object to the consecration of a building within his parish, if the bishop overrules such objection, and proceeds to consecrate the building, such consecration will not be invalid by reason of the dissent of the incumbent. Ibid.

NEW SERIES, 37.—ECCLES.

— criminal suit: non-performance of divine service in a parish church—Two chapelries, each having a church within its limits, were united in one benefice by an order in Council; the incumbent of the benefice on certain Sundays omitted to perform any service in one of the churches, but had two full services on those days in the other. The bishop of the diocese gave him notice that he would require him to perform alternate morning and evening service in each church; which notice the incumbent disobeyed.—Held, that the bishop has a discretion in such a matter, and that the incumbent's disobedience to his orders was an ecclesiastical offence. The Bishop of Winchester v. Rugg, 85

— rites and ceremonies in the Church of England: elevation of paten cup: lighted candles: incense: water mixed with the wine—There is a legal distinction between a rite and a ceremony. The former consists in services expressed in words; the latter, in gestures or acts preceding, accompanying, or following the utterance of these words. As regards ceremonies, no sound argument against their lawfulness can be deduced merely from their identity with those in use before the Reformation, nor from their disuse since; the real test is, are they, on a fair construction, necessarily connected with those novelties which the Church of England rejected at the Reformation? Martin v. Mackonochie, 17

Force and effect of the Rubric. Ibid.
The elevation of the paten and cup being connected with the doctrine of transubstantiation is not permissible in the Church of England. Ibid.
The amount of kneeling is matter for the regulation of the bishop. Ibid.

Incense during the celebration of the Communion is unlawful. So is the mixing of water with the wine. Ibid.

Two lights on the table during the administration of the Communion are lawful. Ibid.

CONTEMPT—removal of human remains from churchyard to a field adjoining: monition to restore: field not in occupation of defendant—The Court having determined that the defendant had offended against the laws ecclesiastical by removing without lawful authority human bones from the churchyard of his parish to an adjoining field, issued a monition to him to replace such bones and the earth with them in the burial-ground before a certain day. The defendant failed to comply with this monition, alleging as a reason that the field in which such bones and earth had been placed was no longer in his occupation or possession:—Held, that his conduct amounted to a contempt of the Court, and that unless he obeyed the monition within six days and certified the same, the Court would pronounce him to be in contempt, and signify the contempt to the Court of Chancery. Adlam v. Colthurst, 3

CRIMINAL SUIT—criminal suit or civil proceedings: retaining alms—The Court declined to order a decree or citation in a criminal suit to issue against a clergyman officiating in a chapel to which no district is assigned, for refusing to pay over to the incumbent and churchwardens of the church of the district in which such chapel is situated the alms collected at the offertory in such chapel, there being no satisfactory evidence before the Court that the district had become a separate parish. It ordered a citation to issue in a civil suit, calling upon the clergyman to shew cause why he should not pay over to the incumbent and churchwardens of the district church the moneys he had received at the offertory in his chapel. Liddell v. Rainsford, 83
It is doubtful whether the disposing to pious and charitable uses of the alms of the parishioners, is the exercising of a civil right under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86. s. 19, so that a suit in a criminal form can be brought in a consistorial court to ascertain to whom such right belongs. Ibid.

— negative issue: evidence—In a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, against a clergyman, if a negative issue be filed on his behalf without any defensive plea, evidence may nevertheless be given of all material facts necessary to the defence, but not of special circumstances which do not immediately arise out of the charges made against the defendant. Moss v. Edwards, 89

EVIDENCE. See Criminal Suit. Witness.

FACULTY. See Pulpit. Vault.

JURISDICTION. See Church Discipline Act.

PRACTICE—notice of objection to a pleading—When it is intended to oppose the admission of a pleading in the Court of Arches, a notice must be filed stating the grounds of the objection. Daunt v. Croker, 1

— Signing articles. See Church Discipline Act.

PULPIT—faculty to erect: opposition of the parishioners: conditional grant—At the time of the erection of a new church, which on consecration became the parish church of A, the foundations were laid and the designs prepared for a stone pulpit, but, from want of funds at the time, a temporary wooden pulpit was placed in the church. Some years afterwards, certain persons connected with the parish gave directions for the execution of the new pulpit, and, having raised a portion of the estimated cost of it by voluntary contributions, and given security for the rest, so that the parish could not incur any liability in the matter, they applied to the proper Court for leave to fix it in the church. The defendants, acting on a resolution of the vestry of the parish, refused to consent to the erection of the new pulpit until the debt for the building of the church itself had been paid off. No objection was made to the character or ornamentation of the proposed new pulpit:—Held, that, as the parish had already provided a substantial pulpit, which continued in good order and was in no way dilapidated, the Court could not, against the expressed objection of the vestry, order the removal of such temporary pulpit, and that it should be replaced by a new one; but it might allow a faculty to issue on the terms proposed by the vestry. Jackson v. Singer, 9

VAULT—faculty where entrance not on consecrated ground: variation of former decree, on appeal

—A. applied for a faculty to secure to himself and his family whilst resident in a particular house the exclusive use of a vault which had been constructed under the chancel of a consecrated church, but the sole entrance to which was in his own garden, on unconsecrated ground. The faculty was ordered to issue by the local Ordinary. On appeal, it was determined that such order must be varied by adding a condition that before the faculty issues a sufficient space of ground around the aperture of the vault be consecrated and so placed under the jurisdiction and control of the Ordinary. Rugg v. Kingsmill, 13

It is only under very exceptional circumstances that the Ordinary should grant permission for burials to take place under the chancels or the bodies of churches. Ibid.

WITNESS—evidence of party accused in criminal suit—The Court held, reversing the decision in Burder v. O'Neil, that in a criminal suit against a clergyman, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, the defendant is competent and may be compelled to give evidence. The Bishop of Norwich v. Pearce, 90

CASES ARGUED AND DETERMINED

BY THE

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE AND THE LORDS OF Her Majesty's Privy Council.

COMMENCING WITH

MICHAELMAS TERM, 31 VICTORIÆ.

1867. { JEAN BAPTISTE RENAUD, ap-Dec. 12. { pellant, JOSEPH GUILLET (dit TOURANGEAU) respondent.*

Lower Canada—Old French Law—Will — Devise — “Défense d’aliéner pure et simple,” Validity of.

A testator devised certain lands in Lower Canada to the respondent, with a proviso that the devisee should not in any manner incumber, affect, mortgage, sell or exchange or otherwise alienate the lands until after twenty years from the death of the testator. There was no substitution of the devise in the event of alienation:—Held, that such a proviso being by the law of Canada a “défense d’aliéner pure et simple,” amounted merely to advice by the person making the prohibition, and was not legally binding on the devisee.

This was an appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench of Lower Canada.

The appellant was a judgment creditor of the respondent.

* Present, the Right Hon. Lord Romilly, Sir J. W. Colville, Sir E. V. Williams and Sir R. T.
Kindersley.

NEW SERIES, 37.—PRIV. COUN.

The present appeal was brought to decide the right to certain lands and tenements of the respondent which were taken in execution by the sheriff, under a writ of fiery facias issued upon the appellant's judgment, under the following circumstances.

The respondent, on the 29th of November, 1856, confessed judgment in favour of the appellant for the sum of 1,884*l.* 18*s.* 3*d.*, together with interest thereon from that date until payment and costs, and the judgment was duly entered and registered on the 15th of December, 1856.

On the 6th of April, 1859, a writ of fiery facias was issued against the respondent for the sum of 1,892*l.* 14*s.* 5*d.*, being the amount of principal, interest and costs due upon the said judgment, under which execution the net sum of 105*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.*
was levied and paid to the appellant.

On the 23rd of November, 1860, a writ of alias fiery facias was issued against the respondent to recover the sum of 1,782*l.*
9*s.* 9*d.*, being the balance then due on the said judgment, and under that writ the sheriff seized certain lands and tenements of the respondent.

On the 1st of April, 1861, the respondent filed an opposition afin d'annuler

this seizure, alleging that the property had come to him under the will of his father, and that a clause in the said will expressly ordered that the testator's children should not in any manner incumber, affect, mortgage, sell, exchange or otherwise alienate the immovables being in their respective lots under the said will, until after twenty years from the death of the testator; that the testator had died in the year 1855, and that the lands and houses therefore could not be alienated by the respondent, and were therefore not liable to seizure.

The clause in question was as follows: "Je veux et j'ordonne expressément que mes dits enfants ne puissent en aucune manière engager, affecter, hypothéquer, vendre, échanger ou autrement aliéner les biens immeubles étant dans leurs lots respectifs d'après les deux partages que j'en ai faits comme ci-dessus qu'après vingt ans, à compter du jour de mon décès, sous peine de nullité de tous actes qu'ils feront contraires à mon intention, à l'exception toutefois de l'emplacement situé en la paroisse de St.-Roch de Québec, sur le niveau nord de la rue des Fossés, et décrit en le présent testament, dont le détenteur et possesseur pourra disposer en toute propriété quand et comme bon lui semblera du jour de mon décès."

On the 17th of December, 1861, the appellant filed a défense au fonds en droit, and an exception péremptoire to the said opposition.

The défense au fonds en droit was first argued; and on the 5th of May, 1862, the Judge of the superior Court, Mr. Justice Taschereau, gave judgment in the appellant's favour, on the ground that the clause in the testator's will prohibiting alienations was void according to Canadian law, and dismissed the opposition with costs.

From this judgment the respondent appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench, which Court, on the 16th of March, 1863, reversed the decision of the superior Court, on the ground that the restriction being limited to twenty years was valid (Mr. Justice Duval and Mr. Justice Meredith dissenting), and remitted the record to the superior Court.

Mr. Justice Meredith assigned, for his judgment, the following reasons: "The principal question to be decided in this cause is, as to the effect to be given to a testamentary disposition made subject to a provision to the following effect: 'Avec défense d'engager, affecter, hypothéquer, vendre, échanger, ou autrement aliéner les dits biens immeubles qu'après vingt ans, à compter du jour du décès du testateur, sous peine de nullité de tous actes qu'ils feront contraires à la dite intention du testateur.'

"Property held by the appellant under the foregoing provision has been seized; an opposition founded on it was filed by the appellant in the Court below; and it is from a judgment of the superior Court dismissing the opposition so filed that the present case comes before us.

"On the part of the respondent it is contended that a simple défense d'aliéner does not create a substitution, and is not in any respect binding in law, and therefore that notwithstanding such a prohibition the donee or legatee may make a valid alienation of the property to which it refers. In support of this view the respondent has referred to Ricard, who says:—"Les Lois ont résolu par une décision générale que lorsque la prohibition est pure et simple et sans cause qu'elle ne produit aucun effet, et que non-seulement les héritiers ab intestat du testateur, ni de celui à qui les défenses ont été faites, n'ont droit de prétendre aucun fidei-commis en leur faveur, mais aussi que l'institué ou le légataire ne laisse pas, nonobstant la prohibition, d'avoir la liberté d'aliéner" (1). The opinion of Henrys on this subject is to the same effect. His words are as follows:—"Donc, s'il y a quelque distinction à faire c'est entre la prohibition d'aliéner pure et simple et la prohibition d'aliéner faite en faveur de quelqu'un. La première n'opère rien et le testateur n'ayant pas passé plus avant, elle ne passe que pour un simple conseil; mais au contraire si le testateur, en prohibant à ses héritiers et successeurs d'aliéner les biens qu'il leur a délaissés, déclare que c'est afin qu'ils soient conservés à ceux qu'il désigne: par exemple, à ses descendants, ou à ceux de sa famille, en ce cas la prohibition d'aliéner emporte un fidei-commis, et c'est la même chose que si les descendants ou ceux de sa famille avaient été substitués à l'héritier; il faut donc que la prohibition soit faite en faveur de quelqu'un, pour empêcher que l'héritier ne puisse pas vendre. C'est la disposition du droit en la loi 38, § 4, et de la loi 93 ff. De légat. 3, mais plus expresse en la loi Filius familias 114, § Divi, 14 ff. De légat. 1, où le jurisconsulte dit que les Empereurs avaient décidé qu'il ne suffisait pas de prohiber l'aliénation, mais qu'il fallait encore exprimer la cause et déclarer la personne en faveur de laquelle on recherchait cette précaution; qu'autrement nisi inveniatur persona cujus respectu hoc a testatore dispositum sit, nullius esse momenti scripturam quasi nudum præceptum reliquerit (2)."

"Pothier also says:—'La simple défense d'aliéner, lorsque le testateur n'a pas témoigné en faveur de qui il faisait cette défense, ne passe, à la vérité, que pour un simple avis nudum præceptum, auquel celui à qui la défense est faite peut impunément ne pas déférer (3)."

"According to the foregoing authorities a défense d'aliéner is to be considered pure et simple unless it be stipulated in the interest either of the party making the donation or legacy or of some third person; and a défense d'aliéner pure et simple as above defined is to be deemed merely advice on the part of the person making the prohibition and not binding upon the person to whom it is addressed. The reason upon which as I believe the above rules are founded being that in the case of a défense d'aliéner pure et simple there is no person interested except the donee or legatee, and that a provision which cannot be enforced except at the will and by the party intended to be bound by it cannot in law be held legal and binding.

"The appellants on their part have drawn our attention to the opinion of Troplong and Demolombe as shewing that a défense d'aliéner, when made the condition of a legacy may in certain cases be unobjectionable, and in such cases ought to be enforced by the Courts."

"Troplong, in the passage cited in the factum of the appellant, says: 'Que dirons-nous de la clause portant défense d'aliéner par vente, échange ou engagement pendant un certain temps? Les opinions sont partagées, mais je ne vois rien qui vicie cette condition, qui souvent est imposée par le testateur pour des bonnes raisons de prévoyance, de convenance, d'économie domestique. Le donateur en donnant un immeuble à une personne de sa famille, peut cependant éprouver le regret de le voir de son vivant sortir des mains de celui qu'il considère comme un autre lui-même, il lui impose alors l'obligation de ne pas aliéner de son vivant. Dans d'autres circonstances le testateur peut craindre que le légataire ne soit trop pressé de jouir et qu'il n'abuse du droit de propriété dont il le gratifie; pour l'accoutumer à être propriétaire pour l'affectionner à sa propriété, il lui impose la condition de la garder pendant cinq ans. Ne sont-ce pas là des mesures sages et prudentes? Pourquoi les repousser avec une sévérité sans règle? La prohibition d'aliéner n'est censée contraire à la liberté qu'autant qu'elle est absolue; c'est alors qu'elle est considérée comme non écrite (4).'

"And Demolombe expresses his opinion as to this point in nearly the same words.

"In considering the above observations of Troplong and the opinion of Demolombe to the same effect, it is necessary to bear in mind that a very wide difference exists between the law of France and our own law as to the subject under consideration. The article 896. of the Code Civil declares: 'Les substitutions sont prohibées. Toute disposition par laquelle le donataire, l'héritier institué, ou le légataire, sera chargé de conserver et de rendre à un tiers sera nulle même à l'égard du donataire, de l'héritier institué ou du légataire (5).'

"These provisions being altogether at variance with our own law on the subject, it is plain that the observations of Troplong and Demolombe must be read by us with great caution ; and bearing this in mind, it appears to me that all that Troplong and Demolombe are to be understood as saying in the passages relied on by the appellant, is simply that a prohibition to alienate in a donation or will, if made for a short time and from reasonable motives, is not absolutely null even under the provisions of the Code Civil. Those learned writers shew that such a provision can be enforced if made in the interest of the donee or legatee, or of a third party, and that if accompanied by a penal clause the penalty may be enforced in the event of a violation of the prohibition to alienate. But I am not aware that there is anything in the writings either of Troplong or of Demolombe tending to establish that a prohibition to alienate, when made exclusively in the interest of the donee or legatee, can be enforced by the donee or legatee against his own acts and to the prejudice of his own creditors.

"In the present case the appellant relies on a défense d'aliéner, in which, in so far as regards the property in question, no person but himself is interested ; and the object of his opposition is to prevent the sale of the property in question for the satisfaction of a judgment rendered against himself to enforce the payment of a debt which, it may be observed, to the extent of above 1,100*l.*, appears to have been contracted after the death of the testator whose will contains the prohibition d'aliéner relied on by the appellant. There is not, I repeat, so far as I know, anything in the works of Troplong or of Demolombe to justify the pretensions of the opposant. On the contrary, Demolombe says, 'Il nous paraîtrait impossible d'admettre le donataire ou le légataire qui aurait consenti l'aliénation à se prévaloir ensuite contre les tiers auxquels il aurait concédé des droits, de la défense d'aliéner qui aurait été imposé et qu'il aurait lui-même enfreinte ; car il ne se peut pas qu'il évince ceux-là même auxquels il doit garantie.'

"Troplong, also, in his Traité du Contrat de Mariage, No. 3060 et seq., maintains the same doctrine.
